THIS BOOK
MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

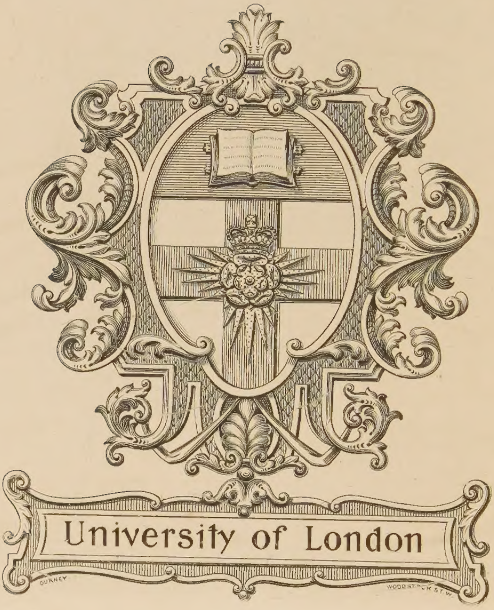
UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

PARL. PAPERS
FOR REFERENCE ONLY.



616982

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2026

https://archive.org/details/parliamentary-debates_february-02-february-16-1904_129

THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

(AUTHORISED EDITION),

FOURTH SERIES.

FIFTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

OF THE

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

4 EDWARD VII.

VOLUME CXXIX.

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SECOND DAY OF FEBRUARY,
TO THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF FEBRUARY 1904.

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION.

1904.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED,
UNDER CONTRACT WITH HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
BY
WYMAN AND SONS, LIMITED, FETTER LANE, LONDON.

8472

CHRONOLOGY OF "THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES."

THE PARLIAMENTARY HISTORY contains all that can be collected of the Legislative History of this country from the Conquest to the close of the XVIIIth Century (1803), 36 vols. The chief sources whence these Debates are derived are the Constitutional History, 24 vols.; Sir Simonds D'Ewes' Journal; Debates of the Commons in 1620 and 1621; Chandler and Timberland's Debates, 22 vols.; Grey's Debates of the Commons, from 1667 to 1694, 10 vols.; Almon's Debates, 24 vols.; Debrett's Debates, 63 vols.; The Hardwicke Papers; Debates in Parliament by Dr. Johnson, &c., &c.

THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES commence with the year 1803, and the contents are set forth in the following Chronological Table:—

HISTORY.

CONQUEST to 34 GEO. II.—1066 to 1760.

Vol. 1 to 15, 1 WILL. I. to 34 GEO. II.
1066-1760

REIGN OF GEORGE III.—1760 to 1820.

Vol. 15 to 35, 1 GEO. III. to 40 GEO. III.
1760-1800

(FIRST PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 35	41	GEO. III	1801
— 36	42	—	1802

(SECOND PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 36	42	GEO. III.	1802-3

DEBATES.

First Series.

(SECOND PARLIAMENT—continued.)

Vol. 1 & 2	44	GEO. III.	1803-4
— 3 to 5	45	—	1805
— 6 & 7	46	—	1806

(THIRD PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 8 & 9	47	GEO. III.	1806-7

(FOURTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 9 to 11	48	GEO. III.	1807-8
— 12 — 14	49	—	1809
— 15 — 17	50	—	1810
— 18 — 20	51	—	1810-11
— 21 — 23	52	—	1812

(FIFTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 24 to 26	53	GEO. III.	1812-13
— 27 & 28	54	—	1813-14
— 29 to 31	55	—	1814-15
— 32 — 34	56	—	1816
— 35 & 36	57	—	1817
— 37 — 38	58	—	1818

(SIXTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 39 & 40	59	GEO. III.	1819
— 41	60	—	1819-20

Second Series.

REIGN OF GEORGE IV.—1820 to 1830

(SEVENTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 1 to 3	1	GEO. IV.	1820
— 4 & 5	2	—	1821
— 6 — 7	3	—	1822
— 8 — 9	4	—	1823
— 10 — 11	5	—	1824
— 12 — 13	6	—	1825-6
— 14 — 15	7	—	1826

(EIGHTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 16	7	GEO. IV.	1826
— 17	8	—	1827
— 18 & 19	9	—	1828
— 20 — 21	10	—	1829
— 22 to 25	11	—	1830

Third Series.

REIGN OF WILLIAM IV.—1830 to 1837.

(NINTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 1 to 3	1	WILL. IV.	1830-1

(TENTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 4 to 8	2	WILL. IV.	1831
— 9 — 14	3	—	1832

(ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 15 to 20	4	WILL. IV.	1833
— 21 — 25	5	—	1834

(TWELFTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol. 26 to 30	6	WILL. IV.	1835
— 31 — 35	7	—	1836
— 36 — 38	8	—	1837

REIGN OF VICTORIA—1837 to 1901.

(Thirteenth Parliament.)

Vol.	39 to 44	1	Victoria	1838
—	45 — 50	2	—	1839
—	51 — 55	3	—	1840
—	56 — 58	4	—	(a) 1841

(Fourteenth Parliament.)

Vol.	59	4	Victoria	(b) 1841
—	60 to 65	5	—	1842
—	66 — 71	6	—	1843
—	72 — 76	7	—	1844
—	77 — 82	8	—	1845
—	83 — 88	9	—	1846
—	89 — 94	10	—	(a) 1847

(Fifteenth Parliament.)

Vol.	95	10	Victoria	(b) 1847
—	96 to 101	11	—	1848
—	102 — 107	12	—	1849
—	108 — 113	13	—	1850
—	114 — 118	14	—	1851
—	119 — 122	15	—	(a) 1852

(Sixteenth Parliament.)

Vol.	123	15	Victoria	(b) 1852
—	124 to 129	16	—	1853
—	130 — 135	17	—	1854
—	136 — 139	18	—	1855
—	140 — 143	19	—	1856
—	144	20	—	(a) 1857

(Seventeenth Parliament.)

Vol.	145 to 147	20	Victoria	(b) 1857
—	148 — 151	21	—	1858
—	152 — 153	22	—	(a) 1859

(Eighteenth Parliament.)

Vol.	154 to 155	22	Victoria	(b) 1859
—	156 — 160	23	—	1860
—	161 — 164	24	—	1861
—	165 — 168	25	—	1862
—	169 — 172	26	—	1863
—	173 — 176	27	—	1864
—	177 — 180	28	—	1865

(Nineteenth Parliament.)

Vol.	181 to 184	29	Victoria	1866
—	185 — 189	30	—	1867
—	190 — 193	31	—	1867-8

(Twentieth Parliament.)

Vol.	194 to 198	32	Victoria	1868-9
—	199 — 203	33	—	1870
—	204 — 208	34	—	1871
—	209 — 213	35	—	1872
—	214 — 217	36	—	1873

(Twenty-First Parliament.)

Vol.	218 to 221	37	Victoria	1874
—	222 — 226	38	—	1875
—	227 — 231	39	—	1876
—	232 — 236	40	—	1877
—	237 — 242	41	—	1878
—	243 — 249	42	—	1878-9
—	250 & 251	43	—	(a) 1880

(Twenty-Second Parliament.)

Vol.	252 to 256	43	Victoria	(b) 1880
—	257 — 265	44	—	1881
—	266 — 273	45	—	(a) 1882
—	274 & 275	45	—	(b) 1882
—	276 to 283	46	—	1883
—	284 — 292	47	—	1884
—	293 — 301	48	—	1884-5

(Twenty-Third Parliament.)

Vol.	302 to 307	49	Victoria	(a) 1886

(Twenty-Fourth Parliament.)

Vol.	308 & 309	49	Victoria	(b) 1886
—	310 to 321	50	—	1887
—	322 — 332	51	—	1888
—	333 — 340	52	—	1889
—	341 — 348	53	—	1890
—	349 — 356	54	—	1890-1

Fourth Series.

(Twenty-Fourth Parliament—cont.)

Vol.	1 to 6	55	Victoria	1892

(Twenty-Fifth Parliament.)

Vol.	7	56	Victoria	1892
—	8 to 21	57	—	1893-4
—	22 — 29	57	—	1894
—	30 — 35	58	—	1895

(Twenty-Sixth Parliament.)

Vol.	36	59	Victoria	1895
—	37 to 44	59	—	1895-6
—	45 — 52	60	—	1897
—	53 — 65	61	—	1898
—	66 — 76	62	—	1899
—	77	63	—	1899
—	78 — 83	63	—	1900
—	84	63 & 64	—	1900
—	85 — 87	64	—	1900

(Twenty-Seventh Parliament.)

Vol.	88	64	Victoria	1900

REIGN OF EDWARD VII.

(Twenty-Seventh Parliament—cont.)

Vol.	89	1	Edward VII.	1901
—	90 to 100	1	—	1901
—	101	1 & 2	—	1902
—	102 to 117	2	—	1902
—	118 to 128	3	—	1903
—	129	4	—	1904

HIS MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF STATE, Etc.

RE-CONSTRUCTION OF THE CABINET, OCTOBER 1903.

Table Showing Changes in the Ministry.

THE CABINET.

Office.	Old Ministry.	New Ministry.
Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury.	Rt. Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, M.P.	Rt. Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, M.P.
Lord President of the Council.	His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, K.G.	Most Hon. the Marquess of Londonderry, K.G.
Lord Chancellor.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Halsbury.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Halsbury.
Secretaries of State—
Home Department	Rt. Hon. A. Akers Douglas, M.P.	Rt. Hon. A. Akers Douglas, M.P.
Foreign Affairs.	Most Hon. the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G.	Most Hon. the Marquess of Lansdowne.
Colonial Office.	Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P.	Rt. Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, M.P.
War Office.	Rt. Hon. W. St. John Brodrick, M.P.	Rt. Hon. H. O. Arnold-Forster, M.P.
India Office.	Rt. Hon. Lord George Hamilton, M.P.	Rt. Hon. W. St. John Brodrick, M.P.
Chancellor of the Exchequer.	Rt. Hon. Chas. T. Ritchie, M.P.	Rt. Hon. J. Austen Chamberlain, M.P.
First Lord of the Admiralty.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Selborne.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Selborne.
Lord Chancellor of Ireland.	Rt. Hon. Lord Ashbourne.	Rt. Hon. Lord Ashbourne.
Chief Secretary for Ireland.	Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, M.P.	Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, M.P.
Lord Privy Seal.	Rt. Hon. Arthur J. Balfour.	The Most Hon. the Marquess of Salisbury.
President of the Board of Trade.	Rt. Hon. Gerald W. Balfour, M.P.	Rt. Hon. Gerald W. Balfour, M.P.
Postmaster-General.	J. Austen Chamberlain, Esq., M.P.	Lord Stanley, M.P.
Secretary for Scotland.	Rt. Hon. Lord Balfour of Burleigh.	Rt. Hon. A. Graham Murray, M.P.
President of the Local Government Board.	Rt. Hon. Walter H. Long, M.P.	Rt. Hon. Walter H. Long, M.P.
President of the Board of Agriculture.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Onslow.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Onslow.
President of the Board of Education.	The Most Hon. the Marquess of Londonderry.	The Most Hon. the Marquess of Londonderry.

NOT IN THE CABINET.

Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury.	Sir A. Acland Hood, Bt., M.P.	Sir A. Acland Hood, Bt., M.P.
Financial Secretary to the Treasury.	Hon. Arthur Elliot, M.P.	Victor Cavendish, Esq., M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education.	Sir William Anson, M.P.	Sir Wm. Anson, M.P.
Secretary to the Admiralty	H. O. Arnold-Forster, Esq., M.P.	E. G. Pretyman, Esq., M.P.
Lords of the Treasury.	H. T. Anstruther, Esq., M.P.	Lord Balcarres, M.P.
	Hon. Ailwyn Fellowes, M.P.	Hon. Ailwyn Fellowes, M.P.
	H. W. Forster, Esq., M.P.	H. W. Forster, Esq., M.P.
Lords of the Admiralty	Vice-Admiral Lord W. T. Kerr, K.C.B.	Admiral Lord W. T. Kerr, K.C.B.
	Vice-Admiral A. L. Douglas.	Rear-Admiral Sir C. C. Drury, K.C.S.I.
	Rear-Admiral W. H. May, M.V.O.	Rear-Admiral W. H. May, M.V.O.
	Capt. John Durnford, C.B., D.S.O.	Rear-Admiral John Durnford, C.B. D.S.O.

HIS MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF STATE—(Cont.) NOT IN THE CABINET.—Cont.

Office.	Old Ministry.	New Ministry.
Army Council.	New Office.	The Secretary of State for War [in the Cabinet]. Lt.-Gen. Sir N. G. Lyttelton, K.C.B. Major - General C. W. H. Douglas. Major - General H. C. O. Plumer, C.B. Major - General Sir J. W. Murray, K.C.B. The Under Secretary of State for War The Financial Secretary to the War Office. Secretary. The Permanent Under Secretary of State for War (Col. Sir E. W. D. Ward, K.C.B.
Civil Lord of the Admiralty.	E. G. Pretyman, Esq., M P.	Arthur H. Lee, Esq., M.P.
Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Dudley.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Dudley.
The Lord Advocate.	Hon. A. Graham Murray, M.P.	C. Scott Dickson, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.	Rt. Hon. Sir William Walrond, Bt., M.P.	Rt. Hon. Sir Wm. Walrond, Bt., M.
Parliamentary Secretary, Foreign Office.	*Lord Cranborne, M.P.	Earl Percy, M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary, Home Office.	Hon. T. H. Cochrane, M.P.	Hon. T. H. Cochrane, M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary, Colonial Office.	His Grace, the Duke of Marlborough.	His Grace the Duke of Marlborough.
Parliamentary Secretary, India Office.	Earl Percy, M.P.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Hardwicke.
Parliamentary Secretary, War Office.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Hardwicke.	Rt. Hon. Earl of Donoughmore.
Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade.	A. Bonar Law, Esq., M.P.	A. Bonar Law, Esq., M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board.	J. Grant Lawson, Esq., M.P.	J. Grant Lawson, Esq., M.P.
Financial Secretary, War Office.	Lord Stanley, M.P.	W. Bromley Davenport, Esq., M.P.
Attorney-General.	Sir R. B. Finlay, K.C., M.P.	Sir R. B. Finlay, K.C., M.P.
Solicitor-General.	Rt. Hon. Sir E. Carson, K.C., M.P.	Rt. Hon. Sir E. Carson, K.C., M P.

OTHER OFFICERS OF STATE.

Judge Advocate-General——Rt. Hon. Sir F. H. Jeune, K.C.B., President Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division.
Lord Chamberlain——Rt. Hon. Earl of Clarendon.
Vice-Chamberlain——Rt. Hon. Lord Wolverton.
Lord Steward——Rt. Hon. Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, G.C.V.O.
Master of the Horse——His Grace the Duke of Portland, K.G., G.C.V.O.
Paymaster-General——Sir Savile Crossley, Bt., M.V.O., M.P.
Comptroller of the Household——Viscount Valentia, M.P.
Treasurer of the Household——The Marquess of Hamilton, M.P.
Captain Yeomen of the Guard—Rt. Hon. Earl Waldegrave.

Lords-in-Waiting——
- Rt. Hon. Earl of Kintore, G.C.M.G.
- Rt. Hon. Earl of Denbigh.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Churchill, K.C.V.O.
- Rt. Hon. Earl Howe.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Lawrence.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Bagot.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Suffield, G.C.V.O., K.C.B.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Kenyon.

SCOTLAND.

Secretary for Scotland and Keeper of the Great Seal——Rt. Hon. Lord Balfour of Burleigh, K.T.
Lord Justice-General——Rt. Hon. Lord Kinross,
Lord Advocate——Rt. Hon. A. Graham Murray, K.C., M.P.
Lord Justice Clerk——Rt. Hon. Lord Kinsburgh, C.B.
Lord Clerk Register——His Grace the Duke of Montrose, K.T.
Lord High Commissioner——Rt. Hon. Earl of Leven and Melville.
Solicitor-General——David Dundas, Esq., K.C.

---

* Appears in new Ministry under title of Marquess of Salisbury.

OTHER OFFICERS OF STATE.—(Cont.)

IRELAND.

Lord Lieutenant——Rt. Hon. Earl of DUDLEY.
Lord Chancellor——Rt. Hon. Lord ASHBOURNE.
Chief Secretary——Rt. Hon. GEORGE WYNDHAM, M.P.
Under Secretary——Sir ANTONY MCDONNELL, G.C.S.I.
Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction——President: The Rt. Hon. the CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND; Vice-President: Rt. Hon. HORACE PLUNKETT.
Attorney-General——Rt. Hon. J. ATKINSON, K.C., M.P.
Solicitor-General——J. H. M. CAMPBELL, Esq., K.C., M.P.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

Chairman of Committees——Rt. Hon. Earl of MORLEY.
Clerk of Parliaments——Sir HENRY J. L. GRAHAM, K.C.B.
Deputy Clerk of Parliaments (Clerk Assistant)——Hon. E. P. THESIGER, C.B.
Reading-Clerk and Clerk of Outdoor Committees——EDWARD HALL ALDERSON, Esq.
Counsel to the Chairman of Committees——ALBERT GRAY, Esq.
Chief Clerk and Clerk of Public Bills——A. HARRISON, Esq.
Senior Clerks——
 Peers' Printed Paper Office——C. L. ANSTRUTHER, Esq.
 Principal Clerk, Judicial Department, and Taxing Officer of Judicial Costs——J. F. SKENE, Esq.
 Clerk of the Journals——W. A. LEIGH, Esq.
 Principal Clerk of Private Committees——J. F. SYMONS JEUNE, Esq.
Other Clerks——W. H. HAMILTON GORDON, Esq.; Hon. A. MCDONNELL; A. H. ROBINSON, Esq. (Clerk of Private Bills); H. P. ST. JOHN, Esq.; V. M. BIDDULPH, Esq.; Hon. E. A. STONOR; H. J. F. BADELEY, Esq.; C. HEADLAM, Esq.; J. B. HOTHAM, Esq.; E. C. VIGORS, Esq.; A. TENNYSON, Esq.; and G. D. LUARD, Esq.
Accountant and Copyist——Mr. T. A. COURT.
Assistant Copyists——Mr. H. P. NORRIS and Mr. R. A. COURT.
Messengers——Messrs. A. A. WORFELL, C. E. CHIZLETT, A. M. STOLL, J. W. F. LOCKE, J. MCMILLAN, G. BENNETT, G. T. PHILIP.
Librarian——EDMUND GOSSE, Esq.
Assistant Librarian——A. H. M. BUTLER, Esq.
Attendant——Mr. W. WORFELL.
Examiners for Standing Orders——C. W. CAMPION, Esq.; J. F. SYMONS JEUNE, Esq.; Clerk——B. H. FELL, Esq.
Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod——Gen. Sir MICHAEL A. S. BIDDULPH, G.C.B.
Yeoman Usher——Captain T. D. BUTLER.
Serjeant-at-Arms——Lt.-Col. Rt. Hon. Sir FLEETWOOD I. EDWARDS, G.C.V.O., K.C.B.
Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms——S. HAND, Esq.
Resident Superintendent——J. K. WILLIAMS, Esq.
Shorthand Writer——W. H. GURNEY SALTER, Esq.
Principal Doorkeepers——Messrs. W. CHANDLER, E. FOX, F. HOLMAN.
First Class Assistants——Messrs. C. WALKER, J. HEDLEY, J. LANE, B. GALLOP.
Second Class Assistants——Messrs. H. B. STREVENS, G. W. CROSS, W. STOPP.
Third Class Assistants——Messrs. J. WOOLACOTT, A. A. EDNEY, J. F. BAUM.
Messengers——Messrs. A. J. SOLMAN, J. B. FORSYTH, C. CHAPMAN, W. PHILLIPS, W. W. MEATES.
Superintendent of Refreshment Rooms——Mr. W. CASBON.
Inspector of Police attending the House of Lords——Mr. A. PALMER.
Clerk of the Works, Houses of Parliament——Mr. C. J. WILLIAMS.
Resident Engineer, Houses of Parliament——Mr. A. P. PATEY.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Clerk of the House of Commons——Sir COURTNEY PEREGRINE ILBERT, K.C.S.I., C.I.E.
Clerk-Assistant——ARTHUR W. NICHOLSON, Esq.
Second Clerk-Assistant——T. L. WEBSTER, Esq.
Principal Clerks——
 Public Bill Office, and Clerk of Fees——W. GIBBONS, Esq.
 Clerk of the Journals——W. H. LEY, Esq.
 Committee Office——R. DICKINSON, Esq.
 Private Bill Office——J. H. W. SOMERSET, Esq.
Senior Clerks——F. ST. GEORGE TUPPER, Esq.; H. C. TOWER Esq.; C. V. FRERE, Esq.; L. T. LE MARCHANT, Esq.; G. C. GIFFARD, Esq.; Sir E. H. DOYLE, Bart.
Assistant Clerks——S. L. SIMEON, Esq.; ARTHUR I. DASENT, Esq.; E. C. HOWE BROWNE, Esq.; HORACE WEST, Esq.; HENRY A. FERGUSON-DAVIE, Esq.; ARTHUR H. ELLIS, Esq.; PERCY A. BULL, Esq.; F. R. WILLIAMS WYNN, Esq.; W. E. GREY, Esq.; F. C. HOLLAND, Esq.; J. W. G. BOND, Esq.

Junior Clerks——H. C. Dawkins, Esq.; R. P. Colomb, Esq.; B. H. Fell, Esq.; R. E. Childers, Esq.; J. Scott Porter, Esq.; F. C. Bramwell, Esq.; W. T. Legge, Esq.; C. R. Turner, Esq.; W. K. Gibbons, Esq.; A. E. A. W. Smyth, Esq.; K. J. C. Moorsom, Esq.; C. D. Robertson, Esq.; R. D. Radcliffe, Esq.
Serjeant-at-Arms——H. D. Erskine, Esq.
Deputy Serjeant——F. R. Gosset, Esq.
Assistant Sergeant——W. H. Erskine, Esq.
Office Messenger——Mr. C. J. H. Shearn.
Chaplain to the House——Rev. Archdeacon Basil Wilberforce, D.D.
Secretary to the Speaker——Edward Gully, Esq.
Counsel to the Speaker——Hon. Sir E. Chandos Leigh, K.C., K.C.B.
Trainbearer——Mr. J. French.
Messenger——Mr. W. Murrell.
Collectors of Fees on Private Bills——C. L. Lockton, Esq.
Referee of Private Bills——Alfred Bonham Carter, Esq., C.B.
Examiners of Private Bills——C. W. Campion, Esq.; J. F. Symons Jeune, Esq.
Taxing Master——C. W. Campion, Esq.; Clerk——B. H. Fell, Esq.
Vote Office——
    Chief Clerk——Philip Smith, Esq.
    Assistant Clerks——   ; H. Otway Mayne, Esq.
    Messenger——Mr. John Edwards.
Librarian——R. C. Walpole, Esq.; Assistant Librarian——Temple Franks, Esq., B.C.L.; Clerks in Library——Messrs. J. R. Crimp, Wm. Stewart; Messengers——Messrs. A. Firmin, W. Hague.
Shorthand Writer——W. H. Gurney Salter, Esq.
Printers——
    Journals——G. E. Briscoe Eyre, Esq.
    Votes——J. B. Nichols, Esq.
Postmaster——Mr. Edmund W. Pike; Hall Keeper——Mr. J. Glynn.
Office Keeper——Mr. W. Harvey.
Office Clerk in Committee Office——Mr. T. Fielden Mitchell.
Office Clerk in Journal Office——Mr. A. A. Taylor.
Messengers——Messrs. C. Davie, W. Quantrill, H. Jones, G. D. Weller, J. Armstrong, J. Woodward, J. Ivory, G Norman, J. Surrey, A. Sepple.
Doorkeepers——Mr. W. Wilson and Mr. M. Inglefield.
Messengers (1st Class)——Mr. H. Hambling, Mr. C. Woodcraft, Mr. R. Robertson, Mr. J. Hills, Mr. J. Sprague, Mr. A. Andrews, Mr. T. B. Spray, Mr. G. Tye, Mr. R. Hobby, Mr. G. Anstey, Mr. J. H. Day.
Messengers (2nd Class)——Messrs. J. Henderson, G. Wainwright, J. Guyatt, R. Turtle, A. Haskell, A. C. Johnson, G. Clapperton, H. E. Linington.
Superintendent of Members' Waiting Room——Mr. J. F. Henley; Assistant——Mr. W. Broadbent; Porters——Messrs. J. Oram and T. Martin.
Chief Inspector of Police attending the House of Commons——Mr. Scantlebury.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

LORDS SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL

IN THE

FIFTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

OF

THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

---

4 EDWARD VII. 1904.

NOTE.—The Figures in the Margin refer to the corresponding Figures on the Roll.

A

37 Abercorn, James Marquess of. (Duke of Abercorn)
351 Abercromby, George Ralph Lord
469 Aberdare, Henry Campbell Lord
50 Abergavenny, William Marquess of 75 Abingdon, Montagu Arthur Earl of 398 Abinger, Shelley Leopold Laurence Lord
462 Acton, Richard Maximilian Lord
534 Addington, Egerton Lord
45 Ailesbury, Henry Augustus Marquess of 47 Ailsa, Archibald Marquess of
3 Albany, His Royal Highness Leopold Charles Edward George Albert Duke of 77 Albemarle, Arnold Allan Cecil Earl of 566 Aldenham, Henry Hucks Lord
479 Alington, Henry Gerard Lord
594 Allerton, William Lawies Lord
591 Alverstone, Richard Everard Lord
158 Amherst, William Archer Earl
545 Amherst of Hackney, William Amhurst Lord
491 Ampthill, Arthur Oliver Villiers Lord
194 Ancaster, Gilbert Henry Earl of 43 Anglesey, Henry Cyril Marquess of
441 Annaly, Luke Lord
125 Annesley, Hugh Earl. (Elected for Ireland)
487 Ardilaun, Arthur Edward Lord
31 Argyll, John Douglas Sutherland Duke of 602 Armstrong, William Henry Armstrong FitzPatrick Lord
284 Arundell of Wardour, John Francis Lord
511 Ashbourne, Edward Lord
99 Ashburnham, Bertram Earl of 400 Ashburton, Francis Denzil Edward Lord
542 Ashcombe, George Lord
561 Ashton, James Lord
327 Auckland, William Morton Lord
587 Avebury, John Lord
93 Aylesford, Charles Wightwick Earl of

B

312 Bagot, William Lord
458 Balinhard, James Lord. (Earl of Southesk)
296 Balfour of Burley, Alexander Hugh Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
128 Bandon, James Francis Earl of (Elected for Ireland)
210 Bangor, Henry William Crosbie Viscount. (Elected for Ireland)
291 Barnard, Henry de Vere Lord
595 Barrymore, Arthur Hugh Lord
531 Basing, George Limbrey Lord
406 Bateman, William Spencer Lord
36 Bath, Thomas Henry Marquess of 258 Bath and Wells, George Wyndham Bishop of 111 Bathurst, Seymour Henry Earl
550 Battersea, Cyril Lord
151 Beauchamp, William Earl
14 Beaufort, Henry Adelbert Wellington Fitzroy Duke of 17 Bedford, Herbrand Arthur Duke of 297 Belhaven and Stenton, Alexander Charles Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
127 Belmore, Somerset Richard Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
428 Belper, Henry Lord
74 Berkeley, Randal Mowbray Thomas Earl of 317 Berwick, Richard Henry Lord
600 Biddulph, Michael Lord
543 Blythswood, Archibald Campbell Lord
203 Bolingbroke and St. John, ——— Viscount
335 Bolton, William Thomas Lord
304 Boston, George Florance Lord
272 Botreaux, Charles Edward Hastings Lord. (Earl of Loudoun)
527 Bowes, Claude Lord. (Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorn)
298 Boyle, Richard Edmund St. Lawrence Lord. (Earl of Cork and Orrery)
490 Brabourne, Edward Lord
150 Bradford, George Cecil Orlando Earl of 583 Brampton, Henry Lord
449 Brancepeth, Gustavus Russell Lord. (Viscount Boyne)
21 Brandon, Alfred Douglas Duke of
524 Brassey, Thomas Lord
323 Braybrooke, Henry Lord
277 Braye, Alfred Thomas Townshend Lord
51 Breadalbane, Gavin Marquess of 226 Bridport, Alexander Nelson Viscount
46 Bristol, Frederick William John Marquess of 264 Bristol, George Forrest Bishop of 332 Brodrick, William Lord. (Viscount Midleton)
102 Brooke, Francis Richard Charles Guy Earl, and Earl of Warwick
437 Brougham and Vaux, Henry Charles Lord
147 Brownlow, Adelbert Wellington Brownlow Earl 103 Buckinghamshire, Sidney Carr Earl of 562 Burghclere, Herbert Coulstoun Lord
599 Burnham, Edward Levy Lord
522 Burton, Michael Arthur Lord
39 Bute, John Marquess of 288 Byron, George Frederick William Lord

C

119 Cadogan, George Henry Earl
185 Cairns, Herbert John Earl
333 Calthorpe, Augustus Cholmondeley Lord
4 Cambridge, His Royal Highness George William Frederick Charles Duke of 42 Camden, John Charles Marquess
273 Camoys, Ralph Francis Julian Lord
161 Camperdown, Robert Adam Philips Haldane Earl of 5 Canterbury, Randall Thomas Archbishop of 221 Canterbury, Henry Charles Viscount
409 Carew, Robert Shapland George Julian Lord
320 Carleton, Richard Henry Lord. (Earl of Shannon)
71 Carlisle, George James Earl of 256 Carlisle, John Wareing Bishop of

118	Carnarvon, George Edward Stanhope Molyneux Earl of
86	Carnwath, Robert Harris Carnwath Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
195	Carrington, Charles Robert Earl
350	Carysfort, William Lord. (Earl of Carysfort)
360	Castlemaine, Albert Edward Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
461	Castletown, Bernard Edward Barnaby Lord
145	Cathcart, Alan Frederick Earl
159	Cawdor, Frederick Archibald Vaughan Earl
390	Chaworth, Reginald Lord. (Earl of Meath)
432	Chelmsford, Frederic Augustus Lord
431	Chesham, Charles Compton William Lord
252	Chester, Francis John Bishop of
68	Chesterfield, Edwyn Francis Earl of
533	Cheylesmore, Herbert Francis Lord
133	Chichester, Francis Godolphin Earl of
245	Chichester, Ernest Roland Bishop of
44	Cholmondeley, George Henry Hugh Marquess of
239	Churchill, Victor Albert Francis Charles Viscount
433	Churston, John Lord
219	Clancarty, William Frederick Viscount. (Earl of Clancarty)
383	Clanwilliam, Richard James Lord. (Earl of Clanwilliam)
56 & 113	Clarendon, Edward Hyde Earl of. (Lord Chamberlain of the Household)
388	Clements, Charles Lord. (Earl of Leitrim)
289	Clifford of Chudleigh, Lewis Henry Hugh Lord
269	Clinton, Charles Henry Rolle Lord
343	Clonbrock, Luke Gerald Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
395	Cloncurry, Valentine Frederick Lord
204	Cobham, Charles George Viscount
365	Colchester, Reginald Charles Edward Lord
471	Coleridge, Bernard John Seymour Lord
238	Colville of Culross, Charles Robert William Viscount
220	Combermere, Francis Lynch Wellington Viscount
422	Congleton, Henry Lord
2	Connaught and Strathearn, His Royal Highness Arthur William Patrick Albert Duke of
174	Cottenham, Kenelm Charles Edward Earl of
473	Cottesloe, Thomas Francis Lord
78	Coventry, George William Earl of
175	Cowley, Henry Arthur Mornington Earl
94	Cowper, Francis Thomas de Grey Earl
193	Cranbrook, Gathorne Earl of
584	Cranworth, Bertram Francis Lord
130	Craven, William George Robert Earl of
544	Crawshaw, Thomas Lord
196	Crewe, Robert Offley Ashburton Earl of
345	Crofton, Edward Henry Churchill Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
200	Cromer, Evelyn Earl of
230	Cross, Richard Assheton Viscount
26	Cumberland and Teviotdale, His Royal Highness Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Fredk Duke of
581	Currie, Philip Henry Wodehouse Lord
	D
91	Dartmouth, William Heneage Earl of
180	Dartrey, Vesey Earl of
558	Davey, Horace Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
572	Dawnay, Hugh Richard Lord. (Viscount Downe)
268	de Clifford, Jack Southwell Lord
424	De Freyne, Arthur Lord
108	De La Warr, Gilbert Geo. Reginald Earl
399	De L'Isle and Dudley, Philip Lord
410	De Mauley, William Ashley Webb Lord
191	de Montalt, Cornwallis Earl

532 De Ramsey, William Henry Lord
265 de Ros, Dudley Charles Lord
396 De Saumarez, James St. Vincent Lord
372 Delamere, Hugh Lord
63 Denbigh, Rudolph Robert Basil Aloysius Augustine Earl of 397 Denman, Thomas Lord
513 Deramore, Robert Wilfrid Lord
58 Derby, Frederick Arthur Earl of 495 Derwent, Harcourt Lord
61 Devon, Charles Pepys Earl of 18 Devonshire, Spencer Compton Duke of.
307 Digby, Edward Henry Trafalgar Lord
310 Dinevor, Arthur de Cardonnel Lord
72 Doncaster, William Henry Walter Earl of. (Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry)
285 Dormer, Ronald John Lord
475 Douglas, Charles Alexander Lord. (Earl of Home)
122 Drogheda, Ponsonby William Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
166 Ducie, Henry John Earl of 177 Dudley, William Humble Earl of 52 Dufferin and Ava, Terence John Temple Marquess of 348 Dunalley, Henry O'Callaghan Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
338 Dunboyne, Robert St. John Fitz-Walter Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
89 Dundonald, Douglas Mackinnon Baillie Hamilton Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
547 Dunleath, Henry Lyle Lord
391 Dunmore, Charles Adolphus Lord. (Earl of Dunmore)
457 Dunning, John Lord. (Lord Rollo)
163 Durham, John George Earl of 242 Durham, Handley Carr Glynn Bishop of

E

430 Ebury, Robert Wellesley Lord
165 Effingham, Henry Alexander Gordon Earl of 197 Egerton, Wilbraham Earl
152 Eldon, John Earl of
423 Elgin, Victor Alexander Lord. (Earl of Elgin and Kincardine)
352 Ellenborough, Edward Downes Lord
172 Ellesmere, Francis Charles Granville Earl of 515 Elphinstone, Sidney Herbert Lord
251 Ely, Alwyne Bishop of
472 Emly, Thomas William Gaston Lord
355 Erskine, William Macnaghten Lord
234 Esher, Reginald Baliol Viscount
70 Essex, George Devereux de Vere Earl of 601 Estcourt, George Thomas John Lord
467 Ettrick, William John George Lord. (Lord Napier)
40 Exeter, William Thomas Brownlow Marquess of 217 Exmouth, Edward Addington Hargreaves Viscount

F

571 Fairlie, David Lord. (Earl of Glasgow)
202 Falkland, Byron Plantagenet Viscount. (Elected for Scotland)
205 Falmouth, Evelyn Edward Thomas Viscount
578 Farquhar, Horace Brand Lord
552 Farrer, Thomas Cecil Lord
477 Fermanagh, John Henry Lord. (Earl Erne)
90 Ferrers, Sewallis Edward Earl
181 Feversham, William Ernest Earl of
536 Field, William Ventris Lord
30 Fife, Alexander William George Duke of 386 Fingall, Arthur James Francis Lord. (Earl of Fingall)
324 Fisherwick, George Augustus Hamilton Lord. (Marquess of Donegall)
440 Fitzhardinge, Charles Paget Fitzhardinge Lord
104 Fitzwilliam, William Charles De Meuron Earl
309 Foley, Henry Thomas Lord
292 Forbes, Horace Courtenay Gammell Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
373 Forester, Cecil Theodore Lord

117 Fortescue, Hugh Earl

363 Foxford, William Henry Edmond de Vere Sheaffe Lord. (Earl of Limerick)

G

325 Gage, Henry Charles Lord. (Viscount Gage)

171 Gainsborough, Charles William Francis Earl of

358 Gardner, ——— Lord

481 Gerard, Frederic John Lord

375 Gifford, Edric Frederic Lord

582 Glanusk, Joseph Russell Lord

565 Glenesk, Algernon Lord

244 Gloucester, Charles John Bishop of

216 Gordon, John Campbell Viscount. (Earl of Aberdeen)

454 Gormanston, Jenico William Joseph Lord. (Viscount Gormanston)

235 Goschen, George Joachim Viscount

224 Gough, Hugh Viscount

13 Grafton, Augustus Charles Lennox Duke of

97 Graham, Douglas Beresford Malise Ronald Earl. (Duke of Montrose)

357 Granard, Bernard Arthur William Patrick Hastings Lord. (Earl of Granard)

314 Grantley, John Richard Brinsley Lord

164 Granville, Granville George Earl

596 Grenfell, Francis Wallace Lord

464 Greville, Algernon William Fulke Lord

140 Grey, Albert Henry George Earl

271 Grey de Ruthyn, Rawdon George Grey Lord

519 Grimthorpe, Edmund Lord

362 Grinstead, Lowry Egerton Lord (Earl of Enniskillen)

105 Guilford, Frederick George Earl of

334 Gwydir, Peter Robert Lord

H

84 Haddington, George Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)

485 Haldon, Lawrence William Lord

580 Haliburton, Arthur Lawrence Lord

225 Halifax, Charles Lindley Viscount

6 & 198 Halsbury, Hardinge Stanley Earl of. (Lord High Chancellor)

523 Hamilton of Dalzell, Gavin George Lord

228 Hampden, Henry Robert Viscount

474 Hampton, Herbert Perrott Murray Lord

223 Hardinge, Henry Charles Viscount

106 Hardwicke, Albert Edward Philip Henry Earl of

459 Hare, William Lord. (Earl of Listowel)

143 Harewood, Henry Ulick Earl of

478 Harlech, William Richard Lord

100 Harrington, Charles Augustus Earl of

364 Harris, George Robert Canning Lord

142 Harrowby, John Herbert Dudley Earl of

446 Hartismere, Charles Henry Chandos Lord. (Lord Henniker)

267 Hastings, George Manners Lord

401 Hatherton, Edward George Percy Lord

211 Hawarden, Cornwallis Viscount. (Elected for Ireland) (In another place as Earl de Montalt)

308 Hawke, Martin Bladen Lord

554 Hawkesbury, Cecil George Savile Lord

299 Hay, Archibald Fitzroy George Lord. (Earl of Kinnoul)

344 Headley, Charles Mark Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

567 Heneage, Edward Lord

201 Hereford, Robert Viscount

259 Hereford, John Bishop of

503 Herries, Marmaduke Francis Lord

516 Herschell, Richard Farrer Lord

38 Hertford, Hugh de Grey Marquess of

381 Heytesbury, Leonard Lord

222 Hill, Rowland Richard Viscount

517 Hillingdon, Charles William Lord

112 Hillsborough, Arthur Wills John Wellington Trumbull Blundell Earl of. (Marquess of Downshire)

518 Hindlip, Charles Lord

509	Hobhouse, Arthur Lord
574	Holm Patrick, Hans Wellesley Lord
208	Hood, Francis Wheler Viscount
496	Hothfield, Henry James Lord
460	Howard of Glossop, Francis Edward Lord
281	Howard de Walden, Thomas Evelyn Lord
153	Howe, George Richard Penn Earl
493	Howth, William Ulick Tristram Lord. (Earl of Howth)
59	Huntingdon, Warner Francis John Plantagenet Earl of
218	Hutchinson, Richard Walter John Viscount. (Earl of Donoughmore)
447	Hylton, Hylton George Hylton Lord

I

190	Iddesleigh, Walter Stafford Earl of
107	Ilchester, Henry Edward Earl of
339	Inchiquin, Lucius William Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
168	Innes, Henry John Earl. (Duke of Roxburghe)
575	Inverclyde, George Arbuthnot Lord
537	Iveagh, Edward Cecil Lord

J

563	James, Henry Lord
79	Jersey, Victor Albert George Earl of

K

540	Kelvin, William Lord
389	Kenlis, Geoffrey Thomas Lord. (Marquess of Headfort)
427	Kenmare, Valentine Augustus Lord. (Earl of Kenmare)
444	Kenry, Windham Thomas Lord. (Earl of Dunraven and Mount-Earl)
521	Kensington, Hugh Lord
322	Kenyon, Lloyd Lord
366	Ker, Robert Schomberg Lord. (Marquess of Lothian)
450	Kesteven, John Henry Lord
589	Killanin, Martin Henry Lord.
342	Kilmaine, Francis William Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
385	Kilmarnock, Charles Gore Lord (Earl of Erroll)
156	Kilmorey, Francis Charles Earl of (Elected for Ireland)
179	Kimberley, John Earl of
438	Kinnaird, Arthur Fitz-Gerald Lord
569	Kinnear, Alexander Smith Lord
592	Kinross, John Blair Lord
407	Kintore, Algernon Hawkins Thomond Lord (Earl of Kintore)
237	Kitchener of Khartoum and of the Vaal, Horatio Herbert Viscount
597	Knollys, Francis Lord
232	Knutsford, Henry Thurstan Viscount

L

488	Lamington, Charles Wallace Alexander Napier Lord
123	Lanesborough, John Vansittart Danvers Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
346	Langford, Hercules Edward Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
33	Lansdowne, Henry Charles Keith Marquess of
187	Lathom, Edward George Earl of
85	Lauderdale, Frederick Henry Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
456	Lawrence, John Hamilton Lord
434	Leconfield, Charles Henry Lord
16	Leeds, George Godolphin Duke of
169	Leicester, Thomas William Earl of
415	Leigh, William Henry Lord
207	Leinster, Maurice Viscount. (Duke of Leinster)
87	Leven and Melville, Ronald Ruthven Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
162	Lichfield, Thomas Francis Earl of
255	Lichfield, Augustus Bishop of
336	Lilford, John Lord
249	Lincoln, Edward Bishop of
588	Lindley, Nathaniel Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
65	Lindsey, Montague Peregrine Albemarle Earl of
510	Lingen, Ralph Robert Wheeler Lord
54	Linlithgow, John Adrian Louis Marquess of
570	Lister, Joseph Lord

233 Llandaff, Henry Viscount
246 Llandaff, Richard Bishop of
548 Llangattock, John Allan Lord
559 Loch, Edward Douglas Lord
349 Loftus, John Henry Lord. (Marquess of Ely)
192 Londesborough, William Francis Henry Earl of 241 London, Arthur Foley Bishop of 141 Lonsdale, Hugh Cecil Earl of
405 Lovat, Simon Joseph Lord
170 Lovelace, Ralph Gordon Earl of 305 Lovel and Holland, Augustus Arthur Lord. (Earl of Egmont)
126 Lucan, George Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
573 Ludlow, Henry Ludlow Lord
417 Lurgan, William Lord
186 Lytton, Victor Alexander George Robert Earl of 436 Lyveden, Courtenay Robert Percy Lord

M

96 Macclesfield, George Loveden William Henry Earl of 526 Macnaghten, Edward Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
530 Magheramorne, Dudley Stuart Lord
120 Malmesbury, James Edward Earl of 23 Manchester, William Angus Drogo Duke of 290 Manners of Haddon, Henry John Brinsley Lord. (Marquess of Granby)
359 Manners, John Thomas Lord
114 Mansfield, William David Earl of 138 Manvers, Charles William Sydney Earl
81 Mar, John Francis Erskine Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
83 Mar and Kellie, Walter John Francis Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
19 Marlborough, Charles Richard John Duke of 539 Masham, Samuel Lord
340 Massy, John Thomas William Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
124 Mayo, Dermot Robert Wyndham Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
361 Meldrum, Charles Lord. (Marquess of Huntly)
213 Melville, Henry Viscount
328 Mendip, Thomas Charles Lord. (Viscount Clifden)
443 Meredyth, James Herbert Gustavus Meredyth Lord. (Lord Athlumney)
413 Methuen, Paul Sanford Lord
300 Middleton, Digby Wentworth Bayard Lord
240 Milner, Alfred Viscount
367 Minster, Victor George Henry Francis Lord. (Marquess Conyngham)
144 Minto, Gilbert John Earl of
445 Monck, Henry Power Charles Stanley Lord. (Viscount Monck)
528 Monckton, George Edmund Milnes Lord. (Viscount Galway)
470 Moncreiff, Henry James Lord
500 Monk Bretton, John William Lord
508 Monkswell, Robert Lord
301 Monson, Augustus Debonnaire John Lord
514 Montagu of Beaulieu, Henry John Lord
356 Monteagle, Henry Ulick Lord (Marquess of Sligo)
418 Monteagle of Brandon, Thomas Spring Lord
149 Morley, Albert Edmund Earl of
82 Morton, Sholto George Watson Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
393 Mostyn, Llewelyn Nevill Vaughan Lord
116 Mount Edgcumbe, William Henry Earl of 538 Mount Stephen, George Lord
266 Mowbray, Charles Botolph Joseph Lord
579 Muncaster, Josslyn Francis Lord
160 Munster, Aubrey Earl of 341 Muskerry, Hamilton Matthew Fitzmaurice Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

N

453 Napier, Robert William Lord

135 Nelson, Horatio Earl

24 Newcastle, Henry Pelham Archibald Douglas Duke of

577 Newlands, William Wallace Lord

546 Newton, Thomas Wodehouse Lord

10 Norfolk, Henry Duke of. (Earl Marshal of England)

48 Normanby, Constantine Charles Henry Marquess of

279 North, William Henry John Lord

41 Northampton, William George Spencer Scott Marquess of

501 Northbourne, Walter Henry Lord

184 Northbrook, Thomas George Earl of 586 Northcote, Henry Stafford Lord

88 Northesk, David John Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)

505 Northington, Frederic Lord. (Lord Henley)

25 Northumberland, Henry George Duke of

483 Norton, Charles Bowyer Lord

257 Norwich, John Bishop of

O

590 O'Brien, Peter Lord

465 O'Hagan, Maurice Herbert Ignatius Towneley Lord

452 O'Neill, Edward Lord

131 Onslow, William Hillier Earl of

404 Oranmore and Browne, Geoffrey Henry Browne Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

139 Orford, Robert Horace Earl of

371 Oriel, Clotworthy John Eyre Lord. (Viscount Massereene)

451 Ormathwaite, Arthur Lord

368 Ormonde, James Edward William Theobald Lord. (Marquess of Ormonde)

553 Overtoun, John Campbell Lord

420 Oxenfoord, John Hew North Gustave Henry Lord. (Earl of Stair)

P

231 Peel, Arthur Wellesley Viscount

55 & 60 Pembroke and Montgomery, Sidney Earl of. (Lord Steward of the Household)

448 Penrhyn, George Sholto Gordon Lord

262 Peterborough, Edward Carr Bishop of

282 Petre, Bernard Henry Philip Lord

549 Playfair, George James Lord

380 Plunket, William Lee Lord

392 Poltimore, Augustus Frederick George Warwick Lord

302 Ponsonby, Walter William Brabazon Lord. (Earl of Bessborough)

22 Portland, William John Arthur Charles James Duke of

227 Portman, William Henry Berkeley Viscount

101 Portsmouth, Newton Earl of

80 Poulett, William John Lydston Earl

209 Powerscourt, Mervyn Edward Viscount. (Elected for Ireland)

504 Powerscourt, Mervyn Edward Lord. (In another place as Viscount Powerscourt)

135 Powis, George Charles Earl of

R

109 Radnor, Jacob Earl of

426 Raglan, George Fitz-Roy Henry Lord

476 Ramsay, Arthur George Maule Lord. (Earl of Dalhousie)

378 Ranfurly, Uchter John Mark Lord. (Earl of Ranfurly)

455 Rathdonnell, Thomas Kane Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

564 Rathmore, David Robert Lord

182 Ravensworth, Atholl Charles Earl of

374 Rayleigh, John William Lord

494 Reay, Donald James Lord

598 Redesdale, Algernon Bertram Lord

556 Rendel, Stuart Lord

507 Revelstoke, John Lord

337 Ribblesdale, Thomas Lord

12 Richmond, Charles Henry Duke of

236 Ridley, Matthew White Viscount

49 Ripon, George Frederick Samuel Marquess of

248 Ripon, William Boyd Bishop of

199 Roberts, Frederick Sleigh Earl

585 Robertson, James Patrick Bannerman Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

260	Rochester, Edward Stuart Bishop of
315	Rodney, George Bridges Harley Dennett Lord
442	Romilly, John Gaspard Le Marchant Lord
132	Romney, Charles Earl of
382	Rosebery, Archibald Philip Lord. (Earl of Rosebery)
568	Rosmead, Hercules Arthur Temple Lord
137	Rosse, Lawrence Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
129	Rosslyn, James Francis Harry Earl of
408	Rossmore, Derrick Warner William Lord
506	Rothschild, Nathaniel Mayer Lord
178	Russell, John Francis Stanley Earl
20	Rutland, John James Robert Duke of

S

482	Sackville, Lionel Sackville Lord
15	St. Albans, Charles Victor Albert Aubrey De Vere Duke of
261	St. Albans, Edgar, Bishop of
253	St. Asaph, Alfred George Bishop of
263	St. Davids, John Bishop of
148	Saint Germans, Henry Cornwallis Earl of
280	St. John of Bletso, Beauchamp Moubray Lord
425	Saint Leonards, Edward Burtenshaw Lord
529	Saint Levan, John Lord
512	Saint Oswald, Rowland Lord
212	St. Vincent, Carnegie Parker Viscount
9 & 35	Salisbury, James Edward Hubert Marquess of. (Lord Privy Seal)
250	Salisbury, John Bishop of
331	Saltersford, James George Henry Lord. (Earl of Courtown)
293	Saltoun, Alexander William Fredk. Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
466	Sandhurst, William Lord
69	Sandwich, Edward George Henry Earl of
353	Sandys, Augustus Frederick Arthur Lord
535	Savile, John Savile Lord
283	Saye and Sele, John Fiennes Lord
76	Scarborough, Aldred Fredk. George Beresford Earl of
303	Scarsdale, Alfred Nathaniel Holden Lord
419	Seaton, John Reginald Upton Lord
387	Sefton, Osbert Cecil Lord. (Earl of Sefton)
189	Selborne, William Waldegrave Earl of
73	Shaftesbury, Anthony Earl of
541	Shand, Alexander Burns Lord
354	Sheffield, Henry North Lord. (Earl of Sheffield)
318	Sherborne, Edward Lennox Lord
57	Shrewsbury, Charles Henry John Earl of
484	Shute, Walter Bulkeley Lord. (Viscount Barrington)
593	Shuttleworth, Ughtred James Lord
214	Sidmouth, William Wells Viscount
370	Silchester, Thomas Lord. (Earl of Longford)
294	Sinclair, Charles William Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
376	Somerhill, Hubert George Lord. (Marquess of Clanricarde)
316	Somers, Arthur Herbert Tennyson Lord
11	Somerset, Algernon Duke of
468	Somerton, Sidney James Lord. (Earl of Normanton)
188	Sondes, George Edward Earl
313	Southampton, Charles Henry Lord
247	Southwell, George Bishop of
110	Spencer, John Poyntz Earl
287	Stafford, Fitzherbert Lord
520	Stalbridge, Richard de Aquila Lord
66	Stamford, William Earl of
95	Stanhope, Arthur Philip Earl
414	Stanley of Alderley, Edward Lyulph Lord
555	Stanmore, Arthur Lord
330	Stewart of Garlies, Randolph Henry Lord. (Earl of Galloway)
154	Stradbroke, George Edward John Mowbray Earl of
173	Strafford, Francis Edmund Cecil Earl of

115 Strange, John James Hugh Henry Earl. (Duke of Atholl)

576 Strathcona and Mount Royal, Donald Alexander Lord

403 Stratheden, Hallyburton George Lord

499 Strathspey, James Lord. (Earl of Seafield)

329 Stuart of Castle Stuart, Francis James Lord. (Earl of Moray)

412 Sudeley, Charles Douglas Richard Lord

502 Sudley, Arthur Jocelyn Charles Lord. (Earl of Arran)

321 Suffield, Charles Lord

62 Suffolk and Berkshire, Henry Molyneux Paget Earl of 28 Sutherland, Cromartie Duke of

551 Swansea, Ernest Ambrose Lord

T

429 Talbot de Malahide, Richard Wogan Lord

92 Tankerville, George Montagu Earl of

155 Temple of Stowe, Algernon William Stephen Earl

394 Templemore, Henry Spencer Lord

215 Templetown, Henry Edward Montagu Dorington Clotworthy Viscount. (Elected for Ireland)

498 Tennyson, Hallam Lord

379 Tenterden, Charles Stuart Henry Lord

286 Teynham, Henry John Philip Sidney Lord

525 Thring, Henry Lord

326 Thurlow, Thomas John Lord

480 Tollemache, Wilbraham Frederic Lord

295 Torphichen, James Walter Lord. (Elected for Scotland)

206 Torrington, George Master Viscount

34 Townshend, John James Dudley Stuart Marquess

435 Tredegar, Godfrey Charles Lord

489 Trevor, Arthur William Lord

254 Truro, John Bishop of

492 Tweeddale, William Montagu Lord. (Marquess of Tweeddale)

497 Tweedmouth, Edward Lord

319 Tyrone, Henry De La Poer Lord. (Marquess of Waterford)

V

8 & 157 Vane, Charles Stewart Earl. (Marquess of Londonderry) (Lord President of the Council)

275 Vaux of Harrowden, Hubert George Charles Lord

347 Ventry, Dayrolles Blakeney Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

306 Vernon, George Francis Augustus Lord

146 Verulam, James Walter Earl of

421 Vivian, George Crespigny Brabazon Lord

W

1 Wales, His Royal Highness The Prince of

98 Waldegrave, William Frederick Earl

311 Walsingham, Thomas Lord

560 Wandsworth, Sydney James Lord

557 Welby, Reginald Earle Lord

27 Wellington, Arthur Charles Duke of

369 Wemyss, Francis Richard Lord. (Earl of Wemyss)

416 Wenlock, Beilby Lord

276 Wentworth, Ralph Gordon Lord. (In another place as Earl of Lovelace)

439 Westbury, Richard Luttrell Pilkington Lord

121 Westmeath, Anthony Francis Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)

29 Westminster, Hugh Richard Arthur Duke of

64 Westmorland, Anthony Mildmay Julian Earl of 183 Wharncliffe, Francis John Earl of

377 Wigan, James Ludovic Lord. (Earl of Crawford)

274 Willoughby de Broke, Richard Greville Lord

134 Wilton, Arthur George Earl of

486 Wimborne, Ivor Bertie Lord

32 Winchester, Henry William Montagu Marquess of 243 Winchester, Herbert Edward Bishop of

67 Winchilsea and Nottingham, Henry Stormont Earl of

278 Windsor, Robert George Lord

176 Winton, George Arnulph Earl of. (Earl of Eglintoun)

229 Wolseley, Garnet Joseph Viscount

463 Wolverton, Frederick Lord

402 Worlingham, Archibald Brabazon Sparrow Lord. (Earl of Gosford)

411 Wrottesley, Arthur Lord

384 Wynford, George Lord

Y

167 Yarborough, Chas. Alfred Worsley Earl of

7 York, William Dalrymple Archbishop of

Z

53 Zetland, Lawrence Marquess of

270 Zouche of Haryngworth, Robert Nathaniel Cecil George Lord

The following Lords have Two Numbers, being Twice named in the Roll :

Earl of Halsbury, as Lord High Chancellor, and as Earl of Halsbury. (Nos. 6 and 198.)

Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry), as Lord President, and as Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry). (Nos. 8 and 157.)

Marquess of Salisbury, as Lord Privy Seal, and as Marquess of Salisbury. (Nos. 9 and 35.)

Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, as Lord Steward, and as Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. (Nos. 55 and 60.)

Earl of Clarendon, as Lord Chamberlain, and as Earl of Clarendon. (Nos. 56 and 113.)

Earl of Lovelace, as Earl of Lovelace, and as Lord Wentworth. (Nos. 170 and 276.)

Earl de Montalt, as Earl de Montalt, and as Viscount Hawarden. (Nos. 191 and 211.)

Viscount Powerscourt, as Viscount Powerscourt, and as Lord Powerscourt. (Nos. 209 and 504.)

ROLL

OF THE

LORDS SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL

IN THE

FIFTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

OF

THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

4 EDWARD VII. 1904.

MEM.—According to the Usage of Parliament, when the House appoints a Select Committee the Lords appointed to serve upon it are named in the Order of their Rank, beginning with the Highest; and so, when the House sends a Committee to a Conference with the Commons, the Lord highest in Rank is called first, and the rest go forth in like Order: But when the Whole House is called over for any Purpose, within the House, or for the Purpose of proceeding forth to Westminster Hall, or upon any public Solemnity, the Call begins invariably with the Junior Baron.

1 His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales.

2 His Royal Highness Arthur William Patrick Albert Duke of Connaught and Strathearn

3 His Royal Highness Leopold Charles Edward George Albert Duke of Albany

4 His Royal Highness George William Frederick Charles Duke of Cambridge

5 Randall Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury

6 Hardinge Stanley Earl of Halsbury Lord High Chancellor

7 William Dalrymple Archbishop of York

8 Charles Steward Earl VANE. (Marquess of Londonderry). Lord President of the Council.

9 James Edward Hubert Marquess of Salisbury, Lord Privy Seal.

10 Henry Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England

11 Algernon Duke of Somerset

12 Charles Henry Duke of Richmond

13 Augustus Charles Lennox Duke of Grafton

14 Henry Adelbert Wellington Fitzroy Duke of Beaufort

15 Charles Victor Albert Aubrey de Vere Duke of St. Albans

16 George Godolphin Duke of Leeds

17 Herbrand Arthur Duke of Bedford

18 Spencer Compton Duke of Devonshire.

19 Charles Richard John Duke of Marlborough

20 John James Robert Duke of Rutland

21 Alfred Douglas Duke of Brandon

22 William John Arthur Charles James Duke of Portland

23 William Angus Drogo Duke of Manchester

24 Henry Pelham Archibald Douglas Duke of Newcastle

25 Henry George Duke of Northumberland

26 His Royal Highness Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale

27 Arthur Charles Duke of Wellington

28 Cromartie Duke of Sutherland

29 Hugh Richard Arthur Duke of Westminster

30 Alexander William George Duke of Fife

31 John Douglas Sutherland Duke of Argyll

32 Henry William Montagu Marquess of Winchester

33 Henry Charles Keith Marquess of Lansdowne

34 John James Dudley Stuart Marquess Townshend

35 James Edward Hubert Marquess Salisbury. In another place as Lord Privy Seal.)

36 Thomas Henry Marquess of Bath

37 James Marquess of Abercorn (Duke of Abercorn)

38 Hugh de Grey Marquess of Hertford

39 John Marquess of Bute

40 William Thomas Brownlow Marquess of Exeter

41 William George Spencer Scott Marquess of Northampton

42 John Charles Marquess Camden

43 Henry Cyril Marquess of Anglesey

44 George Henry Hugh Marquess of Cholmondeley.

45 Henry Augustus Marquess of Ailesbury

46 Frederick William John Marquess of Bristol

47 Archibald Marquess of Ailsa

48 Constantine Charles Henry Marquess of Normanby

49 George Frederick Samuel Marquess of Ripon

50 William Marquess of Abergavenny

51 Gavin Marquess of Breadalbane

52 Terence John Temple Marquess of Dufferin and Ava

53 Lawrence Marquess of Zetland

54 John Adrian Louis Marquess of Linlithgow

55 Sidney Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, Lord Steward of the Household

56 Edward Hyde Earl of Clarendon, Lord Chamberlain of the Household

57 Charles Henry John Earl of Shrewsbury

58 Frederick Arthur Earl of Derby

59 Warner Francis John Plantagenet Earl of Huntingdon

60 Sidney Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. (In another place as Lord Steward of the Household).

61 Charles Pepys Earl of Devon

62 Henry Molyneux Paget Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire

63 Rudolph Robert Basil Aloysius Augustine Earl of Denbigh

64 Anthony Mildmay Julian Earl of Westmorland

65 Montague Peregrine Albemarle Earl of Lindsey

66 William Earl of Stamford

67 Henry Stormont Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham

68 Edwyn Francis Earl of Chesterfield

69 Edward George Henry Earl of Sandwich

70 George Devereux de Vere Earl of Essex

71 George James Earl of Carlisle

72 William Henry Walter Earl of Doncaster. (Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry)

73 Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury

74 Randal Mowbray Thomas Earl of Berkeley

75 Montagu Arthur Earl of Abingdon

76 Aldred Frederick George Beresford Earl of Scarborough

77 Arnold Allan Cecil Earl of Albemarle

78 George William Earl of Coventry

79 Victor Albert George Earl of Jersey

80 William John Lydston Earl Poulett

81 John Francis Erskine Earl of Mar. (Elected for Scotland)

82 Sholto George Watson Earl of Morton. (Elected for Scotland)

83 Walter John Francis Earl of Mar and Kellie. (Elected for Scotland)

84 George Earl of Haddington. (Elected for Scotland)

85 Frederick Henry Earl of Lauderdale. (Elected for Scotland)

86 Robert Harris Carnwath Earl of Carnwath. (Elected for Scotland)

87 Ronald Ruthven Earl of Leven and Melville. (Elected for Scotland)

88 David John Earl of Northesk. (Elected for Scotland)

89 Douglas Mackinnon Baillie Hamilton Earl of Dundonald. (Elected for Scotland)

90 Sewallis Edward Earl Ferrers

91 William Heneage Earl of Dartmouth

92 George Montagu Earl of Tankerville

93 Charles Wightwick Earl of Aylesford

94 Francis Thomas De Grey Earl Cowper

95 Arthur Philip Earl Stanhope

96 George Loveden William Henry Earl of Macclesfield

97 Douglas Beresford Malise Ronald Earl Graham. (Duke of Montrose)

98 William Frederick Earl Waldegrave

99 Bertram Earl of Ashburnham

100 Charles Augustus Earl of Harrington

101 Newton Earl of Portsmouth

102 Francis Richard Charles Guy Earl Brooke and Earl of Warwick

103 Sidney Carr Earl of Buckinghamshire

104 William Charles De Meuron Earl Fitzwilliam

105 Frederick George Earl of Guilford

106 Albert Edward Philip Henry Earl of Hardwicke

107 Henry Edward Earl of Ilchester

108 Gilbert George Reginald Earl De La Warr

109 Jacob Earl of Radnor

110 John Poyntz Earl Spencer

111 Seymour Henry Earl Bathurst

112 Arthur Wills John Wellington Trumbull Blundell Earl of Hillsborough. (Marquess of Downshire)

113 Edward Hyde Earl of Clarendon. (In another place as Lord Chamberlain of the Household)

114 William David Earl of Mansfield

115 John James Hugh Henry Earl Strange. (Duke of Atholl)

116 William Henry Earl of Mount Edgcumbe

117 Hugh Earl Fortescue

118 George Edward Stanhope Molyneux Earl of Carnarvon

119 George Henry Earl Cadogan

120 James Edward Earl of Malmesbury

121 Anthony Francis Earl of Westmeath. (Elected for Ireland)

122 Ponsonby William Earl of Drogheda (Elected for Ireland)

123 John Vansittart Danvers Earl of Lanesborough. (Elected for Ireland)

124 Dermot Robert Wyndham Earl of Mayo. (Elected for Ireland)

125 Hugh Earl Annesley. (Elected for Ireland)

126 George Earl of Lucan. (Elected for Ireland)

127 Somerset Richard Earl of Belmore (Elected for Ireland)

128 James Francis Earl of Bandon. (Elected for Ireland)

129 James Francis Harry Earl of Rosslyn

130 William George Robert Earl of Craven

131 William Hillier Earl of Onslow

132 Charles Earl of Romney
133 Francis Godolphin Earl of Chichester
134 Arthur George Earl of Wilton
135 George Charles Earl of Powis
136 Horatio Earl Nelson
137 Lawrence Earl of Rosse. (Elected for Ireland)
138 Charles William Sydney Earl Manvers
139 Robert Horace Earl of Orford
140 Albert Henry George Earl Grey
141 Hugh Cecil Earl of Lonsdale
142 John Herbert Dudley Earl of Harrowby
143 Henry Ulick Earl of Harewood
144 Gilbert John Earl of Minto
145 Alan Frederick Earl Cathcart
146 James Walter Earl of Verulam
147 Adelbert Wellington Brownlow Earl Brownlow
148 Henry Cornwallis Earl of St. Germans
149 Albert Edmund Earl of Morley
150 George Cecil Orlando Earl of Bradford
151 William Earl Beauchamp
152 John Earl of Eldon
153 Richard George Penn Earl Howe
154 George Edward John Mowbray Earl of Stradbroke
155 Algernon William Stephen Earl Temple of Stowe
156 Francis Charles Earl of Kilmorey (Elected for Ireland)
157 Charles Stewart Earl Vane. (Marquess of Londonderry.) In another place as Lord President of the Council).
158 William Archer Earl Amherst
159 Frederick Archibald Vaughan Earl Cawdor
160 Aubrey Earl of Munster
161 Robert Adam Philips Haldane Earl of Camperdown
162 Thomas Francis Earl of Lichfield
163 John George Earl of Durham
164 Granville George Earl Granville
165 Henry Alexander Gordon Earl of Effingham
166 Henry John Earl of Ducie
167 Charles Alfred Worsley Earl of Yarborough
168 Henry John Earl Innes. (Duke of Roxburghe)
169 Thomas William Earl of Leicester
170 Ralph Gordon Earl of Lovelace
171 Charles William Francis Earl of Gainsborough
172 Francis Charles Granville Earl of Ellesmere
173 Francis Edmund Cecil Earl of Strafford
174 Kenelm Charles Edward Earl of Cottenham
175 Henry Arthur Mornington Earl Cowley
176 George Arnulph Earl of Winton (Earl of Eglintoun)
177 William Humble Earl of Dudley
178 John Francis Stanley Earl Russell
179 John Earl of Kimberley
180 Vesey Earl of Dartrey
181 William Ernest Earl of Feversham
182 Atholl Charles Earl of Ravensworth
183 Francis John Earl of Wharncliffe
184 Thomas George Earl of Northbrook
185 Herbert John Earl Cairns
186 Victor Alexander George Robert Earl of Lytton
187 Edward George Earl of Lathom
188 George Edward Earl Sondes
189 William Waldegrave Earl of Selborne
190 Walter Stafford Earl of Iddesleigh
191 Cornwallis Earl de Montalt
192 William Francis Henry Earl of Londesborough
193 Gathorne Earl of Cranbrook
194 Gilbert Henry Earl of Ancaster
195 Charles Robert Earl Carrington
196 Robert Offley Ashburton Earl of Crewe
197 Wilbraham Earl Egerton
198 Hardinge Stanley Earl of Halsbury. (In another place as Lord High Chancellor)
199 Frederick Sleigh Earl Roberts
200 Evelyn Earl of Cromer
201 Robert Viscount Hereford
202 Byron Plantagenet Viscount Falkland. (Elected for Scotland)
203 ——— Viscount Bolingbroke and St. John

204 Charles George Viscount Cobham
205 Evelyn Edward Thomas Viscount Falmouth
206 George Master Viscount Torrington
207 Maurice Viscount Leinster. (Duke of Leinster)
208 Francis Wheler Viscount Hood
209 Mervyn Edward Viscount Powerscourt. (Elected for Ireland)
210 Henry William Crosbie Viscount Bangor. (Elected for Ireland)
211 Cornwallis Viscount Hawarden. (Elected for Ireland.) (In another place as Earl de Montalt)
212 Carnegie Parker Viscount St. Vincent
213 Henry Viscount Melville
214 William Wells Viscount Sidmouth
215 Henry Edward Montagu Dorington Clotworthy Viscount Templetown. (Elected for Ireland)
216 John Campbell Viscount Gordon. (Earl of Aberdeen)
217 Edward Addington Hargreaves. Viscount Exmouth
218 Richard Walter John Viscount Hutchinson. (Earl of Donoughmore)
219 William Frederick Viscount Clancarty. (Earl of Clancarty)
220 Francis Lynch Wellington Viscount Combermere
221 Henry Charles Viscount Canterbury
222 Rowland Richard Viscount Hill
223 Henry Charles Viscount Hardinge
224 Hugh Viscount Gough
225 Charles Lindley Viscount Halifax
226 Alexander Nelson Viscount Bridport
227 William Henry Berkeley Viscount Portman
228 Henry Robert Viscount Hampden
229 Garnet Joseph Viscount Wolseley
230 Richard Assheton Viscount Cross
231 Arthur Wellesley Viscount Peel
232 Henry Thurstan Viscount Knutsford
233 Henry Viscount Llandaff
234 Reginald Baliol Viscount Esher
235 George Joachim Viscount Goschen
236 Matthew White Viscount Ridley
237 Horatio Herbert Viscount Kitchener of Khartoum and of the Vaal
238 Charles Robert William Viscount Colville of Culross.
239 Victor Albert Francis Charles Viscount Churchill
240 Alfred Viscount Milner
241 Arthur Foley Bishop of London
242 Handley Carr Glyn Bishop of Durham
243 Herbert Edward Bishop of Winchester
244 Charles John Bishop of Gloucester
245 Ernest Roland Bishop of Chichester
246 Richard Bishop of Llandaff
247 George Bishop of Southwell
248 William Boyd Bishop of Ripon
249 Edward Bishop of Lincoln
250 John Bishop of Salisbury
251 Alwyne Bishop of Ely
252 Francis John Bishop of Chester
253 Alfred George Bishop of St. Asaph
254 John Bishop of Truro
255 Angustus Bishop of Lichfield
256 John Wareing Bishop of Carlisle
257 John Bishop of Norwich
258 George Wyndham Bishop of Bath and Wells
259 John Bishop of Hereford
260 Edward Stuart Bishop of Rochester
261 Edgar Bishop of St. Albans
262 Edward Carr Bishop of Peterborough
263 John Bishop of St. David's
264 George Forrest Bishop of Bristol.
265 Dudley Charles Lord de Ros.
266 Charles Botolph Joseph Lord Mowbray
267 George Manners Lord Hastings
268 Jack Southwell Lord de Clifford
269 Charles Henry Rolle Lord Clinton
270 Robert Nathaniel Cecil George Lord Zouche of Haryngworth
271 Rawdon George Grey Lord Grey de Ruthyn
272 Charles Edward Hastings Lord Botreaux. (Earl of Loudoun)
273 Ralph Francis Julian Lord Camoys

274 Richard Greville Lord Willoughby de Broke
275 Hubert George Charles Lord Vaux of Harrowden
276 Ralph Gordon Lord Wentworth. (In another place as Earl of Lovelace)
277 Alfred Thomas Townshend Lord Braye
278 Robert George Lord Windsor
279 William Henry John Lord North
280 Beauchamp Moubray Lord St. John of Bletso
281 Thomas Evelyn Lord Howard de Walden
282 Bernard Henry Philip Lord Petre
283 John Fiennes Lord Saye and Sele
284 John Francis Lord Arundell of Wardour
285 Ronald John Lord Dormer
286 Henry John Philip Sidney Lord Teynham
287 Fitzherbert Lord Stafford
288 George Frederick William Lord Byron
289 Lewis Henry Hugh Lord Clifford of Chudleigh
290 Henry John Brinsley Lord Manners of Haddon. (Marquess of Granby)
291 Henry de Vere Lord Barnard
292 Horace Courtenay Gammell Lord Forbes. (Elected for Scotland)
293 Alexander William Frederick Lord Saltoun. (Elected for Scotland)
294 Charles William Lord Sinclair. (Elected for Scotland)
295 James Walter Lord Torphichen. (Elected for Scotland)
296 Alexander Hugh Lord Balfour of Burley. (Elected for Scotland)
297 Alexander Charles Lord Belhaven and Stenton. (Elected for Scotland)
298 Richard Edmund St. Lawrence Lord Boyle. (Earl of Cork and Orrery)
299 Archibald Fitzroy George Lord Hay. (Earl of Kinnoul)
300 Digby Wentworth Bayard Lord Middleton
301 Augustus Debonnaire John Lord Monson
302 Walter William Brabazon Lord Ponsonby. (Earl of Bessborough)
303 Alfred Nathaniel Holden Lord Scarsdale
304 George Florance Lord Boston
305 Augustus Arthur Lord Lovel and Holland. (Earl of Egmont)
306 George Francis Augustus Lord Vernon
307 Edward Henry Trafalgar Lord Digby
308 Martin Bladen Lord Hawke
309 Henry Thomas Lord Foley
310 Arthur de Cardonnel Lord Dinevor
311 Thomas Lord Walsingham
312 William Lord Bagot
313 Charles Henry Lord Southampton
314 John Richard Brinsley Lord Grantley
315 George Bridges Harley Dennett Lord Rodney
316 Arthur Herbert Tennyson Lord Somers
317 Richard Henry Lord Berwick
318 Edward Lennox Lord Sherborne
319 Henry De La Poer Lord Tyrone (Marquess of Waterford)
320 Richard Henry Lord Carleton. (Earl of Shannon)
321 Charles Lord Suffield
322 Lloyd Lord Kenyon
323 Henry Lord Braybrooke
324 George Augustus Hamilton Lord Fisherwick. (Marquess of Donegall)
325 Henry Charles Lord Gage. (Viscount Gage)
326 Thomas John Lord Thurlow
327 William Morton Lord Auckland
328 Thomas Charles Lord Mendip, (Viscount Clifden)
329 Francis James Lord Stuart of Castle Stuart. (Earl of Moray)
330 Randolph Henry Lord Stewart of Garlies. (Earl of Galloway)
331 James George Henry Lord Saltersford. (Earl of Courtown)
332 William Lord Brodrick. (Viscount Midleton)
333 Augustus Cholmondeley Lord Calthorpe

334 Peter Robert Lord Gwydir
335 William Thomas Lord Bolton
336 John Lord Lilford
337 Thomas Lord Ribblesdale
338 Robert St. John FitzWalter Lord Dunboyne. (Elected for Ireland)
339 Lucius William Lord Inchiquin. (Elected for Ireland)
340 John Thomas William Lord Massy. (Elected for Ireland)
341 Hamilton Matthew Fitzmaurice Lord Muskerry. (Elected for Ireland)
342 Francis William Lord Kilmaine. (Elected for Ireland)
343 Luke Gerald Lord Clonbrock. (Elected for Ireland)
344 Charles Mark Lord Headley. (Elected for Ireland)
345 Edward Henry Churchill Lord Crofton. (Elected for Ireland)
346 Hercules Edward Lord Langford (Elected for Ireland)
347 Dayrolles Blakeney Lord Ventry. (Elected for Ireland)
348 Henry O'Callaghan Lord Dunalley. (Elected for Ireland)
349 John Henry Lord Loftus. (Marquess of Ely)
350 William Lord Carysfort. (Earl of Carysfort)
351 George Ralph Lord Abercromby
352 Edward Downes Lord Ellenborough
353 Augustus Frederick Arthur Lord Sandys
354 Henry North Lord Sheffield. (Earl of Sheffield)
355 William Macnaghten Lord Erskine
356 Henry Ulick Lord Monteagle (Marquess of Sligo)
357 Bernard Arthur William Patrick Hastings Lord Granard. (Earl of Granard)
358 ——————— Lord Gardner
359 John Thomas Lord Manners
360 Albert Edward Lord Castlemaine. (Elected for Ireland)
361 Charles Lord Meldrum. (Marquess of Huntly)
362 Lowry Egerton Lord Grinstead. (Earl of Enniskillen)
363 William Henry Edmond de Vere Sheaffe Lord Foxford. (Earl of Limerick)
364 George Robert Canning Lord Harris
365 Reginald Charles Edward Lord Colchester
366 Robert Schomberg Lord Ker. (Marquess of Lothian)
367 Victor George Henry Francis Lord Minster. (Marquess Conyngham)
368 James Edward William Theobald Lord Ormonde. (Marquess of Ormonde)
369 Francis Richard Lord Wemyss. (Earl of Wemyss)
370 Thomas Lord Silchester. (Earl of Longford)
371 Clotworthy John Eyre Lord Oriel (Viscount Massereene)
372 Hugh Lord Delamere
373 Cecil Theodore Lord Forester
374 John William Lord Rayleigh
375 Edric Frederic Lord Gifford
376 Hubert George Lord Somerhill. (Marquess of Clanricarde)
377 James Ludovic Lord Wigan. (Earl of Crawford)
378 Uchter John Mark Lord Ranfurly. (Earl of Ranfurly)
379 Charles Stuart Henry Lord Tenterden
380 William Lee Lord Plunket
381 Leonard Lord Heytesbury
382 Archibald Philip Lord Rosebery. (Earl of Rosebery)
383 Richard James Lord Clanwilliam. (Earl of Clanwilliam)
384 George Lord Wynford
385 Charles Gore Lord Kilmarnock. (Earl of Erroll)
386 Arthur James Francis Lord Fingall. (Earl of Fingall)
387 Osbert Cecil Lord Sefton. (Earl of Sefton)
388 Charles Lord Clements. (Earl of Leitrim)
389 Geoffrey Thomas Lord Kenlis. (Marquess of Headfort)
390 Reginald Lord Chaworth. (Earl of Meath)

391 Charles Adolphus Lord Dunmore. (Earl of Dunmore)
392 Augustus Frederick George Warwick Lord Poltimore
393 Llewelyn Nevill Vaughan Lord Mostyn
394 Henry Spencer Lord Templemore
395 Valentine Frederick Lord Cloncurry
396 James St. Vincent Lord de Saumarez
397 Thomas Lord Denman
398 Shelley Leopold Laurence Lord Abinger
399 Philip Lord De L'Isle and Dudley
400 Francis Denzil Edward Lord Ashburton
401 Edward George Percy Lord Hatherton
402 Archibald Brabazon Sparrow Lord Worlingham. (Earl of Gosford)
403 Hallyburton George Lord Strathеden
404 Geoffrey Henry Browne Lord Oranmore and Browne. (Elected for Ireland)
405 Simon Joseph Lord Lovat
406 William Spencer Lord Bateman
407 Algernon Hawkins Thomond Lord Kintore. (Earl of Kintore)
408 Derrick Warner William Lord Rossmore
409 Robert Shapland George Julian Lord Carew
410 William Ashley Webb Lord De Mauley
411 Arthur Lord Wrottesley
412 Charles Douglas Richard Lord Sudeley
413 Paul Sanford Lord Methuen
414 Edward Lyulph Lord Stanley of Alderley
415 William Henry Lord Leigh
416 Beilby Lord Wenlock
417 William Lord Lurgan
418 Thomas Spring Lord Monteagle of Brandon
419 John Reginald Upton Lord Seaton
420 John Hew North Gustave Henry Lord Oxenfoord. (Earl of Stair)
421 George Crespigny Brabazon Lord Vivian
422 Henry Lord Congleton
423 Victor Alexander Lord Elgin. (Earl of Elgin and Kincardine)
424 Arthur Lord de Freyne
425 Edward Burtenshaw Lord Saint Leonards
426 George Fitz-Roy Henry Lord Raglan
427 Valentine Augustus Lord Kenmare. (Earl of Kenmare)
428 Henry Lord Belper
429 Richard Wogan Lord Talbot de Malahide
430 Robert Wellesley Lord Ebury
431 Charles Compton William Lord Chesham
432 Frederic Augustus Lord Chelmsford
433 John Lord Churston
434 Charles Henry Lord Leconfield
435 Godfrey Charles Lord Tredegar
436 Courtenay Robert Percy Lord Lyveden
437 Henry Charles Lord Brougham and Vaux
438 Arthur Fitz-Gerald Lord Kinnaird
439 Richard Luttrell Pilkington Lord Westbury
440 Charles Paget Fitzhardinge Lord Fitzhardinge
441 Luke Lord Annaly
442 John Gaspard Le Marchant Lord Romilly
443 James Herbert Gustavus Meredyth Lord Meredyth. (Lord Athlumney)
444 Windham Thomas Lord Kenry. (Earl of Dunraven and Mount-Earl)
445 Henry Power Charles Stanley Lord Monck. (Viscount Monck)
446 Charles Henry Chandos Lord Hartismere. (Lord Henniker)
447 Hylton George Hylton Lord Hylton
448 George Sholto Gordon Lord Penrhyn
449 Gustavus Russell Lord Brancepeth. (Viscount Boyne)
450 John Henry Lord Kesteven
451 Arthur Lord Ormathwaite

452 Edward Lord O'Neill
453 Robert William Lord Napier
454 Jenico William Joseph Lord Gormanston. (Viscount Gormanston)
455 Thomas Kane Lord Rathdonnell. (Elected for Ireland)
456 John Hamilton Lord Lawrence
457 John Lord Dunning. (Lord Rollo)
458 James Lord Balinhard. (Earl of Southesk)
459 William Lord Hare. (Earl of Listowel)
460 Francis Edward Lord Howard of Glossop
461 Bernard Edward Barnaby Lord Castletown
462 Richard Maximilian Lord Acton
463 Frederick Lord Wolverton
464 Algernon William Fulke Lord Greville
465 Maurice Herbert Ignatius Towneley Lord O'Hagan
466 William Lord Sandhurst
467 William John George Lord Ettrick. (Lord Napier)
468 Sidney James Lord Somerton. (Earl of Normanton)
469 Henry Campbell Lord Aberdare
470 Henry James Lord Moncrieff
471 Bernard John Seymour Lord Coleridge
472 Thomas William Gaston Lord Emly
473 Thomas Francis Lord Cottesloe
474 Herbert Perrott Murray Lord Hampton
475 Charles Alexander Lord Douglas. (Earl of Home)
476 Arthur George Maule Lord Ramsey (Earl of Dalhousie)
477 John Henry Lord Fermanagh. (Earl Erne)
478 William Richard Lord Harlech
479 Henry Gerard Lord Alington
480 Wilbraham Frederic Lord Tollemache
481 Frederick John Lord Gerard
482 Lionel Sackville Lord Sackville
483 Charles Bowyer Lord Norton
484 Walter Bulkeley Lord Shute. (Viscount Barrington)
485 Lawrence William Lord Haldon
486 Ivor Bertie Lord Wimborne
487 Arthur Edward Lord Ardilaun
488 Charles Wallace Alexander Napier Lord Lamington
489 Arthur William Lord Trevor
490 Edward Lord Brabourne
491 Arthur Oliver Villiers Lord Ampthill
492 William Montagu Lord Tweeddale. (Marquess of Tweeddale)
493 William Ulick Tristram Lord Howth. (Earl of Howth)
494 Donald James Lord Reay
495 Harcourt Lord Derwent
496 Henry James Lord Hothfield
497 Edward Lord Tweedmouth
498 Hallam Lord Tennyson
499 James Lord Strathspey. (Earl of Seafield)
500 John William Lord Monk Bretton
501 Walter Henry Lord Northbourne
502 Arthur Jocelyn Charles Lord Sudley. (Earl of Arran)
503 Marmaduke Francis Lord Herries
504 Mervyn Edward Lord Powerscourt. (In another place as Viscount Powerscourt)
505 Frederick Lord Northington. (Lord Henley)
506 Nathaniel Mayer Lord Rothschild
507 John Lord Revelstoke
508 Robert Lord Monkswell
509 Arthur Lord Hobhouse
510 Ralph Robert Wheeler Lord Lingen
511 Edward Lord Ashbourne
512 Rowland Lord Saint Oswald
513 Robert Wilfrid Lord Deramore
514 Henry John Lord Montagu of Beaulieu
515 Sidney Herbert Lord Elphinstone
516 Richard Farrer Lord Herschell
517 Charles William Lord Hillingdon
518 Charles Lord Hindlip
519 Edmund Lord Grimthorpe

520 Richard de Aquila Lord Stalbridge
521 Hugh Lord Kensington
522 Michael Arthur Lord Burton
523 Gavin George Lord Hamilton of Dalzell
524 Thomas Lord Brassey
525 Henry Lord Thring
526 Edward Lord Macnaghten. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
527 Claude Lord Bowes. (Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorn)
528 George Edmund Milnes Lord Monckton. (Viscount Galway)
529 John Lord Saint Levan
530 Dudley Stuart Lord Magheramorne
531 George Limbrey Lord Basing
532 William Henry Lord de Ramsey
533 Herbert Francis Lord Cheylesmore
534 Egerton Lord Addington
535 John Savile Lord Savile
536 William Ventris Lord Field
537 Edward Cecil Lord Iveagh
538 George Lord Mount Stephen
539 Samuel Lord Masham
540 William Lord Kelvin
541 Alexander Burns Lord Shand
542 George Lord Ashcombe
543 Archibald Campbell Lord Blythswood
544 Thomas Lord Crawshaw
545 William Amhurst Lord Amherst of Hackney
546 Thomas Wodehouse Lord Newton
547 Henry Lyle Lord Dunleath
548 John Allan Lord Llangattock
549 George James Lord Playfair
550 Cyril Lord Battersea
551 Ernest Ambrose Lord Swansea
552 Thomas Cecil Lord Farrer
553 John Campbell Lord Overtoun
554 Cecil George Savile Lord Hawkesbury
555 Arthur Lord Stanmore
556 Stuart Lord Rendel
557 Reginald Earle Lord Welby
558 Horace Lord Davey. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
559 Edward Douglas Lord Loch
560 Sydney James Lord Wandsworth
561 James Lord Ashton
562 Herbert Coulstoun Lord Burghclere
563 Henry Lord James
564 David Robert Lord Rathmore
565 Algernon Lord Glenesk
566 Henry Hucks Lord Aldenham
567 Edward Lord Heneage
568 Hercules Arthur Temple Lord Rosmead
569 Alexander Smith Lord Kinnear
570 Joseph Lord Lister
571 David Lord Fairlie. (Earl of Glasgow)
572 Hugh Richard Lord Dawnay. (Viscount Downe)
573 Henry Ludlow Lord Ludlow
574 Hans Wellesley Lord Holm Patrick
575 George Arbuthnot Lord Inverclyde
576 Donald Alexander Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal
577 William Wallace Lord Newlands
578 Horace Brand Lord Farquhar
579 Josslyn Francis Lord Muncaster
580 Arthur Lawrence Lord Haliburton
581 Philip Henry Wodehouse Lord Currie
582 Joseph Russell Lord Glanusk
583 Henry Lord Brampton
584 Bertram Francis Lord Cranworth
585 James Patrick Bannerman Lord Robertson. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
586 Henry Stafford Lord Northcote
587 John Lord Avebury
588 Nathaniel Lord Lindley. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

589 Martin Henry Lord Killanin.
590 Peter Lord O'Brien
591 Richard Everard Lord Alverstone
592 John Blair Lord Kinross
593 Ughtred James Lord Shuttleworth
594 William Lawies Lord Allerton
595 Arthur Hugh Lord Barrymore
596 Francis Wallace Lord Grenfell
597 Francis Lord Knollys
598 Algernon Bertram Lord Redesdale
599 Edward Levy Lord Burnham.
600 Michael Lord Biddulph.
601 George Thomas John Lord Estcourt
602* William Henry Armstrong Fitz-Patrick Lord Armstrong.

---

* This number is in excess of the total Number of Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Discrepancy being caused by the following Lords being twice named in the Roll:

Earl of Halsbury as Lord High Chancellor and as Earl of Halsbury (Nos. 6 and 198)

Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry) as Lord President and as Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry). (Nos. 8 and 157.)

Marquess of Salisbury as Lord Privy Seal and as Marquess of Salisbury. (Nos. 9 and 35.)

Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery as Lord Steward and as Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery (Nos. 55 and 60)

Earl of Clarendon as Lord Chamberlain and as Earl of Clarendon (Nos. 56 and 113)

Earl of Lovelace as Earl of Lovelace and as Lord Wentworth (Nos. 170 and 276)

Earl de Montalt as Earl de Montalt and as Viscount Hawarden (Nos. 191 and 211)

Viscount Powerscourt as Viscount Powerscourt and as Lord Powerscourt (Nos. 209 and 504)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF MEMBERS

IN THE

FIFTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT OF
THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND
AND THE FOURTH OF KING EDWARD VII.

(Compiled at the Opening of the Session.)

A

Abraham, William (Glamorgan, Rhondda)
Abraham, William (Cork Co., N.E.)
Acland-Hood, Captain Sir A., Bt. (Somerset, Wellington)
Agg-Gardner, James T. (Cheltenham)
Agnew, Sir Andrew N., Bt. (Edinburgh, South)
Ainsworth, John S. (Argyll)
Aird, Sir John (Paddington, N.)
Allen, Charles P. (Gloucester, Stroud)
Allhusen, Aug. Henry E. (Hackney, Central)
Allsopp, Hon. George H. (Worcester)
Ambrose, Robert (Mayo, West)
Anson, Sir William R., Bt. (Oxford University)
Arkwright, John S. (Hereford)
Arnold-Forster, Hugh O. (Belfast, West)
Arrol, Sir William (Ayrshire, South)
Asher, Alexander (Elgin Burghs)
Ashton, Thomas Gair (Beds., Luton)
Asquith, Rt. Hon. Herbert H. (Fife, East)
Atherley-Jones, Llewellyn (Durham, N.W.)
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John (Londonderry, North)
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hon. Sir H. (Sussex, Lewes)
Austin, Sir John, Bt. (York, W.R., Osgoldcross)

B

Bagot, Captain Josceline F. (Westmoreland, Kendal)
Bailey, James (Newington, Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert (Cumberland, Egremont)
Baird, John G. A. (Glasgow, Central)
Balcarres, Lord (Lancashire, Chorley)
Baldwin, Alfred (Worcester, Bewdley)
Balfour, Rt. Hon. Arthur J. (Manchester, East)
Balfour, Captain Charles B. (Middlesex, Hornsey)
Balfour, Rt. Hon. Gerald William (Leeds, Central)
Balfour, K. R. (Christchurch)
Banbury, Sir Fred. George (Camberwell, Peckham)
Banes, Major George E. (West Ham, South)
Barlow, John Emmott (Somerset, Frome)
Barran, Rowland Hirst (Leeds, North)
Barry, Edward (Cork Co., South)
Barry, Sir Francis Tress, Bt. (Windsor)
Bartley, Sir George C. T. (Islington, N.)
Bathurst, Hon. Allen B. (Gloucester, Cirencester)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire, Chesterfield)
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. Hicks, Bt. (Bristol, W.)

Beaumont, Wentworth C. B. (Northumberland, Hexham)
Beckett, Ernest W. (York, N.R., Whitby)
Bell, Richard (Derby)
Bentinck, Lord Henry C. (Nottingham, S.)
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M. (Bethnal Green, N.E.)
Bignold, A. (Wick Burghs)
Bigwood, James (Middlesex, Brentford)
Bill, Charles (Staffordshire, Leek)
Black, Alexander W. (Banffshire)
Blake, Edward (Longford, S.)
Blundell, Colonel H. B. H. (Lancashire, Ince)
Boland, John (Kerry, South)
Bolton, Thomas Dolling (Derbyshire, N. East)
Bond, Edward (Nottingham, E.)
Boscawen, Capt. A. S. T. Griffith (Kent, Tunbridge)
Boulnois, Edmund (Marylebone, E.)
Bousfield, William R. (Hackney, N.)
Bowles, Colonel Henry F. (Middlesex, Enfield)
Bowles, Thomas Gibson (King's Lynn)
Brand, Hon. Arthur G. (Cambridge, Wisbech)
Brassey, Albert (Oxon, Banbury)
Brigg, John (York, W.R., Keighley)
Broadhurst, Henry (Leicester)
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. W. St. John F. (Surrey, Guildford)
Brotherton, Edward Allen (Wakefield)
Brown, Sir Alex. Hargreaves (Shropshire, Wellington)
Brown, George M. (Edinburgh, Central)
Brunner, Sir John T., Bt. (Cheshire, Northwich)
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James (Aberdeen, South)
Brymer, Col. W. Ernest (Dorset, South)
Buchanan, Thomas R. (Perthshire, E.)
Bull, William James (Hammersmith)
Burdett-Coutts, W. L. A. B. (Westminster)
Burke, E. Haviland (King's County, Tullamore)
Burns, John (Battersea)
Burt, Thomas (Morpeth)
Butcher, John George (York)
Buxton, Sydney Charles (Tower Hamlets, Poplar)

C

Caldwell, James (Lanark, Mid.)
Cameron, Robert (Durham, Houghton-le-Spring)
Campbell, Rt. Hon. James A. (Glasgow and Aberdeen Universities)
Campbell, J. (Armagh, South)
Campbell, James H. M. (Dublin University)
Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hon. Sir H. (Stirling Burghs)
Carlile, William Walter (Bucks, N.)
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward H. (Dublin University)
Carvill, Patrick G. H. (Newry)
Causton, Richard Knight (Southwark, West)
Cautley, Henry S. (Leeds, East)
Cavendish, Richard F. (Lancashire, North Lonsdale)
Cavendish, Victor C. W. (Derbyshire, West)
Cawley, Frederick (Lancs, Prestwich)
Cayzer, Sir Charles W. (Barrow-in-Furness)
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh Richard H. (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birmingham, W.)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. Austen (Worcestershire, East)
Chamberlayne, T. (Southampton)
Channing, Francis A. (Northampton, East)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry (Lincolnshire, Sleaford)
Chapman, Edward (Cheshire, Hyde)
Charrington, Spencer (Tower Hamlets, Mile End)
Churchill, Winston L. S. (Oldham)
Clancy, John J. (Dublin Co., North)
Clare, Octavius Leigh (Lancashire, Eccles)
Clive, Capt. Percy Archer (Herefordshire, Ross)
Coates, Major E. F. (Lewisham)
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. (Ayrshire, North)
Coddington, Sir William, Bt. (Blackburn)
Cogan, Denis J. (Wicklow, East)
Coghill, Douglas H. (Stoke-upon-Trent)
Cohen, Benjamin L. (Islington, E.)
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse (Birmingham, Bordesley)
Colomb, Sir John C. R. (Great Yarmouth)

Colston, Charles Edward H. A. (Gloucester, Thornbury)

Compton, Lord Alwyne F. (Beds, Biggleswade)

Condon, Thomas J. (Tipperary, E.)

Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas, Bt. (Lambeth, Kennington)

Corbett, Arch. Cameron (Glasgow, Tradeston)

Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)

Cox, Irwin Edward B. (Middlesex, Harrow)

Craig, Charles Curtis (Antrim, South)

Craig, R. Hunter (Lanark, Govan)

Crean, Eugene (Cork, S.E.)

Cremer, William R. (Shoreditch, Haggerston)

Cripps, Charles A. (Lancashire, Stretford)

Crombie, John William (Kincardineshire)

Crooks, William (Woolwich)

Cross, Alexander (Glasgow, Camlachie)

Cross, Herbert Shepherd (Bolton)

Crossley, Sir Savile B., Bt. (Halifax)

Cubitt, Hon. Henry (Surrey, Reigate)

Cullinan, J. (Tipperary, South)

Cust, Henry J. C. (Southwark, Bermondsey)

D

Dalkeith, Earl of (Roxburgh)

Dalrymple, Sir Charles, Bt. (Ipswich)

Dalziel, James H. (Kirkcaldy Burghs)

Davenport, William Bromley (Cheshire, Macclesfield)

Davies, A. (Carmarthen Boroughs)

Davies, Col. Sir Horatio David (Chatham)

Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan)

Delany, William (Queen's Co., Ossory)

Denny, Colonel John M. (Kilmarnock Burghs)

Delvin, Charles R. (Galway)

Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, North)

Dewar, John A. (Inverness)

Dewar, Sir Thomas R. (Tower Hamlets, St. George's)

Dickinson, Robert E. (Somerset, Wells)

Dickson, Charles Scott (Glasgow Bridgton)

Dickson-Poynder, Sir J., Bt. (Wilts, Chippenham)

Digby, John Kenelm Wingfield- (Dorset North)

Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir C. W., Bt. (Gloucester, Forest of Dean)

Dillon, John (Mayo, East)

Dimsdale, Rt. Hon. Sir Joseph C. (London)

Disraeli, Coningsby R. (Cheshire, Altrincham)

Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. D., Bt. (Middlesex, Uxbridge)

Dobbie, John (Ayr Burghs)

Donelan, Captain A. J. C. (Cork, East)

Doogan, P. C. (Tyrone, East)

Dorington, Rt. Hon. Sir John E., Bt. (Gloucester, Tewkesbury)

Doughty, George (Great Grimsby)

Douglas, Rt. Hon. Aretas Akers (Kent, St. Augustine's)

Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark, North-West)

Doxford, Sir William T. (Sunderland)

Duffy, William J. (Galway, South)

Duke, H. E. (Plymouth)

Duncan, James H. (Yorks, W.R., Otley)

Dunn, Sir William, Bt. (Paisley)

Durning-Lawrence, Sir Edwin, Bt. (Cornwall, Truro)

Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir W. H., Bt. (Kent, Dartford)

E

Edwards, Frank (Radnor)

Egerton, Hon. Alan de Tatton (Cheshire, Knutsford)

Elibank, Master of (Edinburgh, Midlothian)

Ellice, Captain Edward C. (St. Andrews Burghs)

Elliot, Hon. Arthur R. D. (Durham)

Ellis, John Edward (Nottingham, Rush cliffe)

Emmott, Alfred (Oldham)

Esmonde, Sir T. Grattan, Bt. (Wexford, North)

Evans, Sir Francis H. (Maidstone)

Evans, Samuel Thomas (Glamorgan, Mid)

Eve, H. Trelawney (Devon, Ashburton)

F

Faber, E. Beckett (Hants, Andover)

Faber, G. Denison (York)

Fardell, Sir T. George (Paddington, S.)

Farquharson, Dr. Robert (Aberdeenshire, West)

Farrell, James P. (Longford, North)

Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn E. (Hunts, Ramsey)

Fenwick, Charles (Northumberland, Wansbeck)

Ferguson, Ronald C. Munro (Leith Burghs)

Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J., Bt. (Manchester, N.E.)

Ffrench, Peter (Wexford, South)

Field, William (Dublin, St. Patrick)

Fielden, Edward B. (Lancashire, Middleton)

Finch, Rt. Hon. George H. (Rutland)

Finlay, Sir Robert B. (Inverness Burghs)

Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas (Hull, East)

Fisher, William Hayes (Fulham)

Fison, Frederick William (York, W.R., Doncaster)

FitzGerald, Sir Robert U. P., Bt. (Cambridge)

Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond G. Petty (Wilts, Cricklade)

Fitzroy, Hon. E. Algernon (Northants, South)

Flannery, Sir J. Fortescue (Yorkshire, Shipley)

Flavin, Michael Joseph (Kerry, North)

Flower, Sir Ernest F. S. (Bradford, W.)

Flynn, James C. (Cork, North)

Forster, Henry W. (Kent, Sevenoaks)

Foster, Sir Michael (London University)

Foster, Philip S. (Warwick, Stratford-upon-Avon)

Foster, Sir B. Walter (Derby, Ilkeston)

Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir H. H. (Wolverhampton, East)

Freeman-Thomas, F. (Hastings)

Fuller, J. M. F. (Wilts, Westbury)

Furness, Sir Christopher, Bt. (Hartlepool)

Fyler, John A. (Surrey, Chertsey)

G

Galloway, William Johnson (Manchester, S.W.)

Gardner, Ernest (Berks, Wokingham)

Garfit, William (Boston)

Gibbs, Hon. Alban George H. (London)

Gibbs, Hon. Vicary (Herts, St. Albans)

Gilhooly, James (Cork Co., West)

Gladstone, Rt. Hon. Herbert J. (Leeds, West)

Goddard, Daniel Ford (Ipswich)

Godson, Sir Augustus F. (Kidderminster)

Gordon, Hon. John Edwin (Elgin and Nairn)

Gordon, John (Londonderry, S.)

Gordon, Major W. E. (Tower Hamlets, Stepney)

Gore, Hon. C. R. C. Ormsby- (Shropshire, Oswestry)

Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby- (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough)

Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. Eldon (Cambridge University)

Goschen, Hon. George J. (Sussex, East Grinstead)

Goulding, Edward A. (Wilts, Devizes)

Graham, Henry R. (St. Pancras, West)

Grant, Corrie (Warwickshire, Rugby)

Gray, Ernest (West Ham, North)

Green, Walford Davis (Wednesbury)

Greene, Sir E. Walter, Bt. (Bury St. Edmunds)

Greene, Henry David (Shrewsbury)

Greene, Walter Raymond (Cambs., Chesterton)

Grenfell, Major William H. (Bucks, Wycombe)

Gretton, John (Derbyshire, South)

Greville, Capt. Hon. Ronald H. F. (Bradford, East)

Grey, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward, Bt. (Northumberland, Berwick)

Griffith, Ellis J. (Anglesey)

Groves, James G. (Salford, South)

Guest, Hon. Ivor C. (Plymouth)

Gully, Rt. Hon. W. C. (Carlisle)

Gunter, Col. Sir Robert, Bt. (York, W.R., Barkstone Ash)

Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton (Norfolk, North)

Guthrie, Walter Murray (Tower Hamlets, Bow, etc.)

H

Hain, Edward (Cornwall, St. Ives)
Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B. (Haddington)
Hall, E. Marshall (Lancashire, Southport)
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F. (Herts, Watford)
Hambro, C. Eric (Surrey, Wimbledon)
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George (Middlesex, Ealing)
Hamilton, Marquess of (Londonderry)
Hammond, John (Carlow)
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir W. G. Vernon (Monmouthshire, W.)
Hardie, James Keir (Merthyr Tydvil)
Hardy, Laurence (Kent, Ashford)
Hare, Thomas L. (Norfolk, S.W.)
Harmsworth, R. Leicester (Caithness)
Harrington, Timothy (Dublin, Harbour)
Harris, Frederick L. (Tynemouth)
Harris, Dr. F. Rutherford (Camberwell, Dulwich)
Harwood, George (Bolton)
Haslam, Sir Alfred Seale (Newcastle-under-Lyne)
Haslett, Sir James H. (Belfast, North)
Hatch, Ernest F. George (Lancashire, Gorton)
Hay, Hon. Claude G. D. (Shoreditch, Hoxton)
Hayden, John P. (Roscommon, South)
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir A. D., Bt. (Walsall)
Healy, Timothy M. (Louth, North)
Heath, Arthur Howard (Hanley)
Heath, James (Staffordshire, N.W.)
Heaton, J. Henniker (Canterbury)
Helder, Augustus (Whitehaven)
Helme, Norval W. (Lancashire, Lancaster)
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. C. Hare (Tyrone, North)
Henderson, Sir Alexander (Staffordshire, West)
Henderson, Arthur (Durham, Barnard Castle)
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T. (Oxon, Henley)
Hickman, Sir Alfred (Wolverhampton, West)
Hill, Capt. Arthur (Down, West)
Hoare, Sir Samuel, Bt. (Norwich)
Hobhouse, Charles E. H. (Bristol, East)
Hobhouse, Rt. Hon. Henry (Somerset, East)
Hogg, Lindsay (Sussex, Eastbourne)
Holland, Sir William H. (York, W.R., Rotherham)
Hope, J. D. (Fife, West)
Hope, J. Fitzalan (Sheffield, Brightside)
Hornby, Sir William Henry, Bt. (Blackburn)
Horner, Frederick W. (Lambeth, North)
Horniman, Frederick John (Penryn and Falmouth)
Houldsworth, Sir W. Henry, Bt. (Manchester, N.W.)
Hoult, Joseph (Cheshire, Wirral)
Houston, Robert P. (Liverpool, West Toxteth)
Howard, Capt. J. (Kent, Faversham)
Howard, Joseph (Middlesex, Tottenham)
Hozier, Hon. James H. C. (Lanark, South)
Hudson, George B. (Herts, Hitchin)
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C. (Montgomery)
Hunt, Rowland (Shropshire, Ludlow)
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles F. (Sussex, Rye)
Hutton, Alfred E. (York, W.R., Morley)
Hutton, John (Yorkshire, Richmond)

J

Jacoby, James Alfred (Derbyshire, Mid)
Jameson, Major J. Eustace (Clare, West)
Jebb, Sir Richard Claverhouse (Cambridge University)
Jeffreys, Rt. Hon. Arthur F. (Hants, North)
Jessel, Captain Herbert M. (St. Pancras, South)
Johnson, John (Gateshead)
Johnstone, John Heywood (Sussex, Horsham)
Joicey, Sir James, Bt. (Durham, Chester-le-street)
Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea District)
Jones, William (Carnarvon, Arfon)
Jordan, Jeremiah (Fermanagh, South)
Joyce, M. (Limerick)

K

Kearley, Hudson E. (Devonport)

Kemp, George (Lancashire, Heywood)

Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir J. H., Bt. (Devon, Honiton)

Kennedy, Patrick J. (Westmeath, North)

Kenyon, Hon. G. T. (Denbigh)

Kenyon-Slaney, Colonel Wm. (Shropshire, Newport)

Kerr, John (Preston)

Keswick, William (Surrey, Epsom)

Kilbridge, Dennis (Kildare, S.)

Kimber, Henry (Wandsworth)

King, Sir H. Seymour (Hull, Central)

Kitson, Sir James, Bt. (York, W.R., Colne Valley)

Knowles, Sir Lees (Salford, West)

L

Labouchere, Henry (Northampton)

Lambert, George (Devon, South Molton)

Lambton, Hon. F. W. (Durham, South East)

Langley, Batty (Sheffield, Attercliffe)

Laurie, Lieut.-Gen. John W. (Pembroke and Haverfordwest)

Law, Andrew B. (Glasgow, Blackfriars)

Law, Hugh A. (Donegal, West)

Lawrence, Sir Joseph (Monmouth Boroughs)

Lawrence, William F. (Liverpool, Abercromby)

Lawson, John Grant (York, N.R., Thirsk)

Lawson, Sir Wilfred, Bt. (Cornwall, Camborne)

Layland-Barratt, F. (Devon, Torquay)

Leamy, Edmund (Kildare, North)

Lee, Arthur H. (Hants, Fareham)

Lees, Sir Elliott, Bt. (Birkenhead)

Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Lancashire, Accrington)

Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage (St. George's, Hanover Square)

Leigh, Sir Joseph (Stockport)

Leng, Sir John (Dundee)

Leveson-Gower, F. S. (Sutherland)

Levy, M. (Leicestershire, Loughborough)

Lewis, John Herbert (Flint Boroughs)

Llewellyn, Evan Henry (Somerset, North)

Lloyd-George, David (Carnarvon, etc.)

Lockie, John (Devonport)

Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. Amelius (Essex, Epping)

Loder, Gerald W. E. (Brighton)

Logan, John William (Leicester, Harborough)

Long, Col. Charles W. (Worcestershire, Evesham)

Long, Rt. Hon. Walter H. (Bristol, South)

Lonsdale, John B. (Armagh, Mid.)

Lough, Thomas (Islington, W.)

Lowe, Francis W. (Birmingham, Edgbaston)

Lowther, Claude N. W. (Cumberland, Eskdale)

Lowther, Rt. Hon. James (Kent, Thanet)

Lowther, Rt. Hon. James William (Cumberland, Penrith)

Loyd, Archie Kirkman (Berks, Abingdon)

Lucas, Col. Francis A. (Suffolk, Lowestoft)

Lucas, Reginald J. (Portsmouth)

Lundon, W. (Limerick, East)

Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred (Warwick and Leamington)

M

Macdona, J. Cumming (Southwark, Rotherhithe)

MacDonnell, Dr. Mark A. (Queen's County, Leix)

MacIver, David (Liverpool, Kirkdale)

Macnamara, Thomas J. (Camberwell, North)

MacNeill, J. G. Swift (Donegal, South)

Maconochie, A. W. (Aberdeenshire, East)

MacVeagh, Jeremiah (Down, South)

McArthur, Charles (Liverpool, Exchange)

McArthur, William A. (Cornwall, St. Austell)

McCalmont, Colonel James (Antrim, East)

McCann, J. (Dublin, St. Stephen's Green)

McCrae, George (Edinburgh, East)

McFadden, Edward (Donegal, East)

McGovern, T. (Cavan, West)

M'Hugh, Patrick A. (Leitrim, North)

McIver, Sir Lewis, Bt. (Edinburgh, West)

M'Kean, John (Monaghan, South)

McKenna, Reginald (Monmouth, North)

M'Killop, James (Stirlingshire)

McKillop, W. (Sligo, North)

McLaren, Sir C. B. Bright (Leicester, Bosworth)

Majendie, James H. A. (Portsmouth)

Malcolm, Ian Z. (Suffolk, Stowmarket)

Manners, Lord Cecil R. J. (Leicestershire, Melton)

Mansfield, H. (Lincoln, Spalding)

Mappin, Sir Frederick T., Bt. (York, W.R., Hallamshire)

Markham, A. B. (Notts., Mansfield)

Martin, Richard Biddulph (Worcester, Droitwich)

Massey-Mainwaring, Hon. W. F. B. (Finsbury, Central)

Mather, Sir William (Lancashire, Rossendale)

Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir Herbert E., Bt. (Wigton)

Maxwell, William Jardine (Dumfriesshire)

Mellor, Rt. Hon. John W. (York, W.R., Sowerby)

Melville, Beresford Valentine (Stockport)

Meysey-Thompson, Sir H., Bt. (Stafford, Handsworth)

Middlemore, John T. (Birmingham, North)

Mildmay, Francis B. (Devon, Totnes)

Milner, Rt. Hon. Sir Fred. G., Bt. (Notts., Bassetlaw)

Milvain, Thomas (Hampstead)

Mitchell, William (Burnley)

Molesworth, Sir Lewis W., Bt. (Cornwall, Bodmin)

Montagu, George C. (Hunts., Huntingdon)

Montagu, Hon. John Scott- (Hants., New Forest)

Moon, Edward Robert P. (St. Pancras, North)

Mooney, John J. (Dublin Co., South)

Moore, William (Antrim, North)

Morgan, David John (Essex, Walthamstow)

Morgan, Col. Hon. Fred. C. (Monmouthshire, South)

Morgan, John Lloyd (Carmarthenshire, West)

Morley, Charles (Brecknock)

Morley, Rt. Hon John (Montrose, etc.)

Morrell, George Herbert (Oxon., Woodstock)

Morrison, Lieut. James A. (Wiltshire, Wilton)

Morton, Arthur H. A. (Deptford)

Moss, Samuel (Denbighshire, East)

Moulton, John Fletcher (Cornwall, Launceston)

Mount, William A. (Berks., Newbury)

Mowbray, Sir Robert G. C., Bt. (Lambeth, Brixton)

Muntz, Sir Philip Albert (Warwickshire, Tamworth)

Murnaghan, George (Tyrone, Mid.)

Murphy, John (Kerry, East)

Murray, Rt. Hon. Andrew Graham (Buteshire)

Murray, Charles James (Coventry)

Murray, Colonel C. Wyndham (Bath)

Myers, William Henry (Winchester)

N

Nannetti, Joseph P. (Dublin, College Green)

Newdigate, Francis Alex. (Warwickshire, Nuneaton)

Newnes, Sir George, Bt. (Swansea Town)

Nicholson, William G. (Hants., Petersfield)

Nolan, Col. J. P. (Galway, North)

Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)

Norman, Henry (Wolverhampton, S.)

Norton, Captain Cecil W. (Newington, West)

Nussey, Thomas Willans (Pontefract)

O

O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)

O'Brien, K. (Tipperary, Mid)

O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)

O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, North)

O'Connor, James (Wicklow, West)

O'Connor, Thomas P. (Liverpool, Scotland)

O'Doherty, William (Donegal, North)

O'Donnell, John (Mayo, South)

O'Donnell, Thomas (Kerry, West)

O'Dowd, John (Sligo, South)

O'Kelly, C. (Mayo, North)

O'Kelly, James (Roscommon, North)

O'Malley, William (Galway, Connemara)

O'Mara, James (Kilkenny, South)

O'Neill, Hon. R. Torrens (Antrim, Mid.)

O'Shaughnessy, P. J. (Limerick, West)

O'Shee, James John (Waterford, West)

P

Palmer, Sir Charles M., Bt. (Durham, Jarrow)

Palmer, George William (Reading)

Palmer, Walter (Salisbury)

Parker, H. Gilbert G. (Gravesend)

Parkes, Ebenezer (Birmingham, Central)

Partington, O. (Derbyshire, High Peak)

Paulton, James M. (Durham, Bishop Auckland)

Pearson, Sir Weetman D., Bt. (Colchester)

Pease, Herbert P. (Darlington)

Pease, J. A. (Essex, Saffron Walden)

Peel, Hon. William R. W. (Manchester, South)

Pemberton, John S. G. (Sunderland)

Percy, Earl (Kensington, South)

Perks, Robert W. (Lincolnshire, South)

Philipps, John W. (Pembrokeshire)

Pickard, Benjamin (York, W.R., Normanton)

Pierpoint, Robert (Warrington)

Pilkington, Lieut.-Col. Richard (Lancashire, Newton)

Pirie, Duncan Vernon (Aberdeen, North)

Platt-Higgins, Frederick (Salford, North)

Plummer, Walter R. (Newcastle-on-Tyne)

Powell, Sir Francis Sharp, Bt. (Wigan)

Power, Patrick J. (Waterford, East)

Pretyman, Capt. Ernest George (Suffolk, Woodbridge)

Price, Robert John (Norfolk, East)

Priestley, Arthur (Grantham)

Pryce-Jones, Lieut.-Col. Edward (Montgomery Boroughs)

Purvis, Robert (Peterborough)

Pym, C. Guy (Bedford)

Q

Quilter, Sir W. Cuthbert, Bt. (Suffolk, Sudbury)

R

Randles, John S. (Cumberland, Cockermouth)

Rankin, Sir James, Bt. (Herefordshire, Leominster)

Rasch, Major Fred. C. (Essex, Chelmsford)

Ratcliff, R. F. (Staffordshire, Burton)

Rattigan, Sir William H. (Lanark, N.E.)

Rea, Russell (Gloucester)

Reckitt, Harold James (Lincolnshire, Brigg)

Reddy, M. (King's County, Birr)

Redmond, John E. (Waterford)

Redmond, William H. K. (Clare, East)

Reed, Sir Edward J. (Cardiff)

Reid, James (Greenock)

Reid, Sir Robert T. (Dumfries Burghs)

Remnant, James F. (Finsbury, Holborn)

Renshaw, Sir Charles B. (Renfrew, West)

Renwick, George (Newcastle-on-Tyne)

Richards, Henry Charles (Finsbury, East)

Rickett, J. Compton (Scarborough)

Ridley, Hon. M. White (Stalybridge)

Ridley, Samuel F. (Bethnal Green, South-West)

Rigg, Richard (Westmoreland, Appleby)

Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Charles T. (Croydon)

Roberts, John Bryn (Carnarvonshire, Eifion)

Roberts, John Herbert (Denbighshire, West)

Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield, Ecclesall)

Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)

Robertson, T. Herbert (Hackney, South)

Robinson, Brooke (Dudley)

Robson, William Snowdon (South Shields)

Roche, John (Galway, East)

Roe, Sir Thomas (Derby)

Rolleston, Sir John F. L. (Leicester)

Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye (Islington, South)

Ropner, Colonel Sir E. H. O. Robert (Stockton)

Rose, Charles Day (Cambridge, Newmarket)

Rothschild, Hon. Lionel W. (Bucks, Aylesbury)

Round, Rt. Hon. James (Essex, Harwich)

Royds, Col. Clement M. (Rochdale)

Runciman, Walter (Dewsbury)

Russell, Thomas W. (Tyrone, South)

Rutherford, John (Lancashire, Darwen)

Rutherford, William W. (Liverpool, West Derby)

S

Sackville, Colonel S. G. Stopford (Northants, North)

Sadler, Colonel Samuel A. (Middlesbrough)

Samuel, Sir Harry S. (Tower Hamlets, Limehouse)

Samuel, Herbert Louis (Yorkshire, Cleveland)

Samuel, Stuart M. (Tower Hamlets, Whitechapel)

Sandys, Col. Thomas M. (Lancashire, Bootle)

Sassoon, Sir Edward A., Bt. (Hythe)

Saunderson, Colonel Rt. Hon. E. J. (Armagh, North)

Schwann, Charles E. (Manchester, North)

Scott, Charles Prestwich (Lancashire, Leigh)

Scott, Sir Samuel E., Bt. (Marylebone, West)

Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln)

Seely, Major John E. B. (Isle of Wight)

Seton-Karr, Sir Henry (St. Helens)

Shackleton, David James (Lancashire, Clitheroe)

Sharpe, W. E. Thompson (Kensington, North)

Shaw, T. F. Charles Edward (Stafford)

Shaw, Thomas (Hawick Burghs)

Shaw-Stewart, M. Hugh (Renfrew, East)

Sheehan, Daniel D. (Cork Co., Mid.)

Sheehy, David (Meath, S.)

Shipman, Dr. John G. (Northampton)

Simeon, Sir J. S. Barrington, Bt. (Southampton)

Sinclair, Captain John (Forfar)

Sinclair, Louis (Essex, Romford)

Skewes-Cox, Thomas (Surrey, Kingston)

Sloan, Thomas Henry (Belfast, South)

Smith, Abel Henry (Herts, Hertford)

Smith, Hugh C. (Northumberland, Tyneside)

Smith, James Parker (Lanark, Partick)

Smith, Samuel (Flintshire)

Smith, Hon. W. Fred. D. (Strand, Westminster)

Soames, Arthur W. (Norfolk, South)

Soares, Ernest J. (Devon, Barnstaple)

Spear, John W. (Devon, Tavistock)

Spencer, Rt. Hon. Charles R. (Northants, Mid)

Spencer, Sir Ernest (West Bromwich)

Stanley, Hon. Arthur (Lancashire, Ormskirk)

Stanley, Edward (Somerset, Bridgwater)

Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord (Lancashire, Westhoughton)

Stevenson, Francis S. (Suffolk, E.)

Stewart, Sir Mark J. McTaggart, Bt. (Kirkcudbright)

Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M., Bt. (Glasgow, College)

Stock, James Henry (Liverpool, Walton)

Stone, Sir John Benjamin (Birmingham, East)

Strachey, Sir Edward (Somerset, South)

Stroyan, John (Perthshire, West)

Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley (Essex, Maldon)

Sturt, Hon. Humphrey N. (Dorset, East)

Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath, South)

T

Talbot, Lord Edmund (Sussex, Chichester)

Talbot, Rt. Hon. John G. (Oxford University)

Taylor, Austin (Liverpool, East Toxteth)

Taylor, Theodore C. (Lancashire, Radcliffe)

Tennant, Harold John (Berwickshire)

Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)

Thomas, Sir Alfred (Glamorgan, E.)

Thomas, David Alfred (Merthyr Tydvil)

Thomas, J. A. (Glamorgan, Gower)

Thompson, Dr. E. C. (Monaghan, N.)

Thomson, F. W. (York, W.R., Skipton)

Thorburn, Sir Walter (Peebles and Selkirk)

Thornton, Percy M. (Clapham)

Tillett, Louis J. (Norwich)

Tollemache, Henry J. (Cheshire, Eddisbury)

Tomkinson, James (Cheshire, Crewe)

Tomlinson, Sir William E. M. (Preston)

Toulmin, George (Bury, Lancashire)

Trevelyan, Charles P. (York, W.R., Elland

Tritton, Charles E. (Lambeth, Norwood)

Tuff, Charles (Rochester)

Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward (Essex, South-East)

Tuke, Sir John Batty (Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities)

Tully, Jasper (Leitrim, South)

U

Ure, Alexander (Linlithgowshire)

V

Valentia, Viscount (Oxford)

Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard (Sheffield, Central)

Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)

W

Walker, Col. William H. (Widnes)

Wallace, Robert (Perth)

Walrond, Rt. Hon. Sir W. H., Bt. (Devon, Tiverton)

Walton, John Lawson (Leeds, South)

Walton, Joseph (York, W.R. Barnsley)

Wanklyn, J. Leslie (Bradford, Central)

Warde, Colonel Charles E. (Kent, Medway)

Warner, T. Courtenay T. (Stafford, Lichfield)

Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan and Kinross)

Wason, John C. (Orkney and Shetland)

Webb, Colonel William G. (Staffordshire, Kingswinford)

Weir, James Galloway (Ross and Cromarty)

Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. Earle (Taunton)

Welby, Sir Charles G. E., Bt. (Notts, Newark)

Wentworth, Capt. B. C. Vernon- (Brighton)

Wharton, Rt. Hon. J. Lloyd (York, W.R , Ripon)

White, George (Norfolk, North-West)

White, L. (York, E.R., Buckrose)

White, Patrick (Meath, North)

Whiteley, George (York, W.R., Pudsey)

Whiteley, Herbert (Ashton-under-Lyne)

Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)

Whitmore, Charles A. (Chelsea)

Whittaker, Thomas P. (York, W.R., Spen Valley)

Williams, Rt. Hon. Joseph Powell- (Birmingham, South)

Williams, Arthur O. (Merionethshire)

Williams, Colonel Robert (Dorset, West)

Willoughby de Eresby, Lord (Lincolnshire, Horncastle)

Willox, Sir John Archibald (Liverpool, Everton)

Wills, Sir Frederick (Bristol, North)

Wilson, Arthur S. (York, E.R., Holderness)

Wilson, Charles H. (Hull, West)

Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk, Mid)

Wilson, Henry Joseph (York, W.R., Holmfirth)

Wilson, John (Durham, Mid)

Wilson, John (Falkirk Burghs)

Wilson, J. (Glasgow, St. Rollox)

Wilson, John William (Worcestershire, North)

Wilson-Todd, Sir William H., Bt. (York, E.R., Howdenshire)

Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. Edmond R. (Bath)

Wolff, Gustavus Wilhelm (Belfast, East)

Wood, James (Down, East)

Woodhouse, Sir James T. (Huddersfield)

Worsley-Taylor, H. W. (Lancashire, Blackpool)

Wortley, Rt. Hon. Charles B. Stuart- (Sheffield, Hallam)

Wrightson, Sir Thomas, Bt. (St. Pancras, East)

Wylie, Alexander (Dumbartonshire)

Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George (Dover)

Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H. (Glamorgan, South)

Y

Yerburgh, Robert A. (Chester)

Young, Samuel (Cavan, East)

Younger, William (Lincolnshire, Stamford)

Yoxall, James Henry (Nottingham, West)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF CONSTITUENCIES,

WITH

NAMES OF MEMBERS.

(Compiled at the opening of the Session.)

ENGLAND—COUNTIES (234 Members).

BEDFORDSHIRE (2)
North, or Biggleswade	Compton, Lord Alwyne F.
South, or Luton	Ashton, T. Gair.
BERKSHIRE (3)
East, or Wokingham	Gardner, Ernest.
North, or Abingdon	Loyd, A. K.
South, or Newbury	Mount, W. A.
BUCKINGHAMSHIRE (3)
Mid, or Aylesbury	Rothschild, Hon. L. W.
North, or Buckingham	Carlile, W. W.
South, or Wycombe	Grenfell, Major W. H.
CAMBRIDGESHIRE (3)
East, or Newmarket	Rose, C. D.
North, or Wisbech	Brand, Hon. A. G.
West, or Chesterton	Greene, W. R.
CHESHIRE (8)
Altrincham	Disraeli, Coningsby R.
Crewe	Tomkinson, J.
Eddisbury	Tollemache, H. J.
Hyde	Chapman, E.
Knutsford	Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton.
Macclesfield	Davenport, W. Bromley.
Northwich	Brunner, Sir J. T.
Wirral	Hoult, J.
CORNWALL (6)
Mid, or St. Austell	M'Arthur, W. A.
North-East, or Launceston	Moulton, J. F.
North-West, or Camborne	Lawson, Sir Wilfred, Bt.
South-East, or Bodmin	Molesworth, Sir L., Bt.
Truro	Durning-Lawrence, Sir E., Bt.
West, or St. Ives	Hain, E.

Cumberland (4)
Cockermouth	Randles, J. S.
Mid, or Penrith	Lowther, Rt. Hon. J. W.
North, or Eskdale	Lowther, C. W. H.
West, or Egremont	Bain, J. R.
Derbyshire (7)
Chesterfield	Bayley, Thomas.
High Peak	Partington, O.
Ilkeston	Foster, Sir B. W.
Mid	Jacoby, J. A.
North-East	Bolton, T. D.
South	Gretton, J.
West	Cavendish, Victor C. W.
Devonshire (8)
East, or Honiton	Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir J. H., Bt.
Mid, or Ashburton	Eve, Harry T.
North-East, or Tiverton	Walrond, Col. Rt. Hon. Sir W. H.
North, or South Molton	Lambert, G.
North-West, or Barnstaple	Soares, E. J.
South, or Totnes	Mildmay, F. Bingham.
Torquay	Barratt, F. L.
West, or Tavistock	Spear, J. W.
Dorsetshire (4)
East	Sturt, Hon. H. N.
North	Digby, J. K. W.
South	Brymer, W. E.
West	Williams, Col. R.
Durham (8)
Barnard Castle	Henderson, Arthur.
Bishop Auckland	Paulton, J. M.
Chester-le-Street	Joicey, Sir James, Bt.
Houghton-le-Spring	Cameron, Robert.
Jarrow	Palmer, Sir C. Mark, Bt.
Mid	Wilson, John.
North-West	Atherley-Jones, L.
South-East	Lambton, Hon. F. W.
Essex (8)
East, or Maldon	Strutt, Hon. C. H.
Mid, or Chelmsford	Rasch, Major F. C.
North-East, or Harwich	Round, J.
North, or Saffron Walden	Pease, J. A.
South-East	Tufnell, Col. E.
South, or Romford	Sinclair, Louis.
South-West, or Walthamstow	Morgan, D. J.
West, or Epping	Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R. M.
Gloucestershire (5)
East, or Cirencester	Bathurst, Hon. A. B.
Forest of Dean	Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir C. W., Bt.
Mid, or Stroud	Allen, C. P.
North, or Tewkesbury	Dorington, Sir J. E., Bt.
South, or Thornbury	Colston, C. E. H. A.
Hampshire (5)
East, or Petersfield	Nicholson, W. G.
New Forest	Montagu, Hon. J. W. E. D. Scott-

Hampshire (5)—cont.
North, or Basingstoke	Jeffreys, A. F.
South, or Fareham	Lee, Lt.-Col. A. H.
West, or Andover	Faber, E. B.
Herefordshire (2)
North, or Leominster	Rankin, Sir Jas., Bart.
South, or Ross	Clive, Capt. P. A.
Hertfordshire (4)
East, or Hertford	Smith, A. H.
Mid, or St. Albans	Gibbs, Hon. Vicary.
North, or Hitchin	Hudson, G. B.
West, or Watford	Halsey, Rt. Hon. T. F.
Huntingdonshire (2)
North, or Ramsey	Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn E.
South, or Huntingdon	Montagu, G. C.
Isle of Wight (1)	Seely, Capt. J. E. B.
Kent (8)
East, or St. Augustine's	Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Isle of Thanet	Lowther, Rt. Hon. James.
Mid, or Medway	Warde, Lt.-Col. C. E.
North-East, or Faversham	Howard, Capt. J.
North-West, or Dartford	Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir W. Hart Bt.
South, or Ashford	Hardy, Laurence.
South-West, or Tunbridge	Boscawen, A. Griffith.
West, or Sevenoaks	Forster, H. W.
Lancashire, North (4)
Blackpool	Worsley-Taylor, H. W.
Chorley	Balcarres, Lord.
Lancaster	Helme, N. W.
North Lonsdale	Cavendish, Richd. F.
Lancashire, North-East (4)
Accrington	Leese, Sir J. F.
Clitheroe	Shackleton, D. J.
Darwen	Rutherford, John.
Rossendale	Mather, Sir W.
Lancashire, South-East (8)
Eccles	Clare, O. L.
Gorton	Hatch, E. F. G.
Heywood	Kemp, G.
Middleton	Fielden, E. B.
Prestwich	Cawley, F.
Radcliffe-cum-Farnworth	Taylor, T. C.
Stretford	Cripps, C. A.
Westhoughton	Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord.
Lancashire, South-West (7)
Bootle	Sandys, Col. T. M.
Ince	Blundell, Col. H. B. Hollinshed
Leigh	Scott, C. P.
Newton	Pilkington, Lt.-Col. R.
Ormskirk	Stanley, Hon. Arthur.
Southport	Hall, E. Marshall.
Widnes	Walker, Col. W. H.

LEICESTERSHIRE (4)
East, or Melton	Manners, Lord C. R. J.
Mid, or Loughborough	Levy, M.
South, or Harborough	Logan, J. W.
West, or Bosworth	M'Laren, Sir C. B. B., Bt.
LINCOLNSHIRE (7)
East Lindsey, or Louth	Perks, R. W.
Holland, or Spalding	Mansfield, H. R.
North Kesteven, or Sleaford	Chaplin, Rt. Hon. H
North Lindsey, or Brigg	Reckitt, H. J.
South Kesteven, or Stamford	Younger, W.
South Lindsey, or Horncastle	Willoughby de Eresby, Lord.
West Lindsey, or Gainsborough	Ormsby-Gore, Hon. S. F.
MIDDLESEX (7)
Brentford	Bigwood, J.
Ealing	Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George.
Enfield	Bowles, Lt. Col. H. F.
Harrow	Cox, J. E. Bainbridge.
Hornsey	Balfour, Capt. C. B.
Tottenham	Howard, J.
Uxbridge	Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. D., Bt.
MONMOUTHSHIRE (3)
North	M'Kenna, R.
South	Morgan, Col. Hon. F. C.
West	Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir W. Vernon.
NORFOLK (6)
East	Price, R. J.
Mid	Wilson, F. W.
North	Gurdon, Sir W. B.
North-West	White, G.
South	Soames, A. W.
South-West	Hare, T. L.
NORTHAMPTONSHIRE (4)
East	Channing, F. A.
Mid	Spencer, Hon. C. R.
North	Sackville, S. G. S.
South	Fitzroy, Hon. J. G.
NORTHUMBERLAND (4)
Berwick-upon-Tweed	Grey, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward, Bt.
Hexham	Beaumont, Wentworth C B.
Tyneside	Smith, H. C.
Wansbeck	Fenwick, C.
NOTTINGHAMSHIRE (4)
Bassetlaw	Milner, Rt. Hon. Sir F. G., Bt.
Mansfield	Markham, A. B.
Newark	Welby, Sir C. G. E., Bt.
Rushcliffe	Ellis, J. E.
OXFORDSHIRE (3)
Mid, or Woodstock	Morrell, G. H.
North, or Banbury	Brassey, Albert.
South, or Henley	Hermon-Hodge, Sir R. T., Bt.
RUTLAND (1)	Finch, Rt. Hon. G. H.

Shropshire (4)

Mid, or Wellington	Brown, Sir Alexander, Bt.
North, or Newport	Kenyon-Slaney, Col. W.
South, or Ludlow	Hunt, Rowland.
West, or Oswestry	Gore, Hon. G. R. C. Ormsby.

Somersetshire (7)

Bridgwater	Stanley, E. J.
East	Hobhouse, Henry.
Frome	Barlow, J. E.
North	Llewellyn, Evan H.
South	Strachey, Sir Edward.
Wells	Dickinson, R. E.
West, or Wellington	Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F., Bt.

Staffordshire (7)

Burton	Ratcliffe, R. F.
Handsworth	Meysey-Thompson, Sir H., Bt.
Kingswinford	Webb, Col. W. G.
Leek	Bill, Charles.
Lichfield	Warner, T. Courtenay T.
North-West	Heath, James.
West	Henderson, Sir Alexander, Bt.

Suffolk (5)

North-East, or Eye	Stevenson, F. S.
North, or Lowestoft	Lucas, Col. F. A.
North-West, or Stowmarket	Malcolm, Ian.
South-East, or Woodbridge	Pretyman, Capt. E. G.
South, or Sudbury	Quilter, Sir Cuthbert, Bt.

Surrey (6)

Kingston	Skewes-Cox, T.
Mid, or Epsom	Keswick, W.
North-East, or Wimbledon	Hambro, C. E.
North-West, or Chertsey	Fyler, John Arthur.
South-East, or Reigate	Cubitt, Hon. Henry.
South-West, or Guildford	Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John.

Sussex (6)

East, or Rye	Hutchinson, Dr. Chas. Fredk.
Mid, or Lewes	Fletcher, Rt. Hon. Sir Hy., Bt.
North, or East Grinstead	Goschen, G. J., jun.
North-West, or Horsham	Johnstone, J. H.
South, or Eastbourne	Hogg, L.
South-West, or Chichester	Talbot, Lord Edmund.

Warwickshire (4)

North-East, or Nuneaton	Newdigate, F. A.
North, or Tamworth	Muntz, Sir Philip, Bt.
South-East, or Rugby	Grant, Corrie.
South-West, or Stratford-on-Avon	Foster, P. S.

Westmoreland (2)

North, or Appleby	Rigg, R.
South, or Kendal	Bagot, Capt. J. F.

Wiltshire (5)

East, or Devizes	Goulding, E. A.
North, or Cricklade	Fitzmaurice, Lord E. G. Petty.
North-West, or Chippenham	Dickson-Poynder, Sir J. P., Bt.
South, or Wilton	Morrison, Lt. J. A.
West or Westbury	Fuller, J. M. F.

WORCESTERSHIRE (5)
East	Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. Austen.
Mid, or Droitwich	Martin, R. Biddulph.
North	Wilson, J. W.
South, or Evesham	Long, Col. C. Wigram.
West, or Bewdley	Baldwin, Alfred.
YORKSHIRE, EAST RIDING (3)
Buckrose	White, L.
Holderness	Wilson, A. S.
Howdenshire	Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H., Bt.
YORKSHIRE, NORTH RIDING (4)
Cleveland	Samuel, H. L.
Richmond	Hutton, John.
Thirsk and Malton	Lawson, J. Grant.
Whitby	Beckett, E. W.
YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING (N.) (5)
Elland	Trevelyan, C. P.
Keighley	Brigg, John.
Shipley	Flannery, Sir J. Fortescue.
Skipton	Thomson, F. W.
Sowerby	Mellor, Rt. Hon. J. W.
YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING (S.) (8)
Barnsley	Walton, Joseph.
Colne Valley	Kitson, Sir J. B., Bt.
Doncaster	Fison, F. W.
Hallamshire	Mappin, Sir F. T., Bt.
Holmfirth	Wilson, H. J.
Morley	Hutton, A. E.
Normanton	Pickard, B.
Rotherham	Holland, Sir H. W.
YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING (E.) (6)
Barkston Ash	Gunter, Col. Sir Robert, Bt.
Osgoldcross	Austin, Sir John, Bt.
Otley	Duncan, J. H.
Pudsey	Whiteley, G.
Ripon	Wharton, Rt. Hon. J. Lloyd.
Spen Valley	Whittaker, T. P.

ENGLAND--METROPOLITAN BOROUGHS (62 Members).

BATTERSEA AND CLAPHAM (2)
Battersea	Burns, John.
Clapham	Thornton, Percy M.
BETHNAL GREEN (2)
North-East	Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
South-West	Ridley, S. F.
CAMBERWELL (3)
Dulwich	Harris, Dr. F. Rutherfoord.
North	Macnamara, T. J.
Peckham	Banbury, Sir Frederick, Bt.
CHELSEA (1)	Whitmore, C. A.

Croydon (1)	Ritchie, Rt. Hon. C. T.
Deptford (1)	Morton, A. H. A.
Finsbury (3)
Central	Massey-Mainwaring, Hon. W. F. B.
East	Richards, H. C.
Holborn	Remnant, J. R.
Fulham (1)	Fisher, W. Hayes.
Greenwich (1)	Cecil, Lord Hugh R. H.
Hackney (3)
Central	Allhusen, A. H. E.
North	Bousfield, W. R.
South	Robertson, T. H.
Hammersmith (1)	Bull, W. J.
Hampstead (1)	Milvain, Thomas.
Islington (4)
East	Cohen, B. L.
North	Bartley, Sir George.
South	Rollit, Sir A. K.
West	Lough, Thomas.
Kensington (2)
North	Sharpe, W. E. T.
South	Percy, Earl.
Lambeth (4)
Brixton	Mowbray, Sir R. G., Bt.
Kennington	Cook, F. L.
North	Horner, F. W.
Norwood	Tritton, C. E.
Lewisham (1)	Coates, Major Ed. F.
London, City (2)	Dimsdale, Sir J. C. Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Marylebone (2)
East	Boulnois, Edmund.
West	Scott, Sir S. E., Bt.
Newington (2)
Walworth	Bailey, Jas.
West	Norton, Capt. C. W.
Paddington (2)
North	Aird, Sir John.
South	Fardell, Sir T. G.
St. George's, Hanover Square (1)	Legge, Col. Hon. H.
St. Pancras (4)
East	Wrightson, Sir Thos., Bt.
North	Moon, E. R. P.
South	Jessel, Capt. H. M.
West	Graham, H. R.
Shoreditch (2)
Haggerston	Cremer, W. R.
Hoxton	Hay, Hon. C. G. D.

Southwark (3)
Bermondsey	Cust, H. J. C.
Rotherhithe	Macdona, J. Cumming.
West	Causton, R. K.
Strand (1)	Smith, Hon. W. F. D.
Tower Hamlets (7)
Bow and Bromley	Guthrie, W. M.
Limehouse	Samuel, Harry S.
Mile End	Charrington, Spencer.
Poplar	Buxton, Sydney C.
St. George's	Dewar, Sir Thomas.
Stepney	Gordon, Major W. E. E.
Whitechapel	Samuel, S. M.
Wandsworth (1)	Kimber, Hy.
West Ham (2)
North	Gray, Ernest.
South	Banes, Major G. E.
Westminster (1)	Burdett-Coutts, W. L. Ashmead B.
Woolwich (1)	Crooks, Wm.

ENGLAND -PROVINCIAL CITIES AND BOROUGHS (164 Members).

Ashton-under-Lyne (1)	Whiteley, H. J.
Aston Manor (1)	Cecil, E.
Barrow-in-Furness (1)	Cayzer, Sir C. W.
Bath, City (2)	Murray, Col. C. Wyndham. Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. E. R.
Bedford (1)	Pym, C. Guy.
Birkenhead (1)	Lees, Sir Elliott, Bt.
Birmingham, City (7)
Bordesley	Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse.
Central	Parkes, Ebenezer.
East	Stone, Sir J. Benjamin.
Edgbaston	Lowe, F. W.
North	Middlemore, J. T.
South	Williams, J. Powell
West	Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. Joseph.
Blackburn (2)	Hornby, Sir W. H., Bt. Coddington, Sir W., Bt.
Bolton (2)	Cross, H. S. Harwood, G.
Boston (1)	Garfit, W.
Bradford, City (3)
Central	Wanklyn, J. L.
East	Greville, Capt. Hon. R. H. Fulke.
West	Flower, Ernest S. F.
Brighton (2)	Loder, Gerald W. E. Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon-

Bristol, City (4)
East	Hobhouse, C. E. H.
North	Wills, Sir F.
South	Long, Rt. Hon. W. H.
West	Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H., Bt.
Burnley (1)	Mitchell, W.
Bury (1)	Toulmin, G.
Bury St. Edmunds (1)	Greene, Sir E. W., Bt.
Cambridge (1)	FitzGerald, Sir R. Penrose-, Bt.
Canterbury, City (1)	Heaton, J. Henniker.
Carlisle, City (1)	Gully, Rt. Hon. W. C. (Speaker).
Chatham (1)	Davies, Sir Horatio D.
Cheltenham (1)	Agg-Gardner, J. T.
Chester, City (1)	Yerburgh, R. A.
Christchurch (1)	Balfour, Major K. R.
Colchester (1)	Pearson, Sir Weetman D., Bt.
Coventry (1)	Murray, C. J.
Darlington (1)	Pease, Herbt. P.
Derby (2)	Roe, Sir T. Bell, R.
Devonport (2)	Kearley, H. E. Lockie, J.
Dewsbury (1)	Runciman, W.
Dover (1)	Wyndham, George.
Dudley (1)	Robinson, Brooke.
Durham, City (1)	Elliot, Hon. Arthur R. D.
Exeter, City (1)	Vincent, Sir E.
Gateshead (1)	Allan, Sir William.
Gloucester, City (1)	Rea, R.
Grantham (1)	Priestley, A.
Gravesend (1)	Parker, Sir Gilbert.
Grimsby, Great (1)	Doughty, G.
Halifax (2)	Crossley, Sir S. B. Whiteley, J. H.
Hanley (1)	Heath, A. H.
Hartlepool (1)	Furness, Sir C.
Hastings (1)	Thomas, Capt. F. F.
Hereford, City (1)	Arkwright, J. S.
Huddersfield (1)	Woodhouse, Sir J. T.

Hull, City (3)
Central	King, Sir H. Seymour.
East	Firbank, Sir Joseph.
West	Wilson, C. H.
Hythe (1)	Sassoon, Sir Edward A., Bt.
Ipswich (2)	Goddard, D. F. Dalrymple, Sir Chas., Bt.
Kidderminster (1)	Godson, Sir Augustus F.
Leeds, City (5)
Central	Balfour, Rt. Hon. G. W.
East	Cautley, H. S.
North	Barran, R. H.
South	Walton, John Lawson
West	Gladstone, Rt. Hon. Herbert J
Leicester (2)	Broadhurst, Henry. Rolleston, Sir J. F. L.
Lincoln, City (1)	Seely, C. H.
Liverpool, City (9)
Abercromby	Lawrence, W. F.
East Toxteth	Taylor, Austin.
Everton	Willox, Sir J. A.
Exchange	M'Arthur, Charles.
Kirkdale	MacIver, David.
Scotland	O'Connor, T. P.
Walton	Stock, J. H.
West Derby	Rutherford, W. W.
West Toxteth	Houston, R. P.
Lynn Regis (1)	Bowles, T. Gibson.
Maidstone (1)	Evans, Sir F. H.
Manchester, City (6)
East	Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J.
North	Schwann, C. E.
North-East	Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J., Bt.
North-West	Houldsworth, Sir W. H., Bt.
South	Peel, Hon. W. R. W.
South-West	Galloway, W. J.
Middlesbrough (1)	Sadler, Col. S. A.
Monmouth District (1)	Lawrence, Joseph.
Morpeth (1)	Burt, Thomas.
Newcastle-under-Lyme (1)	Haslam, Sir A. S.
Newcastle-upon-Tyne, City (2)	Plummer, W. R. Renwick, G.
Northampton (2)	Labouchere, Henry. Shipman, Dr. J. G.
Norwich, City (2)	Hoare, Sir Samuel, Bt. Tillett, Louis John.

NOTTINGHAM, CITY (3)
East	Bond, Edward.
South	Bentinck, Lord H. C.
West	Yoxall, J. H.
OLDHAM (2)	Emmott, Alfred. Churchill, W. L. S.
OXFORD, CITY (1)	Valentia, Viscount.
PENRYN AND FALMOUTH (1)	Horniman, F. J.
PLYMOUTH (2)	Duke, H. E. Guest, Hon. I. C.
PONTEFRACT (1)	Nussey, T. Willans.
PORTSMOUTH (2)	Majendie, J. H. A. Lucas, R. J.
PRESTON (2)	Hanbury, Rt. Hon. R. W. Tomlinson, Sir William.
READING (1)	Palmer, G. W.
ROCHDALE (1)	Royds, Col. C. M.
ROCHESTER, CITY (1)	Tuff, Charles
ST. HELENS (1)	Seton-Karr, Sir Henry.
SALFORD (3)
North	Platt-Higgins, F.
South	Groves, J. G.
West	Knowles, Lees.
SALISBURY, CITY (1)	Palmer, W.
SCARBOROUGH (1)	Rickett, J. Compton.
SHEFFIELD, CITY (5)
Attercliffe	Langley, Batty.
Brightside	Hope, J. Fitzalan.
Central	Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard.
Ecclesall	Roberts, S.
Hallam	Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-.
SHREWSBURY (1)	Greene, H. D.
SOUTHAMPTON (2)	Simeon, Sir J. S. Barrington, Bt. Chamberlayne, T.
SOUTH SHIELDS (1)	Robson, W. S.
STAFFORD (1)	Shaw, T. F. C. E.
STALYBRIDGE (1)	Ridley, M. White.
STOCKPORT (2)	Leigh, Sir Joseph. Melville, B. V.
STOCKTON (1)	Ropner, Col. E. H. O. R.
STOKE-UPON-TRENT (1)	Coghill, D. H.
SUNDERLAND (2)	Doxford, Sir W. T. Pemberton, J. S. G.

Taunton (1)	Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C. E.
Tynemouth (1)	Harris, F. L.
Wakefield, City (1)	Brotherton, E. A.
Walsall (1)	Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir A. D., Bt.
Warrington (1)	Pierpoint, Robert.
Warwick and Leamington (1)	Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred.
Wednesbury (1)	Green, W. D.
West Bromwich (1)	Spencer, Sir Ernest.
Whitehaven (1)	Helder, Augustus.
Wigan (1)	Powell, Sir F. S., Bt.
Winchester, City (1)	Myers, W. H.
Windsor (1)	Barry, Sir F. T., Bt.
Wolverhampton (3)
East	Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir H. H.
South	Norman, H.
West	Hickman, Sir Alfred
Worcester, City (1)	Allsopp, Hon. G. H.
Yarmouth, Great (1)	Colomb, Sir John C. R.
York, City (2)	Butcher, J. G. Faber, G. D.

WALES—COUNTIES (19 Members).

Anglesey (1)	Griffith, Ellis J.
Brecknockshire (1)	Morley, Charles.
Cardiganshire (1)	Davies, M. L. Vaughan.
Carmarthenshire (2)
East	Thomas, Abel.
West	Morgan, J. Lloyd.
Carnarvonshire (2)
North or Arfon	Jones, William.
South or Eifion	Roberts, J. Bryn.
Denbighshire (2)
East	Moss, Samuel.
West	Roberts, J. H.
Flintshire (1)	Smith, Samuel.
Glamorganshire (5)
East	Thomas, Sir Alfred.
Mid	Evans, S. T.
Rhondda	Abraham, William.
South	Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H.
West, or Gower	Thomas, J. A.
Merionethshire (1)	Williams, A. O.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE (1)	Humphreys-Owen, A. C.
PEMBROKESHIRE (1)	Philipps, J. Wynford.
RADNORSHIRE (1)	Edwards, F.

WALES—BOROUGHS (11 Members).

CARDIFF DISTRICT (1)	Reed, Sir E. J.
CARMARTHEN DISTRICT (1)	Davies, Alfred.
CARNARVON DISTRICT (1)	Lloyd-George, David.
DENBIGH DISTRICT (1)	Kenyon, Hon. G. T.
FLINT DISTRICT (1)	Lewis, J. H.
MERTHYR TYDVIL (2)	Thomas, D. A. Hardie, J. Keir.
MONTGOMERY DISTRICT (1)	Pryce-Jones, Lieut.-Col. E.
PEMBROKE AND HAVERFORDWEST DISTRICT (1)	Laurie, Lieut.-Col. J. W.
SWANSEA (2)
District	Jones, D. Brynmor.
Town	Newnes, Sir G.

SCOTLAND—COUNTIES (39 Members).

ABERDEENSHIRE (2)
East	Maconachie, A. W.
West	Farquharson, Dr. R.
ARGYLLSHIRE (1)	Ainsworth, J. S.
AYRSHIRE (2)
North	Cochrane, Hon. T. H.
South	Arrol, Sir William.
BANFFSHIRE (1)	Black, A. W.
BERWICKSHIRE (1)	Tennant, H. J.
BUTESHIRE (1)	Murray, Rt. Hon. A. Graham
CAITHNESS-SHIRE (1)	Harmsworth, R. L.
CLACKMANNAN AND KINROSS (1)	Wason, Eugene.
DUMBARTONSHIRE (1)	Wylie, Alexander.
DUMFRIESSHIRE (1)	Maxwell, W. J. H.
EDINBURGH (MIDLOTHIAN) (1)	Murray, Hon. A. W. C. O.
ELGIN AND NAIRN (1)	Gordon, Hon. J. E.
FIFESHIRE (2)
East	Asquith, Rt. Hon. H. H.
West	Hope, J. D.
FORFARSHIRE (1)	Sinclair, Capt. J

Haddingtonshire (1)	Haldane, R. B.
Inverness-shire (1)	Dewar, J. A.
Kincardineshire (1)	Crombie, J. W.
Kirkcudbrightshire (1)	Stewart, Sir Mark J. McT., Bt.
Lanarkshire (6)
Govan	Craig, R. H.
Mid	Caldwell, J.
North-East	Rattigan, Sir W. H.
North-West	Douglas, C. M.
Partick	Smith, J. Parker.
South	Hozier, Hon. J. H. C.
Linlithgowshire (1)	Ure, Alex.
Orkney and Shetland (1)	Wason, J. C.
Peebles and Selkirk (1)	Thorburn, Sir Walter.
Perthshire (2)
East	Kinloch, Sir J. G. S., Bt.
West	Stroyan, J.
Renfrewshire (2)
East	Shaw-Stewart, M. H.
West	Renshaw, Sir Charles.
Ross and Cromarty (1)	Weir, J. G.
Roxburghshire (1)	Dalkeith, Earl of.
Stirlingshire (1)	McKillop, J.
Sutherlandshire (1)	Leveson-Gower, F. S.
Wigtonshire (1)	Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir H. E., Bt.

SCOTLAND—CITIES AND BURGHS (31 Members).

Aberdeen, City (2)
North	Pirie, D. V.
South	Bryce, Rt. Hon. James.
Ayr District (1)	Dobbie, Joseph.
Dumfries District (1)	Reid, Sir R. T.
Dundee (2)	Robertson, Edmund. Leng, Sir John
Edinburgh, City (4)
Central	Brown, G. M.
East	McCrae, George.
South	Agnew, Sir A. N., Bt.
West	McIver, Sir Lewis, Bt.
Elgin District (1)	Asher, Alexander.
Falkirk District (1)	Wilson, John.

Glasgow, City (7)
Blackfriars and Hutchesontown	Law, A. B.
Bridgeton	Dickson, C. Scott.
Camlachie	Cross, Alexander.
Central	Baird, J. G. A.
College	Stirling-Maxwell, Sir J. M., Bt.
St. Rollox	Wilson, John.
Tradeston	Corbett, A. Cameron.
Greenock (1)	Reid, James.
Hawick District (1)	Shaw, Thomas.
Inverness District (1)	Finlay, Sir R. B.
Kilmarnock District (1)	Denny, Col. J. McA.
Kirkcaldy District (1)	Dalziel, J. H.
Leith District (1)	Ferguson, R. C. Munro.
Montrose District (1)	Morley, Rt. Hon. J.
Paisley (1)	Dunn, Sir Wm., Bt.
Perth City (1)	Wallace, Robert.
St. Andrews District (1)	Ellice, Capt. Ed. Chas.
Stirling District (1)	Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hn. Sir H.
Wick District (1)	Bignold, Arthur.

IRELAND—COUNTIES (85 Members).

Antrim (4)
East	McCalmont, Col. J.
Mid	O'Neill, Hon. R. T.
North	Moore, William.
South	Craig, C. C.
Armagh County (3)
Mid	Lonsdale, J. B.
North	Saunderson, Col. Rt. Hon. E. J.
South	Campbell, J.
Carlow County (1)	Hammond, John.
Cavan (2)
East	Young, Samuel.
West	McGovern, Thos.
Clare (2)
East	Redmond, W. H. K.
West	Jameson, Major J. E.
Cork, County (7)
East	Donelan, Captain A. J. C
Mid	Sheehan, D. D.
North	Flynn, J. C.
North-East	Abraham, Wm.
South	Barry, Edward.
South-East	Crean, Eugene.
West	Gilhooly, J.

DONEGAL (4)
East	McFadden, E.
North	O'Doherty, W.
South	MacNeill, J. G. Swift.
West	Law, Hugh A.
DOWN (4)
East	Wood, James.
North	Corbett, T. L.
South	MacVeagh, J.
West	Hill, Captain Arthur.
DUBLIN, COUNTY (2)
North	Clancy, J. J.
South	Mooney, J. J.
FERMANAGH (2)
North	Mitchell, Ed.
South	Jordan, Jeremiah.
GALWAY, COUNTY (4)
Connemara	O'Malley, William.
East	Roche, John.
North	Nolan, Col. J. P.
South	Duffy, W. J.
KERRY (4)
East	Murphy, J.
North	Flavin, M. J.
South	Boland, J. P.
West	O'Donnell, Thos.
KILDARE (2)
North	Leamy, Edmund.
South	Kilbride, Dennis.
KILKENNY COUNTY (2)
North	Devlin, Joseph.
South	O'Mara, James.
KING'S COUNTY (2)
Birr	Reddy, Michael.
Tullamore	Burke, E. H.
LEITRIM (2)
North	McHugh, Patrick A.
South	Tully, Jasper.
LIMERICK, COUNTY (2)
East	Lundon, Wm.
West	O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
LONDONDERRY, COUNTY (2)
North	Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John.
South	Gordon, J.
LONGFORD, COUNTY (2)
North	Farrell, J. P.
South	Blake, Edward.
LOUTH (2)
North	Healy, T. M.
South	Nolan, Joseph.

MAYO (4)
East	Dillon, John.
North	O'Kelly, Conor.
South	O'Donnell, John.
West	Ambrose, Robert.
MEATH (2)
North	White, Patrick.
South	Sheehy, David.
MONAGHAN (2)
North	Thompson, Dr. E. C.
South	McKean, J.
QUEEN'S COUNTY (2)
Leix	MacDonnell, Dr. M. A.
Ossory	Delany, William.
ROSCOMMON (2)
North	O'Kelly, Jas.
South	Hayden, J. P.
SLIGO, COUNTY (2)
North	McKillop, W.
South	O'Dowd, John.
TIPPERARY (4)
East	Condon, T. J.
Mid	O'Brien, K. E.
North	O'Brien, P. J.
South	Cullinan, John.
TYRONE (4)
East	Doogan, P. C.
Mid	Murnaghan, George.
North	Hemphill, Rt. Hon. C. H
South	Russell, T. W.
WATERFORD, COUNTY (2)
East	Power, P. J.
West	O'Shee, J. J.
WESTMEATH (2)
North	Kennedy, P. J.
South	Sullivan, Donal.
WEXFORD (2)
North	Esmonde, Sir T. H. G
South	Ffrench, Peter.
WICKLOW (2)
East	Cogan, Denis J.
West	O'Connor, James.

IRELAND—CITIES AND BOROUGHS (16 Members).

BELFAST, CITY (4)
East	Wolff, G. W.
North	Haslett, Sir Jas. H.
South	Sloan, T. H.
West	Arnold-Forster, H. O.
CORK, CITY (2)	O'Brien, J. F. X. ———

DUBLIN, CITY (4)
College Green	Nannetti, J. P.
Dublin Harbour	Harrington, T.
St. Patrick's	Field, William.
St. Stephen's Green	McCann, James.
GALWAY, TOWN (1)	Devlin, Chas. R.
KILKENNY (1)	O'Brien, Patrick.
LIMERICK, CITY (1)	Joyce, Michael.
LONDONDERRY, CITY (1)	Hamilton, Capt. the Marquess of.
NEWRY (1)	Carvill, P. G. H.
WATERFORD (1)	Redmond, J. E.

UNIVERSITIES (9 Members).

ENGLAND :—
Cambridge University (2)	Jebb, Sir R. C. Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. E.
London University (1)	Foster, Sir Michael.
Oxford University (2)	Anson, Sir W. R., Bart. Talbot, Rt. Hon. J. G.
SCOTLAND :—
Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities (1)	Tuke, Sir J. Batty.
Glasgow and Aberdeen Universities (1)	Campbell, Rt. Hon. J. A.
IRELAND :—
Dublin University (2)	Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir E. H. Lecky, Rt. Hon. W. E. H.

SUMMARY.

	No. of Members
ENGLAND
Counties	234
Metropolitan Boroughs	62
Provincial Cities and Boroughs	164
		460
WALES
Counties	19
Boroughs	11
		30
SCOTLAND
Counties	39
Cities and Burghs	31
		70
IRELAND
Counties	85
Cities and Boroughs	16
		101
UNIVERSITIES
England	5
Scotland	2
Ireland	2
		9
Total number of Members		670

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TO

VOLUME CXXIX.

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION, 1904.

HOUSE OF LORDS: TUESDAY, 2ND FEBRUARY, 1904.

Page

KING'S SPEECH 1

NEW PEER 5

ROLL OF THE LORDS 5

SELECT VESTRIES—Bill, pro formâ, read 1ª. 6

ADDRESS IN REPLY TO HIS MAJESTY'S MOST GRACIOUS SPEECH :—

Earl Fitzwilliam 6
Lord Hylton 13

Moved "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty in reply to the Gracious Speech from the Throne."—(Earl Fitzwilliam.)

Earl Spencer 19
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 37
The Lord Chancellor (The Earl of Halsbury) 49

On Question, agreed to nemine dissentiente, and ordered to be presented to His Majesty by the Lords with White Staves.

The Earl of Morley—Appointed, nemine dissentiente, to take the Chair in all Committees of this House for this session.

Committee for Privileges—Appointed.

Committee for the Journals—Appointed.

Stoppages in the Streets—Order to prevent, renewed.

Appeal Committee—Appointed.

Page

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS (RECESS).

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the following Papers having been commanded to be presented to this House by His Majesty had been so presented on the following dates by delivery to the Clerk of the Parliaments, pursuant to Standing Order No. CXI., viz.—

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS (IRELAND).

I. Abstracts showing acreage under crops and the number of live stock in each county and province, 1902–1903. (August 15.)

II. (Migratory Labourers). Report and Tables relating to Irish migratory agricultural and other labourers for the year 1903. (November 4).

III. Table showing the extent in statute acres, and the produce of crops for the year 1903. (December 30.) 51

WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA (ROYAL COMMISSION).—Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the military preparations and other matters connected with the war in South Africa; with Minutes of Evidence (Vols. I. and II.) and Appendices. (September 10.) 52

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).

I. Return for the month of May, 1903. (August 19.)

II. Return for the month of June, 1903. (September 28.)

III. Return for the month of July, 1903. (October 14.)

IV. Return for the month of August, 1903. (October 29.)

V. Return for the month of September, 1903. (November 24.)

VI. Return for the month of October, 1903. (December 19.) 53

TRADE REPORTS.—I. ANNUAL SERIES.

No. 3066. China (Amoy).
No. 3067. Portugal (Lorenço Marques). (August 21.)
No. 3068. Germany (Dantzig).
No. 3069. France (French Guinea).
No. 3070. Italy (South Italy, Supplementary). (August 27.)
No. 3071. France (Algeria). (August 29.)
No. 3072. Russia (Riga). (September 1.)
No. 3073. Austria-Hungary.
No. 3074. Greece (Ionian Islands). (August 29.)
No. 3075. Austria-Hungary (Bohemia). (September 2.)
No. 3076. Cuba.
No. 3077. Costa Rica.
No. 3078. Netherlands (Dutch Guiana). (September 5.)
No. 3079. Peru.
No. 3080. Italy (Sicily).
No. 3081. China (Wuhu). (September 10.)
No. 3082. Austria-Hungary (Fiume).
No. 3083. Netherlands (Finances of the Netherlands, 1902–3). (September 25.)
No. 3084. Japan (Nagasaki). (September 15.)

Feb. 2.] Page

No. 3085. Germany.
No. 3086. Finland. (September 19.)
No. 3087. France (Madagascar).
No. 3088. Spain (Canary Islands). (September 22.)
No. 3089. France (Senegal and Dependencies).
No. 3090. Italy (Lombardy). (September 24.)
No. 3091. Hayti.
No. 3092. China. (October 5.)
No. 3093. Morocco (Dar-al-Baida and District). (October 10.)
No. 3094. Austria-Hungary (Bosnia and Herzegovina).
No. 3095. Italy (Ancona). (October 13.)
No. 3096. Borneo (Brunes, Sarawak, and British North Borneo). (October 15.)
No. 3097. Turkey (Crete).
No. 3098. United States (Charleston and District). (October 16.)
No. 3099. Siam (Bangkok).
No. 3100. Turkey (Salonica).
No. 3101. France. (October 21.)
No. 3102. Russia (Reval). (October 27.)
No. 3103. Morocco (Tangier and District). (October 28.)
No. 3104. Belgium. (November 7).
No. 3105. Russia (Archangel). (November 18.)
No. 3106. France (French Guiana).
No. 3107. Brazil (Pará).
No. 3108. Russia (Trans-Caucasus).
No. 3109. Persia (Resht). (December 3.)
No. 3110. Italy (Sardinia). (December 22.)
No. 3111. Switzerland. (December 30.)
No. 3112. Mexico.
No. 3113. Denmark. (January 30.)
No. 3114. Columbia (excepting the Panama District).
No. 3115. Russia (Consular District of Rostox-on-Don). (February 1.) 52

II. Miscellaneous Series.

No. 596. Instruction in forestry and forest economy in Germany. (September 15.)
No. 597. Germany (instruction in mining and metallurgy in Germany and the German mining and metallurgical industries). (October 9.)
No. 598. Coffee trade in Colombia. (November 3.)
No. 599. Germany (beer brewing industry of Bavaria). (November 12.)
No. 600. Technical instruction in Germany. (The building and engineering trades' schools). (November 12.)
No. 601. Technical instruction in Germany. Special schools and courses for mechanical engineering and electrotechnics). (January 2.) 53

Africa.

No. 11. (1903). Reports on the geology of the East Africa Protectorate by the late E. E. Walker (Government Geologist). (August 22.)
No. 12. (1903). Report by the Mombasa-Victoria Railway Committee on the progress of the works and revenue working, 1902–1903 (with two maps). (August 22.)
No. 13. (1903). Report on the trade and general conditions of the British Central Africa Protectorate for the year 1902–1903, by Major F. B. Pearce, Acting Commissioner. (September 10.)

Feb. 2.] Page

No. 14. (1903). Despatch to certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad in regard to alleged cases of ill-treatment of natives, and to the existence of trade monopolies in the Independent State of the Congo. (October 21.)

No. 15. (1903.) General Report on the Uganda Protectorate, for the year ended 31st March, 1903. (December 19.) 54

COLONIES (ANNUAL).

No. 395. Seychelles (Report for 1902). (August 29.)
No. 396. Ceylon (Report for 1902). (September 28.)
No. 397. Gold Coast (Report for 1902). (September 30.)
No. 398. Barbados (Report for 1902–1903). (October 8.)
No. 399. Fiji (Report for 1902). (October 10.)
No. 400. Lagos (Report for 1902). (October 15.)
No. 401. British Solomon Islands (Report for 1902–1903).
No. 402. Cocos-Keeling Islands (Report for 1903). (October 21.)
No. 403. St. Vincent (Report for 1902–1903). (October 28.)
No. 404. Grenada (Report for 1902). (November 25.)
No. 405. Southern Nigeria (Report for 1902). (November 26.)
No. 406. Straits Settlements (Report for 1902). (November 27.)
No. 407. Trinidad and Tobago (Report for 1902–1903). (November 28.)
No. 408. Basutoland (Report for 1902–1903). (December 3.)
No. 409. Northern Nigeria (Report for 1902). (December 4.)
No. 410. Malta (Report for 1902–1903). (December 10.)
No. 411. St. Lucia (Report for 1902). (December 16.)
No. 412. Mauritius (Report for 1902). (December 29.)
No. 413. British Guiana (Report for 1902–1903). (January 2.) 54

MISCELLANEOUS.

No. 22. Seychelles (Report on Para rubber). (September 15.)
No. 23. Dominica (Roads and Land Settlement. Report on the expenditure of the Parliamentary Grant-in-Aid). (September 22.)
No. 24. Grenada (Report on Land Settlement in Carriacou). (November 24.)
No. 25. Hong-Kong (Bubonic Plague: Memorandum on the treatment of patients in their own homes and in local hospitals). (December 8.) .. 55

CANADA.—Canadian Sessional Paper containing correspondence in connection with German tariff. (August 29.) 55

HIGHWAYS (DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE).

I. Part II.—Report of.

II. Part II.—Minutes of evidence taken before the Committee appointed by the President of the Local Government Board to inquire into the subject of highway authorities and administration in England and Wales; together with appendix and index of evidence. (August 29.) 55

MINES AND QUARRIES (GENERAL REPORT AND STATISTICS FOR 1902).

I. Part II. Labour.—General Report and Statistics relating to persons employed and accidents at mines and quarries in the United Kingdom and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Act. (September 1.)

II. Part III. Output.—General Report and Statistics relating to the output and value of minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the imports and exports of minerals. (October 17.) 55

Feb. 2.] Page

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE (INDIAN SECTION).—Annual Report for the year 1902–1903. (September 4.) 55

STATISTICS (FOREIGN COUNTRIES).—Statistical Abstract for the principal and other foreign countries in each year from 1891 to 1900-1901 (as far as the particulars can be stated). 29th Number. (September 4.) 56

TREATY SERIES.

No. 12 (1903). Convention between the United Kingdom and France respecting commercial relations between France and Jamaica; signed at London, 8th August, 1902. (Ratifications exchanged at London, 12th August, 1903). (September 10.)

No. 13 (1903). Accession of Mexico to the Industrial Property Convention 1883, and Additional Act of 1900. (September 7.)

No. 14 (1903). Accession of Germany to the Industrial Property Convention of 20th March, 1883, etc., 1st May, 1903. (September 25.)

No. 15 (1903). Parcel Post Convention with detailed regulations between the United Kingdom and Chile; signed at Santiago, 21st October, 1902. (October 7.)

No. 16 (1903). Protocol for submitting to arbitration certain questions as to the interpretation of treaties with Japan with regard to leases held in perpetuity; signed at Tokio, 28th August, 1902. (October 23.)

No. 17 (1903). Treaty between the United Kingdom and China respecting commercial relations, etc.; signed at Shanghai, 5th September, 1902. (Ratifications exchanged at Peking, 28th July, 1903). (November 3.)

No. 18 (1903). Agreement between the United Kingdom and France providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments; signed at London, 14th October, 1903. (November 26.)

No. 1 (1904). Convention for the establishment of a parcel post service between the United States and Hong-Kong; signed at Washington, 21st November, 1903. (January 19.) 56

CENSUS (SCOTLAND), 1901.—Eleventh Decennial Census of the Population of Scotland taken 31st March, 1901, with Report) Vol. III). (September 15.) 56

CENSUS (ENGLAND AND WALES), 1901.—Index to Population Tables for England and Wales in the County Volumes of the Census Report, 1901. (October 23.) 57

WEST INDIES.—Further correspondence relating to the volcanic eruptions in St. Vincent and Martinique in 1902 and 1903. (September 19.) 57

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

I. (Ireland). Forty-first Report of the Inspector for the year ended 31st December, 1902. (September 21.)

II. (Great Britain). Forty-sixth Report, for the year 1902, of the Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI. (October 23.) 57

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).—Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons, with Appendices, for the year ended 31st March, 1903. (September 22.) 57

Feb. 2.] Page

NDIA (STATISTICAL ABSTRACT).—Statistical Abstract relating to British India, from 1892–1893 to 1901–1902, 37th Number. (September 23.) 57

INDIA.—Review of India in 1902–1903. (September 24.) 57

BANKING, RAILWAY, AND SHIPPING STATISTICS (IRELAND).—Report for June, 1903. (September 28.) 57

COLONIAL IMPORT DUTIES, 1903.—Return relating to the rates of import duties levied upon the principal and other articles imported into the Colonial and other Possessions of the United Kingdom. (October 9.) 57

COMMERCIAL.

No. 8 (1903). Reports from certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad respecting Forestry Laws. (October 9.)

No. 9 (1903). Return of Most-Favoured-Nation Clauses in existing Treaties of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Foreign Powers, stating the period when terminable, and showing whether they apply to the British Colonies; in force on 1st July, 1903. (October 20.) 57

BOARD OF MANUFACTURES (SCOTLAND).—Report of Departmental Committee appointed to inquire into the administration of the Board of Manufactures. (October 10.) 58

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE LAW (COLONIES).—Papers relating to laws of marriage and divorce in self-governing British Colonies. (October 10.) 58

CYPRUS.—Despatch from the High Commissioners covering a Report on the agricultural fund, for the year ended 31st March, 1903. (October 10.) .. 58

POLICE (METROPOLIS).—Report of the Commissioner of Police of Metropolis, for the year 1902. (October 12.) 58

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.—Annual Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops, for the year ended, 1902. Part II., Tables. (October 16.) 58

TURKEY.

No. 4 (1903). Further correspondence respecting affairs of South-Eastern Europe. (October 16.) .. ..

No. 1 (1904). Further correspondence respecting affairs of South-Eastern Europe. March to September, 1903. (January 11.) 58

AGRARIAN OUTRAGES (IRELAND).

I. Return for the quarter ended 30th September, 1903. (October 17.)

II. Return for the quarter ended 31st December, 1903. (January 21.) .. 58

ARMY (MILITARY PRISONS).—Report for the year 1902. (October 19.) 58

LICENSING (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1903.—Tables showing the populations of counties, local government districts, and burghs in Scotland with reference to the provisions of the Act. (October 21.) 58

INEBRIATES ACTS (INSPECTOR'S REPORT).—Report of Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879–1900, for the year 1902. (October 21.) 59

Feb. 2.]

Page

Peterhead Harbour.—Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works (in continuation of [Cd. 1288]). (October 22.) 59

Naval Manœuvres.—Report of Naval Manœuvres of 1903, carried out by combined Mediterranean, Home and Channel Fleets, and the Cruiser Squadron, from the 5th to the 11th August, 1903. (October 22.) 59

Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).

Report on the Manuscripts of :—

I. The Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, K.G., K.T., preserved at Drumlanrig Castle. Vol. II. (October 23.)

II. Mrs. Stopford-Sackville, of Drayton House, Northamptonshire. Vol. I. (January 16.) 59

Army.

I. (Volunteer Corps). Annual Return of the Volunteer Corps of Great Britain, for the year 1902. (October 23.)

II. List of exceptions to the Army Regulations as to pay, non-effective pay, and allowances sanctioned by the Commissioners of the Treasury, pursuant to the Royal Warrant, dated 27th October, 1884, during the year 1902–1903. (November 17.)

III. (Recruiting). Annual Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting, for the first nine months of the year 1903. (January 19.)

IV. Return of rifle ranges in the United Kingdom. (January 21.) 59

Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).

I. Return of the number of eviction notices filed during the quarter ended 30th September, 1903. (October 23.) .. ..

II. Return of the number of eviction notices filed during the quarter ended 31st December, 1903. (January 26.) 59

Evictions (Ireland).

Return of Evictions in Ireland—

I. For the quarter ended 30th September, 1903. (October 30.)

II. For the quarter ended 31st December, 1903. (January 29.) 59

Judicial Statistics (Scotland) Act, 1869.—Report on the Judicial Statistics of Scotland, for the year 1902. (October 27.) 60

Straits Settlements.—Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1902. (October 28.) 60

Wireless Telegraphy.—Preliminary Conference at Berlin on wireless telegraphy Procés Verbaux and Protocole Final. (October 30.) 60

Education.

I. Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to museums under the Board of Education. (From the 1st August, 1903, to 31st July, 1904.) (November 2.) .. .. ..

II. Special Reports on educational subjects (Report on the school training and early employment of Lancashire children.) (December 11.) ..

Feb. 2.] Page

III. Statement of schemes for the formation of education committees approved during the period 1st August to 30th November, 1903, by the Board of Education (in continuation of Command Papers, 1564, 1613, 1659, 1675, and 1740.) (December 18.)

V. Reports from University Colleges (1903.) (January 9.) 60

NATIONAL EDUCATION (IRELAND).

I. Appendix, Section III., to the Annual Report of the Commissioners, for the year 1902. (November 4.)

II. Appendix, Section II., to the Annual Report of the Commissioners, for the year 1902. (January 4.) 60

ANKYLOSTOMIASIS.—Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department by J. S. Haldane, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., on Ankylostomiasis in Westphalian Collieries. (November 5.) 60

SOUTH AFRICA (COMMERCIAL MISSION).—Report received from Mr. Henry Birchenough, the Special Commissioner appointed by the Board of Trade to inquire into and report upon the present position and future prospects of British Trade in South Africa. (November 14.) 60

MISCELLANEOUS.

No. 5. (1903.)—Correspondence showing the systems in force in certain foreign countries for publishing official Reports of proceedings in the Houses of Legislature. (November 14.)

No. 6. (1903.)—Return as to financial support given from State or municipal funds to dramatic, operative, or musical performances in foreign countries. (December 14.) 61

CHINA.

No. 3. (1903.)—Report by Acting Consul Litton on a journey in North West Yunnan. (November 14.)

No. 1. (1904.)—Report by Mr. C. W. Campbell, His Majesty's Consul at Wuchow, on a journey in Mongolia (with a map). (January 6.) .. 61

ARSENICAL POISONING (ROYAL COMMISSION).

1. Report of Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of arsenical poisoning arising from the consumption of beer and other articles of food or drink. Part II. being Vol. I. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices. (November 16.)

II. Final Report of Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of arsenical poisoning arising from the consumption of beer and other articles of food and drink.

Part I. Report. (November 24.)

Part II. Being Vol. II. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices. (December 12.) 61

BOARD OF TRADE (CONCILIATION).—Fourth Report by the Board of Trade of Proceedings under the Conciliation (Trade Disputes) Act, 1896, 1901–1903. (November 16.) 61

Feb. 2.] Page

EXPLOSIVES (EXPLOSIONS AT THE COTTON POWDER COMPANY'S FACTORY AT FAVERSHAM).—Reports to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Home Department on the circumstances attending explosions of nitroglycerine, which occurred in the final washing house of the factory of the Cotton Powder Company, Limited, at Uplees Marches, Faversham, Kent—

I. By Major A. Cooper-Key on the explosion of 23rd August, 1903. (November 19.)

II. By Captain J. H. Thomson on the explosion of 9th November, 1903. (January 20.) 61

INDIA.

I. Irrigation—Report of the Indian Irrigation Commission, 1901–1903—
Part I. General.
Part II. Provincial.
Part III. Maps.
Part IV. Appendix. (November 30.) .. ..

II. Sanitary Measures.—Report on sanitary measures in India in 1901–1902. Vol. XXXV. (November 25.)

III. Trade.—Tables relating to the Trade of British India with British Possessions and Foreign countries, 1898–1899 to 1902–3. (January 28.) 62

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Orders made by the Light Railway Commissioners and confirmed by the Board of Trade.

a. Authorising construction of Light Railways in,

I. The City of Bath in the County of Somerset (being extensions and deviations of the existing and authorised undertaking of Bath Electric Tramways, Limited), and the abandonment of construction of certain other light railways already authorised in the same city.

II. The rural district of Dartford in the county of Kent.

III. The County of Kent from the River Thames near Greenhithe to Dartford and Eynsford, with branches to Swanley Junction and to Stansted.

IV. The borough of Burton-upon-Trent, the urban districts of Swadlincote and of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and the rural districts of Repton and Hartshorne and Seals of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in the counties of Stafford, Derby and Leicester.

V. The borough and rural district of Dover and parish of River in the County of Kent.

VI. The County of Southampton from Totton and Fawley.

VII. The County of Gloucester, in the parishes of Henbury and Shirehampton.

(b.) Amending—

I. The Bere Alston and Calstock Light Railway Order, 1900.

II. The Llandudno and Colwyn Bay Light Railway Order, 1898.

III. The Lastingham and Rosedale Light Railway Order, 1900.

(c.) Reviving powers granted and extending period limited by Bankfort Light Railway Order, 1898, for compulsory purchase of lands, and extending period limited by that Order for the completion of the railway and works by that order authorised.

Feb. 2.] Page

(d.) Transferring to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Nelson the powers conferred upon the Barrowford Urban District Council by Barrowford Light Railway Order, 1901, and amending that Order and the Nelson Light Railways Order, 1901. (December 7.) 62

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES.—Report on the results of investigations into cider-making carried out on behalf of the Bath and West and Southern Counties' Society in the years 1983–1902, by F. J. Lloyd, F.C.S., F.I.C. (December 11.) 63

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, GALWAY.—Annual Report of President for Session 1902–1903. (December 18.) 63

METEOROLOGICAL COUNCIL.—Report of the Meteorological Council for the year ended 31st March, 1903, to the President and Council of the Royal Society. (January 1.) 63

NATIONAL EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Appendix to Annual Report of Commissioners for the year 1902—

I. Section II. (January 4.)

II. Section I. (January 15.) 63

SEWAGE DISPOSAL (ROYAL COMMISSION).—Fourth Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire and report what methods of treating and disposing of sewage may properly be adopted, together with Vol. II. Minutes of Evidence; Vol. III. Reports on Bacteriological Investigations ; and Vol. IV. Reports on the Land. Treatment of sewage and methods of chemical analysis of sewage effluents. (January 5.) 63

CHAPTER HOUSE (WESTMINSTER).—Memoranda by Professor Church, F.R.S., concerning treatment of decayed stonework in the Chapter House, Westminster Abbey. (January 8.) 64

POSTAL CONVENTION (DENMARK).—Agreement between Post Office of United Kingdom and Great Britain and Ireland and Post Office of Denmark. (January 9.) 64

RAILWAYS (CONTINUOUS BRAKES).—Return by railway companies of the United Kingdom for six months, ending 30th June, 1903. (January 16.) 64

PATRIOTIC FUND.—Forty-second Report of Royal Commissioners. (January 21.)

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).—Report on shellfish layings on the Irish coast as respects their liability to sewage contamination. (January 21.) .. 64

ELECTRICITY IN MINES.—Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for Home Department to inquire into the use of electricity in mines, with minutes of evidence and appendices. (January 30.) .. 64

TRANSVAAL.—Report of Transvaal Labour Commission. (January 29.) .. 64

UNITED STATES, No. 1 (1904).—Correspondence respecting the Alaska Boundary. (February 1.) 64

Feb. 2.] Page

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).—Third Annual Report, 1902–1903. (February 1.)

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 64

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

No. 3116. Belgium.

No. 3117. France (Indó-China.) 64

UNITED STATES, No. 2 (1904).—Map to accompany correspondence respecting the Alaska Boundary (United States, No. 1 (1904). 64

TURKEY, No. 2 (1904).—Further correspondence respecting the affairs of South-Eastern Europe (in continuation of Turkey, No. 1 (1904) 65

SOUTH AFRICA.—Further correspondence relating to the affairs of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony 65

EXPLOSIVES (EXPLOSION AT THE BLENHEIM ENGINEERING COMPANY'S FACTORY AT TUNNEL LANE, GREENWICH MARSHES).—Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department by Major A. Cooper-Key, His Majesty's Inspector of Explosives, on the circumstances attending an explosion of fulminate composition at the factory of the Blenheim Engineering Company, Limited, at Tunnel Lane, Greenwich Marshes, on 18th December, 1903.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table. 65

LUNACY:

I. Return of all sums received by the visitors of lunatics for travelling expenses, or upon any other account, from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1903.

II. Report to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made, the number of patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the visitors of lunatics pursuant to the Lunacy Act, 1890, between 1st April, 1903, to 30th September, 1903 65

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.—Rules. 65

BARBADOS.—Prison rule relating to the vaccination of prisoners. 65

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHTS ACTS, 1844 to 1866.—Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, giving effect to the accession of Denmark to the International Copyright Convention of the 9th September, 1886, and Additional Act of Paris, 1897. 65

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT, 1878.—Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, approving a new denomination of standard weight of fifty pounds or "half-cental." 65

GREENWICH HOSPITAL ACTS.—Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, sanctioning certain pensions now granted from the funds of Greenwich Hospital being supplemented from Naval Funds. 66

Feb. 2.] Page

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Orders in Council of the 9th October, 1903, applying the provisions of Section 238 of the Act in the case of deserters from Japanese vessels.

Orders in Council of the 16th November, 1903, confirming byelaws made by the pilotage authority for the ports of Gloucester and Burntisland respectively.

Two Orders in Council of the 29th January, 1904, providing for the re-measurement for tonnage of French and Spanish vessels in British ports 66

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.—Order in Council of the 8th December, 1903, entitled "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903." 66

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1858.—Order in Council of the 8th December, 1903, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State in Council of India. 66

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND.)

Additional Rules made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to–

I. Experimental science and drawing.

II. Experimental and practical science.

Amended rules made by the Board for the examination in music.

Time-table of examinations for the year 1904. 66

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND) ACT.—Orders in Council, dated 1st December, 1903, and 21st January, 1904, giving effect to Rules of Court. 66

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.—Thirty-three Minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, sanctioning forms of instruction for certain county boroughs, counties, and urban districts. 66

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS, 1853 to 1891 (CONDITIONAL LICENCES.)

Licenses granted by His Majesty under the provisions of the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A. of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864.

I. To Ellis Smith.

II. To Patrick Hardigan.

Licence granted by His Majesty to Mary Ann Phillips, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of the Holy Rood at Worthing.

Licence granted to Timothy W. Nolan, a convict, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A. of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864. 67

PHARMACY (IRELAND) ACTS, 1875 and 1890.—Order in Council dated 9th October, 1903, approving of a regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society. 67

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS.)—Returns of descriptions of qualifications of deputy lieutenants lodged during 1902, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland. 67

Feb. 2.]

Page

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND.)—Order, dated 9th October, 1903, and three Orders, dated 4th November, 1903, for holding Winter Assizes in Ireland. 67

PUBLIC RECORDS.

(Colonial Office.) Schedule containing a list and particulars of classes of documents existing or accruing in the office of His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State having the Department of the Colonies which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office.

Additional rule made by the right hon. Sir Richard Henn Collins, Master of the Rolls, for the disposal of certain documents. 67

CERTIFIED INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS FOR MANAGEMENT).—Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the Certified Inebriate Reformatory at Ackworth, Yorkshire 67

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

(Incorporation of Aston Manor).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Aston Manor, dated 17th August, 1903.

(Incorporation of Hornsey).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Hornsey, dated 17th August, 1903.

(Incorporation of Gillingham).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Gillingham, dated 17th August, 1903.

(Incorporation of Bromley).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Bromley, dated 17th August, 1903 68

INEBRIATES ACTS, 1879 TO 1899 (REGULATIONS FOR STATE INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES).—New regulations, dated 29th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, prescribing the diet for ill-conducted or idle inmates of State Reformatories, and revoking Regulation 64 (b) and 66 (b), and so much of Appendix A. as relates to the diet of ill-conducted or idle inmates of the Regulation dated 21st June, 1901 .. 68

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

(Special Exceptions : Creameries). —Order dated 23rd October, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 42 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting certain special exceptions to creameries, and revoking the Order (Ireland) dated 9th June, 1902.

(Special Exception : Lime-washing, &c.).—Order, dated 2nd November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 1 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting special exceptions from the provisions respecting lime-washing &c., to certain factories and parts of factories, and revoking the Orders dated 16th November, 1895, 8th February, 1896, and 26th March, 1902.

Dangerous and Unhealthy Industries.—Regulations, dated 21st November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, for the manufacture of electric accumulators.

Feb. 2.] Page

(Particulars of Piecework Wages: Wearing Apparel).—Order, dated 17th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, applying with modifications the provisions of Section 116 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, to the manufacture of wearing apparel, and revoking the Order dated 22nd April, 1897.

(Special Exception: Overtime).—Order, dated 29th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 49 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, with regard to the overtime employment of women on not more than thirty days in the year, and revoking all existing Orders.

(Health: Bakehouses).—Order, dated 30th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Departmentl in pursuance of Section 3, Sub-section 2, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, modifying the proportion of cubic feet of space to be provided in certain bakehouses.

(Earthenware and China).—Amended special rules for the manufacture and decoration of earthenware and china as established by the awards of the Empire, Lord James of Hereford, dated 30th December, 1901, and 28th November, 1903 68

Bank of England.—Return of the amount of notes issued more than forty years, and outstanding on 28th October, 1903, which have been written off 69

Imperial Ottoman Guaranteed Loan of 1855.—Account for the year to 31st December, 1903 69

Treasury Bills.—Treasury Minute, dated 24th January, 1904, amending the regulation laid down in the Treasury Minute of 31st May, 1889, relating to tenders for Treasury Bills under the Act 40 Victoria, chap. 2, s. 9. .. 69

St. Louis Exhibition Commission, 1904.—Treasury Minute, dated 29th August 1903, directing that the accounts of the Royal Commission for the St. Louis Exhibition for 1904 shall be examined and audited by the Comptroller and Auditor-General 69

SUPERANNUATION.

Professional qualifications Treasury Minutes declaring that professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired on the public service are required for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the offices of—

I. Secretary to the Civil Service Commissioners (10th November, 1903).

II. Deputy Governor of a convict prison in Ireland (21st November, 1903).

Treasury Minute, dated 20th August, 1903, awarding a special pension to Sir Kenelm Edward Digby, K.C.B., late Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Treasury Minutes declaring that the following persons were appointed without Civil Service certificates through inadvertance on the part of the heads of their Departments—

I. Thomas Ashbrook Forster, Postmaster, Newton Post Office (30th September, 1903).

II. Alfred Wellham, machine-hand, Royal Small Arms Factory, Birmingham (5th November, 1903.)

Feb. 2.] Page

III. William Edward Bird, engine driver, Royal Gun Factory, War Department (23rd December, 1903).

IV. Charles Chamberlain, principal foreman, Royal Carriage Department, War Office (2nd October, 1903). 70

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.

Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh to the Secretary for Scotland, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Act for the year 1902–1903.

Annual Report on the state of the finances of the University of Edinburgh, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Act.

Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow to the Secretary for Scotland, under the provision of Section 30 of the Act, for the year 1902–1903. — 70

PRISONS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1877, AND SECRETARY FOR SCOTLAND ACTS, 1885–1889. —Rule made by the Secretary for Scotland appointing the police cells at Kirkcaldy to be a legal prison for the detention of untried prisoners for a period not exceeding fourteen days before or during trial, and of convicted prisoners for a period not exceeding seven days from the date of conviction.. 71

LICENSING (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1903.—Order by the Secretary for Scotland under Section 109. 71

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAVIE TO MALLAIG).—Second Annual Report by the Board of Trade as to the conditions and working of the Banavie to Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any company in working the railway, for the year 1902–1903 71

INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN ENGLAND).—Return of all loans raised in England under the provisions of any Acts of Parliament, chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1903, with the rates of interest and total amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year, stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purpose or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year .. 71

LOANS RAISED IN INDIA.—Return of all loans raised in India, chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1903, with the rates of interest and total amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half-year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year, stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purposes or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table .. 71

Feb. 2.] Page

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877.—

Statutes made by the Governing Bodies of :

Magdalene College, Cambridge, on the 22nd June, 1903, in substitution for Statute XXV. of the statutes of the college.

Oriel College, Oxford, on the 24th April, 1903, amending Statute IV., 7, of the statutes of the college.

Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, on the 16th March, 1903, in substitution for the existing statutes of the college.

New College, Oxford, on the 17th June, 1903, amending certain clauses of Statute III. of the statutes of the college.

St. John's College, Oxford, on the 15th May, 1903, amending Statute XV., 1, of the statutes of the college.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and to be printed. (No. 1.) .. 72

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1889, UNIVERSITY COURT ORDINANCE No, IX. (EDINBURGH No. 3.)—Regulations for the degree of Bachelor-of-Law (B. L.) ; laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and to be printed. (No. 2.) .. 72

MARGATE PIER AND HARBOUR BOARD.—Report and statement of accounts for year ended 5th April, 1903 72

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD.—Accounts for year ended 1st July, 1903 ; delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 72

SUBSIDIES TO SHIPPING COMPANIES.—Return respecting ; laid before the House (pursuant to Order of the 13th of August last), and to be printed. No. 3.) — 72

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.—Return of the number of aliens that arrived from the Continent at ports in the United Kingdom, in each month of the year 1904 ; ordered to be laid before the House.—(The Lord Wolverton.) 73

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.—Return (in parts) respecting ; laid before the House (pursuant to Order of this day), and to be printed. (No. 6.) 73

NEW BILLS.

SEA FISHERIES BILL [H.L.].—A Bill to provide against the destruction of undersized flat fish, was presented by the Earl of Onslow ; read 1^a ; and to be printed. (No. 4.) 73

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (METRIC SYSTEM) BILL [H.L.].—A Bill to render compulsory the use of the system of weights and measures, commonly known as the metric system was presented by the Lord Kelvin read 1^a ; and to be printed. (No. 5.) 73

House adjourned at twenty minutes before Eight o'clock, to Thursday next, a quarter past Four o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: TUESDAY, 2ND FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

Message to attend His Majesty.

The House went, and, being returned—

NEW WRITS.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had issued Warrants for New Writs dur during the recess.

For St. Andrew's District Burghs, in the room of Henry Torrens Anstruther, esquire, who hath accepted the Office of a Representative in the Conseil d'Administration of the Suez Canal Company; City of Rochester, James Hubert Gascoyne Cecil, commonly called Viscount Cranborne, called to the House of Peers; County of Meath (South Division), James Laurence Carew, esquire, deceased, County of Leitrim (Northern Division), Patrick Aloysius McHugh, esquire, an adjudicated bankrupt; Borough of Belfast (West Division), Hugh Oakley Arnold-Forster, esquire, who hath accepted the Office of Secretary of State for War; Borough of Warwick and Leamington, the honourable Alfred Lyttelton, K.C., who hath accepted the Office of Secretary of State for the Colonies; South-East Lancashire (Westhoughton Division), George Villiers Stanley, C.B., commonly called Lord Stanley, who hath accepted the Office of Postmaster General; County of Southampton (Southern or Fareham Division), Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur Hamilton Lee, who hath accepted the Office of Civil Lord of the Admiralty; City of Londonderry, James Albert Edward Hamilton, commonly called Marquess of Hamilton, who hath accepted the Office of Treasurer of His Majesty's Household; North Lancashire (Chorley Division), David Alexander Edward Lindsay, commonly called Lord Balcarres, who hath accepted the Office of Junior Lord of the Treasury; Borough of Camberwell (Dulwich Division), Sir John Blundell Maple, baronet, deceased; Borough of Lewisham, John Penn, esquire, deceased; County of Devon (Mid or Ashburton Division), the Right Honourable Charles Seale-Hayne, deceased; County of Salop (Ludlow Division), Robert Jasper More, esquire, deceased; City of Norwich, Sir Harry Bullard, knight, deceased; Borough of Gateshead, Sir William Allan, knight, deceased; Ayr Boroughs, Charles Lindsay Orr-Ewing, esquire, deceased.

Mr. SPEAKER also informed the House that he had received the following letters:—

"15, Bishopsgate Street, Within, E.C.,
"1st February, 1904.

"The Right Honourable
"The Speaker of the House of Commons.

"Sir,

"I have the honour to inform you that the firm of Antony Gibbs & Sons, of which I and my brother Vicary Gibbs are members, accepted a contract with the Admiralty on the 2nd December last.

"I am, Sir,
"Your obedient servant.
"ALBAN GIBBS."

Feb. 2.] Page

"1st February, 1904.
"St. Dunstan's,
"Regent's Park.

"Mr. Speaker,

"I have the honour to inform you that at the latter end of last year, I (as a partner in the firm of Antony Gibbs and Sons) entered into a contract with the Admiralty, and am advised that by so doing I have, under an Act of George III. vacated my seat in Parliament.

"I beg to remain, Mr. Speaker,
"Your obedient humble servant,
"VICARY GIBBS." 73

CITY OF LONDON (WRIT).

Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.) 75

Motion made, and Question, "That the Debate be now adjourned,"—

(Mr. Swift MacNeill,)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

COUNTY OF HERTFORD (MID OR ST. ALBANS DIVISION (WRIT).

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the election of a Member to serve in this present Parliament, for the County of Hertford (St. Albans Division) in the room of Vicary Gibbs, esquire, who has accepted a contract with the Admiralty."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood).

Debate adjourned till to-morrow 77

NEW MEMBERS SWORN.

Right hon. Alfred Lyttelton, for Borough of Warwick and Leamington.

Right hon. Hugh Oakley Arnold-Forster, City of Belfast (West Belfast Division).

Right hon. Edward George Villiers Stanley, C.B. (commonly called Lord Stanley), South-East Lancashire (Westhoughton Division).

David Alexander Edward Lindsay (commonly called Lord Balcarres), North Lancashire (Chorley Division).

Arthur Hamilton Lee, esquire, County of Hants (Southern or Fareham Division).

James Albert Edward Hamilton (commonly called Marquess of Hamilton), City of Londonderry.

Charles Tuff, esquire, City of Rochester.

Edward Feetham Coates, esquire, Borough of Lewisham.

Frederick Rutherfood Harris, esquire, Borough of Camberwell (Dulwich Division).

Rowland Hunt, esquire, County of Salop (Southern or Ludlow Division).

John Stirling Ainsworth, esquire, County of Argyll.

Captain Edward Charles Ellice, St. Andrews District of Burghs.

Harry Trelawney Eve, esquire, County of Devon (Mid or Ashburton Division).

Louis John Tillett, esquire, City of Norwich.

Patrick Aloysius McHugh, esquire, County of Leitrim (North Leitrim Division).

David Sheehy, esquire, County of Meath (South Meath Division). 77

Elections.—Ordered, That all Members who are returned for two or more places in any part of the United Kingdom do make their Election for which of the places they will serve, within one week after it shall appear that there is no question upon the Return for that place; and if anything shall come in question touching the Return or Election of any Member, he is to withdraw during the time the matter is in debate; and that all Members returned upon double Returns do withdraw till their Returns are determined.

Resolved, That no Peer of the Realm, except such Peers of Ireland as shall for the time being be actually elected, and shall not have declined to serve, for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, hath any right to give his vote in the Election of any Member to serve in Parliament.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the Commons of the United Kingdom for any Lord of Parliament, or other Peer or Prelate, not being a Peer of Ireland at the time elected, and not having declined to serve for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, to concern himself in the election of Members to serve for the Commons in Parliament, except only any Peer of Ireland, at such Elections in Great Britain respectively where such Peer shall appear as a candidate' or by himself, or any others, be proposed to be elected; or for any Lord Lieutenant or Governor of any county to avail himself of any authority derived from his Commission, to influence the Election of any Member to serve for the Commons in Parliament" (Sir A. Acland-Hood) 78

Mr. James Lowther 79
Mr. Gibson Bowles 79

Amendment proposed—

"To leave out from the word 'Kingdom' in line 2, to the word 'for' in line 8"—(Mr. James Lowther.)

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustines) 79

Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question," put, and agreed to.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Resolved, That it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the Commons of the United Kingdom for any Lord of Parliament, or other Peer or Prelate, not being a Peer of Ireland at the time elected, and not having declined to serve for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, to concern himself in the election of Members to serve for the Commons in Parliament, except only any Peer of Ireland, at such Elections in Great Britain respectively where such Peer shall appear as a candidate, or by himself, or any others, be proposed to be elected; or for any Lord Lieutenant or Governor of any county to avail himself of any authority derived from his Commission, to influence the Election of any Member to serve for the Commons in Parliament.

Feb. 2.] Page

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been elected or returned a member of this House, or endeavoured so to be, by bribery, or any other corrupt practices, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against all such persons as shall have been wilfuly concerned in such bribery or other corrupt practices.

Witnesses.—Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been tampering with any witness, in respect of his evidence to be given to this House, or any Committee thereof, or directly or indirectly hath endeavoured to deter or hinder any person from appearing or giving evidence, the same is declared to be a high crime or misdemeanour; and this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath given false evidence in any case before this House, or any Committee thereof, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender. .. 80

Metropolitan Police.—Ordered, That the Commissioners of the Police of the Metropolis do take care that, during the session of Parliament, the passages through the streets leading to this House be kept free and open, and that no obstruction be permitted to hinder the passage of Members to and from this House, and that no disorder be allowed in Westminster Hall, or in the passages leading to this House, during the Sitting of Parliament, and that there be no annoyance therein or thereabouts; and that the Sergeant at Arms attending this House do communicate this Order to the Commissioners aforesaid 81

Votes and Proceedings.—Ordered, That the Votes and Proceedings of this House be printed, being first perused by Mr. Speaker; and that he do appoint the printing thereof; and that no person but such as he shall appoint do presume to print the same 81

Privileges.—Ordered, That a Committee of Privileges be appointed 81

Outlawries Bill.—"For the more effectual preventing of Clandestine Outlawries," read the first time; to be read a second time 81

Journal.—Ordered, That the Journal of this House, from the end of the last session to the end of the present session, with an Index thereto, be printed.

Ordered, That 500 Copies of the said Journal and Index be printed by the appointment and under the direction of Sir Courtenay Peregrine Ilbert, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., the Clerk of this House.

Ordered, That the said Journal and Index be printed by such person as shall be licensed by Mr. Speaker, and that no other person do presume to print the same 81

Parliamentary Papers (Recess).—The following Papers, presented by His Majesty's Command during the Recess, were delivered to the Librarian of the House of Commons during the Recess, pursuant to the Standing Order of the 14th August, 1896—

1. Explosions (Cotton Powder Company's Factory at Faversham).—Copy of Report by Major A. Cooper-Key, His Majesty's Inspector of Explosives, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the circumstances attending an Explosion of nitro-glycerine which occurred in the Final Washing House of the Factory of the Cotton Powder Company, Limited, at Uplees Marshes, Faversham, Kent, on the 23rd August, 1903.

2. Explosions (Cotton Powder Company's Factory at Faversham.—Copy of Report by Captain J. H. Thomson, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Explosives, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the circumstances attending an Explosion of nitro-glycerine which occurred in the Final Washing House of the Factory of the Cotton Powder Company, Limited, at Uplees Marshes, Faversham, Kent, on the 9th November, 1903.

3. Sewage Disposal (Royal Commission)—Copy of Fourth Report of the Commissioners appointed to enquire and report what methods of Treating and Disposing of Sewage may properly be adopted, together with Vol. II., Minutes of Evidence, Vol. III., Reports on Bacteriological Investigations, and Vol. IV., Reports on the Land Treatment of Sewage and Methods of Chemical Analysis of Sewage Effluents.

4. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the manuscripts of Mrs. Stopford-Sackville of Drayton House, Northamptonshire, Vol. I.

5. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, K.G., K.T., preserved at Drumlanrig Castle, Vol. II.

6. Arsenical Poisoning (Royal Commission).—Copy of Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of Arsenical Poisoning arising from the Consumption of Beer and other articles of Food or Drink. Part I. Report.

7. Arsenical Poisoning (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of Arsenical Poisoning arising from the consumption of Beer and other articles of Food and Drink. Part II. Vol. I. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

8. Arsenical Poisoning (Royal Commission).—Copy of Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of Arsenical Poisoning arising from the consumption of Beer and other articles of Food or Drink. Part II. Vol. II. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

9. Electricity in Mines.—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the use of Electricty in Mines, with Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

10. War in South Africa (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the military preparations and other matters connected with the War in South Africa, with Minutes of Evidence (Vols. I. and II.) and Appendices.

11. Ankylostomiasis.—Copy of Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, by J. S. Haldane, esquire, M.D., F.R.S., on Ankylostomiasis in Westphalian Collieries.

Feb. 2.] Page

12. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1902; Part II., Labour; General Report and Statistics relating to persons employed and Accidents at Mines and Quarries in the United Kingdom, and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Acts.

13. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1902, Part III., Output; General Report and Statistics relating to the Output and Value of the Minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the exports and imports of Minerals.

14. Prisons (England and Wales).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners of Prisons, and the Directors of Convict Prisons with Appendices, for the year ended 31st March, 1903.

15. Factories and Workshops.—Copy of Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops for 1902. Part II. Tables.

16. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Great Britain).—Copy of Forty-sixth Report of His Majesty's Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools for 1902. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI.

17. Police (Metropolis).—Copy of Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for the year 1902.

18. Inebriates Acts (Inspector's Report).—Copy of Report of the Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1900, for the year 1902.

19. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the City of Bath, in the county of Somerset (being extensions and deviations of the existing and authorised undertaking of Bath Electric Tramways, Limited), and the abandonment of the construction of certain other Light Railways already authorised in the same city (Bath Electric Tramways (Light Railways Extensions) Order, 1903).

20. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Llandudno and Colwyn Bay Light Railway Order, 1898 (Llandudno and Colwyn Bay Light Railway (Deviation and Amendment) Order, 1903).

21. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the County of Kent, from the River Thames near Greenhithe to Dartford and Eynsford, with Branches to Swanley Junction and to Stansted (Dartford District Light Railways Order, 1903).

22. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Lastingham and Rosedale Light Railway Order, 1900 (Lastingham and Rosedale Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903).

23. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, reviving the powers granted and extending the period limited by The Bankfoot Light Railway Order, 1898, for the compulsory purchase of lands, and extending the period limited by that Order for the completion of the Railway and works by that Order authorised (Bankfoot Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903).

24. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the borough of Burton-upon-Trent, the urban districts of Swadlincote and of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and the rural districts of Repton and of Hartshorne and Seales and of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in the counties of Stafford, Derby, and Leicester (Burton and Ashby Light Railway Order, 1903).

25. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the borough and rural district of Dover and parish of River, in the county of Kent (Dover and River Light Railway Order, 1903).

26. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Bere Alston and Calstock Light Railway Order, 1900 (Bere Alston and Calstock Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903).

27. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of Southampton, from Totton to Fawley (Totton, Hythe, and Fawley Light Railway Order, 1903).

28. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the rural district of Dartford, in the county of Kent (Dartford Light Railway (Extension) Order, 1903).

29. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, transferring to the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Nelson the powers conferred upon the Barrowford Urban District Council by the Barrowford Light Railway Order, 1901, and amending that order and the Nelson Light Railways Order, 1901 (Barrowford Light Railway Order, 1901 (Transfer, &c.) Order, 1903).

30. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a light Railway in the county of Gloucester, in the parishes of Henbury and Shirehampton (Avonmouth Light Railway Order, 1903).

31. Railways (Continuous Brakes).—Copy of Return by Railway Companies of the United Kingdom on the use of Continuous Brakes for the six months ending the 30th June, 1903.

32. Statistical Abstracts (Foreign Countries).—Copy of Statistical Abstract for the principal and other Foreign Countries in each year from 1891 to 1900–1901 (Twenty-ninth Number).

33. Commercial Mission to South Africa.—Copy of Report received from Mr. Henry Birchenough, the Special Commissioner appointed by the Board of Trade to inquire into and report upon the present position and future prospects of British Trade in South Africa.

34. Colonial Import Duties.—Copy of Return relating to the Rates of Import Duties levied upon the principal and other Articles Imported into the Colonial and other Possessions of the United Kingdom.

Feb. 2.] Page

35. Conciliation Act, 1896 (Trade Disputes).—Copy of Fourth Report by the Board of Trade of Proceedings under the Conciliation Act, 1896.

36. East India (Sanitary Measures).—Copy of Report on Sanitary Measures in India in 1901–2 (Vol. XXXV.).

37. East India (Irrigation).—Copy of Report of the Indian Irrigation Commission, 1901–3. Part I. General. Part II. Provincial. Part III. Maps. Part IV. Appendix.

38. East India (Railways).—Copy of Report on the administration and working of Indian Railways, by Thomas Robertson, C.V.O., Special Commissioner for Indian Railways.

39. East India (Statistical Abstract).—Copy of Statistical Abstract relating to British India from 1892–3 to 1901–2. (Thirty-seventh Number.)

40. East India (Trade).—Copy of Review of Trade of India for 1902–3.

41. East India (Trade).—Copy of Tables relating to the Trade of British India with British Possessions and Foreign Countries for the five years 1898–9 to 1902–3.

42. Imperial Institute (Indian Section).—Copy of Annual Report of the Imperial Institute (Indian Section) for the year 1902–3.

43. Irish Land Commission (Proceedings).—Copy of Return of Proceedings during the months of May, June, July, August, September, and October, 1903.

44. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Sixty-ninth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1902. Section I.

45. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Sixty-ninth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1902. Section II.

46. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Sixty-ninth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1902. Section III.

47. Queen's College (Galway).—Copy of Report of the President for the Session 1902–3.

48. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Tables showing the extent in statute acres and the produce of the Crops for the year 1903.

49. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland) (Migratory Labourers).—Copy of Report and Tables relating to Irish Migratory Agricultural and other Labourers for the year 1903.

50. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Abstracts showing the Acreage under Crops and the number of Live Stock in each county and province of Ireland for the year 1902–3.

51. Agrarian Outrages (Ireland).—Copy of Return for the quarter ended 30th September, 1903.

52. Agrarian Outrages (Ireland).—Copy of Return for the quarter ended 31st December, 1903.

53. Evictions (Ireland).—Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 30th September, 1903.

54. Evictions (Ireland).—Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 31st December, 1903.

55. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter ended 30th September, 1903.

56. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter ended 31st December, 1903.

Feb. 2.] Page

57. Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Report on the Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics of Ireland for the half-year ended 30th June, 1903.

58. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Ireland).—Copy of Forty-first Report of the Inspector for the year 1902.

59. Shell-Fish (Ireland).—Copy of Report of the Local Government Board for Ireland on the Shell-Fish Layings on the Irish coast as respects their liability to sewage contamination.

60. Board of Education.—Copy of Reports from University Colleges, 1903.

61. Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects. School Training and Early Employment of Lancashire Children.

62. Board of Education (Education Committees).—Copy of Statement of Schemes for the Formation of Education Committees approved during the period 1st August to 30th November, 1903, by the Board of Education, under Section 17 of the Education Act of 1902.

63. Board of Education.—Copy of Return showing the Number of Persons on the Teachers' Register under Regulation 5 (2) (a) of the Teachers' Registration Regulations.

64. Board of Education.—Copy of Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to Museums under the Board of Education from 1st August, 1903, to 31st July, 1904.

65. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.—Copy of Report on the Results of Investigations into Cider Making carried out on behalf of the Bath and West and Southern Counties Society in the years 1893 to 1902, by F. J. Lloyd, F.C.S., F.I.C.

66. Postal Convention (Denmark).—Copy of Agreement between the Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Post Office of Denmark. Dated 22nd August, 14th September, 1903.

67. Wireless Telegraphy.—Copy of Procés-Verbaux and Protocole Final of the Preliminary International Conference at Berlin on Wireless Telegraphy.

68. Meteorology.—Copy of Report of the Meteorological Council to the Royal Society for the year ending 31st March, 1903.

69. Preferential and Retaliatory Duties.—Copy of Return of Preferential and Retaliatory Duties imposed, raised, reduced, or repealed in the years 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1853, and 1860, stating (1) the rate of duty levied, and (2) the revenue derived from, and the quantities imported, of the articles concerned, in the three years preceding and in the three years following such change.

70. Chapter House, Westminster.—Copy of Memoranda by Professor Church, F.R.S., furnished to the First Commissioner of His Majesty's Works, etc., concerning the treatment of Decayed Stone-Work in the Chapter House, Westminster Abbey.

71. Peterhead Harbour.—Copy of Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works.

72. Colonial Reports (Annual).—Copies of Reports Nos. 394 (Turks and Caicos Islands, Annual Report for 1902), 395 (Seychelles, Annual Report for 1902), 396 (Ceylon, Annual Report for 1902), 397 (Gold Coast, Annual Report for 1902), 398 (Barbados, Report for 1902–3), 399 (Fiji, Annual Report for 1902), 400 (Lagos, Annual Report for 1902), 401 (British Solomon Islands, Report for 1902–3), 402 (Cocos-Keeling Islands, Annual Report for 1903), 403 (St. Vincent, Report for 1902–3), 404 (Grenada, Annual Report for 1902), 405 (Southern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1902), 406 (Straits Settlements, Annual Report for 1902), 407 (Trinidad and Tobago, Report for 1902–3), 408 (Basutoland, Report for 1902–3), 409 (Northern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1902), 410 (Malta, Report for 1902–3), 411 (St. Lucia, Annual Report for 1902), 412 (Mauritius, Annual Report for 1902), 413 (British Guiana, Report for 1902–3).

73. Colonial Reports (Miscellaneous).—Copies of Reports Nos. 22 (Seychelles, Report on Para Rubber), 23 (Dominica, Roads and Land Settlement. Report on the Expenditure of the Parliamentary Grant-in-Aid), 24 (Grenada, Report on Land Settlement in Carriacou), 25 (Hong-Kong, Bubonic Plague. Memorandum on the Treatment of Patients in their own Homes and in Local Hospitals).

74. Canada.—Copy of Canadian Sessional Paper containing Correspondence in connection with the German Tariff.

75. West Indies.—Copy of Further Correspondence relating to the Volcanic Eruptions in St. Vincent and Martinique in 1902 and 1903.

76. Straits Settlements.—Copy of Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1902.

77. Cyprus.—Copy of Despatch from the High Commissioner covering a Report on the Agricultural Fund for the year ended 31st March, 1903.

78. Marriage and Divorce Law (Colonies).—Copy of Papers relating to the Laws of Marriage and Divorce in self-governing British Colonies.

79. Transvaal. Reports of the Transvaal Labour Commission.

80. Army (Recruiting).—Copy of Annual Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting for the first nine months of the year 1903.

81. Army (Volunteer Corps).—Copy of Annual Return of the Volunteer Corps of Great Britain for the year 1902.

82. Military Prisons.—Copy of Report on the Discipline and Management of Military Prisons in 1902.

83. Patriotic Fund.—Copy of Forty-second Report of the Royal Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund.

84. Rifle Ranges.—Copy of Return of Rifle Ranges available for Regular Troops and Militia, and of Rifle and Carbine Ranges available for the Imperial Yeomanry and Volunteer Forces [Address 16th July, 1903; Mr. Courtenay Warner].

85. Judicial Statistics (Scotland).—Copy of Report on the Judicial Statistics of Scotland for the year 1902.

86. Census of Scotland, 1901.—Copy of Eleventh Decennial Census of the Population of Scotland, taken 31st March, 1901, with Report (Vol. III.).

87. Board of Manufacturers (Scotland).—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed to inquire into the Administration of the Board of Manufacturers (Scotland).

88. Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903.—Copy of Tables showing the Populations of Counties, Local Government Districts and Burghs in Scotland with reference to the Provisions of the Licensing (Scotland) Act.

89. Naval Manœuvres.—Copy of Report of the Naval Manœuvres of 1903.

Feb. 2.]

Page

90. Census of England and Wales, 1901.—Copy of Index to the Population Tables for England and Wales in the county volumes of the Census Report 1901.

91. Highways.—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the President of the Local Government Board to inquire into the subject of Highways Authorities and Administration in England and Wales, with Minutes of Evidence.

92. Treaty Series (No. 12, 1903).—Copy of Convention between the United Kingdom and France respecting Commercial relations between France and Jamaica. Signed at London, 8th August, 1902. Ratifications exchanged at London, 12th August, 1903.

93. Treaty Series (No. 13, 1903).—Copy of Accession of Mexico to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, and additional Act of 1900. 7th September, 1903.

94. Treaty Series (No. 14, 1903).—Copy of Accession of Germany to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, etc. 1st May, 1903.

95. Treaty Series (No. 15, 1903).—Copy of Parcel Post Convention, with detailed regulations, between the United Kingdom and Chile. Signed at Santiago, 21st October, 1902.

96. Treaty Series (No. 16, 1903).—Copy of Protocol for submitting to Arbitration certain questions as to the interpretation of treaties with Japan with regard to leases held in perpetuity. Signed at Tokio, 28th August, 1902.

97. Treaty Series (No. 17, 1903).—Copy of Treaty between the United Kingdom and China respecting Commercial relations, etc. Signed at Shangai, 5th September, 1902. Ratifications exchanged at Peking, 28th July, 1903.

98. Treaty Series (No. 18, 1903).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and France providing for the settlement of Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments Signed at London, 14th October, 1903.

99. Treaty Series (No. 1, 1904).–Copy of Convention for the establishment of a Parcel Post Service between the United States and Hong-Kong. Signed at Washington, 21st November, 1903.

100. Turkey (No. 4, 1903).—Copy of further correspondence respecting the affairs of South-Eastern Europe.

101. Turkey (No. 1, 1904).—Copy of further correspondence respecting the Affairs of South-Eastern Europe, March to September, 1903.

102. China (No. 3, 1903).—Copy of Report by Acting Consul Litton on a jounrey in North-West Yunnan.

103. China (No. 1, 1904).—Copy of Report by Mr. C. W. Campbell, His Majesty's Consul at Wuchow, on a jounrey in Mongolia (with a Map).

104. Africa (No. 11, 1903).—Copy of Reports on the Geology of the East Africa Protectorate, by the late E. E. Walker (Government Geologist).

105. Africa (No. 12, 1903).—Copy of Report by the Mombasa-Victoria (Uganda) Railway Committee on the Progress of the Works and Revenue Working, 1902–3 (with two Maps).

106. Africa (No. 13, 1903).—Copy of Report on the Trade and General Conditions of the British Central Africa Protectorate for the year 1902–3 by Major F. B. Pearce, Acting Commissioner.

Feb. 2.] Page

107. Africa (No. 14, 1903).—Copy of Despatch to certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad in regard to alleged cases of ill-treatment of Natives, and to the existence of Trade Monopolies in the Independent State of the Congo.

108. Africa (No. 15, 1903).—Copy of General Report on the Uganda Protectorate for the year, ending 31st March, 1903.

109. Forestry Laws (Commercial No. 8, 1903).—Copy of Reports from certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad respecting Forestry Laws.

110. Most-Favoured-Nation Clauses (Commercial No. 9, 1903).—Copy of Return of Most-Favoured Nation Clauses in existing Treaties of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Foreign Powers, stating the period when terminable, and showing whether they apply to the British Colonies, in force on the 1st July, 1903.

111. Houses of Legislature (Official Reports of Proceedings) (Miscellaneous No. 5, 1903).—Copy of Correspondence showing the systems in force in certain foreign countries for publishing Official Reports of Proceedings in the Houses of Legislature.

112. Drama (State or Municipal Support) (Miscellaneous, No. 6, 1903). —Copy of Return as to Financial Support given from State or Municipal Funds to Dramatic, Operatic, or Musical Performances in Foreign Countries.

113. Trade Reports (Annual Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3066 to 3113.

114. Trade Reports (Miscellaneous Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Miscellaneous Series, Nos. 596 to 601.

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie upon the Table 81

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Royal Irish Constabulary Pensions.—Copy presented, of Return showing the names of all Constabulary Officers now in receipt of Pensions, of all Head Constables, Sergeants, and Constables, and of all Widows and Children to whom Pensions have been granted since the Constabulary Estimate for 1903–4 was prepared, with the amount and date of Pension in each case [by Command]; to lie upon the Table. 94

Imperial Ottoman Guaranteed Loan of 1855.—Copy presented, of Account for the year 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 94

Treasury Bills.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 24th January, 1904, amending the Regulation laid down in the Treasury Minute of the 31st May, 1889, relating to Tenders for Treasury Bills [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 1.] 94

St. Louis Exhibition Commission, 1904.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 29th August, 1903, directing that the Accounts of the Royal Commission for the St. Louis Exhibition, 1904, shall be examined and audited by the Comptroller and Auditor-General [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 94

Superannuation Act, 1859.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 20th August, 1903, awarding a Special Pension to Sir Kenelm Edward Digby, K.C.B., late Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

Feb. 2.

Page

SUPERANNUATIONS.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st November, 1903, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Deputy-Governor of a Convict Prison in Ireland professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired in the Public Service are required [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

SUPERANNUATIONS.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 10th November, 1903, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Secretary to the Civil Service Commissioners professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired in the Public Service are required [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 30th September, 1903, declaring that Thomas Ashbrook Forster, Postmaster, Newtown Post Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd October, 1903, declaring that Alfred Wellham, machine hand, Royal Small Arms Factory, Birmingham, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd October, 1903, declaring that Charles Chamberlain, principal foreman, Royal Carriage Department, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 23rd December, 1903, declaring that William Edward Bird, engine driver, Royal Gun Factory, War Department, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

BANK OF ENGLAND.—Copy presented, of Return of the amount of Notes issued more than forty years which have not been presented for payment, and which have been written off on the 28th October, 1903, from the total amount of Notes issued from the Issue Department of the Bank of England [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.—Account presented, showing the gross amount received and expended on account of the Telegraph Service during the year ended 31st March, 1903, &c., [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 2.] 96

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (PARTICULARS OF PIECE WORK WAGES) (WEARING APPAREL).—Copy presented, of Order, dated 17th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, applying with modifications the provisions of Section 116 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, to the manufacture of Wearing Apparel, and revoking the Order dated 22nd April, 1897 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

Feb. 2.] Page

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—CREAMERIES).—Copy presented, of Order, dated 23rd October, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 42 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting certain special exceptions to Creameries, and revoking the Order (Ireland) dated 9th June, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—OVERTIME).—Copy presented, of Order, dated 29th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 49 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, with regard to the overtime employment of women on not more than thirty days in the year; and revoking all existing Orders [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (MANUFACTURE OF EARTHENWARE AND CHINA).—Copy presented, of Amended Special Rules, dated 30th December, 1901, and 28th November, 1903, for the Manufacture of Earthenware and China, as established by the Awards of the Umpire, Lord James of Hereford [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 97

FACTORY AND WORKSHOPS ACTS (DANGEROUS AND UNHEALTHY INDUSTRIES).—Copy presented, of Regulations, dated 21st November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, for the Manufacture of Electric Accumulators [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (HEALTH—BAKEHOUSES).—Copy presented, of Order made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, dated 30th December, 1903, in pursuance of Section 3, Sub-section (2), of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, modifying the proportion of cubic feet of space to be provided in certain Bakehouses [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—LIMEWASHING).—Copy presented, of Order, dated 2nd November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 1 (4) of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting special exceptions from the provisions respecting limewashing, &c., to certain factories and parts of factories; and revoking the Orders dated 16th November, 1895, 8th February, 1896, and 26th March, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

EXPLOSIONS (BLENHEIM ENGINEERING COMPANY'S FACTORY AT TUNNEL LANE, GREENWICH MARSHES).—Copy presented, of Report by Major A. Cooper-Key, His Majesty's Inspector of Explosives, to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Home Department on the circumstances attending an explosion of fulminate composition at the factory of the Blenheim Engineering Company, Limited, at Tunnel Lane, Greenwich Marshes, on the 18th December, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 98

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—

INCORPORATION OF ASTON MANOR.—Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Aston Manor, dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

INCORPORATION OF BROMLEY.—Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Bromley, dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

Feb. 2.] Page

INCORPORATION OF GILLINGHAM.—Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Gillingham, dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

INCORPORATION OF HORNSEY.—Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Hornsey, dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGUATIONS).—Copy presented, of Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the certified Inebriate Reformatory at Ackworth, Yorkshire [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

INEBRIATES ACTS, 1879 TO 1899 (REGULATIONS FOR STATE INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES).—Copy presented, of New Regulations made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department prescribing the diet of ill-conducted or idle inmates of State Inebriate Reformatories, and revoking Regulations 64 (b) and 66 (b), and so much of Appendix A as relates to the diet of ill-conducted or idle inmates, of the Regulation dated 21st June, 1901 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 99

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of Licence granted to Ellis Smith, under the Provisions of the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 99

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Patrick Hardigan under the Provisions of the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 99

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Mary Ann Phillips, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of the Holy Rood at Worthing [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 99

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of Licence granted to Timothy W. Nolan, a convict, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.. 99

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURAL AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).—Return presented, relative thereto [Ordered 13th August, 1903; Mr. M'Govern]; to lie upon the Table. 99

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.—Copy presented, of Thirty-three Minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland sanctioning Forms of Instruction for certain County Boroughs, Counties, and Urban Districts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

PHARMACY ACTS (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Order in Council, dated 9th October, 1903, approving of a Regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

Feb. 2.] Page

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS, IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Return of descriptions of qualifications of Deputy Lieutenants lodged during 1903, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of an Order in Council, dated 9th October, 1903, and three Orders, dated 4th November, 1903, for holding Winter Assizes in Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Time-Table of Examinations for 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Additional Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to Experimental Science and Drawing [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of amended Rules made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the Examination in Music [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATON (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Additional Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board or Ireland as to Experimental and Practical Science [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.. 100

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT (IRELAND), 1877.—Copy presented, of Order in Council dated 1st December, 1903, giving effect to a Rule of Court [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 101

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT (IRELAND), 1877.—Copies presented, of two Orders in Council, dated 21st January, 1904, giving effect to rules of Court under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act (Ireland), 1877 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 101

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.—Account presented, of the Sums received and paid in respect of the Wages and Effects of Deceased Seamen in the year ended 31st March 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table .. 101

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.—Account presented, of the General Lighthouse Fund showing the Income and Expenditure for the year ended 31st March, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 3.] 101

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).—Accounts presented, of all Deposits received and repaid during the year ended 20th November, 1902, and Statement as to Money Orders issued and paid from 1855 to 31st March 1903, and of Receipts and Payments in connection with the Transmission of Seamen's Wages from 1878 to 31st March, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 4.] 101

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.—Copy presented, of Statement of the Recepts and Payments for the year ended 31st March, 1903, together with an Account of the Receipt and Issue of Stores [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 5] 101

Feb. 2.]

Page

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAVIE TO MALAIG).—Copy presented, of Second Annual Report by the Board of Trade as to the condition and working of the Banavie and Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any Company in working the Railway, for the year ended 1902–3 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 6.] 101

ARMY (PAY, NON-EFFECTIVE PAY AND ALLOWANCES).—Copy presented, of List of Exceptions to the Army Regulations as to Pay and Allowances sanctioned during the year 1902–3 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 102

SUGAR.—Return presented, relative thereto [Address 30th July, 1903; Colonel Denny]; to lie upon the Table 102

EAST INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN INDIA).—Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in India chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending on the 30th September, 1903, &c. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 7.] 102

EAST INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN ENGLAND).—Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in England, chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending on the 30th September, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 8.] 102

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (CAMBRIDGE).—Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, on 16th March, 1903, in substitution for the existing Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 9.] 102

UNIVERSTIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (CAMBRIDGE)—Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Magdalene College, Cambridge, on 22nd June, 1903, in substitution for Statute XXV. of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 10.] 102

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).—Copy presented, of Statute made by the Governing Body of New College, Oxford, on the 17th June, 1903, amending certain clauses of Statute III. of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 11.] 103

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT. 1877 (OXFORD).—Copy presented, of Statute made by the Governing Body of St. John's College, Oxford, on 15th May, 1903, amending Statute XV., 1, of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 12.] .. 103

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).—Copy presented, of Statute made by the Governing Body of Oriel College, Oxford, on 24th April, 1903, amending Statute IV., 7, of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 13.] 103

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.—Copies presented, of Two Orders in Council of the 29th January, 1904, providing for the re-measurement for tonnage of French and Spanish vessels in British ports [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 103

Feb. 2.] Page

Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—Copy of Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, applying the provisions of Sections 2 and 3 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, in the case of deserters from Japanese vessels [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 103

Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—Copies presented, of Orders in Council of the 16th November, 1903, confirming by-laws made by the Pilotage Authority for the Ports of Gloucester and Burntisland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 103

International Copyright Acts, 1844 to 1886.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 9th October, 1903, giving effect to the accession of Denmark to the International Copyright Convention of 9th September, 1886, and Additional Act of Paris, 1897 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 104

Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890.—Order in Council under the Act (The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903) [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 104

Government of India Act, 1858.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 8th December, 1903, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State for India in Council [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 104

Greenwich Hospital Acts.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 9th October, 1903, sanctioning certain pensions now granted from the Funds of Greenwich Hospital being supplemented from Naval funds [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 104

Weights and Measures Act, 1878.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 19th October, 1903, approving a new denomination of Standard Weight of Fifty Pounds, or "Half-Cental" [by Act]; to lie upon the Table .. 104

Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889 (Ordinance).—Copy presented, of University Court Ordinance No. IX. (Edinburgh, No. 3) Regulations for the Degree of Bachelor of Law (B.L.) [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 14.] 104

University of Edinburgh.—Copy presented, of Report on the state of the finances of University, made by the University Court, for the year 31st August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 15.] 104

University of Edinburgh.—Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh for the year 1902–3 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 16.] 104

University of Glasgow.—Copy presented of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow for 1902–3 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 17.] 105

Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903.—Copy presented, of Order made by the Secretary for Scotland under Section 109 of the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

Feb. 2.] Page

PRISONS (SCOTLAND).—Copy presented, of Rule made by the Secretary for Scotland appointing the Police Cells at Kirkcaldy to be a legal Prison for the detention of untried prisoners for a period not exceeding fourteen days before or during trial, and of convicted prisoners for a period not exceeding seven days from the date of conviction [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 18.] 105

TRADE REPORT (ANNUAL SERIES).—Copies presented, of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3116 and 3117 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 105

UNITED STATES (No. 2, 1904).—Copy presented, of Map to accompany Correspondence respecting the Alaska Boundary (United States, No. 1, 1904) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 105

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

1. Lunacy.—Copy of Report to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made, the number of patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the Visitors of Lunatics between 1st April, 1903, and 30th September, 1903 [by Act].
2. Lunacy.—Copy of Return of all sums received by the Visitors of Lunatics for travelling expenses, or upon any other account, from 1st January to 31st December, 1903 [by Act].
3. Supreme Court (Rules).—Copy of Rules of the Supreme Court, dated 15th January 1904 [by Act].
4. County Court (Rules).—Copy of County Court Rules, 1903 [by Act].
5. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.—Copy of Accounts of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board for the year ending 1st July, 1903 [by Act].
6. Public Records (Disposal of Documents).—Copy of Additional Rule under the Public Record Office Acts, 1877 and 1898, for the disposal of certain Documents [by Act].
7. Public Records (Colonial Office).—Copy of the Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in the Office of His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [by Act]. .. 105

KING'S SPEECH.—Mr. SPEAKER reported His Majesty's Speech, and read it to the House.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Mr. Laurence Hardy (Kent, Ashford) 106
Mr Plummer (Newcastle-on-Tyne) 113

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament"—(Mr. Hardy).

Sir H Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) 118
The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire E.) 138

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the Debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

King's Speech (Motion for an Address).—Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

> "Most Gracious Sovereign,—
>
> "We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.) 149
Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central) 155
Mr. Paulton (Durham, Bishop Auckland) 158
The Attorney General (Sir Robert Finlay, Inverness Burghs) 158
Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe) 168
Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis) 173
Lord Hugh Cecil (Greenwich) 179

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. John Redmond) —put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Private Bills.—The Chairman of Ways and Means reported, That, in accordance with Standing Order 79, he had conferred with the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, for the purpose of determining in which House of Parliament the respective Private Bills should be first considered, and they had determined that the Bills contained in the following list should originate in the House of Lords, viz. :—

Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway.
Appleby Corporation Gas.
Barnard Castle Gas.
Barrow-in-Furness Corporation.
Barry Railway (Extension of Time, &c.).
Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).
Belfast and North East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas.
Belfast Corporation (Tramways).
Bexhill Corporation.
Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways).
Bridlington Corporation.
Bristol Corporaion.

Feb. 2.] Page

Bristol Tramways (Extensions).
Buxton Urban District Council.
Cambrian Railways.
Cardiff Railway.
Chesterfield Corporation Tramways and Improvements.
Chesterfield Gas and Water Board.
Coulsdon Tramways.
Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power.
Derwent Valley Water Board.
Ebbw Vale Urban District Water.
Edwardes Square Protection.
Elysée Palace Hotel Company.
Filey Improvement.
Gosport Water.
Great Western Railway.
Great Yarmouth Corporation.
Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas.
Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad.
Holywood Tramways.
Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment).
Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust (Substituted Bill).
Ilford Urban District Council.
Ipswich Dock Commission.
Isle of Thanet Light Railways.
King's College Hospital.
Lancashire Electric Power.
Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway.
Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power.
Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company.
Liverpool and Wigan Churches.
Llanelly Harbour.
London, Chatham, and Dover Railway.
Maidenhead Bridge.
Manchester Corporation (General Powers).
Manchester Corporation Tramways.
Manchester Ship Canal.
Manchester Ship Canal (Finance).
Matlock and District Gas.
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.
Metropolitan District Railway.
Metropolitan Railway.
Mid Cheshire Railways.
Milwr and District Mines Drainage.
Minehead Urban District Council Water.
Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway.
Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.
Newcastle and Gateshead Water.
New River Company.
New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company.
North Wales Electric Power.
Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council.
Oakengates, Dawley, and District Joint Water Board.
Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway.
Preston and Blackburn Tramways.
Preston and Lytham Tramways and Tramroad.

Feb. 2.] Page

Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways.
Preston Corporation Water.
Saint Bartholomew's Hospital.
Saint Mary Woolnoth.
Shipley Urban District Council.
Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time).
South Staffordshire Mines Drainage.
Stretford Urban District Council.
Ticehurst and District Water and Gas.
Trafford Park Dock and Railway.
Tynemouth Corporation.
Tynemouth Gas.
Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.
Ulster Electric Power.
Victoria University of Manchester.
Victoria University of Yorkshire.
Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance).
Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance).
West Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment).
West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time).
Weston-Super-Mare Grand Pier.
West Riding Tramways.
Withnell Gas.
York Town and Blackwater Gas 182

Adjourned at a quarter after Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: WEDNESDAY, 3RD FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS [LORDS].—Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following cases, viz. :—

Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway.
Appleby Corporation Gas.
Barnard Castle Gas.
Barrow-in-Furness Corporation.
Barry Railway (Extension of Time, &c.).
Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).
Belfast and North East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas.
Belfast Corporation (Tramways).
Bexhill Corporation.
Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways).
Bridlington Corporation.
Bristol Corporation.
Buxton Urban District Council.
Cambrian Railways.
Cardiff Railway.
Chesterfield Corporation Tramways and Improvements.
Chesterfield Gas and Water Board.

Feb. 3.] Page

Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power.
Derwent Valley Water Board.
East Argentine Railway.
Ebbw Vale Urban District Water.
Edwardes Square Protection.
Elysée Palace Hotel Company.
Filey Improvement.
Gosport Water.
Great Western Railway.
Great Yarmouth Corporation.
Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas.
Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad
Holywood Tramways.
Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment)
Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust (Substituted Bill)
Ipswich Dock Commission.
Isle of Thanet Light Railways
King's College Hospital
Lancashire Electric Power.
Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway.
Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power.
Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company.
Liverpool and Wigan Churches.
Llanelly Harbour.
London Chatham and Dover Railway.
Maidenhead Bridge.
Manchester Corporation (General Powers).
Manchester Corporation Tramways.
Manchester Ship Canal.
Manchester Ship Canal (Finance).
Matlock and District Gas.
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board
Metropolitan District Railway.
Metropolitan Railway.
Milwr and District Mines Drainage.
Minehead Urban District Council Water.
Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway.
Newcastle and Gateshead Water.
Newcastle upon-Tyne Corporation.
New River Company.
New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company.
Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council.
Oakengates, Dawley and District Joint Water Board.
Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway.
Preston and Blackburn Tramways.
Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways.
Preston Corporation Water.
Saint Bartholomew's Hospital.
Saint Mary Woolnoth.
Shipley Urban District Council.
Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time).
South Staffordshire Mines Drainage.
Stretford Urban District Council.
Ticehurst and District Water and Gas.
Tynemouth Corporation.

Feb. 3]. Page

Tynemouth Gas.
Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.
Ulster Electric Power.
Victoria University of Manchester.
Victoria University of Yorkshire.
Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance).
Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance).
West Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment).
West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time).
Weston super-Mare Grand Pier.
West Riding Tramways.
Withnell Gas.
York Town and Blackwater Gas.

And they have certified that the Standing Orders have not been complied with in the following cases, viz :—

Coulsdon Tramways.
North Wales Electric Power.
Trafford Park Dock and Railway 185

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, originating in the Lords, the Standing Orders have not yet been complied with, viz. :—

Coulsdon Tramways [Lords].
North Wales Electric Power [Lords].
Trafford Park Dock and Railway [Lords].

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 187

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—

Rotherham Corporation.
London County Council (Tramways and Improvements).

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 187

PETITIONS.

BEERHOUSES.—Petition from Newport, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 188

CHARYULU, BANDARU APPALA.—Petition of Bandaru Appala.—Petition of Bandaru Appala ,Charyulu, for redress of grievances ; to lie upon the Table 188

GOUNDEN, MUTHIA.—Petition of Muthia Gounden, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 188

Feb. 3.]

Page

LICENCES (RENEWAL).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Cambuslang; Beith; Walbottle; Westerhope; Haltwistle; Liverpool; Rastrick; Highworth; Cheltenham; Manchester; Forest Hill; Greenhead; Greenock; Tideswell; Matlock; Goose Green; Horton; Port Glasgow; Samlet; Prudhoe; Allenheads; Boston; Dawley; Bedlington; Pemberton; Henshaw; Pelton Fell; Birtley; Strensall; Paisley (two); Dunston; Haxby; North Lonsdale; Swindon; Alston Cross; Nottingham; Kirkby; Alloa; Melton Mowbray; Chichester; Liverpool; Glasgow; Frosterley; Wolsingham; Garston; Northampton; West Auckland; Ouston; Chopwell; Clara Vale Tent; Washington; Parkstone; Verwood; High Bickington; West Woodburn; Heatherlands; Broomhill; Kennington; Alston; Beeston; South Lambeth; Oldham; Hoxton; Aston Park; Little Hulton; Seaton Burn; Dudley; Scotswood; Lower Broughton; Salford; Blyth (two); Collingbourne; Andrew Bryson and another; Northumberland; Barrington; Backworth; Fittleton; Southsea (two); Portsmouth (two); Buckland; Ammanford; Boston; Amble; Market Lavington; Wishaw; Hackworth; New Hirst; New Hartley; Altarnum; Davidstow; Trevadlock; Gunnislake; Egloskerry; Callington; Lezant; Leghill; Dennington; Gravesend; Scarborough (two); Luton; Apsley Guise; Warrington; Eston; Guisbro'; William Woolfries and another; Hawick; Shillingstone; Walford; Aston; Loughborough; Bristol; Portesham; Sunderland; Bridport; Brixham; Gloucester; Juniper Green; Penryn; Widdrington; Bolton (eight); Middlesbrough; Chelston; Mitchell; St. Stephens; Padstow; Withill; Grampound Road; St. Austell; St. Dennis; Pendleton; Kennington; Jordanhill; Alloa; Tillicoultry; Islington; South Molton; Greetland; Elland; Sandbach; Salford Dock; Salford (two); Exmouth; Axminster; Hove Edge; Stourbridge; Brighouse; Malvern; Whiteinch; Halifax; Marnhull; Alnwick; Warrington; Chardstock; Leominster; St. Blazey; Sauchie; Halton-le-Gate; Dublin; Llanidan; Partick; Dreghorn; Stevenston; Devonport; London Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance (two); Newcastle (four); Coleorton; Wansbeck; West Hartlepool (two); Cwmbran; Bournemouth (two); Winton; Christchurch; Muirkirk; Troon (two); Dalmellington; Glenbuck; Ayr; Auchinleck; Lugar (two); Girvan; Edinburgh (three); Risca; H. W. Garbutt and another; Shiney Row; Birkenhead (three); Alva; Rishton; Kelty; Markinch; Buckhaven; South Wingfield; Peak Dale; Bugsworth; Haggs; Grangemouth; Larbert; Laurieston; Lennoxtown; Carron; Blackbraes; Bonnybridge; Kilsyth; Milngarvie; Ivybridge; Clapham Park; Putney; Bradford (three); Salford; Hetton-le-Hole; New Lambton; Midhurst; Dundee (two); Lochee; Stockport; Cockermouth; Dittisham; Barnard Castle; Stanhope; New Hatcham; Southgate; Leytonstone; Riddings; Jesmond; Widnes; Inverness; Bolton-on-Dearne; Otley; Dukinfield; Old Hetton; Lancaster; Whitley Bay; Hucknall Torkard; Penistone; Birdwell; Crane Moor; Maryport; Stalybridge; Trowbridge; Bradford-on-Avon; Westbury; Salford; Ryhope; Chard; Cambois; Townhill; Cardenden; Cefncanol; Meifod; Llanrhaiadr; Hernant; Llanfair Caereinion (two); Llandycwm; Carmel Siloh; Rehoboth; Maengwynedd; Llanfyllin; Bridlington; Paul; Charlesworth; Glossop; Fairfield; Leicester; Great Meols; West Kirby, Wallasey; Seacombe; Ellesmere Port; Middlewich (two); Northwich (three); Barnton; Whitegate; Frodsham; Cullompton; Christow; Bristol; Oldham; Salisbury; Crewe; Perranwell; Goonhavern; Truro; South Petherton; Bampton and Huntsham; Dumfries (two); Annan; Sanquhar; Topsham; Whalley Range; Fence Houses; Thornaby-on-Tees; Withington; Dearham; Gotham; Mid-Cheshire; Stirling; and Durham; to lie upon the Table .. 188

NADAN, SIVASULRAMANIA.—Petition of Sivasulramania Nadan, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 190

Feb. 3.] Page

RAMCHANDA, GANESH.—Petition from Ganesh Ramchanda, for inquiry into his case; to lie upon the Table 190

RATING OF GROUND RENTS AND VALUES.—Petition from St. Pancras, for legislation; to lie upon the Table 190

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY.—Petitions for prohibition; from Bawtry, Taunton, Glastonbury, and Yeovil; to lie upon the Table 190

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

SOUTH AFRICA.—Copy presented, of Further Correspondence relating to the Affairs of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 190

BARBADOS.—Copy presented, of Prison Rule relating to the Vaccination of Prisoners [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 190

COUNTY COURTS, ENGLAND (FEES).—Copy presented, of Treasury Order, dated 30th December, 1903, regulating Court Fees in County Courts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 190

Paper laid upon the Table by the Clerk of the House :—

INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES (COUNTY OF MONTGOMERY).—Further Return, relative thereto [ordered 14th February, 1900; Mr. Grant Lawson]; to be printed. [No. 19.] 190

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).—Copy ordered, " of Account of the Receipts and Payments of the Accountant-General of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland, in respect of the Funds of Suitors in the said Court, including therein Funds to the credit of Lunacy Accounts, in the year to the 30th September, 1903; together with a Statement of Liabilities and Assets, and particulars of Securities in Court, on the 30th day of September, 1903." —(Mr. Victor Cavendish.) 191

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1902–3.—Copy ordered, " of Accounts of the Civil Contingencies Fund, 1902–3, showing (1) the Receipts and Payments in connection with the Fund in the year ended the 31st day of March, 1903; (2) the distribution of the Capital of the Fund at the commencement and close of the year, together with Copy of Correspondence with the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.) 191

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).—Copy ordered, " of the Report of the Directors of the National Gallery for the year 1903, with Appendices."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.) 191

PARLIAMENTARY CONSTITUENCIES (ELECTORS, &c.) (UNITED KINGDOM).—Address for " Return showing, with regard to each Parliamentary Constituency in the United Kingdom, the total number and, as far as possible, the number in each class of Electors on the register now in force; and also showing the Population and Inhabited Houses in each Constituency (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 34, of Session 1903)."—(Sir Charles Dilke.) .. 191

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.—Copy ordered, "of Accounts relating to Trade and Navigation of the United Kingdom for each month during the year 1904."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.) 191

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.—Return ordered, "of the number of Aliens that arrived from the Continent at Ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1904."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.) 191

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

EXPENSES OF MILITARY OPERATIONS BEYOND THE THIBET FRONTIER.—Questions, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answer, Mr. Brodrick .. 192

DISTRESS IN IRELAND—DISTRIBUTION OF SEED POTATOES.—Question, Mr. James O'Kelly (Roscommon, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 192

COMPULSORY PURCHASE IN WEST OF IRELAND.—Question, Mr. James O'Kelly; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 193

CHINESE LABOUR IN SOUTH AFRICA.—Question, Mr. Broadhurst (Leicester); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 193

LORD CURZON AND THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF SHIRAZ.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, Earl Percy 194

NEW MEMBER SWORN.—John Johnson, esquire, for the Borough of Gateshead .. 194

BALLOT FOR BILLS AND MOTIONS.—Ordered, That no Bills, other than Government Bills, be introduced in anticipation of the ballot, and that all Members who desire to ballot, whether for Bills, or Motions for Tuesday, 9th February, and Tuesday, 16th February, and Wednesday, 10th February, and Wednesday 17th February, do hand in their names at the Table during the sitting of the House on the first or second day of the session and that a copy of such Notices be handed in, at the latest, during the sitting of the House on the third day of the Session. That the ballot for the precedence of the said Bills and Motions be taken on the third day on which the House sits, at a convenient time and place, to be appointed by Mr. Speaker, and that the presentation of Bills on the fourth sitting day be taken as soon after Twelve o'clock as Mr. Speaker may deem convenient.—(Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) .. .. : 194

CITY OF LONDON WRIT.—Order read, for resuming adjourned Debate on Question [2nd February], "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a New Writ for the electing of a member to serve in this present Parliament for the City of London, in the room of the hon. Alban George Henry Gibbs, who, since his election for the said city, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.). 195

Feb. 3.] Page

Amendment proposed—

"To leave out from the word 'That,' to the end of the Question, and add the words 'a Select Committee of seven Members be appointed to consider whether Mr. Vicary Gibbs and Mr. Alban Gibbs are disqualified from sitting or voting as Members of this House under the Statute 22 Geo. 3, c. 45, and to report their opinion thereon.' "—(Mr. Swift MacNeill.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers-Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's).. 196

Question put, and agreed to.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Ordered, That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the City of London, in the room of the hon. Alban George Henry Gibbs, who, since his election for the said city, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service.

COUNTY OF HERTFORD (MID OR ST. ALBANS DIVISION) (WRIT).—Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [2nd February], "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the County of Hertford (Mid or St, Albans Division) in the room of the hon. Vicary Gibbs, who, since his election for the said county, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

Question again proposed.

Question put, and agreed to.

Ordered, That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the County of Hertford (Mid or St. Albans Division) in the room of the hon. Vicary Gibbs, who, since his election for the said county, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service 198

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS). SECOND DAY'S DEBATE.—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Question [2nd February].

"That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign—

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.) Question again proposed.

Feb. 3.] Page

Mr. John Redmond (Waterford). 199
The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover). 220
Mr. Haldane (Haddingtonshire). 238
Mr. Blake (Longford, N.) 243
Mr. Austin Taylor (Liverpool, East Toxteth). 252
Mr. T. W. Russell (Tryone, S.) 256
Mr. Power (Waterford, E.) 261
Sir Robert Reid (Dumfries Burghs) 265
Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.) 266
Mr. Joseph Devlin (Kilkenny, N.) 268

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

King's Speech (Motion for an Address).—Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [3rd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

Most Gracious Sovereign,—

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Laurence Hardy.).

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

Mr. Joseph Devlin 270
Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.) 273
Colonel Saunderson (Armagh, N.) 278
Mr. William Redmond (Clare, E.) 284
Mr. Moon (St. Pancras, N.) 296
Sir John Kennaway (Devonshire, Honiton) 298
Mr. Hugh Law (Donegal, W.) 299

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, 4th FEBRUARY, 1904.

Sat First.—The Viscount Colville of Culross sat first in Parliament after the death of his father 301

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—

Acton Improvement.
Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway
Amersham, Beaconsfield, and District Water.
Appleby Corporation Gas.

Feb. 4.] Page

Arlesey Gas.
Baker Street and Waterloo Railway.
Barnard Castle Gas.
Barnet District Gas and Water.
Barrow-in-Furness Corporation.
Barry Railway (Extension of Time, &c.).
Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).
Belfast and North-East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas.
Belfast Corporation (Tramways).
Bexhill Corporation .
Bexhill Water and Gas.
Birkdale Improvement.
Bishop's Stortford and District Gas.
Blyth and Cowpen Gas.
Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways).
Bridlington Corporation.
Bristol Corporation.
Brixham Gas.
Brymbo Water.
Buxton Urban District Council.
Cambrian Railways.
Cardiff Railway.
Carlisle Corporation.
Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway.
Cheshire Electricity and Power Gas.
Chesterfield Corporation (Tramways and Improvements).
Chesterfield Gas and Water Board.
Chippenham Gas.
Colney Hatch Gas.
Corbridge Gas.
Corporation of London (Southwark and other Bridges).
Croydon Gas.
Crystal Palace District Gas.
Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power.
Derwent Valley Water Board.
Doncaster Corporation.
Donegal Railway.
East Argentine Railway.
East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.
Ebbw Vale Urban District Water.
Edwardes Square Protection.
Elysée Palace Hotel Company.
Felixstowe Gas.
Filey Improvement.
Gas Light and Coke and other Gas Companies Acts Amendment.
Gomersal Gas.
Gosport Water.
Great Central and Midland Joint Railways.
Great Central Railway.
Great Eastern Railway.
Great Eastern Railway (Steamboats).
Great Northern and City Railway (Extension of Time).
Great Northern Railway.
Great Western Railway.
Great Yarmouth Corporation.
Hampton-in-Arden Gas.

Feb. 4.] Page

Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas.
Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad.
Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways.
Holywood Tramways.
Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment).
Humber Commercial Railway and Dock.
Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust (Substituted Bill).
Ipswich Dock Commission.
Isle of Thanet Light Railways.
Kettering Improvement.
King's College Hospital.
Kirby-in-Ashfield Urban District Gas.
Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Steam Vessels).
Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Various Powers).
Lancashire Electric Power.
Leeds Corporation (Consolidation).
Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway.
Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power.
Leyton Urban District Council.
Lincolnshire and Yorkshire Electric Power.
Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water.
Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company.
Liverpool and Wigan Churches.
Llanelly Harbour.
London and India Docks Company.
London and North-Western Railway.
London, Camberwell, and Dulwich Tramways.
London, Chatham, and Dover Railway.
London County Council (General Powers).
London Port and Docks.
London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway.
Lytham Improvement.
Maidenhead Bridge.
Manchester Corporation (General Powers).
Manchester Corporation Tramways.
Manchester Ship Canal.
Manchester Ship Canal (Finance).
Matlock and District Gas.
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.
Metropolitan District Railway.
Metropolitan Railway.
Midland Railway.
Milwr and District Mines Drainage.
Minehead Urban District Council Water.
Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway.
Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway.
Newcastle and Gateshead Water.
Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.
New River Company.
New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company.
North and South Woolwich Electric Railway.
North Staffordshire Railway.
North-Western Electricity and Power Gas.
Norwich Water.
Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council.

Feb. 4.] Page

Oakengates, Dawley, and District Joint Water Board.
Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway (Abandonment).
Plymouth Corporation.
Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway.
Preston and Blackburn Tramways.
Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways.
Preston Corporation Water.
Radcliffe Tramways and Improvement.
Reading Corporation.
Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water.
Romford and District Tramways (Extensions).
Ryde Gas.
Saddleworth and Springhead Tramways (Abandonment).
St. Bartholomew's Hospital.
St. Marylebone Electric Lighting.
St. Mary Woolnoth.
Selby Urban District Council.
Sheffield, Laughton, and Maltby Railway.
Sheppy Gas.
Shipley Urban District Council.
Skipton Water and Improvement.
Soothill Nether Urban District Tramways.
Southend-on-Sea Gas.
Southend Water.
Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time).
South Shields Gas.
South Staffordshire Mines Drainage.
South Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway (Extension of Time).
Strabane, Raphoe, and Convoy Railway.
Stretford Urban District Council.
Surrey Commercial Dock.
Sutton Gas.
Swindon Corporation.
Thames River Steamboat Service.
Thames Steamboat Trust.
Thurles Urban District Council Water.
Ticehurst and District Water and Gas.
Tottenham Improvement.
Tynemouth Corporation.
Tynemouth Gas.
Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.
Ulster Electric Power.
Victoria University of Manchester.
Victoria University of Yorkshire.
Wallasey Tramways and Improvements.
Watford and District Tramways (Extension of Time).
Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance).
Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance).
Wellington (Somerset) Gas.
West Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment).
West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time).
Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier.
West Riding Tramways.
Whitby Gas.
Withnell Gas.
Wolverhampton Corporation.
Yorktown and Blackwater Gas.

Feb. 4.]

Page

And the Certificates that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have not been complied with :—

Coulston Tramways.
London County Council (Tramways and Improvements).
North Wales Electric Power.
Rotherham Corporation.
Trafford Park Dock and Railway.. 301

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND).—Forty-seventh Annual Report of the Registrar-General (Abstracts of 1901).. 305

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.—Account of the sums received and paid in respect of the wages and effects of deceased seamen in the year ended 31st March, 1903.

Presented [by Command], and ordered to lie on the Table 305

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.—Account of the General Lighthouse Fund, under the Acts 57 and 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 679, and 61 and 62 Vict. c. 44, showing the the income and expenditure for the year ending 31st March, 1903 .. 305

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS, AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).— Account of all deposits received and repaid by the Board of Trade on account of Seamen's Savings Banks, under the authority of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, during the year ended 20th November, 1902, and of the interest thereon ; statement showing the number and amount of seamen's money orders issued and paid at ports in the United Kingdom and at ports abroad from 1855 to 31st March, 1903 ; also statement showing the receipts and payments in connection with the transmission of seamen's wages, home and foreign, from 1878 to 31st March, 1903 305

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.—Statement of the receipts and payments made by the Board of Trade for the year ended 31st March 1903 ; together with an account of the receipt and issue of stores 306

ROYAL PARKS AND GARDENS.—Rule for Holyrood Park ; Provisional Rule for Hyde Park, St. James' and the Green Parks, Regent's Park, Greenwich Park, Hampton Court Park, Hampton Court Gardens, Richmond Park and Green, and Bushy Park 306

COUNTY COURT ENGLAND (FEES).—Treasury Order, dated 30th December, 1903, regulating Court Fees in County Courts 306

POST OFFICE.

(Money Orders). Statutory Rules and Orders (1903). No. 806.
(Telegraphs). Account showing the gross amount received, and the gross amount expended, in respect of the Telegraph Service from the date of the transfer of the telegraphs to the State to the 31st day of March, 1902 (in continuation of No. 31, of Session 1903). 306

BUILDING SOCIETIES.—Ninth annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts ; with an abstract of the annual accounts and statements of the societies for the year 1903 306

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.

Order, dated 23rd September, 1903, entitled the Foreign Animals (Amendment) Order of 1903 (No. 3).

Order, dated 2nd February, 1904, defining a foreign animals quarantine station at the port of Southampton 306

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Annual Accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government Securities purchased.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table .. 307

THE FISCAL QUESTION.

The Earl of Wemyss 307
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 307

On Question, Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at twenty-five minutes before Five o'clock, to Monday next, a quarter before Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, 4th FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Acton Improvement Bill.—" To confer upon the Urban District Council of Acton further powers with regard to the supply of electricity and the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 308

Amersham, Beaconsfield, and District Water Bill.—To extend the limits of supply of the Amersham, Beaconsfield, and District Waterworks Company, Limited, and to confer further powers upon that Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 308

Arlesey Gas Bill.—" For extending the limits of supply of the Arlesey Gas Company; for the raising of additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 308

Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Bill.—" To authorise the Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Company to acquire additional lands; to confer further powers; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 308

Barnet District Gas and Water Bill.—" To enable the Barnet District Gas and Water Company to acquire additional lands, construct additional works, and raise further capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 308

Feb. 4.]

Page

Bexhill Water and Gas Bill.—"To extend the limits of supply of the Bexhill Water and Gas Company; to authorise the Company to raise additional capital, and to construct additional waterworks; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 308

Birkdale Improvement Bill.—"To authorise the Urban District Council of Birkdale to acquire land to construct an outfall sewer, and to make further provision in regard to the health, local government, improvement, and finance of the urban district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 309

Bishop's Stortford and District Gas Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Bishop's Stortford and District Gas Company," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 309

Blyth and Cowpen Gas Bill.—"To confer further powers on the Blyth and Cowpen Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 309

Brixham Gas Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Brixham Gas Company," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 309

Brymbo Water Bill.—"To authorise the Brymbo Water Comany to extend their limits of supply, to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 309

Carlisle Corporation Bill.—"To extend the boundaries of the city of Carlisle, to consolidate the parishes in the city into one parish, to make further and better provision for the health, good government, and improvement of the city; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 309

Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Bill.—"For conferring further powers upon the Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.. 309

Cheshire Electricity and Power-Gas Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Cheshire Electricity and Power-Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 309

Chippenham Gas Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Chippenham Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 310

Colney Hatch Gas Bill.—"To authorise the Colney Hatch Gas Company to raise additional capital, to acquire lands, to enlarge their works, to alter the name of company, to amend their existing Acts; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 310

Corbridge Gas Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Corbridge Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 310

Feb. 4.] Page

Corporation of London (Southwark and other Bridges) Bill.—" To empower the Corporation of London to rebuild Southwark Bridge, and to confer other powers upon them with respect to that and other bridges; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 310

Croydon Gas Bill.—" To change the name of Croydon Commercial Gas and Coke Company to 'the Croydon Gas Company,' and to confer further powers on the Company with respect to the raising of additional capital, the construction and maintenance of additional gas works; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 310

Crystal Palace District Gas Bill.—" To alter the provisions of the Acts of the Crystal Palace District Gas Company with respect to the illuminating power of gas supplied by them and the testing of gas; to change the name of the Company to 'the South Suburban Gas Company;' and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 310

Doncaster Corporation Bill.—" To confer further powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Doncaster with reference to their water, gas, and electricity undertakings; to make further and better provision with regard to the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the said borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 310

Donegal Railway Bill.—" To authorise the Donegal Railway company to raise further moneys by the creation and issue of guaranteed preference stock for the purpose, amongst others, of completing the Ballyshannon Extension, and to empower the Company to own and work motor-cars and other vehicles; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 311

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill—" For incorporating and conferring powers on the East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Company," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 311

Felixstowe Gas Bill.—" To incorporate and confer powers upon the Felixstowe Gas Light Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 311

Gas Light and Coke and other Gas Companies Acts Amendment Bill.—" To amend the Gas Light and Coke and other Gas Companies Acts Amendment Act 1880; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 311

Gomersal Gas Bill.—" For consolidating the capital of the Gomersal Gas Company for enabling that Company to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 311

Great Central and Midland Joint Railways Bill.—" To constitute as a separate undertaking certain Railways of the Sheffield and Midland Railway Companies' Joint Committee and certain other Railways authorised to be constructed by the Great Central and Midland Railway Companies jointly; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 311

Feb. 4.] Page

Great Central Railway Bill.—" To authorise the construction of new works and the acquisition of lands by the Great Central Railway Company in connection with their undertakings; the construction of new Railways by the Cheshire Lines Committee and the Seaforth and Sefton Junction Railway Company respectively, and the acquisition of lands by the Great Western and Great Central Railways' Joint Committee and the Manchester South Junction and Altrincham Railway Company respectively in connection with their respective undertakings; the acquisition by the Great Central Railway Company of the undertakings of the Wrexham, Mold and Connah's Quay and Buckley Railway Companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 311

Great Eastern Railway Bill.—" For conferring further powers on the Great Eastern Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 312

Great Eastern Railway (Steamboats) Bill.—" To amend the powers of the Great Eastern Railway Company with respect to the use of steam vessels," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 312

Great Northern and City Railway (Extension of Time) Bill.—" To extend the time for the completion of railways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 312

Great Northern Railway Bill.—" To confer powers on the Great Northern Railway Company with reference to the construction of works and the purchase of lands; to extend the time limited for the compulsory purchase of certain lands by the Company; to empower the Company and the Great Central Railway Company to purchase lands, and to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of certain lands by those Companies; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 312

Hampton-in-Arden Gas Bill.—" To incorporate the Hampton-in-Arden and Meriden Gas Company and to enable that company to supply with gas certain parishes in the County of Warwick," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 312

Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways Bill.—" To confer powers on the Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways Company for widening and altering roads and acquiring lands in the counties of Middlesex and London; to authorise the sale of the undertaking of the company to the Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Limited, and to provide for the dissolution and winding-up of the Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 312

Humber Commercial Railway and Dock Bill.—" To empower the Humber Commercial Railway and Dock Company to construct a new dock with connecting railway and other works and entrance into the River Humber; to abandon the dock and works authorised by the Humber Commercial Railway and Dock Act, 1901; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 313

Feb. 4.] Page

Kettering Improvement Bill.—"To make further and better provision with regard to the electric light undertaking of the Council, and for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 313

Kirkby-in-Ashfield Urban District Gas Bill.—"To empower the Urban District Council of Kirkby-in-Ashfield to supply gas and to provide for the transfer to the Council of so much of the gas undertaking of the Sutton-in-Ashfield Urban District Council as is situate within the urban district of Kirkby-in-Ashfield; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 313

Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill.—"To authorise the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to provide and work steam vessels between the ports of Goole and Hull and certain Continental ports; and to subscribe to the funds of steamship companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 313

Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Various Powers) Bill.—"To authorise the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to construct new railways; to widen certain existing railways, and to construct other works; to acquire additional lands; and to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 313

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill.—"To consolidate, with Amendments, certain of the local Acts in force within the city of Leeds; to make further provision in regard to the various undertakings of the Corporation, and to make better provision for the health and local government of the city; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 314

Leyton Urban District Council Bill.—"To authorise the Urban District Council of Leyton, in the county of Essex, to construct and work tramways, and to confer further powers on the Council in regard to their tramways undertaking and their electrical undertaking; to empower the Council to execute certain street widenings, to provide for vesting in the Council certain lammas lands as open spaces and recreation grounds; to make further provision for the improvement, health, and local government of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 314

Lincolnshire and Yorkshire Electric Power Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Lincolnshire and Yorkshire Electric Power Company," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 314

Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water Bill.—"For incorporating the Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water Company and empowering them to construct works and supply water; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 314

London and India Docks Company Bill.—"To facilitate the passage of traffic to and from the docks of the London and India Docks Company; to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands required for and for the completion of certain works; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 314

Feb. 4.] Page

London and North Western Railway Bill.—"For conferring further powers upon the London and North Western Railway Company in relation to their own undertaking, and upon that Company and the Great Western Railway Company in relation to their joint undertaking; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 315

London, Camberwell, and Dulwich Tramways Bill.—"To define the widening of Rye Lane, Peckham, referred to in the Peckham and East Dulwich Tramways Act, 1885 and 1887; and to confer further powers upon the London, Camberwell, and Dulwich Tramways Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 315

London County Council (General Powers) Bill—"To empower the London County Council to acquire lands for various purposes; to make provisions with respect to sanitary and other like matters; to authorise the exchange of certain land at Tooting Bec Common; to empower the Council of the Metropolitan Borough of Woolwich to purchase lands for various purposes; to change the name of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade; to confer various powers upon the London County Council and upon the Councils of Metropolitan Boroughs; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read the second time 315

London Port and Docks Bill.—"To impose rates on goods imported into the Port of London, and to make provision for the improvement of the dock accommodation at, and the navigation of, the said Port; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 315

London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway Bill.—"To confer further powers upon the London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 315

Lytham Improvement Bill.—"To authorise the Urban District Council of Lytham to acquire Land to erect a Town Hall, to make further provision in regard to their gas undertaking, and to the health, local government, improvement, and finance of their district; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 315

Midland Railway Bill.—"To confer additional powers upon the Midland Railway Company and upon that Company and the Great Eastern Railway Company and upon the Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee, and the Norfolk and Suffolk Joint Committee for the construction of works and acquisition of lands; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 316

Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway Bill.—"To empower the Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway Company to make a deviation railway in the county of Westmeath and an extension railway in the county of Louth, and to enable that Company and the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to enter into working and other agreements; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 316

Feb. 4.] Page

North and South Woolwich Electric Railway Bill.—"For incorporating the North and South Woolwich Electric Railway Company, and for empowering them to construct a railway from North Woolwich to South Woolwich, in the counties of London and Essex; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time . . 316

North Staffordshire Railway Bill.—"To confer further powers on the North Staffordshire Railway Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 316

North-Western Electricity and Power Gas Bill.—"For conferring further powers on the North-Western Electricity and Power Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 316

Norwich Water Bill.—"To empower the City of Norwich Waterworks Company to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills . . 316

Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway (Abandonment) Bill.—"For the abandonment of the Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 317

Plymouth Corporation Bill.—"To confer further borrowing powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Plymouth," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 317

Radcliffe Tramway and Improvement Bill.—"To confer on the Urban District Council to Radcliffe further powers with regard to their tramways undertaking; to construct new tramways and street improvements; to extend the Town's Yard; and to make further provision in regard to the supply of electricity, and for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 317

Reading Corporation Bill.—"To authorise an increase in the public libraries and museums' rates in the borough of Reading; to provide for the establishment of a superannuation fund; to make further provision in regard to the health, local government, and improvement of the said borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 317

Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Bill.—"For extending the limits of supply of the Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 317

Ryde Gas Bill.—"For conferring further powers upon the Ryde Gaslight Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 317

Saddleworth and Springhead Tramways (Abandonment) Bill.—"For the abandonment of the Saddleworth and Springhead Tramways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 317

St. Marylebone Electric Lighting Bill.—For conferring further powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors of the metropolitan borough of St. Marylebone with regard to the supply of electricity; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 318

Selby Urban District Council Bill.—"To enable the Urban District Council of Selby to construct new waterworks and to make further provision with regard to their market, water, and gas undertakings, to enable them to rate and acquire Selby Bridge, and for the improvement, health, and local government of the district," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 318

Sheffield, Laughton, and Maltby Railway Bill.—"For making railways in the West Riding of the county of York; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 318

Sheppy Gas Bill.—"For consolidating the capital of, and for conferring further powers on, the Sheppy Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 318

Skipton Water and Improvement Bill.—"To authorise the Urban District Council of Skipton to construct additional waterworks; to extend their limits of supply; and to make further provision with regard to the supply of electricity, and for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 318

Soothill Nether Urban District Tramways Bill.—"To enable the Soothill Nether Urban District Council to make and maintain tramways and street improvements; to acquire land for the purpose of a refuse destructor; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 318

Southend-on-Sea Gas Bill.—"For conferring further powers on the Southend Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 318

Southend Water Bill.—"To empower the Southend Waterworks Company to raise further capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 318

South Shields Gas Bill.—"To confer further powers upon the South Shields Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 319

South Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway (Extension of Time) Bill.—"To extend the time limited for the compulsory purchase of lands for and completion of the railways and works authorised by the South Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway Act, 1901; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 319

Strabane, Raphoe, and Convoy Railway Bill.—"To empower the Strabane, Raphoe, and Convoy Company to construct railways in the Counties of Tyrone and Donegal; to change the name of the Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills. 319

Feb. 4.] Page

Surrey Commercial Dock Bill.—"To authorise the Surrey Commercial Dock Company to raise further capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 319

Sutton Gas Bill.—"For conferring further powers upon the Sutton Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 319

Swindon Corporation Bill.—"To enable the Corporation of the Borough of Swindon to make new tramways, and to make further provisions with reference to markets, and for the health, local government, and improvement of the borough; and for other pruposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time. 319

Thames River Steamboat Service Bill.—"To provide for the acquisition and construction of piers and landing places on the River Thames in the Administrative County of London by the London County Council, and to make provision for a service of vessels for passengers and parcels; and for other purposes presented," and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.. 319

Thames Steamboat Trust Bill.—"To incorporate trustees for the maintenance of a service of steamboats on the River Thames to transfer to them the undertaking to the Thames Steamboat Company (1897), Limited, to provide for the transfer of them of certain piers on the River Thames, and for the guarantee by the London County Council of interest on moneys to be borrowed by the trustees; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 320

Thurles Urban District Council Water Bill.—"To authorise the Urban District Council of Thurles, in the County of Tipperary, to construct waterworks for the supply of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 320

Tottenham Improvement Bill.—"To confer further powers upon the Urban District Council for the District of Tottenham in the County of Middlesex," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time .. 320

Watford and District Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill.—"To extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands, and for the construction of the tramways authorised by the Watford and District Tramways Act, 1901; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 320

Wellington (Somerset) Gas Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Wellington (Somerset) Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 320

Whitby Gas Bill.—"To confer further powers upon the Whitby Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 320

Wolverhampton Corporation Bill.—"To empower the Corporation of Wolverhampton to construct tramways, and to make further provision in regard to their tramway, electricity, and market undertakings, and the health, local government, and improvement of their borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time .. 320

PETITIONS.

Licences (Renewal).—Petitions against alteration of law : from Trelewis ; Leeswood (two) ; Nerquis ; Bryndu ; Appledore ; Gravesend ; Radcliffe Close ; Kirkconnel ; Penpont ; Eaglesfield ; Frawsfynydd ; Halifax (five) ; Rochester ; Aberdeen ; New York ; Willesden ; Evenwood ; Northumberland ; Ffynnon Greew ; Cilcain ; Tavistock ; Ashton-under-Lyne ; Honicknowle ; Liverpool (five) ; Billy Row ; Marske ; Hutton ; Exeter ; Alexandria ; Kirkintilloch ; Kilpatrickin ; Renton ; Leven ; Dalmuir ; Thornhill ; Peterborough ; Hopkinstown ; Hafod ; Todmorden ; Midgley ; Porth ; Kilbrandon ; Thornley ; Hull ; Cilcain ; Northwich ; Thornhill ; Whiteparish ; York ; Deal and Walmer ; Barnstaple ; Vriog and Fairbourne ; Corwen ; Blaenan ; Millom ; Blantyre ; Tamworth ; Egremont ; Oxford ; Sunderland ; Driffield ; Frodingham ; Tarvin ; Tarporley ; Ramsbottom ; Heywood ; Aintree ; Stockton ; Lochee ; St. Leonard's ; Lincoln (three) ; Swansea (four); Sydenham ; Lee ; Rehoboth ; Rhiwlas ; Llandynan ; Bryn Eglwys (two) ; Llansannan ; Nantyr ; Hyfrydle ; Conway ; Colwyn Bay ; Eirienallt; Henhan ; Caistor ; Scunthorpe ; Brigg ; North Kelsey ; Carmarthen ; Chasetown ; Manley ; Salford (three) ; South Cardigan ; Penpark ; Altrincham ; Bucklow Hill ; New Delaval ; Thornton ; Saffron Walden ; Newquay ; Queen's Dewsbury ; Ore ; Roche ; Falmouth ; Dalton in Furness ; Chorley ; Lytham ; Stirling ; Glasgow (two) ; Oban ; Strachur ; Bideford ; Coombe Martin ; Muddiford ; Illfracombe ; Barnstaple ; Appledore ; Rowland's Castle ; Warsash ; Fareham ; Hayling Island ; Netley ; Lynton ; Congleton ; Stokesley ; Stockport (three) ; Pumpherston ; Gainsboro' ; Swanage ; Bournemouth ; Burslem ; Bristol ; Willenhall ; Thornaby-on-Tees ; East Greenwich ; Willington Quay ; Thorckley ; Gosforth ; Whitehaven ; Silverstream Tent ; Edinburgh (four) ; Royston ; Shafton ; Gainsborough ; Chipping Norton ; Dalry ; Kilmaurs ; Springside ; Clevedon; Bristol ; Barnsley (two) ; Rutherglen ; Renfrew ; Mapplewell ; Worthing ; Birstall ; Wyke ; Haverton Hill ; St. Helens (four) ; Askam ; Llangefni ; Penygarned ; Brynsiencyn ; Llangoed ; Lesmahagow ; Strathaven Leadhills ; Stonehouse ; Douglas Water ; Douglas (two) ; Carluke ; Boothtown ; Bewdley ; Batley ; Rushden ; Mickley Square ; Law ; Hexham ; Corbridge ; Ovington ; Penrhyn Dendreeth ; Trawsfynydd ; Harlech ; Llandrillo ; Glannan Tryweryn ; Llandanwg and Llanfair ; Bala ; Tent No. 2735 Independent Order of Rechabites ; Maentwrog ; Blaina Festiniog ; Towyn Corris ; Dolgelley (three) ; Arthog ; Gwydelwern ; Machynlleth ; Cefnddwysam ; Aberdovey ; Chudleigh ; Llandderfel ; Carlin How ; Kingsteignton ; Teignmouth ; Kingskerswell ; Chagford ; Newton Abbott ; Brotton ; Lustleigh ; Shaldon ; Heathfield ; Madog ; Beulah ; Brynmair ; Dartmouth ; Choppington ; Nomansland ; Amesbury ; Lanivet ; Saltash ; Wideawake Tent ; Lostwithe ; Pelynt ; Bodmin ; Birmingham (two) ; Ferryden ; Plymouth (two) ; Coseley ; Bilston ; Carlingcott ; Radstock ; Retford ; Llannwchllyn ; Derby ; Redcar ; Newcastle on Tyne ; Penmacline ; Aspatria ; Glazert Bank ; Keighley ; and Denholme ; to lie upon the Table 321

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Bill.—Petitions for prohibition : from Plymouth ; Bideford ; and Barnstaple ; to lie upon the Table .. 322

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1899 (Regulations for State Inebriate Reformatories).—Paper [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 20.] .. 322

Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction (Ireland).—Return [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 21.] 322

Feb. 4.] Page

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.—Account [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 22.] 322

EAST INDIA (SUGAR).—Return [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 23.] 322

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.—Copy presented, of Returns of Accidents and Casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several Railway Companies in the United Kingdom during the nine months ending 30th September, 1903, together with Reports of the Inspecting Officers, Assistant Inspecting Officers, and Sub-Inspectors of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain Accidents which were inquired into [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 322

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 24.] .. 323

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 25.] 323

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.—Copy presented, of an Order, entitled The Foreign Animals (Amendment) Order of 1903 (No. 3) [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 323

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.—Copy presented, of an Order defining a foreign animals quarantine station at the port of Southampton [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 323

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS).—Copy presented, of the Postal Order (Inland) Amendment Regulations, 1903, dated 14th September, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 323

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1902–3.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 26.] 323

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 27.] 323

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 28.] 323

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNTS).—Appropriation Accounts presented, for the year ending 31st March, 1903, together with the Reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon and certain Reports upon Store Accounts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 29.] 324

ROYAL PARKS AND GARDENS.—Copy presented, of Provisional Rules for the Royal Parks and Gardens in connection with the Regulations prescribed by the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 324

HOLYROOD PARK.—Copy presented, of Rule for Holyrood Park in connection with the Regulations prescribed by the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 324

Feb. 4.] Page

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND).—Copy presented, of forty-seventh Detailed Annual Report of the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in Scotland (Abstracts of 1901) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 324

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE:

1. Bank of England.—Accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government Securities purchased, and of the amount of Balances of Sums issued for the Payment of Dividends, &c., for the year ending the 5th January, 1904 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 30.]

2. Building Societies.—Copy of Ninth Annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the Proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts, &c. [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 31.] 324

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

NOTICES FOR RECOVERY OF INCOME TAX IN SCOTLAND.—Question, Mr. M'Crae (Edinburgh, E.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 325

ISSUE OF TRANSVAAL LOAN.—Question, Mr. Lough (Islington, W.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 325

EXTINCTION OF DEBT.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 325

SUDBURY (ONTARIO), NICKEL MINES.—Question, Mr. Norman (Wolverhampton, S.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 325

AMOUNT OF UNFUNDED DEBT.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 326

RELEASE OF MRS. MAYBRICK.—Question, Mr. James O'Connor (Wicklow, W.); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 326

MAGISTRATES AND PASSIVE RESISTERS.—Question, Mr. Channing (Northamptonshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 327

BEER POISONING—STANDARD OF PURITY.—Question, Sir Cuthbert Quilter (Suffolk, Sudbury); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 327

EMPLOYMENT IN THE UNITED KINGDOM AND IRELAND.—Question, Lord George Hamilton (Middlesex, Ealing); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 328

CAUSES AND EFFECTS OF TARIFF WARS ON THE CONTINENT.—Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Earl Percy 328

ALLEGED ATROCITIES ON THE CONGO.—Question, Mr. Channing; Answer, Earl Percy 329

PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS—VIEWS OF INDIAN GOVERNMENT.—Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 329

CROWN LAW OFFICES—SALARIES AND FEES.—Question, Mr. Lambert (Devonshire, South Molton); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 329

Feb. 4.] Page

Exeter Education Authority—Removal of Children from One School to Another.—Question, Mr. H. C. Richards (Finsbury, E.); Answer, Sir Wm. Anson 330

Operation of Labourers Acts in Ireland.—Question. Mr. Kendal O'Brien (Tipperary, Mid); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 331

Strength of Volunteer Force.—Question, Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 331

War Office Re-organisation Committee—Circulation of Report.—Question Major Evans Gordon (Tower Hamlets, Stepney); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 331

Transport of Government Stores to Gibraltar and Malta.—Question, The Master of Elibank (Edinburgh, Midlothian); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 332

Condition of Malta.—Question, Mr. Boland (Kerry, S.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 332

Colonial Civil Servants and Political Demonstrations.—Question, Dr. Shipman (Northampton); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 333

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

The Aalesund Disaster.—Question, Captain Norton (Newington, W.); Answer, The Secretary to the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) .. 333

Officers' War Gratuities.—Question, Captain Norton; Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 334

Officers' Saddlery.—Questions, Sir Carne Rasch (Essex, Chelmsford); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 334

The 2nd Essex Regiment.—Question, Sir Carne Rasch; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 335

British Made Pom-Poms sold to the Boers.—Question, Mr. Frederick Wilson (Norfolk, Mid); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 335

Quick Firing Guns for the Army.—Question, Mr. Frederick Wilson; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 336

Aldershot Sham Fight—Use of Ball Cartridge.—Question, Mr. Fyler (Surrey, Chertsey); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 336

India—Official Secrets Bill—Question, Mr. Herbert Roberts (Denbighshire, W.); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 336

The Mission to Thibet.—Questions, Mr. Herbert Roberts, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis), and Mr. Lough (Islington, W.); Answers, Mr. Brodrick .. 337

Thibetan Expedition.—Question, Mr. Norman (Wolverhampton, S.); Answer, The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy); Kensington, W.) 339

Feb. 4.]

Page

CHINESE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL MINES.—Questions, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar), Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen, S.), Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe), Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs), and Mr. Lough; Answers, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick, Leamington) 339

THE TRANSVAAL LOAN.—Question, Mr. Labouchere (Northampton); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 342

NATIVE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL MINES.—Questions, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland), and Sir John Gorst (Cambridge University); Answers, Earl Percy 342

CONGO FREE STATE ADMINISTRATION.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel; Answer, Earl Percy 343

MACEDONIA.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, Earl Percy 343

THE FAR EAST—RUSSIA AND MANCHURIA.—Question, Mr. Joseph Walton (Yorkshire, W.R., Barnsley); Answer, Earl Percy 344

MU-CHWANG CUSTOMS STAFF.—Question, Mr. Joseph Walton; Answer, Earl Percy 345

CHINESE LABOUR IN THE CHINCHA ISLANDS.—Question, Mr. Labouchere; Answer, Earl Percy 345

EXTINCTION OF DEBT.—Questions, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.) and Sir John Gorst; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 346

INCOME TAX.—Question, Mr. M'Crae (Edinburgh, E.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 347

BRITISH TRADE STATISTICS.—Questions, Mr. Henry Hobhouse (Somersetshire, E.), Mr. Joseph Walton; Answers, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 347

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT—PEARSON'S CHRISTMAS EXTRA.—Questions, Mr. Labouchere; Answers, Mr. Gerald Balfour 348

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.—Question, Sir Thomas Esmonde (Wexford, N.); Answer, The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) 349

ISLAND OF LEWIS.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, The Secretary for Scotland (Mr. A. Graham Murray, Buteshire) 349

SCOTTISH BOARD OF MANUFACTURERS.—Question, Sir J. Stirling Maxwell (Glasgow, College); Answer, Mr. A. Graham Murray 349

IRISH LABOURERS ACTS—MULLINGAR RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL.—Question, Mr. Hayden (Roscommon, S.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 350

IRISH LANDOWNERS' CONVENTION AND THE LAND PURCHASE ACT.—Questions, Captain Donelan (Cork, E.); Answers, Mr. Wyndham 351

Page

WICKLOW MAGISTRACY.—Mr. James O'Connor (Wicklow, W.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 352

EVICTED TENANTS.—Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 352

GRANARD UNION—WORKHOUSE MASTER.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 352

COOLEGREANEY ESTATE.—Question, Sir Thomas Esmonde; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 353

FORESTRY IN IRELAND.—Questions, Sir Thomas Esmonde and Mr. Flynn (Cork, N.); Answers, Mr. Wyndham .. 353

THE WRECK OF THE "ALBERT."—Question, Sir Thomas Esmonde; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 354

SEED POTATOES FOR SMALL OCCUPIERS IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Hayden; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 354

DROGHEDA DISTURBANCES.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 355

LABOURERS' COTTAGES IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. O'Shaughnessy (Limerick, W.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 355

IRISH TOWN TENANTS.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 356

LONGFORD POST OFFICE.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) .. 356

CORRY POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS.—Question, Mr. Hayden; Answer, Lord Stanley 356

WEST LIMERICK MAIL SERVICE.—Mr. O'Shaughnessy; Answer, Lord Stanley 356

IRISH POST OFFICE AUDIT.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Lord Stanley 357

IRISH MANUFACTURERS AND ARMY TENDERS.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, The Financial Secretary to the War Office (Mr. Bromley, Davenport, Cheshire, Macclesfield) .. 357

CONTRACTS FOR IMAAL MILITARY CAMP.—Question, Mr. James O'Connor: Answer Mr. Bromley, Davenport .. 358

FISCAL DEBATE.—Questions, Sir M. Hicks Beach (Bristol, W.), Lord Hugh Cecil (Greenwich); Answers, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) and Mr. Morley (Montrose Burghs) 358

GOVERNMENT TARIFF POLICY.—Questions, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answers, Mr. Akers Douglas .. 360

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS). [THIRD DAY.]—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Question [2nd February] " That an humble Address be presented as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. Hugh Law (Donegal, W.) 361
The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 363
Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen, S.) 371
Sir Mark Stewart (Kirkcudbrightshire) 375
Mr. Robson (South Shields) 375
Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.) 399

Amendment proposed—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words ' But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in regard to the preparations for and conduct of the recent War in South Africa, and particularly the evidence taken by Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into those matters and their Report thereon, disclose grave negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, whereby the duration, magnitude, and cost of the war were greatly increased.' "—(Mr. Robson.)

Question proposed, " That these words be there added."

The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 411
Sir A. Hayter (Walsall) 426

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [4th February] to Main Question [2nd February]. " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words, ' But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in regard to the preparations for and conduct of the recent war in South Africa, and particularly the evidence taken by Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into those matters and their Report thereon, disclose grave negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, whereby the duration, magnitude, and cost of the war were greatly increased.' "—(Mr. Robson.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Mr. Duke (Plymouth) 432
Sir Charles Dilke (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean) 436
Mr. J. Chamberlain (Birmingham, W.) 449

Motion made, and Question, " That the debate be now adjourned "—(Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Adjourned at five minutes before Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: FRIDAY, 5TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Twelve of the Clock.

PETITIONS.

Courts of Arbitration for all States.—Petition from Calne, for establishment; to lie upon the Table 469

Licences (Renewal).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Warrington (two); Bristol; Lancaster; Norton Canes; Radnor Park; Rochdale; Bethania; Ceunant Llanrug; Penygroes; Cesarea; Croesywaen; Liverpool (six); Glasgow (four); Edinburgh (two); Tuxford; Posselpark; Hackney; Garston; Misterton; Spennymoor; New Shildon; Leicester; Gilfach; Clatford; Cholderton; Broughton; Whitchurch; Micheldever; Stockbridge; Mottram; Hartlepool; Torpoint; St. Anthonys; Winnington; Runcorn; Redruth; Camborne; Whittlesey; Atherstone; Pollokshaws; Marsden; Jarrow; Hebburn (two); Bill Quay; Kidderminster; Plumstead; Hanging Heaton; Middleton; Castleton; Exeter (two); Coatbridge; Glenboig; Whifflet; Penzance; Sancreed; Sennen; St. Mary's; Scilly; Halton Chirk; Coatdyke; Portmadoc; Penygroes; Rhyd-ddu; Nazareth; Talysarn; Cae Athraw; Tan y Coed; Hyfrydle; Tainant; Llandynan; Llanrug (six); Glanrhyd; Prenteg; Notting Hill; Sheffield; Middlesbrough (two); Todmorden; Frome; Grangetown; North Ormesby; Arreton; Newchurch; Sandown; Niton; Freshwater; Newport; Clapham; Navenby; Willington; Belmont; Stillington; Gateshead (two); Low Fell; Dunfermline; Cheltenham; Raunds; Brigstock; Woodford; Langley Moor; Llanfairfechan (two); Graig; Clegyr; Llanfyllin; Cwmyglo; Cleveland; Huntingdon; Kilbarchan; Scotstoun; Bridge of Weir; Nitshill; Pangbourne; Ashbourne; Trefeirig; Wootton; Cwmorfin; Bwlchydderwen; Cwmsynog; Aberporth; Nantperis; Llandudno; Cefn Mawr; Pendleton (two); Birkenhead; Sedbergh; Penmachno; Pentir; Preswylfa; Tynmaes; Gerlan; Waenpentre; Rhiwlas (two); Lochgelly; Lincoln (two); Bedwas; Great Ayton; Camberwell; Everton; Wrexham; Waenfawr; Coupar Angus; Burradon; Weston-super-Mare; Lytchett Minster; Hollington; Bridlington; York; York and Scarborough; Poole and Parkstone; and Caersalem; to lie upon the Table 469

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday.—Petition from Weymouth, for prohibition; to lie upon the Table 470

Feb. 5.] Page

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

GREENWICH OBSERVATORY.—Copy presented, of Report of the Astronomer Royal to the Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 470

NAVY (COURTS MARTIAL).—Copy presented, of Return of the number of Courts Martial held and Summary Punishments inflicted during the year 1902 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 470

WAR OFFICE (RECONSTITUTION) COMMITTEE.—Copy presented, of Report of the War Office (Reconstitution) Committee [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 470

EAST INDIA (THIBET).—Copy presented, of Papers relating to Thibet by Command]; to lie upon the Table 470

TRANSVAAL.—Copy presented, of Telegraphic Correspondence relating to the Transvaal Labour Importation Ordinance, with Appendix, the Ordinance as amended in accordance with Telegrams [by Command]; to lie upon the Table] 470

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.—Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the borough of Maidstone, in the county of Kent (Maidstone Corporation Light Railways Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 471

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.—Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Robertsbridge and Pevensey Light Railway Order, 1900 (Robertsbridge and Pevensey Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 471

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.—Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the urban districts of Quarry Bank, Brierley Hill, and Rowley Regis, in the county of Stafford (Quarry Bank, Brierley Hill, and Rowley Regis Light Railway Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 471

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.—Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the parishes of Acton, Edgware, Edmonton, Enfield, Finchley, Friern Barnet, Hendon, Hornsey, Little Stanmore, Southgate, Tottenham, Wembley, Willesden, and Wood Green, in the county of Middlesex (County of Middlesex Light Railways Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 471

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.—Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the county of Hertford, in the parish of Watford urban and the urban district of Watford (Watford and District Light Railways Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 471

Feb. 5]. Page

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP).—Copy presented, of General Rules made pursuant to The Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and the Judicature Act, 1881 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 472

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

1. Intermediate Education (Ireland), Accounts of Receipts and Expenditure for 1902, with Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 32.]
2. Richmond Bridge. Cash Account for the year 1902 [by Act] 472

BREWERS' LICENCES.—

Return ordered, "of Accounts of the number of persons in each of the several Collections of the United Kingdom licensed as brewers for sale, i.e. Common Brewers, Victuallers, Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises, Retailers of beer not to be drunk on the premises, and Brewers of beer not for sale, particularising each class in each Collection; and of the number of Licences issued to Victuallers and Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises and not to be drunk on the premises; and stating also the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, &c., sugar, including its equivalent of syrups, &c., hops and hop substitutes, used by Brewers of beer for sale, and of malt and sugar used by Brewers not for sale, from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903.

"Of the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903, distinguishing Brewers for sale from other Brewers.

"Of the number of Brewers for sale (i.) who use malt and hops, or hop substitutes only and (ii.) who use malt with substitutes for same and hops or hop substitutes paying for Licences, from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903, separating them into classes, according to the number of barrels of beer charged with duty calculated at 1·055 degrees gravity—viz., under 1,000 barrels; 1,000 and under 10,000; 10,000 and under 20,000; 20,000 and under 30,000; 30,000 and under 50,000; 50,000 and under 100,000; 100,000 and under 150,000; 150,000 and under 200,000; 200,000 and under 250,000; 250,000 and under 300,000; 300,000 and under 350,000; 350,000 and under 400,000; 400,000 and under 450,000; 450,000 and under 500,000; 500,000 and under 600,000; 600,000 and under 700,000; 700,000 and under 800,000; 800,000 and under 900,000; 900,000 and under 1,000,000; 1,000,000 and under 1,500,000; 1,500,000 and under 2,000,000; 2,000,000 barrels and over; showing separately, in each class, the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, &c., sugar including its equivalent of syrups, &c., hops and hop substitutes used; and stating also the number of bulk barrels of beer produced, and the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged in each class."

"And, of the number of barrels of beer exported from the United Kingdom, and the declared value thereof, and where exported to, from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903, distinguishing England, Scotland, and Ireland (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 40, of Session 1903)."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.) .. 472

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

VENTILATION OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Question, Mr. Wylie (Dumbartonshire); Answer, Lord Balcarres 473

STREET ACCIDENTS—COVERED VANS.—Question, Sir Thomas Dewar (Tower Hamlets, St. George's); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 474

Feb. 5.]

Page

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.—Question, Mr. J. A. Pease (Essex, Saffron Walden); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 475

ASSESSMENT OF WORKING MEN'S COTTAGES.—Question, Mr. Channing (Northamptonshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 475

TRADE "CORNERS"—GOVERNMENT ACTION.—Question, Mr. Channing; Answer, Earl Percy 476

FOREIGN MINISTRIES OF COMMERCE.—Question, Mr. Louis Sinclair (Essex, Romford); Answer, Earl Percy 476

EXPORTS OF WOOLLEN, COTTON GOODS, ETC., FROM FRANCE AND GREAT BRITAIN.—Question, Mr. J. A. Pease; Answer, Mr. Bonar Law 476

IMPORT DUTIES.—Question, Mr. J. A. Pease; Answer, Mr. Bonar Law .. 477

HEAD CONSTABLE AT LEOPOLD STREET BARRACKS, BELFAST.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 477

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY—ACTING SERGEANTS.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 478

MILITIA TRAINING BOUNTIES—CASE OF PATRICK KERR.—Question, Mr. Hemphill (Tyrone, N.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 479

ALLEGED ATROCITIES IN THE CONGO STATE.—Question, Mr. J. A. Pease; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 479

NEW BILLS.

Musical Copyright Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to the Musical Copyright," presented by Mr. Mount; supported by Mr. Stuart-Wortley, Mr. Galloway, and Mr. Malcolm; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th February, and to be printed. [Bill 1.] 480

Town Tenants (Ireland) Bill.—"For the improvement of the position of Tenants in Towns in Ireland," presented by Mr. MacVeagh; supported by Mr. Field, Captain Donelan, Mr. William McKillop, Mr. Joseph Devlin, Mr. Joyce, Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. Murphy, and Mr. John O'Donnell; to be read a second time upon Friday, 4th March, and to be printed. [Bill 2] .. 480

Land Values (Assessment and Rating) Bill.—"To provide for the separate Assessment and Rating of Land Values," presented by Mr. Trevelyan; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Charles Douglas, Mr. William Jones, Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. McCrae, Dr. Macnamara, Sir Albert Rollit, and Mr. Whitley; to be read a second time upon Friday, 11th March, and to be printed. [Bill 3] 480

Railways (Private Sidings) Bill.—"To explain and amend Section 76 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and Section 69 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, and to amend the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, 1854 to 1888," presented by Sir John Brunner; supported by Mr. Channing, Mr. Alexander Cross, Sir Joseph Dimsdale, Mr. Field, Sir Alfred Hickman, Mr. Kerr, Mr. Charles McArthur, Mr. Stroyan, Sir William Tomlinson, and Mr. Ure; to be read a second time upon Friday, 18th March, and to be printed. [Bill 4] 481

Feb. 5.] Page

Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Bill.—" To amend the outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Act, 1894," presented by Mr. Reginald Lucas; supported by Mr. Butcher, Sir Carne Rasch, Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore, and Mr. Charles Seely; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 5] 481

Weights and Measures Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to Weights and Measures," presented by Mr. Bousfield; supported by Mr. Parker Smith and Sir John Brunner; to be read a second time upon Friday, 15th April, and to be printed. [Bill 6] 481

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister," presented by Mr. Charles Seely; supported by Sir Gilbert Parker, Sir Brampton Gurdon, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Hambro, Mr. Matthew White Ridley, Sir Joseph Leese, Mr. MacIver, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Charles Shaw, Sir Barrington Simeon, and Mr. Melville; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 7] 481

Trades Unions and Trade Disputes Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to Trades Unions and Trades Disputes," presented by Mr. Paulton; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Robson, Mr. Beaumont, Mr. D. A. Thomas, Mr. Johnson, Mr. John Burns, Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Runciman, and Mr. Jacoby; to be read a second time upon Friday, 22nd April, and to be printed. [Bill 8] 481

Local Government (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill.—" To amend the Local Government (Ireland) Acts," presented by Mr. Field; supported by Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. Clancy, Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh, Mr. John O'Donnell, Mr. Reddy, Mr. Roche, and Mr. Kilbride; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 9] 482

Registration of Clubs (Ireland) Bill.—" To provide for the Registration of Clubs in Ireland, and for other purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. O'Neill; supported by Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. John Gordon, Mr. Hugh Law, Mr. McGovern, Mr. T. W. Russell, Dr. Thompson, and Mr. Wolff; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 10] 482

Merchant Shipping (Lighthouses) Bill.—" To amend the Law with regard to Lighthouses and to abolish Light Dues," presented by Mr. Plummer; supported by Mr. Charles McArthur, Mr. Evelyn Cecil, Colonel Denny, Sir Francis Evans, Mr. Field, Sir John Leng, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Renwick, Sir Albert Rollit, Sir Robert Ropner, and Mr. Charles Wilson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 13th May, and to be printed. [Bill 11] .. 482

Mines (Eight Hours) Bill.—" To limit the hours of underground workers in Mines to Eight Hours per day from bank to bank," presented by Mr. Osmond Williams; supported by Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Jacoby, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda), Mr. Norman, Mr. Thomas Bayley, Mr. William Jones, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. Hatch, and Mr. Nussey; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th February, and to be printed. [Bill 12] 482

Hall-Marking of Foreign Plate Bill.—" To amend the Law with respect to the Hall-Marking of Foreign Plate," presented by Mr. Samuel Roberts; supported by Mr. Stuart-Wortley, Sir Benjamin Stone, Sir Joseph Dimsdale, Mr. Remnant, and Mr. Norman; to be read a second time upon Friday, 18th March, and to be printed. [Bill 13] 482

Leaseholds Enfranchisement Bill.—" For the Enfranchisement of Leaseholds," presented by General Laurie ; supported by Mr. Spear, Mr. Cohen, Sir George Fardell, and Mr. Louis Sinclair ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 4th March, and to be printed. [Bill 14] 483

Ministry of Commerce Bill.—" To establish a bureau for a Minister of Commerce," presented by Mr. Louis Sinclair ; supported by Sir Albert Rollit, Sir William Holland, Sir John Brunner, Sir Howard Vincent, Sir Ernest Flower, Sir Fortescue Flannery, and Sir Joseph Lawrence ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd June, and to be printed. [Bill 15] 483

Tuberculosis (Animals) Compensation Bill.—" To provide for the payment of compensation to the owners of carcases of animals condemned after slaughter and destroyed by order of a magistrate on account of Tuberculosis," presented by Mr. Price ; supported by Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. Tomkinson, Mr. McArthur, Mr. Field, Mr. Batty Langley, and Mr. Ernest Gray ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 15th April, and to be printed. [Bill 16] 483

Aged Pensioners Bill.—" To provide Pensions for the Aged Deserving Poor," presented by Mr. Remnant ; supported by Mr. Goulding, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. John Hutton, Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, Mr. Claude Hay, Colonel Kemp, Mr. Maconochie, Mr. Forde Ridley, and Mr. Groves ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 17] 483

Re-Vaccination Bill.—" To provide for the Re-vaccination of Children after the age of twelve," presented by Sir John Tuke ; supported by Sir Michael Foster, Mr. Haldane, Dr. Farquharson, Captain Jessel, Mr. Malcolm, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Heywood Johnstone, Mr. Cohen, Mr. Moon, Sir Charles Dalrymple, and Sir John Dorington ; to be read a second time upon Monday, 25th April, and to be printed. [Bill 18] 483

Private Legislation Procedure (Wales) Bill.—" To provide for improving and extending the Procedure for obtaining Parliamentary Powers by way of Provisional Orders in matters relating to Wales," presented by Mr. Vaughan-Davies ; supported by Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Herbert Roberts, Mr. Osmond Williams, Sir Alfred Thomas, and Mr. Kenyon ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 19.] 484

Church Discipline Bill.—" To amend the Church Discipline Act, 1840, and the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874," presented by Sir John Willox ; supported by Mr. Charles McArthur, Mr. Austin Taylor, Mr. Mellor, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. David MacIver, Mr. Brand, and Mr. W. W. Rutherford ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th June, and to be printed. [Bill 20.] 484

Local Taxation Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to the incidence of Local Taxation," presented by Mr. Cripps ; supported by Mr. Wharton and Mr. Henry Hobhouse ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 13th May, and to be printed. [Bill 21.] 484

Prevention of Pollution of Rivers and Streams Bill.—" To make further and amended provision to prevent the Pollution of Rivers and Streams," presented by Sir Francis Sharp Powell ; supported by Sir Wilson Todd, Mr. Henry Hobhouse, Sir John Dorington, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Brigg, Sir John Brunner, and Sir Walter Foster ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 22nd April, and to be printed. [Bill 22.] 484

Feb. 5.] Page

Aged Pensioners (No. 2) Bill.—" To provide Pensions for the aged deserving poor," presented by Mr. Goulding; supported by Mr. Remnant, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. John Hutton, Colonel Kemp, Mr. Duke, Mr. William Redmond, Mr. Carlile, Mr. Claude Hay, Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, Mr. Samuel Roberts, and Sir Albert Rollit; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd June, and to be printed. [Bill 23.] 485

Old Age Pensions Bill.—" To provide Pensions for the aged deserving poor," presented by Mr. Spear; supported by Mr. Duke, Sir John Kennaway, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. Goulding, Colonel Williams, and Mr. Randles; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th February, and to be printed. [Bill 24.] .. 485

Liquor Traffic Local Veto (Scotland) Bill.—" To give the Ratepayers a direct Veto on the Liquor Traffic in their respective areas in Scotland," presented by Mr. Hunter Craig; supported by Mr. Crombie, Mr. Cameron Corbett, Mr. Black, Sir William Dunn, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. Robert Wallace, Mr. John Hope, and Dr. Farquharson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 25.] 485

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Bill.—" To prohibit the sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday," presented by Mr. Perks; supported by Mr. Charles Wilson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 20th May, and to be printed. [Bill 26.] 485

Shops Bill.—" To amend the Poor Law relating to Shops," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. John Burns, Sir Ernest Flower, Mr. Charles Hobhouse, Mr. Lloyd-George, Colonel Kemp, Mr. McCrae, Mr. Melville, Mr. Nannetti, Sir Barrington Simeon, and Mr. Tennant; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 27.] 485

Franchise and Removal of Woman's Disabilities Bill.—" To establish a single Franchise at all Elections and thereby to abolish University Representation, and to remove the Disabilities of Women," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Atherley-Jones, Mr. Logan, Dr. Macnamara, Captain Norton, and Mr. Shackleton; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 28.] 485

Irish Tobacco Bill.—" To repeal the Law which prohibits the growing of Tobacco in Ireland," presented by Mr. William Redmond; supported by Mr. Hayden, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Charles Devlin, Mr. Patrick O'Brien, and Mr. Joyce; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 29.] 486

Local Authorities (Taxation and Purchase of Land) Bill.—" To provide for the Taxation and Purchase of Land by Local Authorities," presented by Mr. Logan; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Harwood, Dr. Macnamara, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Toulmin, and Mr. Logan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 30.] 486

Colonial Marriages Bill.—" To legalise certain Colonial Marriages," presented by General Laurie; supported by Mr. Rothschild, Mr. Arthur Stanley, Sir Gilbert Parker, and Captain Jessel; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 31.] 486

Page

Medical Act (1886) Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Medical Act, 1886," presented by General Laurie; supported by Sir Walter Foster, Sir John Tuke, Mr. Rothschild, Sir Howard Vincent, and Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 32.] 486

Merchandise Marks Bill.—"To amend the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Sir Carne Rasch, Sir Henry Seton-Karr, and Mr. Field; to be read a second time upon Friday next, and to be printed. [Bill 33.] 486

Private Trustee Bill.—"To provide for the appointment of a Public Trustee and Executor," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Howard, and Lieutenant-Colonel Tufnell; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 34.] 486

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Saturdays (Ireland) Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors in Ireland on Saturdays; and for other purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. Sloan; supported by Sir James Haslett, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Jordan, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. T. L. Corbett, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, and Mr. Wood; to be read a second time upon Friday, 13th May, and to be printed. [Bill 35.] 487

Agricultural Holdings Bill.—"To amend the Agricultural Holdings Acts and to make other provisions as to the Tenure of Agricultural Land," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Price, Mr. Harold Reckitt, Mr. Brynmor Jones, and Mr. Lambert; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 36.] 487

Old Age Pensions (No. 2) Bill.—"To provide Pensions for persons over sixty-five years of age," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Mr. Burt, Mr. John Burns, Mr. John Wilson (Durham), Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Broadhurst, and Sir Albert Rollit; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 16th February and to be printed. [Bill 37.] 487

Coroners' Inquests (Railway Fatilities) Bill.—To amend the Law relating to Coroners' Inquests in the case of Fatal Accidents on Railways," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, and Mr. Schwann; to be read a second time upon Monday, 15th February, and to be printed. [Bill 38.] 487

Savings Banks Acts Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Savings Banks Acts," presented by Sir Albert Rollit; supported by Sir Frederick Banbury, Sir James Woodhouse, Sir Frederick Dixon-Hartland, Mr. Broadhurst, Sir Brampton Gurdon, Sir William Holland, Mr. John Campbell, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Sir George Bartley, and Mr. Edmund Faber; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 39.] 487

Small Holders (Scotland) Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to the tenure of Small Holdings in Scotland," presented by Mr. Black; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Weir, Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. Harmsworth, Mr. J. D. Hope, and Mr. Ainsworth; to be read a second time upon Friday, 17th June, and to be printed. [Bill 40.] 488

Feb. 5.] Page

Sunday Closing (Wales) Act (1881) Amendment Bill.—" To amend The Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, and to make further provisions respecting the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors in Wales and Monmouthshire," presented by Mr. Herbert Roberts; supported by Sir Alfred Thomas, Mr. Herbert Lewis, and Mr. William Jones; to be read a second time upon Friday, 4th March, and to be printed. [Bill 41.] 488

ADJOURNMENT.—Resolved, That this House, at its rising this day, do adjourn till Monday next.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.) 488

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS). [FOURTH DAY.]—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [4th February] to Main Question [2nd February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words, ' But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in regard to the preparations for and conduct of the recent war in South Africa, and particularly the evidence taken by Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into those matters and their Report thereon, disclose grave negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, whereby the duration, magnitude, and cost of the war were greatly increased."—(Mr. Robson).

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Sir H. Campbell Bannerman (Stirling Burghs). 489
Mr. J. Chamberlain (Birmingham, W.) 499
The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) .. 503
Mr. Charles Hobhouse (Bristol, E.) 514
Sir Carne Rasch (Essex, Chelmsford) 520
Captain Norton (Newington, W.) 522
Colonel Welby (Taunton) 530
Mr. J. S. Ainsworth (Argyllshire) 533
Sir George Bartley (Islington, W.) 534
Mr. Frederick Wilson (Norfolk, Mid.) 535
The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) .. 537

Question put.

The House divided :—Ayes, 192; Noes, 278. (Division List, No. 1.)

Main Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question, " That the debate be now adjourned "—(Mr. Joseph Walton)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

Adjourned at twenty-three minutes after Five o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MONDAY, 8TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Appleby Corporation Gas Bill [H.L.]; Barrow-in-Furness Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Belfast and North East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas Bill [H.L.]; Belfast Corporation (Tramways) Bill [H.L.]; Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways) Bill [H.L.]; Bridlington Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Bristol Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Buxton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Chesterfield Corporation Tramways and Improvements Bill [H.L.]; Chesterfield Gas and Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Derwent Valley Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Ebbw Vale Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Edwardes Square Protection Bill [H.L.]; Elysée Palace Hotel Company Bill [H.L.]; Filey Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Great Yarmouth Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad Bill [H.L.]; Holywood Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment) Bill [H.L.]; Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust Bill [H.L.]; Ipswich Dock Commission Bill [H.L]. ; King's College Hospital Bill [H.L.]; Leeds Corporation (Water works) Railway Bill [H.L.]; Liverpool and Wigan Churches Bill [H.L.]; Llanelly Harbour Bill [H.L.]; Maidenhead Bridge Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Corporation (General Powers) Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Corporation Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Mersey Docks and Harbour Board Bill [H.L.]; Milwr and District Mines Drainage Bill [H.L.]; Minehead Urban District Council Water Bill [H.L.]; Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Oakengates, Dawley, and District Joint Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Preston and Blackburn Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Preston Corporation Water Bill [H.L.]; St. Bartholomew's Hospital Bill [H.L.]; St. Mary Woolnoth Bill [H.L.]; Shipley Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; South Staffordshire Mines Drainage Bill [H.L.]; Stretford Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Tynemouth Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Ulster Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance) Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance Bill [H.L.]; Withnell Gas Bill [H.L.]; Presented, and read 1a. 557

Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway Bill [H.L.]; Barnard Castle Gas Bill [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Extension of Time, etc.) Bill [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill [H.L.]; Cambrian Railways Bill [H.L.]; Cardiff Railway Bill [H.L.]; Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Gosport Water Bill [H.L.]; Great Western Railway Bill [H.L.]; Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas Bill [H.L.]; Isle of Thanet Light Railways Bill [H.L.]; Lancashire Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company Bill [H.L.]; London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Ship Canal Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Ship Canal (Finance) Bill [H.L.]; Matlock and District Gas Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan District Railway Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Railway Bill [H.L.]; Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway Bill [H.L.]; Newcastle and Gateshead Water Bill [H.L.]; New River Company Bill [H.L.]; New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company Bill [H.L.]; North Wales Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway Bill [H.L.]; Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Ticehurst and District Water and Gas Bill [H.L.]; Trafford Park Dock and Railway Bill [H.L.]; Tynemouth Gas Bill [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads Bill [H.L.]; Victoria University of Manchester Bill [H.L.]; Victoria University of Yorkshire Bill [H.L.]; West

Feb. 8.] Page

Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment) Bill [H.L.]; West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier Bill [H.L.]; West Riding Tramways Bill [H.L.]; York Town and Blackwater Gas Bill [H.L.]; Presented; read 1^a; and referred to the Examiners . 558

Coulsdon Tramways Bill.—The Chairman of Committees informed the House that the Promoters do not intend to proceed further with the Bill. Ordered that the Bill be not further proceeded with 558

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Trade Reports (Annual).—No. 3118. Italy (South Italy); No. 3119. Denmark 559

Navy.—Returns of the number of courts-martial held and summary punishments inflicted on seamen of the Royal Navy, etc., during the year 1902 .. 559

Greenwich Observatory.—Report of the Astronomer-Royal to the Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, read at the annual visitation of the Royal Observatory, 6th June, 1903 559

India.—(Thibet): Papers relating to Thibet; (Tariff): Views of the Government of India on the question of Preferential Tariffs 559

Transvaal.—Telegraphic correspondence relating to the Transvaal Labour Importation Ordinance, with Appendix; the Ordinance as amended in accordance with telegrams (in continuation of [Cd. 1895], Feb., 1904). .. 559

Army (Imperial Yeomanry).—Training return of Imperial Yeomanry in Great Britain and Ireland for 1903.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.. 559

Intermediate Education (Ireland).—Accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the year ended 31st December, 1902; together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon 559

Superannuation—Treasury Minutes.—Dated 12th August, 1903, granting a retired allowance to Theophilus Evans, inspector of postmen and telegraph messengers, Worcester Post Office.

Dated 2nd October, 1903, granting a retired allowance to Commander Francis Alford, Navigating Commander H.M.T.S. "Monarch" Post Office.

Dated 19th October, 1903, granting a retired allowance to Charles Hasdell, third-class clerk in the Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office.

Dated 19th October, 1903, granting a retired allowance to James Ruttley, late overseer and senior telegraphist, Central Telegraph Office, London.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 559

Richmond Bridge.—Account of the Commissioners of Richmond Bridge for the year ended 25th December, 1902. Delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 560

Post Office (Telegraphs).—Account showing the gross amount received, and the gross amount expended, in respect of the Telegraph Service from the date of the transfer of the telegraphs to the State to the 31st day of March, 1902 (in continuation of No. 31, of Session 1903). The Order of Thursday last, that the said account to lie on the Table, discharged 560

House adjourned at Four o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 8th February, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Private Bills (Standing Order 62 Compiled with).—Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been compiled with, viz. :—Blyth and Cowpen Gas Bill; Gomersal Gas Bill; Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways Bill; South Shields Gas Bill; South-Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway (Extension of Time) Bill; Sutton Gas Bill; Whitby Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.. 560

Private Bills (Standing Order 63 Complied with).—Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 63 has been complied with, viz. :—Bishop's Stortford and District Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time 561

Private Bills (Standing Order 62 not Complied with).—Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has not been complied with, viz. :—Ryde Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 561

PETITIONS.

Confessional at St. Paul's, Bedford.—Petition from Bedford, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 561

Licences (Renewal).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Camden Town; Barrow-in-Furness; Moss Side; Fowey; Maerdy; Cargreen; Bradford; Blackwood; Woodside; Sutcombe; Eastnor; Govan (three); Bedford; Stewarton; Ardrossan; Blackpool; West Bridgford; Southampton (two); Northumberland; Bedlington Colliery; Martock; Pembroke; Kilwinning; Mottram; Glossop (two); Clifton; Bishopsgate; Beuhar; Thorniewood; Motherwell; Holytown; Shotts; Skelton; Bellshill; New Stevenston; Craigneuk; Greenock; Torry; Rochester; Newcastle; Bates Cottages; Ashbourne; Clapham Road; Blackburn (two); Woolston; Ormskirk; Prescot; Crainford; Crawford; Waterloo; Hatton; Preston-on-the-Hill; Stockton Heath; Wilmslow; Lostock Gralam; Boxmoor Hall; Strickland; Great Ayton; Higher Broughton and Hoghton; to lie upon the Table .. 561

Feb. 8.] Page

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

East India (Tariffs).—Copy presented, of Views of the Government of India on the question of Preferential Tariffs [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 562

Pilotage.—Copy presented, of Abstract of Returns relating to Pilots and Pilotage in the United Kingdom (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 312, of Session 1902) as furnished by the various Pilotage Authorities [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 33.] 562

Life Assurance Companies.—Copy presented, of Statements of Accounts, and of Life Assurance and Annuity Business and Abstracts of Actuarial Reports deposited with the Board of Trade during the year ended 31st December, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 34.] .. 562

Army (Imperial Yeomanry).—Copy presented, of Training Return of Imperial Yeomanry for 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 562

Commons Act, 1876 (Oxshott Heath, Surrey).—Copy presented, of Report by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries upon an application for a Provisional Order for the regulation of Oxshott Heath, in the parish of Cobham, in the county of Surrey [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 35.] 562

Commons Act, 1876 (Merrow Downs, Surrey).—Copy presented, of Report by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries upon an application for a Provisional Order for the regulation of Merrow Downs, in the parish of Merrow, in the county of Surrey [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 36.] 562

Destructive Insects Act, 1877.—Copy presented, of an Order dated the 13th October, 1903, revoking the Orders of the Board of Agriculture under the Act dated respectively the 22nd August, 1901, the 31st May, 1902, and the 5th June, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 563

Brewers' Licences.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 5th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 37.] 563

Consolidated Fund.—Abstract Account presented, showing the issues made from the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom in the financial year ended 31st March, 1903, for the Interest and Management of the Debt, for the Civil List, and for all other Issues in the financial year for services charged directly on the said Fund; with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 38.] 563

Superannuation Act, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 12th August, 1903, granting to Theophilus Evans, Inspector of Postmen and Telegraph Messengers, Worcester Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 563

Superannuation Act, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 19th October, 1903, granting to Charles Hasdell, 3rd Class Clerk in the Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 563

Feb. 8.] Page

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).—Copies presented, of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3118 to 3120 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 563

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 19th October, 1903, granting to James Ruttley, late Overseer and Senior Telegraphist, Central Telegraph Office, London, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 564

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd October, 1903, granting to Commander Francis Alford, Navigating Commander H.M.T.S. "Monarch," Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 564

TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT THREE PER CENT. GUARANTEED STOCK.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 1st November, 1903, guaranteeing the payment of interest and repayment of principal of the Transvaal Government Three per cent. Guaranteed Stock [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 564

COMMITTALS (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Peace of the number of persons committed for trial in 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 564

PAPER LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.—Lunacy.—Copy of Return to the Lord Chancellor of the number of Visits made and the number of Patients seen by the several Commissioners in Lunacy during the six months ending on the 31st December, 1903 [by Act] 564

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

DEPUTATIONS OF DOCKYARD TRADES.—Question, Mr. Reginald Lucas (Portsmouth); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 565

REGISTRAR-GENERAL'S RETURNS—GROUPING OF COUNTIES.—Question, Mr. Ellis Griffith (Anglesey); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 565

INDEBTEDNESS OF BOROUGH COUNCILS.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 565

RETURN OF ELECTRIC LIGHTING ACTS.—Question, Mr. John Ellis; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 566

CUSTOMS DUTY—TOBACCO FOR PERSONAL CONSUMPTION.—Question, Mr. Moon (St. Pancras, N.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain.. 566

CONGESTION OF BUSINESS AT THE LAW COURTS.—Question, Sir Thomas Dewar (Tower Hamlets, St. George's); Answer, Sir Robert Finlay 567

INDIAN AND AUSTRALIAN MAIL DELAYS.—Question, Sir Seymour King (Hull, Central); Answer, Lord Stanley 568

IRELAND—REDUCTION OF SECOND-TERM RENTS.—Question, Mr. T. W. Russell (Tyrone, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 569

IRISH NATIONAL EDUCATION—REDUCTION OF AVERAGE.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 571

Feb. 8.] Page

SALARIES OF IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHERS.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 571

GUN LICENCES IN IRELAND—CASE OF PATRICK NEEDHAM.—Question, Dr. Ambrose (Mayo, W.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 571

DUKE OF YORK'S SCHOOL—DISPOSAL OF SITE.—Question, Mr. Whitmore (Chelsea); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 572

NEW FIELD GUNS —PROPORTION TO BE MADE BY PRIVATE FIRMS.—Question, Mr. J. F. Hope (Sheffield, Brightside); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster .. 572

LADY CLERKS IN CROWN AGENTS' OFFICES.—Question, Mr. Heywood Johnstone (Sussex, Horsham); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 573

IMMIGRANTS INTO CANADA.—Question, Mr. D. A. Thomas (Merthyr Tydvil); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 573

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

CUBICLES FOR SOLDIERS.—Question, Lieutenant-Colonel Tufnell (Essex, S.E.); Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.).. 574

DESTRUCTION OF MILITARY STORES AT DURBAN.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 574

COST OF SOMALILAND EXPEDITION.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 575

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR CORRESPONDENCE.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 575

THIBET.—Question, Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree (Bethnal Green, N.E.); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 576

GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF SOUTH AFRICAN RAILWAY.—Question, Mr. Buchanan. Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 577

CHINESE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Sir Brampton Gurdon (Norfolk, N.) and Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 577

MALTA.—Question, Mr. Boland (Kerry, S.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 578

THE WEST INDIAN RELIEF GRANTS.—Question, Mr. Lough (Islington, W.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 578

GERMANY AND CANADA.—Question, Mr. Black (Banffshire); Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) .. 579

THE PURCHASE OF CHILIAN BATTLESHIPS.—Question, Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.); Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 579

Feb. 8.] Page

TOBACCO GROWING IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Wm. Redmond (Clare, E.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 580

STATUS AND DUTIES OF GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS.—Question, Mr. D. A. Thomas (Merthyr Tydvil); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 580

WELSH SMOKELESS COAL.—Questions, Sir Lees Knowles (Salford, W.) and Mr. Coghill (Stoke-upon-Trent); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 581

SERVANTS' REGISTRY OFFICES.—Question, Mr. Boland; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 582

BOARD OF TRADE AND RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 583

THE FISCAL INQUIRY.—Questions, Mr. Black, Mr. Rea (Gloucester); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 584

COAL EXPORT DUTY.—Question, Mr. D. A. Thomas; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 584

BRUSSELS SUGAR CONVENTION.—Question, Mr. Lough; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 585

AMENDMENT OF THE COMPANIES ACT.—Question, Major Evans Gordon (Tower Hamlets, Stepney); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 586

LONDON TUBE RAILWAYS.—Question, Sir Thomas Dewar (Tower Hamlets, St. George's); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 586

LONDON TELEPHONE SYSTEM.—Question, Sir Thomas Dewar; Answer, The Postmaster General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 587

AMERICAN MAIL ROUTES.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Lord Stanley 588

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AND THE TELEPHONE.—Question, Mr. Lough; Answer, Lord Stanley 588

THE CHRIST'S HOSPITAL SITE.—Question, Sir Joseph Dimsdale (London); Answer, Lord Stanley 588

TAY FISHERIES.—Question, Sir John Leng (Dundee); Answer, The Lord Advocate (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgeton) 589

GEOLOGICAL SURVEYS OF IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, The Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education (Sir William Anson, Oxford University) 589

RAILWAY RATES IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Boland; Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 590

SUBSIDISED COACH AND STEAMER SERVICE, IRELAND.—Questions, Mr. William Redmond and Mr. Joyce (Limerick); Answers, Mr. Wyndham 591

Feb. 8.] Page

LETTIR (KERRY) NATIONAL SCHOOL.—Question, Mr. Boland; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 591

LAND PURCHASE ACT—PUBLIC TRUSTEE.—Question, Mr. T. W. Russell (Tyrone, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 592

GLENNAGH LAND DISPUTE.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 592

LONGFORD CRIMES ACT PROSECUTION.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 592

LONGFORD POLICE BARRACKS LOCK-UP.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 593

IRISH LAND PURCHASE—FUTURE TENANTS.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd (Sligo, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 593

OWENMORE RIVER FLOODS.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 593

LABOURERS' COTTAGES IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. O'Shaughnessy (Limerick, W.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 594

CUSACK ESTATE.—Questions, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answers, Mr. Wyndham .. 594

BEE-KEEPING IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Boland; Answer, The Attorney-General for Ireland (Mr. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.) 595

IRISH MAGISTRACY.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Atkinson .. 596

BELFAST POST OFFICE—COUNTER LOSSES.—Questions, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Lord Stanley 596

KILRUSH AND THE CANADIAN MAIL SERVICE.—Question, Mr. William Redmond; Answer, Lord Stanley 597

PORT OF LONDON BILL.—Questions, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) and Sir F. Dixon-Hartland (Middlesex, Uxbridge); Answers, Mr. Akers Douglas 597

TOWN HOLDINGS COMMITTEE.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 597

RUSSIA AND JAPAN.—Questions, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) and Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answers, Mr. Akers Douglas .. 598

STANDING ORDERS.—Ordered, That the Select Committee on Standing Orders do consist of thirteen Members:—Sir John Brunner, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. John Edward Ellis, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Halsey, Mr. Humphreys-Owen, Mr. James Lowther, Sir James Rankin, Mr. William Redmond, Colonel Stopford-Sackville, Sir Mark M'Taggart Stewart, Mr. Whitmore, and Mr. Wodehouse were accordingly nominated Members of the Committee.—(Mr. Halsey) 599

SELECTION.—Mr. Blake, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Sir John Dorrington, Sir William Hart Dyke, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. McKenna, Sir Mark McTaggart Stewart, Mr. Wharton, and Mr. Wodehouse were nominated Members of the Committee of Selection with the Chairman of the Select Committee on Standing Orders.—(Mr. Halsey) 599

Feb. 8.] Page

NEW BILL.

Coal Mines Regulation Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to Coal Mines," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda), Mr. Thomas Bayley, Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Hatch, Mr. Jacoby, Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Theodore Taylor, Mr. McKenna, and Mr. Herbert Lewis; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 42] 599

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—FIFTH DAY.—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Main Question again proposed—

Mr. Joseph Walton (Yorkshire, W.R., Barnsley) 600

Amendment proposed at the end of the Question to add the words—

"And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that it is essential for the safeguarding and promotion of the commercial and political interests of the British Empire that adequate steps should be taken to maintain and extend our commercial treaty rights, and that the Consular Service should be reorganised and strengthened on lines calculated to make it more effective for the promotion of the trade of the British Empire."—(Mr. Joseph Walton.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 615

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main Question again proposed.

FISCAL POLICY.

Mr. John Morley (Montrose Burghs) 623

Amendment proposed, at the end of the Question, to add the words—

"But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House, that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population ; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question proposed, " That those words be there added."

The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 644
Mr. Emmott (Oldham) 664

It being half-past Seven of the Clock the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

King's Speech (Motion for an Address).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February],

" That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty as followeth—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was.

" At the end of the Question to add the words, ' But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population ; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment and well-being." '—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Mr. Emmott 669
Sir M. Hicks Beach (Bristol, W.) 678
Mr. Haldane (Haddingtonshire) 695
Mr. Pike Pease (Darlington) 703

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

Page

HOUSE OF LORDS : TUESDAY, 9TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificate from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with :—Torquay Tramways. The same was ordered to lie on the Table 709

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TRADE REPORTS : ANNUAL SERIES.—No. 3120. Finances of Italy for 1903. Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table 709

DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS ACT, 1877.—Order, dated 13th October, 1903, revoking the Orders of the Board of Agriculture under the Act, dated respectively 22nd August, 1901, 31st May, 1902, and 5th June, 1902. 709

COMMONS ACT, 1876.—Reports by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries upon an application for a Provisional Order for the regulation of Oxshott Heath, in the Parish of Cobham, in the county of Surrey ; Merrow Downs, in the parish of Merrow, in the county of Surrey 709

PRIVATE PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.—Report by the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under Section 2 of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, That, having regard to Section 16 (2) of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, the provisions of the Clyde Valley Electrical Power Order ; the Govan Burgh (Electricity) Order ; the Lothians Electric Power Order ; and of Part V. of the Kirkcaldy Corporation Order ; are of such a character that they ought to be dealt with by Private Bills and not by Provisional Orders.

That the provisions of the Clyde Navigation (Shieldhall Dock) Order ; the Clyde Navigation (Works) Order ; and of the Young and Bell's Patents Order; are of such a character that they ought to be dealt with by Private Bills and not by Provisional Orders.

That, save as aforesaid, the Provisional Orders be allowed to proceed subject to such recommendations as may be hereafter made with respect to the several orders 710

LUNACY COMMISSION.—Return to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made and the number of patients seen, by the several Commissioners in Lunacy, during the six months ended 31st December, 1903 710

TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT THREE PER CENT. GUARANTEED STOCK.—Treasury Minute, dated 1st November, 1903, guaranteeing the payment of interest and repayment of principal of the Transvaal Government three per cent. Guaranteed Stock 710

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

House adjourned at a quarter before Four o'clock, to Thursday next, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: TUESDAY, 9TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been complied with, viz. :—Donegal Railway Bill; Norwich Water Bill; Southend Water Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time. 710

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH.)—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 63 has been complied with, viz. :

Corbridge Gas Bill.

Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time 711

Acton Improvement Bill.—Birkdale Improvement Bill; Carlisle Corporation Bill; Corporation of London (Southwark and other Bridges) Bill; Doncaster Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed 711

Hampton-in-Arden Gas Bill.—Read a second time, and committed .. 711

Kirkby-in-Ashfield Urban District Gas Bill.—Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill; Leyton Urban District Council Bill; Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water Bill; London County Council (General) Powers Bill; Lytham Improvement Bill; Radcliffe Tramways and Improvement Bill; Reading Corporation Bill; Selby Urban District Council Bill; Sheffield. Laughton, and Maltby Railway Bill; Skipton Water and Improvement Bill; Soothill Nether Urban District Tramways Bill; Swindon Corporation Bill; Thames River Steamboat Service Bill; Thurles Urban District Council Water Bill; Tottenham Improvement Bill; Wolverhampton Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed 711

Dumbarton Tramways Order Confirmation Bill.—To confirm a Provisional Order under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating to Dumbarton Tramways, ordered to be brought in by The Lord Advocate and Mr. Solicitor-General for Scotland 711

Dumbarton Tramways Order Confirmation Bill.—"To confirm a Provisional Order under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating to Dumbarton Tramways," presented accordingly; and ordered to be considered upon Thursday 711

Kilmarnock Corporation Order Confirmation Bill.—To confirm a Provisional Order under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating to Kilmarnock Corporation, ordered to be brought in by The Lord Advocate and Mr. Solicitor-General for Scotland 711

Kilmarnock Corporation Order Confirmation Bill.—"To confirm a Provisional Order under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating to Kilmarnock Corporation," presented accordingly, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 17th February, and to be printed. [Bill 43.] 712

PETITIONS.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Weston super-Mare; Perth (two); Ryton on Tyne; Craghead; Chester le Street; Blaydon; Springwell; Swalwell; Bristol (two) Wellingborough; Moeladda Airdrie; Dewsbury; Uppermill; Lanark; Falkirk; Clifton; Woolwich; Lumley; Pendleton; Penygraig; Beddgelert; Capel Uchaf; Llancelhaian; Brynrhos; Bettws; Garn Carmel; Baladeulyn; Bwlan; Canterbury (two); Hylton Colliery; St. Ives; Salford; Eccles (two); Acton; Broad Chalke; Rochdale; Woodfalls; Hull; Gillingham; Chipping Sodbury; Urmston; Waterside; Port Isaac; Delabole; Moorside; Harrow Green; Wanstead; Dalkeith; Penygroes; Chelsea; Sowerby Bridge; Luddenden Penicuik; Liverpool; Abergorlech; Hill Top; West Calder; Loanhead Lancaster; Stanford le Hope; Barnstaple; Dyffryn; Ore; Nelson; Padiham; Runcorn; East Holywell; Appledore; Pegswood; Talybont; Winsford; Farnworth; Birkenhead; Leith (two); Tow Law; Crook; New Mills; Bucksburn; Coppenhall; Canonbury; Driffield; Stanford le Hope; Nelson (two); to lie upon the Table 712

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Bill.—Petition from Clitheroe, in favour, to lie upon the Table 712

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT THREE PER CENT. GUARANTEED STOCK.—Paper [presented 8th February] to be printed. [No. 39.] 712

SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACTS.—Copy presented, of Rule, dated 30th December, 1903, made by the Lord Chancellor, under Section 29 of The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, as to the taking of recognisances by the Governor of a Prison [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 713

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.—Copy presented, of Report by the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, that they are of opinion that the Clyde Valley Electrical Power Order; the Govan Burgh (Electricity) Order; the Lothians Electric Power Order; Part V. of the Kirkcaldy Corporation Order; the Clyde Navigation (Shieldhall Dock) Order; the Clyde Navigation (Works) Order; and the Young and Bell's Patents Orders ought to be dealt with by Private Bill and not by Provisional Order [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 40.] 713

ARMY (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).—Copy presented, of Statement of the Amounts due by the Public to Depositors on 31st March, 1901, and of the Receipts, Interest, and Disbursements during the year ended 31st March, 1902, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 41.].. 713

COMMONS (INCLOSURE AWARDS).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 23rd April, 1903; Sir John Brunner]; to lie upon the Table 713

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

I. Bank of England. Copy of all applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for advances to Government authorised by Parliament, from 5th January, 1903, to 5th January, 1904 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 42.]

2. Inquiry into Charities (County of Wilts.). Further Return, relative thereto [ordered 9th August, 1901; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen]; to be printed. [No. 43.] 713

Feb. 9.] Page

LABOURERS' COTTAGES (IRELAND).—Return ordered, "showing the number of Cottages applied for in every Poor Law Union in Ireland under the latest completed scheme in connection with the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, together with the number of applications for extra half acres to cottages already under the Acts under said scheme; how many of these applications for cottages and extra half acres were sanctioned; the amount of expenses connected with such scheme; and in what way applied."—(Mr. O'Shaughnessy.) 714

THIBET (TRADE STATISTICS).—Address for "Return of Statistics relating to trade with Thibet since the date of the signing of the Convention of 1890, giving particulars regarding the quantity, classification, and value of the annual exports from British India to Thibet of (a) non-Indian merchandise; (b) of Indian merchandise; and (c) of exports from Thibet to British India."—(Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree.) 714

COAL EXPORTS, ETC.—Return ordered, "giving, for the year 1903, the export of Coal from each port in the United Kingdom to each Country Abroad, together with summary Statements showing the export of Coal in every period of three months from the principal districts of the United Kingdom to the principal groups of Foreign Countries; and also showing the quantity of Coal shipped at each Port in the United Kingdom for ships' use on Foreign voyages during the like periods (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 111 of Session 1903)."—(Mr. D. A. Thomas) 714

SUNDERLAND COUNTY BOROUGH (INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES).—Return ordered, "comprising (1) the Reports made to the Charity Commissioners, in the result of an Inquiry held in the county borough of Sunderland into endowments, subject to the provisions of the Charitable Trust Acts, 1853 to 1894, and appropriated in whole or in part for the benefit of that county borough, or of any part thereof, together with the Reports on those endowments of the Commissioners for inquiring concerning Charities, 1818 to 1837; (2) a Digest showing whether any, and, if any, what such endowments are recorded in the books of the Charity Commissioners in the county borough; and (3) an Index, alphabetically arranged, of names and places mentioned in the Report."—(Mr. Griffith-Boscawen.)

GATESHEAD COUNTY BOROUGH (INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES).—Return ordered, "comprising (1) the Reports made to the Charity Commissioners, in the result of an inquiry held in the county borough of Gateshead into endowments, subject to the provisions of the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1894, and appropriated in whole or in part for the benefit of that county borough, or of any part thereof, together with the Reports on those endowments of the Commissioners for inquiring concerning Charities, 1818 to 1837; and (2) a Digest showing whether any, and, if any, what such endowments are recorded in the books of the Charity Commissioners in the county borough; and (3) an Index alphabetically arranged of names and places mentioned in the Report."—(Mr. Griffith-Boscawen). .. ..

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

FACTORIES IN LONDON.—Question, Sir Thomas Dewar (Tower Hamlets, St. George's; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 715

LADY FACTORY INSPECTOR FOR THE POTTERIES.—Question, Sir Charles Dilke (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 716

Page

UNEXPENDED BALANCES.—Question, Mr. J. F. Hope (Sheffield, Brightside); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 716

OPERATIONS OF IRISH LAND ACT, 1903.—Question, Mr. P. A. M'Hugh (Leitrim, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 717

DIVISION OF GRAZING FARM AT ISLAND, COUNTY MAYO.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell (Mayo, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 717

RIGHT OF WAY ON GRAZING FARM AT ISLAND, COUNTY MAYO.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 718

IRISH POLICE ON DUTY AT RAILWAY STATION.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 718

CENSORSHIP OF PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 719

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

DE BEERS MINES, LIMITED.—Questions, Mr. Whitley (Halifax); Answers, The Financial Secretary to the War Office (Mr. Bromley Davenport, Cheshire, Macclesfield) 719

ARMY CONTRACTS IN IRELAND.—Questions, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick) and Mr. Nannetti (Dublin, College Green); Answers, Mr. Bromley Davenport 720

NAVY CONTRACTS.—Sir John Leng (Dundee); Answer, The Secretary to the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) 721

H.M.S. "CENTURION"—NAVY GUN SIGHTS.—Questions, Mr. Reginald Lucas (Portsmouth) and Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answers, Mr. Pretyman 721

INDIAN RAILWAY CONTRACTS FOR GERMANY.—Questions, Sir Thomas Dewar (Tower Hamlets, St. George's), Sir Charles M'Laren (Leicestershire, Bosworth), Sir Thomas Wrightson (St. Pancras, E.), and Mr. Maconochie (Aberdenshire, E.); Answers, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford).. 722

CONVICT LABOUR FOR JOHANNESBURG MINES.—Question, Mr. Whitley; Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 723

AUSTRALIAN IMMIGRATION ACT.—Question, Mr. Edmund Robertson (Dundee); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 723

COAL EXPORTS.—Question, Mr. D. A. Thomas (Merthyr Tydvil); Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 724

BOARD OF TRADE JOURNAL.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland); Answer, the President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 724

VEHICULAR ACCIDENTS IN LONDON.—Question, Sir Thomas Dewar; Answer, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 724

Feb. 9.] Page

POTTERY TRADE RULES.—Question, Sir Charles M'Laren ; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 725

COLLECTIONS FOR THE RELIEF OF THE WORKING CLASSES.—Question, Mr. D. A. Thomas ; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 725

PAY OF RURAL POSTMEN IN DEVONSHIRE.—Question, Mr. Soares (Devonshire, Barnstaple) ; Answer, The Postmaster General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 726

POSTMEN'S COMPASSIONATE GRATUITIES.—Question, Mr. Soares ; Answer, Lord Stanley 726

UNDERGROUND TELEGRAPHIC CABLES.—Question, Sir John Leng ; Answer, Lord Stanley 727

CORK POST OFFICE.—Question, Mr. J. F. X. O'Brien (Cork) ; Answer, Lord Stanley 727

GLENCAR ROAD DISPUTE.—Question, Mr. Boland (Kerry, S.) ; Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 727

IRISH DRAINAGE LOANS.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.) ; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 728

IRISH DRAINAGE BOARDS.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell ; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 728

KING-HARMAN ESTATE.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell ; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 729

CHINESE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Questions, Major Seely (Isle of Wight), Sir Charles McLaren, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs), Sir Robert Reid (Dumfries Burghs), and Mr. Herbert Samuel ; Answers, Mr. Lyttelton 729

ROYAL COMMISSION ON TRADE DISPUTES.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel ; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 733

NEW MEMBERS SWORN.—The honourable Alban George Henry Gibbs for City of London.

Joseph Dobbie, esquire, Ayr District of Burghs 733

NEW BILLS.

Small Dwellings (Acquisition) Bill.—"To amend the provisions of the Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899," presented by Sir Thomas Wrightson ; supported by Mr. Claude Hay, Mr. Graham, Mr. Peel, Sir Alfred Hickman, Captain Jessel, Mr. Moon, Mr. Pike Pease, Mr. Collings, and Mr. Griffith-Boscawen ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 44.] 733

Highways Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to Highways," presented by Mr. Henry Hobhouse ; supported by Sir John Dorington, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Bill, Mr. Heywood Johnstone, and Mr. Herbert Lewis ; to be read a second time upon Monday, 29th February, and to be printed. [Bill 45.] 733

Roman Catholic Disabilities Removal Bill.—" To abolish Disabilities still affecting Roman Catholics in the United Kingdom," presented by Mr. M'Kean ; supported by Mr. Patrick O'Brien, Mr. Dillon, Captain Donelan, Lord Edmund Talbot, Mr. William Redmond, Mr. Joseph Devlin, Mr. James Hope, and Mr. Clancy ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 22nd April, and to be printed. [Bill 46.] 733

Wages Boards Bill.—" To provide for the establishment of Wages Boards," presented by Sir Charles Dilke ; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, Mr. McKenna, Mr. Tennant, and Mr. Trevelyan ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 47.] 734

Wild Birds Protection Acts Amendment Bill.—" To amend the Wild Birds Protection Acts," presented by Mr. Sydney Buxton ; supported by Sir John Stirling-Maxwell, Sir Robert Reid, Colonel Lockwood, and Sir Edward Grey ; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 48.] 734

Jury Acts (Ireland) Bill.—" To amend the Jury Acts in Ireland," presented by Mr. John Campbell ; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. MacNeill, Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy ; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 22nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 49.] 734

Contempt of Court (Ireland) Bill.—" To amend the Law of Contempt of Court in Ireland," presented by Mr. Sheehy ; supported by Mr. Clancy and Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 50.] 734

Irish Lights Board Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to the Irish Lights Board," presented by Captain Donelan ; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. Field, Mr. Flynn, Mr. Doogan, Mr. James O'Connor, and Mr. Nannetti ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 51.] .. 734

Conspiracy (Ireland) Bill.—" To amend the Law of Conspiracy in Ireland," presented by Mr. Doogan ; supported by Captain Donelan, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell, Mr. Condon, Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh, Mr. Kilbride, and Mr. J. P. Farrell ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 11th March, and to be printed. [Bill 52.] 734

Business of the House (King's Speech, Motion for an Address).—Ordered, " That the proceedings on the Address in Answer to His Majesty's Speech shall, until concluded, have precedence of all other Orders of the Day and of Notices of Motion at all Sittings for which they are set down."—(Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) 735

King's Speech (Motion for an Address). [Sixth Day.].—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Pike Pease (Darlington) 735
Sir Robert Reid (Dumfries Burghs) 742
Mr. Hunt (Shropshire, Ludlow) 747
Sir Henry Fowler (Wolverhampton, E.) 752
The Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade (Mr. Bonar Law, Glasgow, Blackfriars) 769
Lord George Hamilton (Middlesex, Ealing) 787
Sir James Kitson (Yorkshire, W. R., Colne Valley) 801

And it being half-past Seven of the Clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

King's Speech (Motion for an Address).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words—But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Mr. Richard Cavendish (Lancashire, North Lonsdale) 808
Mr. Griffith Boscawen (Kent, Tunbridge) 810
Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe.) 818
Lord Hugh Cecil (Greenwich) 823
Sir Thomas Wrightson (St. Pancras, E.) 837

Motion made, and Question, " That the debate be now adjourned "—(Sir Charles Dilke)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

NEW BILLS.

TRADE MARKS.—Bill to consolidate and amend the Law relating to Trade Marks, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Fletcher Moulton, Sir William Houldsworth, Mr. Cripps, Mr. Crawley, Mr. Butcher, Mr. Robson, and Sir Albert Rollit.

Trade Marks Bill.—" To consolidate and amend the Law relating to Trade Marks," presented, and read the first time ; to be read a second time upon Tuesday next, and to be printed. [Bill 53.]

EASEMENT OF LIGHT.—Bill to amend the Law relating to Easement of Light, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Fletcher Moulton, Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Herbert Robertson, Mr. Robson, and Mr. Haldane.

Easement of Light Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to Easement of Light." presented and read, the first time ; to be read a second time upon Tuesday next, and to be printed. [Bill 54.] 840

Adjourned at ten minutes before Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, WEDNESDAY, 10TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Kettering Improvement Bill (By order).—Read a second time, and committed 841

Torquay Tramway Bill.—" To authorise the construction of Tramways in Torquay ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; to be read a second time 841

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.—The CHAIRMAN OF WAYS and MEANS reported, that, after conferring with the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, for the purpose of determining in which House of Parliament the respective Bills should be first considered, under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, they had determined that the Bills contained in the following list should originate in the House of Lords :—Clyde Valley Electrical Power ; Govan Burgh (Electricity) ; Lothians Electric Power ; Young and Bell's Patents. Report to lie upon the Table 841

Feb. 10.] Page

PETITIONS.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Brixton; Upper Norwood; West Dulwich; Prescelly; Cloughfold; Cheetham Hill; Winchester; Peniel; Halifax; Leicester; Tudhoe Colliery; Llansamlet; Clevedon; Hyfrydir; Preston; South Hackney; Cheltenham; Rhayader; Hedgerley; Darlington; Penisarwaen; Maesydref; Port Dinorwic; Bontnewyd; Maybole; Fenstanton; Seaton (two); Haslingden; Glasgow; Bristol; Emsworth; Green Moor; Kilmarnock; Port Glasgow; Newton Heath; Pontycymmer (two); Lindal; Buchlyvies; Bannockburn; Westhoughton; Salford (two); Paisley; Altrincham; Llansantffraid; Dewsbury; Llwynmaur; Glynceiriog; Wilsden; Cullompton; Hill of Beath; Aberystwyth; Rhydlewis; Low Leighton; Pencombe; Leominster; Hammersmith; Bampton; Buckland; Crieff (two); Comrie; Derby; and Lower Broughton; to lie upon the Table 841

RATING OF GROUND RENTS AND VALUES.—Petition from Bermondsey, for legislation; to lie upon the Table 842

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

CIVIL SERVICES (SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1903–4).—Estimate presented, of the further Sums required to be voted for the Service of the year ending 31st March, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 44.] 842

DUCHY OF CORNWALL.—Account presented, of the Receipts and Disbursements of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ended 31st December, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 45] 842

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 4th February, 1904, declaring that Charles Dyer, Viewer, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 842

SEA FISHERIES REGULATION ACT, 1888.—Copy presented, of Order made by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, under the provisions of the said Act, for the variation of the Order creating the Southern Sea Fisheries District [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 842

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

CONTRACTS FOR SHIPMENT OF STORES TO GIBRALTAR.—Question, Mr. Partington (Derbyshire, High Peak); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 842

RE-ARMAMENT OF VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY.—Question, Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 843

REVISION OF BELFAST POST OFFICE.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Lord Stanley 843

REMOVAL OF PAUPERS.—Question, Mr. Alexander Cross (Glasgow, Camlachie); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 843

CHARGES FOR EUROPEAN OFFICERS IN INDIAN CAVALRY REGIMENTS.—Question, Sir Seymour King (Hull, Central); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 845

PAYMENT OF COMMUTATION ALLOWANCES TO RETIRED MEMBERS OF INDIAN UNCOVENANTED SERVICES.—Question, Sir Seymour King; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 845

ARMY ESTIMATES—PUBLICATION OF APPENDICES.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; (Perthshire); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 845

EXPENDITURE UNDER SOUTH AFRICAN LOAN ACT.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 845

TRANSVAAL LABOUR ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 846

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS ARMAMENT.—Question, Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough); Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 846

INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE REFORMS.—Question, Mr. Herbert Roberts (Denbighshire, W.); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 84 6

LABOUR STATISTICS FOR TRANSVAAL MINES.—Question, Mr. D. A. Thomas (Merthyr Tydvil); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 847

CHINESE LABOUR FOR THE TRANSVAAL—WAGES.—Question, Sir John Leng (Dundee) Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 847

TRANSVAAL IMPORTED LABOUR ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland) and Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answers, Mr. Lyttelton 848

MACEDONIAN REFORMS.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) ..

LORD CURZON'S VISIT TO BUSHIRE.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, Earl Percy 851

CENTRAL AFRICAN LABOURERS IN TRANSVAAL MINES.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Earl Percy 851

GOVERNMENT OF THE SOUDAN.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Earl Percy .. 851

CANTON-KOWLOON RAILWAY.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Earl Percy .. 852

ELECTRICITY IN MINES.—Questions, Mr. Fenwick (Northumberland, Wansbeck) and Mr. Tennant (Berwickshire); Answers, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 852

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL SITE.—Question, Mr. Cohen (Islington, E.); Answer, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 853

IRISH RAILWAY FREIGHTS.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick's); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 853

Feb. 10.] Page

RUSSIA-JAPANESE WAR—DUTIES OF NEUTRALS.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 854

Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Bill.—Order for Second Reading upon Friday, 25th March read, and discharged. Bill withdrawn 854

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—[SEVENTH DAY.]—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February]. "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir Charles Dilke (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean.) 855
Mr. Ritchie (Croydon) 866
Mr. Randles (Cumberland, Cockermouth) 881
Sir Edward Grey (Northumberland, Berwick) 883
(The President of the Local Government Board (Mr. Walter Long, Bristol, S.) 898
Mr. Winston Churchill (Oldham) 907
Mr. White Ridley (Staleybridge) 921

And, it being half-past Seven of the Clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question to add the words 'But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir William Holland (Yorkshire, W.R., Rotherham) 926
Sir J. Dickson-Poynder (Wiltshire, Chippenham) 934
Sir George Bartley (Islington, N.) 939
Mr. Lloyd-George (Carnarvon Burghs) 946
Sir Gilbert Parker (Gravesend) 954

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, 11th FEBRUARY, 1904.

EARLDOM OF NORFOLK.—Petition of Charles Botolph Joseph Lord Mowbray Lord Segrave and Baron and Lord Stourton of Stourton in the county of Wiltshire, praying for leave to lodge a supplementary case; read, and ordered as prayed 961

LE POWER AND COROGHMORE BARONY.—Petition of Edmond de le Poer of Gurteen le Poer, in the county of Waterford, Esquire (claiming to be Baron of Le Power and Coroghmore in the Peerage of Ireland), to His Majesty, praying that His Majesty may be graciously pleased to give directions to the Attorney-General in Ireland to investigate the Petitioner's pedigree and his right to the succession to the dignity and honour of Baron of Le Power and Coroghmore in the Peerage of Ireland; and also as to the outlawry against John Power in or about the year 1691, in order that the same may be reversed if found to affect the Petitioner; and, if not, that then the Petitioner may be admitted to the full enjoyment of the ancient dignity and honour of his ancestors as Baron Le Power and Coroghmore, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities thereunto belonging, or to make such other order in the premises as in His Majesty's wisdom may be deemed expedient, together with His Majesty's reference thereof to this House, and the report of the Attorney-General thereon thereunto annexed.

Presented [by Command], read, and referred to the Committee for Privileges to consider and report 961

The Lord Romilly took the Oath 961

SAT FIRST.—The Lord Wynford sat first in Parliament after the death of his kinsman 961

Feb. 10.] Page

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Elysee Palace Hotel Company Bill [H.L.]; Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways Bill [H.L.]; referred to the Examiners 962

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ROLL OF THE LORDS.—The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that Clerk of the Parliaments had prepared and laid it on the Table; The same was ordered to be printed. (No. 7) 962

AFRICA No. 1 (1904).—Correspondence and Report from His Majesty's Consul at Boma respecting the administration of the Independent State of the Congo 962

TRANSVAAL (LABOUR COMMISSION).

I. Reports of the Transvaal Labour Commission.

II. Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence 962

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.—Returns of accidents and casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several railway companies in the United Kingdom during the nine months ended—30th September, 1903, in pursuance of the Regulation of Railways Act (1871); together with Reports of the inspecting officers, assistant inspecting officers, and sub-inspectors of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain accidents which were inquired into 962

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

I. Orders made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of light railways in the borough of Maidstone, in the county of Kent; the parishes of Acton, Edgware, Edmonton, Enfield, Finchley, Friern Barnet, Hendon, Hornsey, Little Stanmore, Southgate, Tottenham, Wembley, Willesden, and Wood Green, in the county of Middlesex; the parish of Watford Urban and the urban district of Watford, in the county of Hertford; the urban districts of Quarry Bank, Brierley Hill, and Rowley Regis, in the county of Stafford.

II. An Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Robertsbridge and Pevensey Light Railway Order, 1900.

Presented [by Command], and ordered to lie on the Table 962

COMMITTALS (IRELAND).—Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Peace of the number of persons committed for trial in 1903 963

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS (ENGLAND).—Rule dated 30th December, 1903, made by the Lord Chancellor under Section 29 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, as to the taking of recognisances by the governor of a prison .. 963

SEA FISHERIES REGULATION ACT, 1888.—Order, made by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries under the provisions of the Act, for the variation of the Order creating the Southern Sea Fisheries District 963

SUPERANNUATION.—Treasury Minute, dated 4th February, 1904, declaring that Charles Dyer, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, was appointed without a Civil Service certificate through inadvertence on the part of the head of his Department 963

DUCHY OF CORNWALL.—An account of the receipts and disbursements of the Duchy of Cornwall in the year ended the 31st December, 1903 963

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS, 1853 TO 1891 (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Licence granted by His Majesty to Florence Elizabeth Maybrick, under the provisions of the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891, to which is annexed a condition other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 .. 963

POOR PRISONERS' DEFENCE ACT, 1903 (DRAFT RULES).—Draft rules proposed to be made by the Attorney-General with the approval of the Lord Chancellor and the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 2 of the Act 963

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP).—General rules made pursuant to the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and the Judicature Act, 1881 964

PILOTAGE.—Abstract of returns relating to pilots and pilotage in the United Kingdom (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 312, of session of 1902), as furnished by the various pilotage authorities 964

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.—Statements of accounts and of life assurance and annuity business and abstract of actuarial reports deposited with the Board of Trade, under Section 10 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870. during the year ended 31st December, 1903.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table .. 964

BANK OF ENGLAND.—Applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for advances to Government authorised by Parliament, from 5th January, 1903, to 5th January, 1904; delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 964

BIRMINGHAM BISHOPRIC.—Petition in favour of legislation for the creation of a new See of Birmingham; of the President and Members of the Worcester Diocesan Conference; read and ordered to lie on the Table 964

NEW BILL.

Local Authorities (Qualification of Women) Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to enable women to be elected and act as members of county and borough councils and metropolitan borough councils was presented by the Earl of Beauchamp: read 1a; and to be printed. (No. 8.) 964

CHINESE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL.

The Earl of Portsmouth 965
The Marquess of Ripon 972

Moved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty for Papers relating to the affairs of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, with special reference to the question of the employment of Chinese labour in the Transvaal.—(The Marquess of Ripon.)

The Under Secretary of State for the Colonies (The Duke of Marlborough) .. 986
The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury 1001

Moved, " That the debate be now adjourned."—(Earl Grey)
On Question, Motion agreed to.

LOADING PORT CLAUSE.

Lord Muskerry 1005
Lord Wolverton 1007

House adjourned at twenty-five mintues past Seven o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: THURSDAY, 11TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been complied with, viz.—

Colney Hatch Gas Bill.
London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway Bill.
Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Bill

Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1007

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 63 has been coplied with, viz.—

Chippenham Gas Bill.

Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time 1008

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill.
North and South Woolwich Electric Railway Bill.

Read a second time and committed 1008

Dumbarton Tramways Order Confirmation Bill.—Considered; to be read the third time upon Monday next 1008

PETITIONS.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).—Petitions against alteration of law; from Bulwell; Frome; Bradford (two); Swansea (three); Earlestown; Padgate; Golborne; Haydock; Wigan; Isle of Wight; Newport; Ashton in Makerfield (two); Dawlish; Exeter; Leicester; Wigston; Chester; Manchester (six); Osmotherley; Morehampstead; Stockport; Cynfal; Oakengates; Llandudno; Maenan; Llanddeiniolen; Heckmondwike; Clayton West; Llangyndeyme; Bryn; Southport (seven); Skelmanthorpe; Lowton and Newton;

Fowlmere ; Nottingham (three) ; Ilfracombe ; Fishtoft ; Anglesey ; Llandensant ; Llanfairneubwll Valley ; Gaerwen ; Cemaes Bay ; Dwyran ; Brixton ; Llangwyllog ; Holyhead ; Beaumauris ; Cardiff (five) ; Ilkley ; Rusholme ; Earlestown ; Warrington ; St. Just in Penwith ; Glossop ; Salford ; South Ferriby ; Ashby (two) ; Donington Barracks ; West Felton ; Fairfield ; Ilkeston ; Colne ; Dewsbury ; Durham ; Jarrow ; Birks Morley ; Boldon Colliery ; Rogerstone ; Liverpool ; Keswick ; and Helson (three) ; to lie upon the Table 1008

Sea Fisheries Regulations Act, 1888.—Paper [presented 10th February] to be printed. [No. 46] 1009

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Poor Prisoners' Defence Act, 1903.—Copy presented, of Draft of Rules proposed to be made by the Attorney-General, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor and the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 2 of The Poor Prisoners' Defence Act, 1903 [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table 1009

Penal Servitude Acts (Conditional Licence).—Copy presented, of a Licence to be at large, granted to Florence Elizabeth Maybrick, to which is annexed a condition other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table 1009

Transvaal.—Copy presented, of Reports of the Transvaal Labour Commission [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table 1009

Transvaal.—Copy presented, of Reports of the Transvaal Labour Commission, Minutes of Proceedings, and Evidence [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table. 1009

Africa (No. 1, 1904).—Copy presented, of Correspondence and Report from His Majesty's Consul at Boma respecting the Administration of the Independent State of the Congo [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table 1009

Army (Supplementary Estimate, 1903-4).—Estimate presented, of the Further Amount that will be required during the year ending 31st March, 1904, to meet the Expenditure in excess of that provided for in the original Army Estimates for the year, for the Pay, Transport, Supplies, etc., of the Army [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 47] 1009

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Portuguese Tariff Bill and Lancashire Cotton Trade.—Question, Mr. White Ridley (Stalybridge) ; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1010

Conference in Egypt on Cotton and Bourse Gambling.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick's) ; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1010

Future and Option Gambling in Canada.—Question, Mr. Field ; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1011

Import Duty collected on Wheat, etc., from British India.—Question, Captain Sinclair (Forfarshire) ; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1011

Learners in Cork Post Office.—Question, Mr. J. F. X. O'Brien (Cork) ; Answer, Lord Stanley 1012

Feb. 11.] Page

CONTRACTS FOR COAL SUPPLY TO ENNISCORTHY POST OFFICE.—Question, Sir Thomas Esmonde (Wexford), N.; Answer, Lord Stanley 1012

CARRIAGE OF MAILS BETWEEN LIMERICK AND TRALEE.—Question, Mr. O'Shaughnessy (Limerick, W.); Answer, Lord Stanley 1012

BETTING LEGISLATION.—Question, Mr. O'Shaughnessy (Limerick, W.); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1012

RECORD OF CANCER CASES IN INDIA.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1013

PRACTICAL COOKERY INSTRUCTION IN IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOLS.—Question, Mr. Kennedy (Westmeath, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1014

AUDIT OF BELFAST COUNTY BOROUGH ACCOUNTS.—Question, Mr. Sloan, Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1014

DUBLIN METROPOLITAN POLICE—RETENTION ON ACTIVE LIST OF SUPERINTENDENTS NARRISEY AND DEMPSEY.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1015

ERECTION OF TECHNICAL SCHOOLS IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1015

RESOLUTIONS OF ASYLUM COMMITTEES.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1015

MARINE WORKS IN CONNEMARA.—Question, Mr. O'Malley (Galway, Connemara); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1016

CONSTRUCTION OF MILITARY MAPS.—Question, Lieut.-Colonel Tufnell (Essex, S.E.); Answer, Mr. Arnold Forster 1016

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY EMBANKMENT BETWEEN CHIROMO AND BLANTYRE.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Earl Percy 1017

CHINESE GOVERNMENT AND THE TRANSVAAL LABOUR ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Earl Percy 1017

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

WAR OFFICE INTELLIGENCE DEPARTMENT.—Question, Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.); Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 1018

SOUTH AFRICAN RESERVISTS—RIFLE SIGHTS.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1018

MILITARY ARMAMENTS, STORES, ETC.—PRECAUTIONS AGAINST DEFICIENCES.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1019

GALWAY HARBOUR—NAVAL VISITS.—Question, Mr. Charles Devlin (Galway); Answer, The Secretary to the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) 1019

Feb. 11.] Page

PROPOSED COALING STATIONS IN SOUTH WALES.—Question, Mr. Osmond Williams (Merionethshire); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1020

BRITISH INDIANS AND TRANSVAAL DRAFT ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 1020

TRANSVAAL LABOUR ORDINANCE—TRANSFER OF IMPORTERS' RIGHTS.—Questions, Mr. Edmund Robertson (Dundee), Dr. Macnamara, and Mr. Flynn (Cork, N.); Answers, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 1021

CHINESE LABOUR—REGULATIONS FOR RECRUITING.—Questions, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe), Mr. J. A. Pease (Essex, Saffron Walden), Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar), and Dr. Macnamara; Answers, Mr. Lyttleton 1022

CHINESE GOVERNMENT AND THE TRANSVAAL LABOUR ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 1022

TRANSVAAL MINES—CONVICT LABOUR.—Question, Mr. Whitley (Halifax); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1024

LABOUR LAWS IN AUSTRALIA.—Question, Mr. Edmund Robertson; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1025

LAND SETTLEMENT IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. John Ellis; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1026

TRINIDAD DISTURBANCES.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1026

MALTESE COUNCIL ELECTION.—Question, Mr. Boland (Kerry, S.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1026

RAILWAY EMBANKMENT BETWEEN CHIROMO AND BLANTYRE.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Earl Percy 1027

SHIPPING PROFITS.—Question, Mr. Runciman (Dewsbury); Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) .. 1027

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT—FRAUDULENT WHISKEY.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 1028

PREFERENTIAL RATES FOR FOREIGN PRODUCE.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1028

CANADIAN MAIL ROUTES.—Question, Mr. Charles Devlin; Answer, The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) .. 1029

AVOCH HARBOUR.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Secretary for Scotland (Mr. A. Graham Murray, Buteshire) 1029

SCOTTISH CROFTERS ACT, 1886—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. A. Graham Murray 1030

Feb. 11.] Page

BEE KEEPING IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Boland; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland (Mr. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.) 1030

CORK WINTER ASSIZES—ALLEGED JURY PACKING.—Questions, Mr. Flynn; Answers, Mr. Atkinson 1031

SMERWICK FISHING INDUSTRY.—Question, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell (Kerry, W.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 1032

IRISH MAGISTRATES AND THE IRISH LANGUAGE.—Question, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell; Answer. Mr. Atkinson 1032

IRISH ROAD CONSTRUCTION SURCHARGES.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd (Sligo, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1033

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, BELFAST.—Question, Mr. John Redmond (Waterford); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1033

MILITARY DISTURBANCES AT LIMERICK.—Question, Mr. Joyce (Limerick); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1034

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY—SERGEANT WILLIAMSON'S TRIAL.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1035

VALENTIA FERRY.—Question, Mr. Boland; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1035

CAHIRCIVEEN PARISH COMMITTEE.—Question, Mr. Boland; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1035

IRISH DISTRICT LUNATIC ASYLUMS.—Question, Mr. Charles Devlin; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1035

LAND COMMISSION IN LONGFORD.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1036

CARE OF THE INSANE—SCOTTISH SYSTEM.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1036

COLLUM'S ESTATE, COUNTY FERMANAGH.—Question, Mr. Edward Mitchell (Fermanagh, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1037

LABOURERS (IRELAND) ACTS.—Question, Mr. Sheehan (Cork County, Mid); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1037

IRISH LOCAL GOVERNMENT AUDITORS—QUALIFICATIONS.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1038

STRABANE GAS WORKS LOAN.—Question, Mr. Hemphill (Tyrone, N.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1039

LONGFORD POSTAL ARRANGEMENT.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1039

SELECTION (UNOPPOSED BILL COMMITTEES) (PANEL).—Mr. HALSEY reported from the Committee of Selection that they had selected the following eight Members to be the Panel to serve on Unopposed Bill Committees under Standing Order No. 109:—Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Carvill, Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Heywood Johnstone, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Paulton, Mr. Parker Smith, and Mr. Worsley-Taylor. 1039

Report to lie upon the Table.

SELECTION (STANDING COMMITTEES) (CHAIRMEN'S PANEL).—MR. HALSEY reported from the Committee that they had selected the following six Members to be the Chairmen's Panel and to serve as Chairmen of the two Standing Committees to be appointed under Standing Order No. 49 :—Mr. John Ellis, Sir Thomas Esmunde, Sir James Fergusson, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, Mr. Laurence Hardy, and Mr. Stuart-Wortley 1039

Report to lie upon the Table.

NEW BILL.

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS (FUNDS)BILL.—" To authorise the appropriation of the surplus Funds derived from Battersea Park towards the opening of the Mall into Charing Cross, and other Metropolitan improvements," presented by Mr. Victor Cavendish ; supported by Lord Balcarres ; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 55.] 1039

KING'S SPEECH, (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS) [EIGHTH DAY.]—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question, [2nd February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words ' But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm, and to the welfare of its population ; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being.' "—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Sir Gilbert Parker (Gravesend) 1041
Sir John Gorst (Cambridge University) 1046
Mr. Chaplin (Lincolnshire, Sleaford) 1054
Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen, S.) 1068
The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 1083
Mr. Lough (Islington, W.) 1094

And, it being half-past Seven of the Clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kindgom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question to add the words 'But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. J. F. Hope (Sheffield, Brightside) 1105
Sir John Brunner (Cheshire, Northwich) 1113
Major Seely (Isle of Wight) 1118
Mr. Parker Smith (Lanarkshire, Partick) 1122
Mr. Bell (Derby) 1133

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed this day.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS: FRIDAY, 12TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with:—
Ilford Urban District Council 1137

And also the Certificates that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Lancashire Electric Power [H.L.]; West Riding Tramways [H.L.]; Cambrian Railways [H.L.]; Tynemouth Gas [H.L.]; Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads [H.L.]; Yorktown and Blackwaters Gas [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Steam Vessels) [H.L.]; Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas [H.L.]; Victoria University of Manchester [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Extension of Time, etc.) [H.L.]. The same were ordered to lie on the Table 1137

Feb. 12.] Page

Appleby Corporation Gas Bill [H.L.]; Barrow-in-Furness Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways) Bill [H.L.]; Bridlington Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Bristol Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Buxton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Chesterfield Corporation Tramways and Improvements) Bill [H.L.]; Chesterfield Gas and Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Derwent Valley Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Ebbw Vale Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Filey Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad Bill [H.L.]; Holywood Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment), Bill [H.L.]; Ipswich Dock Commission Bill [H.L.]; Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Corporation Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Mersey Docks and Harbour Board Bill [H.L.]; Milwr and District Mines Drainage Bill [H.L.]; Minehead Urban District Council Water Bill [H.L.]; Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Oakengates, Dawley, and District Joint Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Preston Corporation Water Bill [H.L.]; Shipley Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; South Staffordshire Mines Drainage Bill [H.L.]; Tynemouth Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Ulster Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance) Bill [H.L.] Read 2a 1137

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TREATY SERIES, NO. 2 (1904).—Convention respecting payment of light and harbour dues by vessels of the United States in Zanzibar; signed at Washington, 5th June, 1903. (Ratifications exchanged at Washington, 24th December, 1903.) Presented [by Command], and ordered to lie on the Table 1138

ARMY (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).—Statement of the amount due by the public to depositors in Military Savings Banks on the 31st March, 1901, and of the receipts, interest, and disbursements in the said Military Savings Banks during the year next ensuing, ended on the 31st March, 1902, etc. 1138

SUPERANNUATION.—Treasury Minute, dated 4th February, 1904, granting a retired allowance to Edward Joseph Carey, late a messenger in the office of the Chief Secretary, Dublin Castle 1138

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

NEW BILLS.

Polling Arrangements (Parliamentary Boroughs) Bill.—[H.L.] (No. 9).—A Bill to amend the law relating to the arrangement of polling districts in Parliamentary Boroughs; and 1338

Polling Districts (County Councils) Bill [H.L.] (No. 10).—A Bill to make further provision with respect to the arrangement of polling districts for the election of County Councillors.

Were presented by the Lord Ribblesdale; read 1a, and to be printed .. 1338

Newcastle Chapter (Amendments) Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to make further provisions for the foundation of a Dean and Chapter of Newcastle, and for other purposes connected therewith. Was presented by the Lord Bishop of St. Albans; read 1a, and to be printed. (No. 11).

Feb. 12.] Page

WEI-HAI-WEI.

Earl Spencer 1138
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (the Marquess of Lansdowne) 1138

THE CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES.

The Marquess of Lansdowne 1140

Moved, That the Lord Balfour be appointed to take the Chair in the Committee of the Whole House, and in all Committees upon Private Bills in the absence of the Chairman of Committees from illness.—(The Marquess of Lansdowne.)

Earl Spencer 1140
The Earl of Cork 1140
The Duke of Abercorn 1140

On Question, Motion agreed to.

CHINESE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Order of the Day read for the Adjourned Debate on the Motion of the Marquess of Ripon, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty's Government for Papers relating to the affairs of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, with special reference to the question of the employment of Chinese labour in the Transvaal."

Earl Grey 1141
Earl Carrington 1153
The President of the Board of Agriculture (The Earl of Onslow) 1163
The Lord Bishop of Rochester 1173
Lord Stanmore 1176
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 1185
The Marquess of Ripon 1188

Motion, by leave of the House, withdrawn.
House adjourned at a quarter to Eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: FRIDAY, 12TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Twelve of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Lincolnshire and Yorkshire Electric Power Bill; Plymouth Corporation Bill. Read a second time and committed 1190

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been complied with :—viz., Great Eastern Railway (Steamboats) Bill; Great Eastern Railway Bill
Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1190

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 63 has been complied with, viz.:—Thames Steamboat Trust Bill; Wellington (Somerset) Gas Bill.
Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1190

PRIVATE BILLS [LORDS].—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the Bills comprised in the list reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, he has certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following case, viz.:—Ilford Urban District Council 1190

PETITIONS.

LICENSES (RENEWAL).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Brierley Hill; Cradley Heath; Dudley; Worcester; Quarry Bank; Plymouth; Bedminster; Maesteg; Leigh; Wimborne (two); Seven Dials; Tryddyn (five); Leeswood (three); Clwyd; Newmarket; Rhuallt; Cilcain; Sychtyn; Nether Kellet; Hebburn; Earlestown; Perth Wilson; Milnrow; Penzance; Coventry; Littleborough (two); Bryn; Flint; Rhyl; Higher Broughton; 'Clynnog; Portdinorwic; Glasgow (two); Walsden; Saffron Walden; Lockerbie; Crowton; Chester; Pentre; Gwespyr; Llanegyr; Bedlington; Stirling; Glen Albyn; Royton (two); Tyldesley; Borthygest; Brynmenai; Corwen; Petersfield; Stockport; Brighouse; Elland; Broughton; Greenock; Aberporth; Halifax; Totnes; Yelverton; Shepton Mallet; Cornwood; Elvet; Abergwili; and Bristol; to lie upon the Table. 1191

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 4th February, 1904, granting a retired allowance to Edward Joseph Carey, late a messenger in the office of the Chief Secretary, Dublin Castle, under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 1191

THIBET (TRADE STATISTICS).—Return presented, relative thereto [Address, 9th February; Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree]; to lie upon the Table [No. 48.] 1191

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.—Copy ordered, "of Account showing the gross amount received and the gross amount expended in respect of the Telegraph Service, from the date of the transfer of the Telegraphs to the State to the 31st day of March, 1902 (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 31, of session 1903)."—(Lord Stanley.)
Copy presented accordingly; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 49.] 1192

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

CRIME IN LIVERPOOL.—Question, Mr. Corbett (Glasgow, Tradeston); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1192

DRUNKENNESS IN ENGLAND AND WALES.—Question, Mr. Corbett; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1193

LAND PURCHASE ACTS—REJECTED APPLICATION FOR ADVANCES.—Question, Mr. P. A. McHugh (Leitrim, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1193

Feb. 12.] Page

NATURALISATION OF FOREIGN SEAMEN.—Question, Sir Charles Dilke (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1194

ORDERS FOR ARMOUR PLATE.—Question, Mr. J. F. Hope (Sheffield, Brightside); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1194

TWINNING SYSTEM FOR TURRET GUNS.—Question, Mr. Yoxall (Nottingham, W.); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1195

BELFAST POST OFFICE—PROMOTION OF MR. KING.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Lord Stanley 1195

SANITARY CONDITION OF CENTRAL TELEGRAPH OFFICE.—Question, Mr. Claude Hay (Shoreditch, Hoxton); Answer, Lord Stanley 1196

BRITISH CONSULATE AT JERUSALEM—DELIVERY OF MAILS TO BRITISH RESIDENTS. —Mr. Yoxall; Answer, Earl Percy 1196

SAVING ON VOTE FOR IRISH DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.—Question, Mr. MacVeagh (Down, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1196

OPERATIONS OF IRISH LAND ACT.—Question, Mr. P. A. McHugh; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1197

POISONING OF DOGS AT HOWTH.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1197

CASES BEFORE RATHDRUM LAND COMMISSIONERS.—Question, Mr. Cogan (Wicklow, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1198

OUTPUT OF GOLD IN TRANSVAAL DURING JANUARY.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1198

ASIATIC LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1198

ADJOURNMENT.—Resolved, That this House, at the rising of the House this day, do adjourn till Monday next.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.) 1199

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS) [NINTH DAY].—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm, and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being.'" (Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Bell (Derby) 1200
Sir Edgar Vincent (Exeter) 1208
Mr. Duke (Plymouth) 1217
Mr. Crombie (Kincardineshire) 1224
Mr. Lambton (Durham, S.E.) 1227
Mr. Renwick (Newcastle-on-Tyne) 1232
Mr. Henderson (Durham, Barnard Castle) 1237
Mr. Beckett (Yorkshire, N.R., Whitby) 1241
Mr. Evelyn Cecil (Aston Manor) 1247
Sir Edward Strachey (Somersetshire, S.) 1251

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned"—(Sir Howard Vincent), put and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

NEW BILL.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES ACTS (EXTENSION).—Bill to extend the Public Libraries Acts to counties, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Kenyon, Mr. Bryce, Sir James Rankin, Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Lloyd-George, and Mr. Sumuel Evans.

Public Libraries Acts (Extension) Bill.—"To extend the Public Libraries Acts to counties," presented accordingly, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 23rd February, and to be printed [Bill 56.] .. 1256

Adjourned at half after Five o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS: MONDAY, 15TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Clyde Valley Electric Power, Lothians Electric Power, Young and Bell's Patents.

And also the certificates that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier [H.L.]; Matlock and District Gas [H.L.]; Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway [H.L.]; Great Western Railway [H.L.]; Isle of Thanet Light Railways [H.L.].

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 1257

Marylebone Chapels (Saint James, Westmoreland Street). Petition of the right hon. Robert George Windsor Clive Baron Windsor, and of the Reverend William Barker, Rector of the Parish of St. Marylebone, Trustees of the Chapel of Saint James, Westmoreland Street, praying for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the sale of the Chapel of Saint James, Westmoreland Street, and for other purposes connected therewith ; together with copy of the proposed Bill annexed thereto ; read, and referred to the Exa aminers 1257

Ilford Urban District Council Bill [H.L.] ; Lothians Electric Power Bill [H.L.]. Presented, and read 1a. 1257

Young and Bell's Patents Bill [H.L.]. Presented ; read 1a ; and referred to the Examiners 1257

Preston and Blackburn Tramways Bill [H.L.] ; Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance) Bill [H.L.] ; Withnell Gas Bill [H.L.]. Read 2a 1257

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).—No. 3121. Egypt (Trade, 1887–1902) 1257

CHINA, No. 2 (1904).—Correspondence respecting the Russian occupation of Manchurian and Newchwang 1258

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).—Return for the month of November, 1903 1258

TRANSVAAL.—Further correspondence regarding the Transvaal labour question (in continuation of [Cd. 1898], February, 1904). Presented (by Command) and ordered to lie on the Table 1258

GREENWICH HOSPITAL AND TRAVERS FOUNDATION (CAPITAL AND INCOME ACCOUNTS, 1902–1903).—Accounts of the receipt and expenditure of the capital and of the income derived from the lands and other property held for the benefit of Greenwich Hospital and the foundation of Samuel Travers, Esquire, for the year ended 31st March, 1903, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon 1258

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION SCHEMES, INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES, AND TRADES UNIONS.—Reports of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, for the year ended 31st December, 1903 1258

SEA AND COAST FISHERIES FUND (IRELAND) (NON-CONGESTED DISTRICTS).—Account for the year ended 31st December, 1903 1258

GREEK LOAN OF 1832—Annual Accunt for 1903 1258

SUPERANNUATION (PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS).—Treasury Minute, dated 30th January, 1904, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Inspector-General in Bankruptcy, professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired on the Public Service are required. Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 1258

ADDRESS.

The King's Answer to the Address of Tuesday the 2nd instant reported ; and the Address and Answer to be printed and published 1259

WEI-HAI-WEI—AN UNFOUNDED RUMOUR.

Earl Spencer 1259
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 1259

AFFAIRS OF SOUTH-EASTERN EUROPE—CONDITION OF MACEDONIA.

Lord Newton 1259

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty for further Papers respecting the affairs of South-Eastern Europe."—

(Lord Newton.)
The Earl of Lytton 1268
The Earl of Aberdeen 1276
The Lord Bishop of Rochester 1279
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 1282
Earl Spencer 1289

Motion, by leave of the House, withdrawn.

THE CASE OF MR. MCCULLY.

Lord Muskerry 1294
The Marquess of Lansdowne 1298

House adjourned, as Seven o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: MONDAY, 15TH FEBRUARY 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been complied with, viz.:—London, Camberwell, and Dulwich Tramways Bill; North-Western Electricity and Power Gas Bill; Southend-on-Sea Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1299

SUBSTITUTED BILLS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That in respect of the following Bills introduced pursuant to the provisions of The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, and which the Chairman of Ways and Means had directed to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with, viz.:—Clyde Valley Electrical Power [Lords]; Lothians Electric Power [Lords]; Young and Bell's Patents [Lords]. 1299

Feb. 15.] Page

Bishop's Stortford and District Gas Bill; Blyth and Cowpen Gas Bill; Corbridge Gas Bill; Gomersal Gas Bill; Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways Bill; Norwich Water Bill; Southend Water Bill; South Shields Gas Bill; South-Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway (Extension of Time) Bill; Sutton Gas Bill; Whitby Gas Bill. Read a second time, and committed 1299

CHESHIRE ELECTRICITY AND POWER GAS. Ordered, That Standing Orders 204 and 205 be suspended, and that the Bill be now read a second time.—(The Chairman of Ways and Means.)

Bill accordingly read a second time, and committed 1300

Dumbarton Tramways Order Confirmation Bill.—Read the third time, and passed 1300

Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway (Abandonment) Bill.—Order [4th February], that the Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway (Abandonment) Bill be referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, read, and discharged. Bill withdrawn.—(Mr. Caldwell) 1300

PETITIONS.

EDUCATION ACT, 1902.—Petition from Fife and Angus, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 1300

FRANCHISE AND REMOVAL OF WOMEN'S DISABILITIES BILL.—Petition of the Male Electors' League for Women's Suffrage, in favour; to lie upon the Table .. 1300

LAL, JEWEN.—Petition of Jewen Lal, for inquiry into his case; to lie upon the Table 1300

LICENCES (RENEWAL).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Musselburgh; Dartmouth; Sheffield; Penmaenmawr; Cilfynydd; Titchfield; Fareham; Batley; Margate; Throckley; Glasgow; South Manchester; New Quay (three); Welch Row; North Camberwell; North West Gloucestershire; Fishguard; Forfar; Dumfries and Kirkcudbright; Coupar Angus; Burton; Northampton; and East Greenwich; to lie upon the Table 1300

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

COMMONS (INCLOSURE AWARDS).—Return [presented 9th February] to be printed. [No. 50.] 1301

IRISH LAND COMMISSION [PROCEEDINGS].—Copy presented, of Return of Proceedings during the month of November, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1301

SEA AND COAST FISHERIES FUND (IRELAND) (NON-CONGESTED DISTRICTS).—Account presented, for the year ended 31st December, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 1301

TRANSVAAL.—Copy presented, of further correspondence regarding the Transvaal Labour Question [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1301

GREEK LOAN.—Account presented, up to 31st December, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 51.] 1301

Feb. 15.] Page

NAVY (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNT).—Copy presented, of the Appropriation Account of the Navy for 1902–3, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon, and upon the Store Accounts of the Navy [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 52.] 1301

ARMY (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNT).—Copy presented, of the Appropriation Account for 1902–3, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon, and upon the Store Accounts of the Army [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 53] 1301

SUPERANNUATION.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 30th January, 1904, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Inspector-General in Bankruptcy, professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired in the Public Service are required [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 1301

GREENWICH HOSPITAL AND TRAVERS' FOUNDATION.—Accounts presented, for the year ended 31st March, 1903, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 54] 1301

CHINA (No. 2, 1904).—Copy presented, of Correspondence respecting the Russian occupation of Manchuria and Newchwang [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1302

TREATY SERIES (No. 2, 1904).—Copy presented, of Convention respecting Payment of Light and Harbour Dues by Vessels of the United States in Zanzibar. Signed at Washington, 5th June, 1903. Ratifications exchanged at Washington, 24th December, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table .. 1302

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).—Copy presented, of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, No. 3121 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1302

PAPER LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.—Friendly Societies, Workmen's Compensation Schemes, Industrial and Provident Societies, and Trades Unions. Reports of the Chief Registrar for the year ending 31st December, 1903 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 55] 1302

AMERICAN MAIL SERVICE.—Return ordered, "Showing the number of days, hours, and minutes occupied in the transit of the Royal Mails, both outward and inward, carried during the year 1903 by steamships between Queenstown and New York, between Southampton and New York, and also between New York and Plymouth. The Return to specify the names of the steamers, and to indicate by asterisk or otherwise those not carrying Mails under contract."—(Sir John Leng.) 1302

PAUPERISM (ENGLAND AND WALES) (HALF-YEARLY STATEMENTS).—Copy ordered, "Of Statement of the number of Paupers relieved on the 1st day of January, 1904, and similar statements for the 1st day of July, 1904 (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper No. 109, of Session 1903)."—(Mr. Grant Lawson) 1302

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

SIGHTS OF GUNS ON H.M.S. "VENERABLE" AND "RAMILLES."—Question, Mr. Harmsworth (Caithness-shire); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1303

ADMIRALTY SHIPBUILDING PROGRAMME.—Question, Mr. Yerburgh (Chester); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1303

Feb. 15.] Page

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES INTO DEPRESSION OF AGRICULTURE.—Question, Mr. Frederick Wilson (Norfolk, Mid); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour .. 1304

CHIEF CLERKS TO SURVEYORS OF TAXES.—Question, Mr. Heywood Johnstone (Sussex, Horsham); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1304

ALLEGED EXEMPTION OF IRISH ROMAN CATHOLIC CLERGY FROM INCOME TAX.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain .. 1304

ANNUAL SAVING IN IRISH ADMINISTRATION.—Question, Mr. Ffrench (Wexford, S.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1304

INSPECTION OF BOARDED-OUT CHILDREN PAUPER IN SCOTLAND.—Question, Mr. Tennant (Berwickshire); Answer, Mr. Graham Murray 1305

PLANS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Question, Mr. Heywood Johnstone; Answer, Lord Balcarres 1305

SANITARY INSPECTORS' CERTIFICATES.—Question, Sir Walter Foster (Derbyshire, Ilkeston); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1306

OFFICERS IN INDIAN NATIVE REGIMENTS—RANK OTHER THAN MILITARY.—Question, Colonel Denny (Kilmarnock Burghs); Answer, Mr. Brodrick .. 1306

PUBLIC LIBRARIES IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Boland (Kerry, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1306

CERTIFICATES FOR TRAINED NURSES IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Patrick O'Brien (Kilkenny); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1307

BUILDING OF TECHNICAL SCHOOLS IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Ffrench; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1307

COLLECTIONS OF COUNTY RATES IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Ffrench; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1308

IRISH LAND ACT.—Question, Mr. Ffrench; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1308

BELFAST RE-VALUATION.—Question, Mr. James O'Connor (Wicklow, W.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1309

INDIAN OFFICERS.—Questions, Colonel Denny; Answers Mr. Brodrick 1309

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

MILITARY CAMP IN ROXBURGHSHIRE.—Question, Mr. Thomas Shaw (Hawick Burghs); Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 1309

THE IRISH MILITIA.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1310

82ND BATTERY R.F.A.—Question, Mr. Crooks (Woolwich); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1311

THE IMPERIAL YEOMANRY.—Question, Captain Norton (Newington W.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1311

IRISH TAILORS AND OFFICERS' UNIFORMS.—Question, Mr. Nannetti (Dublin, College Green); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1312

MILITARY COURTS MARTIAL.—Question, Mr. H. D. Greene (Shrewsbury); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1313

INDIAN STATE RAILWAY CONTRACTS.—Question, Sir Charles McLaren (Leicestershire, Bosworth); Answer, The Secretary for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 1313

GERMAN CONTRACTS FOR INDIAN RAILWAYS.—Question, Sir Charles McLaren and Sir Thomas Dewar (Tower Hamlets, St. George's); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1314

TRANSVAAL LABOUR ORDINANCE.—Question, Sir Brampton Gurdon (Norfolk, N.), Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland), Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.), Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar), Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.), and Mr. William Redmond (Clare, E.); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 1315

RECRUITMENT OF LABOUR IN CHINA.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1319

CONVEYANCE OF LABOUR TO THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. Edmund Robertson (Dundee); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1319

BRITISH COLUMBIAN LABOUR LEGISLATION.—Question, Mr. Edmund Robertson; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1319

CONVICT LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL MINES.—Question, Mr. Whitley (Halifax), Mr. Eugene Wason (Clackmannan and Kinross), and Mr. Herbert Samuel; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1320

EDUCATION IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1321

KOREA.—Question, Mr. Brynmor Jones (Swansea District); Answer, The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) .. 1322

NIUCHWANG.—Question, Mr. Joseph Walton (Yorkshire, W.R., Barnsley); Answer, Earl Percy 1322

CHINESE RAILWAYS—BRITISH BONDHOLDERS' INTERESTS.—Question, Mr. Joseph Walton; Answer, Earl Percy 1323

RUSSIA AND MANCHURIA.—Question, Mr. Joseph Walton; Answer, Earl Percy 1323

CHINESE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel; Answer, Earl Percy 1323

TRANSVAAL MINES, RECRUITS FROM BRITISH CENTRAL AFRICA.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Earl Percy 1324

COLONIAL INSURANCES AND INCOME TAX.—Question, Mr. Thornton (Clapham); Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 1324

Feb. 15.] Page

IMMATURE WHISKY AND LUNACY AND CRIME.—Question, Mr. MacVeagh (Down, S.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1325

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION.—Question, Mr. Claude Hay (Shoreditch, Hoxton); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1325

FRAUDULENT SPIRITS.—Question, Mr. Kilbride (Kildare, S.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1325

COMPULSORY VACCINATION.—Question, Mr. Crooks; Answer, The Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire. W.) 1327

KERRY RAILWAY HARBOUR GUARANTEES.—Questions, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell and Mr. Flavin (Kerry, N.); Answers, Mr. Wyndham 1328

FIRTH OF FORTH FISHERIES.—Question, Captain Ellice (St. Andrews Burghs); Answer, The Lord Advocate (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgton) .. 1327

LEGAL STATUS OF MR. COMMISSIONER FITZGERALD.—Question, Mr. T. W. Russell (Tyrone, S.); Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland (Mr. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.) 1328

DINGLE RAILWAY.—Question, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell (Kerry, W.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 1328

IRISH LAND COURT—PURCHASE OF INSOLVENT ESTATES.—Question, Mr. T. W. Russell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1329

TREATMENT OF THE BLIND IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Nannetti; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1329

LAND PURCHASE IN COUNTY ARMAGH.—Question, Mr. John Campbell (Armagh, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1329

IVEAGH-PIRRIE MOTOR CAR SERVICE.—Question, Mr. John Campbell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1330

LAND PURCHASE IN COUNTY GALWAY.—Question, Mr. Roche (Galway, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1330

ARKLOW HARBOUR.—Questions, Mr. Cogan (Wicklow, E.) and Mr. John Redmond (Waterford); Answers, Mr. Wyndham 1331

GAULT ESTATE, COUNTY TYRONE.—Question, Mr. T. W. Russell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1332

BOUFF SCHOOL TEACHER.—Question, Mr. Lundon (Limerick, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1332

LONGFORD LAND COMMISSION.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1333

IRISH WORKHOUSE INSPECTORS.—Question, Mr. Joseph Devlin (Kilkenny, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1333

Page

GALBRAITH ESTATE, LONGFORD.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1334

IRISH DEVELOPMENT GRANT FUND.—Questions, Mr. O'Dowd (Sligo, S.) and Mr. John Redmond; Answers, Mr. Wyndham 1334

LIMERICK GAOL DOCTOR.—Questions, Mr. Joyce (Limerick); Answers, Mr. Wyndham 1335

COMPANY LEGISLATION.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 1335

WHITAKER WRIGHT TRIAL COSTS.—Questions, Mr. Swift MacNeill and Mr. T. W. Russell; Answers, Mr. Akers Douglas 1335

RUSSIA AND THE DARDANELLES.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1336

CHINESE LABOUR FOR THE TRANSVAAL.—Questions, Sir Charles McLaren, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. William Redmond; Answers, Mr. Akers Douglas 1336

THE FISCAL DEBATE.—Question, Mr. Charles McArthur (Liverpool, Exchange); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1338

NEW WRITS.—New Writ for the County of York (Southern part of the West Riding, Normanton Division), in the room of Benjamin Pickard, esquire, deceased.—(Mr. Herbert Gladstone) 1339

NEW MEMBER SWORN.—John Bamford Slack, esquire, for the County of Herts Mid or St. Alban's Division) 1339

NEW BILLS.

Coal Mines (Employment) Bill.—"To amend the provisions of the Coal Mines Regulation Acts which relate to employment," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Keir Hardie, Sir Walter Foster, Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda), Mr. Holland, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Jacoby, Mr. Bell, Mr. Cremer, and Mr. Joseph Walton; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 57] 1339

Lands Valuation (Scotland) Bill.—"To amend the Lands Valuation (Scotland) Act, 1854," presented by Mr. McCrae; supported by Mr. Bryce, Sir John Leng, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. T. W. Russell, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. John Dewar, and Mr. Robert Wallace; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 26th April; and to be printed. [Bill 58] 1339

Nurses Bill.—"To regulate the qualification of trained Nurses, and to provide for their registration," presented by Mr. Farquharson; supported by Mr. Haldane, Sir Thomas Wrightson, Sir James Joicey, Sir John Tuke, Mr. H. C. Smith, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. Tennant, Mr. Black, Mr. Colston, Mr. Eve, and Dr. Thompson; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 59] 1339

Public Libraries Bill.—" To amend the Acts relating to Public Libraries by removing the existing limit to the amount of the library rate," presented by Mr. Tennant; supported by Sir Albert Rollit, Sir William Houldsworth, Sir Alfred Thomas, Mr. Thornton, Mr. John Burns, Mr. Middlemore, Mr. Hunter Craig, and Mr. Haldane; to be read a second time upon Thursday, 25th February, and to be printed. [Bill 60] 1440

Factory and Workshop Act (1901) Amendment Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to the provisions for escape from fire in Factories and Workshops," presented by Mr. Tennant; supported by Captain Norton, Mr. Hugh Law, Sir John Stirling-Maxwell, Mr. John Burns, Sir John Dickson-Poynder, and Mr. Peel; to be read a second time upon Thursday, 25th February, and to be printed. [Bill 61] 1440

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (KING'S SPEECH, MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Ordered, That the Proceedings on the King's Speech (Motion for an Address), if under discussion at Twelve o'clock this night, be not interrupted under the Standing Order (Sittings of the House).—(Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas).

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—(TENTH DAY,—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign —

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words, ' But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of the House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being ' "—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central) 1341
Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis) 1353
Mr. Elliot (Durham) 1363
Sir A. Seale Haslam (Newcastle-under-Lyne) 1370
Mr. Asquith (Fifeshire, E.) 1374
The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 1390
Mr. Rea (Gloucester) 1404

And, it being half-past Seven of the Clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But it is our duty however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of the protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being.'"—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Rea 1408
Mr. Guest (Plymouth) 1410
Mr. Charles McArthur (Liverpool, Exchange) 1414
Mr. Theodore Taylor (Lancashire, Radcliffe) 1417
Mr. John Redmond (Waterford) 1421
Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) 1426
The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 1438

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 276; Noes, 327. (Division List, No. 2.)

Main Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned,"—(Mr. Herbert Samuel) put and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

PUBLIC PETITIONS.—Ordered, That a Select Committee be appointed, to whom shall be referred all Petitions presented to the House, with the exception of such as relate to Private Bills; and that such Committee do classify and prepare abstracts of the same, in such form and manner as shall appear to them best suited to convey to the House all requisite information respecting their contents, and do report the same from time to time to the House; and that the reports of the Committee do set forth the number of signatures to each Petition only in respect to those signatures to which addresses are affixed :—And that such Committee have power to direct the printing in extenso of such petitions, or of such parts of Petitions, as shall appear to requireit. And that such Committee have power to report their opinion and observations thereupon to the House.

The Committee was accordingly nominated of Mr. Alsopp, Mr. Edward Barry, Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree, Mr. Brymer, Sir Charles Dalrymple, Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, Mr. Herbert Lewis, Sir Henry Meysey-Thompson, Mr. Charles Morley, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Philipps, Mr. Tollemache, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, and Mr. Henry Joseph Wilson. 1451

Ordered, That three be the quorum.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)
Adjourned at twenty-five minutes before One o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS: TUESDAY, 16TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—Barnard Castle Gas [H.L.]; Cardiff Railway [H.L.]

Also the Certificate that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have not been complied with :—Bristol Tramways (Extension).

And also the Certificate that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with:—Govan Burgh (Electricity). The same were ordered to lie on the Table 1453

Clyde Valley Electrical Power Bill [H.L.] Presented; read 1ª; and referred to the Examiners 1453

Lancashire Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; West Riding Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Cambrian Railways Bill [H.L.]; Tynemouth Gas Bill [H.L.]; Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway Bill [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads Bill [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill [H.L.]; Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas Bill [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Extension of Time, &c.) Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª. 1453

Dumbarton Tramways Order Confirmation Bill.—Brought from the Commons; read 1ª; to be printed, and (pursuant to the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899) deemed to have been read 2ª [The Lord Kintore (E. Kintore)], and reported from the Committee. (No. 12.) .. 1453

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Colonies (Miscellaneous).—No. 26 Northern Nigeria. Report on a series of mineral and vegetable products from Northern Nigeria, by Professor W. R. Dunstan, Director of the Imperial Institute 1453

Africa, No. 3 (1904).—Correspondence respecting the introduction of Chinese labour into the Transvaal 1454

Page

TREATY SERIES, No. 3 (1904).—Agreement between the United Kingdom and Italy providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments; signed at Rome, 1st February, 1904.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table 1454

CHELSEA HOSPITAL (ARMY PRIZE MONEY AND LEGACY FUNDS, 1902–1903.).—Account of the receipts and expenditure of the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital (for services other than those voted by Parliament), in the year ended 31st March, 1903; together with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon 1454

TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANKS.—Twelfth Annual Report of the proceedings of the Inspection Committee of Trustee Savings Banks, for the year ended 20th November, 1903; with appendix.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 145

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM.—Statement of the funds, 5th January, 1904. Delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 1454

Sea Fisheries Bill [H.L.]. [SECOND READING.]

The President of the Board of Agriculture (The Earl of Onslow) 1454
Moved, That the Bill be now read 2ª.—(The Earl of Onslow.)
Lord Heneage 1461

On Question, Bill read 2ª, and referred to a Select Committee.

RAILWAY RATES ON MILK AND AGRICULTURAL PRODUCE.

The Earl of Lichfield 1462
Lord Monteagle of Brandon 1466
The Earl of Onslow 1467

THE CASE OF CAPTAIN HARRISON.

Lord Muskerry 1469
Lord Wolverton 1469

THE STRANDING OF THE "ISLE OF LEWIS" "DRUMBAIN"

Lord Muskerry 1469
Lord Wolverton 1470
House adjourned at twenty minutes past Five o'clock to Thursday next, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: TUESDAY, 16TH FEBRUARY, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH). Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been complied with, viz.:—Crystal Palace District Gas Bill; Great Northern Railway Bill; Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1470

Feb. 16.] Page

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 63 has been complied with, viz. :—Brixham Gas Bill.

Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time 1471

SUBSTITUTED BILL [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That in respect of the following Bill introduced pursuant to the provisions of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, and which the Chairman of Ways and Means had directed to originate in the House of Lords, he has certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with, viz.,—Govan Burgh (Electricity) (Substituted) Bill [Lords] 1471

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—London United Tramways; London United Tramways (Railways); Middlesborough, Stockton-on-Tees, and Thornaby Tramways.

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 1471

PRIVATE BILL [LORDS].—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, he has certified that the Standing Orders have not been complied with in the following case, viz. :—Bristol Tramways Extensions) 1471

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That in the case of the Petition for the following Bill, originating in the Lords, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—Bristol Tramways (Extensions).

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 1472

Chippenham Gas Bill; Colney Hatch Gas Bill; London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway Bill. Read a second time, and committed 1472

Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Bill.– To be read a second time to-morrow 1472

Donegal Railway Bill (by Order).—Read a second time, and committed .. 1472

METROPOLITAN COMMON SCHEME (HILLINGDON EAST) PROVISIONAL ORDER.—Bill to confirm a Scheme with respect to Norman's or No Man's Land, Hillingdon, East, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes and Mr. Victor Cavendish 1472

METROPOLITAN COMMON SCHEME (FARNBOROUGH) PROVISIONAL ORDER.—Bill to confirm an amended Scheme with respect to Farnborough Common, Broad Street Green, Leach's Green, and Green Street Green, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes and Mr. Victor Cavendish 1472

Metropolitan Common Scheme (Hillingdon East) Provisional Order Bill.—"To confirm a Scheme with respect to Norman's or No Man's Land, Hillingdon, East," presented and read the first time; to be referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 62] .. 1472

Metropolitan Common Scheme (Farnborough) Provisional Order Bill.—"To confirm an amended Scheme with respect to Farnborough Common, Broad Street Green, Leach's Green, and Green Street Green," presented, and read the first time; to be referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 63] 1472

PETITIONS.

Licences (Renewal).—Petitions against alteration of Law; from Stockton-on-Tees; Armadale; Cynog; Samybridge; Southend on Sea; Hay; Goshen; Lower Mont; Bradford; Wellingborough; Macclesfield; Rotherham; Churchill, Nottingham; Clifton; Ashton; Ashton under Lyne (two); Inverary; Oldham; Ayr; Beaumaris; Oban; Rugby; Erith; Dartford (two); Leicester (three); Tunbridge Wells; Corwen; Limehouse; Grassmoor; New Houghton; Mansfield; Mansfield Woodhouse; Sherwood Forest; Paynton; North Petherton; Manchester; Bo'ness; Bathgates; Boscombe; Elsecar; Hoyland Common; Brynmawr; Beaufort; Garth; Llanwrtyd; Rhesyear; Newtown; Philipstoun; Fauldhouse; Chelsea (two); Ireston; Erith; Preston; Cwmtwrch; Irvine; Bath; Bridgwater; Openshaw; Norwood; Ecclesfield; Clun; Blackridge; Burnley; Winchburgh; Freesall; Brandeston; Uddingstone; Harthill; Tulse Hill and Norwood; Maesffynon; Pencae; Abermeurig; Wern; Peniel; Tibshelf; Aber; Borth; Blaenpennal; Stapleford; Thornton Heath; Blaenanerch; Chatham (two); Holm; Birkenhead; Penrhiw; Lampeter; Brynseion; Dewi Brefi; Bwlchyllan; Llechryd; Pontsaeson; Plymouth; Aberayron; Nuneaton; Hednseford; Seaton Delaval; Leslie; Necton; Ponteroyd; Aberarth (two); Bournemouth; Wigan (two); and Swansea; to lie upon the Table 1473

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Chelsea Hospital.—Account presented, for the year ended 31st March, 1903, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 56] 1473

Army (Ordnance Factories) (Appropriation Account).—Appropriation Account presented, of the sums granted by Parliament for the expense of the Ordnance Factories, the cost of the productions of which have been charged to the Army, Navy, and Indian and Colonial Governments, etc., and the Statement of the Surpluses and Deficits upon the Grants for the year ended 31st March, 1903, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 57] 1473

Trustee Savings Banks.—Copy presented, of Twelfth Annual Report of the Proceedings of the Inspection Committee for the year ended 20th November, 1903, with Appendix [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 58] 1474

Irish Land Commission (Proceedings).—Copy presented, of Return of Proceedings during the month of December, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1474

INEBRIATES ACTS, 1879 TO 1899 (REGULATIONS) (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Regulations for State Inebriate Reformatories in Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 1474

TREATY SERIES (No. 3, 1904).—Copy presented, of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Italy, providing for the settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at Rome, 1st February, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table .. 1474

TARIFF WARS (COMMERCIAL, No. 1, 1904).—Copy presented, of Reports on Tariff Wars between certain European States [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1474

AFRICA (No. 2, 1904).—Copy presented, of Report on the Trade and Commerce of the Somaliland Protectorate for the year 1902–3 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1474

AFRICA (No. 3, 1904).—Copy presented, of Correspondence respecting the introduction of Chinese Labour into the Transvaal [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1474

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

TRADE CORNERS—AMENDMENT OF GAMING ACT.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1475

REFUSALS OF PUBLICANS' LICENCES.—Question, Mr. Corbett (Glasgow, Tradeston); Answer, Mr. Akers-Douglas 1475

PUBLICATION OF CIVIL SERVICE SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1476

COLONIAL LIFE INSURANCES AND INCOME TAX REBATE.—Question, Sir Seymour King (Hull, Central); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1476

DISMISSAL OF NEWTON-STEWART POSTMASTER.—Question, Mr. Hemphill (Tyrone, N.); Answer, Lord Stanley 1476

CARRIAGE OF MAILS BETWEEN LIMERICK AND TRALEE.—Question, Mr. O'Shaughnessy (Limerick, W.); Answer, Lord Stanley 1477

APPOINTMENT OF BRITISH CONSULS AT MUKDEN, ANTUNG, AND TATUNGKAN.—Question, Mr. Moon (St. Pancras, N.); Answer, Earl Percy 1478

RUSSIAN TONNAGE DUES AT PORT ARTHUR.—Question, Mr. Moon; Answer, Earl Percy 1478

COAL TAX—REPORT OF COMMISSION ON COAL SUPPLIES.—Question, Sir George Newnes (Swansea, Town); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1478

OFFICERS' UNIFORM IN THE INDIAN ARMY.—Question, Sir Seymour King; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1479

THE ROYAL INDIAN MARINES.—Question, Sir Seymour King; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1479

APPOINTMENT OF IRISH DISPENSARY DOCTORS.—Question, Sir Thomas Esmonde (Wexford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1480

Feb. 16.] Page

AMALGAMATION OF IRISH UNIONS.—Question, Sir Thomas Esmonde; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1480

IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHERS.—Question, Captain Donelan (Cork, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1480

INQUIRY INTO CONDUCT OF SERGEANT BYRNE OF HOOKEEN.—Question, Mr. Duffy (Galway, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1481

NORTH DUBLIN UNION—SUPPOSED DEATH OF AN INMATE.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1482

BUNCRANA SEWERAGE SCHEMES.—Question, Mr. O'Doherty (Donegal, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1482

DISCHARGE OF SEWAGE INTO THAMES AT SHEERNESS.—Question, Sir Joseph Dimsdale (London); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1482

PUBLICATION OF ARMY SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1483

APPOINTMENT OF DENTAL SURGEONS TO FIRST ARMY CORPS.—Question, Sir Carne Rasch (Essex, Chelmsford); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1483

CONDEMNED WAR OFFICE FORAGE.—Question, Sir Carne Rasch; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1483

UNAUTHORISED PRIVATE CIRCULATION TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT OF LORD MILNER'S DESPATCHES.—Question, Mr. Broadhurst (Leicester); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1484

CENSORSHIP OF PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Mansfield); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1484

THE AGRICULTURAL RATES ACT.—Question, Sir Walter Thorburn (Peebles and Selkirk); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1484

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

IMPERIAL SERVICE ORDER.—Question, Captain Norton (Newington, W.); Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 1485

WAR OFFICE RE-ORGANISATION.—Question, Sir Henry Fowler (Wolverhampton, E.), Sir Charles Dilke (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean), and Mr. Reginald Lucas (Portsmouth); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1485

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR MEDALS.—Question, Sir George Bartley (Islington, N.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1487

MALTA AND GIBRALTAR BARRACKS—SANITARY CONDITION.—Question, Captain Norton; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1487

EFFECTS OF DECEASED SOLDIERS.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1488

Feb. 16.] Page

ROSYTH NAVAL BASE.—Question, Sir John Leng (Dundee); Answer, The Civil Lord of the Admirality (Mr. Arthur Lee, Hampshire, Fareham) 1489

INDIAN POLICE SERVICE.—Question, Mr. Herbert Roberts (Denbighshire, W.); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 1489

THE TRANSVAAL LABOUR ORDINANCE—PROTESTS.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 1490

COPY OF THE TRANSVAAL LABOUR ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. John Ellis; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1490

TRANSVAAL RECRUITING AND TRANSIT REGULATIONS.—Question, Mr. John Ellis and Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1491

BARBADOS AS A RECRUITING GROUND FOR NATIVE LABOUR FOR THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. Norman (Wolverhampton, S.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton .. 1492

BRITISH WORKMEN AND THE TRANSVAAL ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1492

TRANSVAAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL AND THE ORDINANCE.—Question, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1493

COST OF CABLE TRANSVAAL ORDINANCE AMENDMENTS.—Question, Mr. Norman; Answer Mr. Lyttelton 1493

CHINESE GOVERNMENT AND THE TRANSVAAL LABOUR QUESTION.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 1494

EX-SOLDIERS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE.—Question, Captain Norton; Answer, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) .. 1494

NEW LADY INSPECTOR FOR THE POTTERIES.—Question, Mr. Coghill (Stoke-upon-Trent); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 1494

DEATHS FROM LEAD POISONING.—Question, Mr. Coghill; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1495

SCOTTISH DEER FORESTS.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Secretary for Scotland (Mr. A. Graham Murray, Buteshire) 1496

FARRANAKILLA NATIONAL SCHOOLS.—Question, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell (Kerry, W.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) .. 1496

SANITATION OF KILKEE.—Question, Mr. William Redmond (Clare, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1497

IRISH ASYLUM LOANS.—Question, Mr. Charles Devlin (Galway); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1497

POLICE PROTECTION AT CARRIGEEN.—Question, Mr. Duffy (Galway, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1498

Feb. 16.] Page

KINVARA HARBOUR.—Question, Mr. Duffy; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1498

FAIR RENTS IN COUNTY CORK.—Question, Mr. Sheehan (Cork Co., Mid); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1498

GAYA BAY.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1499

STANDING ORDERS.—Resolutions reported from the Select Committee.

1. "That in the case of the London County Council (Tramways and Improvements), Petition for Bill, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with; That the parties be permitted to proceed with their Bill, provided that the powers to construct Tramways Nos. 6, 8, 8A, 8B, and 8C be struck out of the Bill; That the Committee on the Bill do report how far such Order has been complied with."
2. "That, in the case of the Rotherham Corporation, Petition for Bill, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with; That the parties be permitted to proceed with their Bill, provided that the powers to construct Tramways Nos. 5 and 6 be struck out of the Bill, and that the powers to construct Tramway No. 4 be struck out of the Bill, unless the consent of the local and road authority be proved before the Select Committee on the Bill; That the Committee on the Bill do report how far such Order has been complied with."
3. "That, in the case of the Ryde Gas Bill, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with; That the parties be permitted to proceed with their Bill."

Resolutions agreed to. 1499

SELECTION (PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899 (COMMISSIONERS).—MR. HALSEY reported from the Committee of Selection; That, in pursuance of the provisions of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, they had selected the following fourteen Members to form the Parliamentary Panel of Members of this House to act as Commissioners:—Mr. Charles Hobhouse, Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. A. K. Loyd, Mr. McCrae, Mr. William Maxwell, Mr. Pym, Mr. Parker Smith, Sir Walter Thorburn, Sir John Tuke, Mr. Levy, Mr. James Reid, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. John Wilson (Falkirk), and Mr. Wylie.

Report to lie upon the Table 1500

NEW BILLS.

Home Industries Bill.—"For the better regulation of Home Industries," presented by Colonel Denny; supported by Mr. Charles Douglas, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. John Burns, Mr. J. W. Wilson, and Mr. Emmott; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 5th April, and to be printed. [Bill 64] 1500

Small Holdings Bill.—"To amend the Small Holdings Act, 1892," presented by Mr. Jesse Collings; supported by Colonel Long, Mr. Goulding, Sir Frederic Carne Rasch, Mr. Carlile, and Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 2nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 65] 1500

Purchase of Land (England and Wales) Bill.—" To provide facilities for the sale of land to occupying tenants and others in England and Wales," presented by Mr. Jesse Collings ; supported by Sir John Dorington, Mr. Spear, Sir John Kennaway, Mr. Herbert Roberts, Sir Lewis Molesworth, Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, Mr. William Mitchell, and Lieutenant-Colonel Pryce-Jones ; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 2nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 66] 1500

Agricultural Education in Elementary Schools Bill.—" For promoting agricultural education and nature study in Public Elementary Schools," presented by Mr. Jesse Collings ; supported by Sir John Kennaway, Mr. Rothschild, Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore, Sir Ernest Flower, Mr. Spear, Mr. Morrell, Colonel Webb, and Sir Fortescue Flannery ; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 2nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 67] 1501

Liquor Traffic Local Veto (Wales) Bill.—" To enable owners and occupiers in Wales and Monmouthshire to have effectual control over the Liquor Traffic," presented by Mr. Herbert Roberts ; supported by Sir Alfred Thomas. Mr. William Jones, and Mr. Herbert Lewis ; to be read a second time upon Friday, 4th March, and to be printed. [Bill 68] .. .. .. - 1501

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS)—(ELEVENTH DAY).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [2nd February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland) 1501
Major Seely (Isle of Wight) 1523

Amendment proposed—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words, ' And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that it is highly inexpedient that sanction should be given to any Ordinance permitting the introduction of indentured Chinese labourers into the Transvaal Colony until the approval of the colonists has been formally ascertained.' "—(Mr. Herbert Samuel.)

Question proposed, " That those words be there added."

The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 1533
Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) 1554
Mr. Martin (Worcestershire, Droitwich) 1560
Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.) 1561

And, it being half-past Seven of the Clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [16th February] to Main Question [2nd February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words—' And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that it is highly inexpedient that sanction should be given to any Ordinance permitting the introduction of indentured Chinese labourers into the Transvaal Colony until the approval of the colonists has been formally ascertained.' "—(Mr. Herbert Samuel.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Mr. Duke (Plymouth) 1567
Mr. Broadhurst (Leicester) 1574
Mr. Cust (Southwark, Bermondsey) 1580
Mr. Labouchere (Northampton) 1594

Motion made, and Question, " That the Debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. Malcolm)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

WILD BIRDS PROTECTION ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.—Read a second time, and committed for to-morrow. 1600

Adjourned at three minutes before Twelve o'clock.

END OF TABLE OF CONTENTS TO VOL. CXXIX.

THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

(AUTHORISED EDITION)

IN THE

FIFTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF

HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII.

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 2nd February, 1904.

THE KING'S SPEECH.

THE KING, being seated on the Throne, and the Commons being at the Bar with their Speaker, His Majesty was pleased to make a most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and then retired.

His Majesty's Speech was as follows—

My Lords and Gentlemen—

My relations with Foreign Powers continue to be of a satisfactory character.

My Government has concluded with that of the French Republic an Agreement which will, I trust, do much to promote the recourse to arbitration in cases of international dispute. Apart from its intrinsic value, the Agreement affords a happy illustration of the friendly feelings prevailing between the two Countries, of which striking proofs were given during My visit to France and that of the President of the French Republic to Great Britain, and of which further evidence has been furnished by a recent exchange of international courtesies.

Similar Agreements are in process of negotiation with the Governments of Italy and the Netherlands.

An Agreement has been concluded between My Government and that of Portugal for the settlement by arbitration of the frontier line between the possessions of Portugal in South-West Africa and the territory of the Barotse Kingdom. His Majesty the King of Italy has been pleased to accept the office of Arbitrator.

The Tribunal appointed under the Convention concluded on the 3rd March last between My Government and that of the United States has given a decision on the points referred to it. On some of these the verdict has been favourable to British claims; on others it has been adverse. Much as this last circumstance is to be deplored, it must, nevertheless, be a matter of congratulation that the misunderstandings, in which ancient Boundary Treaties, made in ignorance of geographical facts, are so fertile, have in this case been finally removed from the field of controversy.

The military operations in Somaliland are being pushed forward as rapidly as difficulties of climate and transport will permit. The successes recently obtained

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member by My troops under General Egerton will materially contribute to the destruction of the Mullah's power and the consequent pacification of the country. I have received cordial co-operation from the Italian Government, and from the Emperor Menelik of Abyssinia, who has organised a force which, by advancing from the west, will, it is hoped, materially assist the movement now in progress.

I have watched with concern the course of the negotiations between the Governments of Japan and Russia in regard to their respective interests in China and Corea. A disturbance of the peace in those regions could not but have deplorable consequences. Any assistance which My Government can usefully render towards the promotion of a pacific solution will be gladly afforded.

The scheme of Macedonian reforms proposed in February last by the Russian and Austro-Hungarian Governments, with the concurrence of the other Powers Signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, has been improved and strengthened in several important particulars. The revised scheme has been concurred in by the other Powers, and accepted, after a regrettable delay, by the Porte. The winter has brought a cessation in the disturbances which prevailed throughout Macedonia during the greater part of last year; and it is to be earnestly hoped that advantage will be taken of this respite in order to carry out those practical measures of amelioration which are so sorely needed in these unhappy regions.

Amongst these measures the organisation of the Macedonian Gendarmerie deserves a prominent place. I note with satisfaction that His Majesty the Sultan has appointed a distinguished General Officer of the Italian Army to take charge of this reform. He is to be assisted in the discharge of his task by other officers appointed by the Powers, and I have authorised the employment of a Staff Officer of My Army, aided by other British Officers, for this purpose.

I am gratified to observe that the Legislatures of the Commonwealth of Australia and the Colony of New Zealand have passed laws giving effect to the Naval Agreements entered into at the Colonial Conference of 1902, under which they assume a larger share than heretofore in the general Scheme of Imperial Defence. The New Zealand Legislature has also sanctioned a Tariff which gives a preference in its markets to the produce of this Country.

The insufficiency of the supply of the raw material upon which the great cotton industry of this Country depends has inspired Me with deep concern. I trust that the efforts which are being made in various parts of My Empire to increase the area under cultivation may be attended with a large measure of success.

With the concurrence of the Chinese Government, a Political Mission has entered Thibetan territory in order to secure the due observance of the Convention of 1890 relating to Sikkim and Thibet. A Chinese official has been despatched from Pekin to meet it, and I trust that an arrangement may be arrived at with the Chinese and Thibetan authorities which will peacefully remove a constant source of difficulty and friction on the northern frontier of My Indian Empire. Papers on the subject will be laid before you.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,—

The Estimates for the year will be laid before you. Although they have been framed with the utmost desire for economy, the burden imposed on the resources of the Country by the necessities of Naval and Military Defence is undoubtedly serious. The possibility of diminishing this burden is being carefully considered in connection with the general problem of Army and War Office Reform.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—

A measure for the purpose of dealing with the evils consequent on the Immigration of Criminal and Destitute Aliens into the United Kingdom will be laid before you.

A Bill amending the Law with respect to Licences for the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors in England will be submitted to you.

A measure for the Amendment of the Law with respect to Valuation Authorities and the Preparation of Valuation Lists will be introduced.

A Bill to Amend the Laws relating to Education in Scotland has been prepared for your consideration.

A measure will be introduced to Amend the Labourers Acts and the Housing of the Working Classes Act in Ireland.

Proposals will be laid before you for Amending the Workmen's Compensation Acts, for Amending the Law relating to Public Health, for dealing with the Hours of Employment in Shops, for Consolidating the Enactments relating to Naval Prizes of War, for removing, after the termination of the present Parliament, the necessity for Re-election in the case of Acceptance of Office by Members of the House of Commons, for Supplementing the Powers of the Congested Districts Board in Scotland, and for Amending the Law relating to Sea Fisheries.

I commend your deliberations to the care and guidance of Almighty God.

NEW PEERS INTRODUCED.

Sir Ughtred James Kay-Shuttleworth, Baronet, having been created Baron Shuttleworth of Gawthorpe, in the County Palatine of Lancaster, was (in the usual manner) introduced.

George Forrest, Lord Bishop of Bristol, was (in the usual manner) introduced.

SAT FIRST.

The Earl Fitzwilliam sat first in Parliament after the death of his grandfather.

The Lord Stanley of Alderley sat first in Parliament after the death of his brother.

The Marquess of Salisbury sat first in Parliament after the death of his father.

ROLL OF THE LORDS.

Norroy, King of Arms, attending, delivered at the Table (in the usual manner) a List of the Lords Temporal in the Fifth Session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament of the United Kingdom. The same was ordered to lie on the Table.

SELECT VESTRIES.

Bill, pro forma, read 1^a.

ADDRESS IN REPLY TO HIS MAJESTY'S MOST GRACIOUS SPEECH.

*EARL FITZWILLIAM: My Lords, in rising to address your Lordships' House for the first time, I venture to express a hope that I may be accorded that consideration which is so often extended to those who find themselves in my position. Your Lordships will have noticed that the opening paragraph of the Gracious Speech which has been read from the Throne, contains the now happily usual announcement that our relations with foreign countries continue to be friendly. Surely at no time has this familiar phrase to be repeated with more satisfaction than at the present moment, when the omission of it would spell all that your Lordships' House do not desire, and perhaps give a difficult and uncongenial task to the mover of this Address.

Your Lordships will have noticed with much satisfaction the announcement of the conclusion of a treaty of arbitration with France. The principle of arbitration is one which will always commend itself to this House. There is, my Lords, perhaps no nation with which it would be more advantageous for us to enter into Articles of Arbitrament than with our nearest neighbours. In the treaty recently concluded with the French Republic, the principle of arbitration is affirmed, subject to reservations which, if they limit the scope of the Agreement, do so in a manner which prudence no doubt requires. The treaty proceeds upon business lines. It lays down, in the first instance, that those matters which it has not been found possible for the contracting parties to settle by diplomacy shall be accurately ascertained; and, secondly, that a special Agreement in each case shall set out clearly the matters in dispute, and also the scope of the powers of the arbitrators. Great Britain and France have naturally availed themselves of the Hague Tribunal as an Arbitral Court for the purposes of the treaty, and it becomes clear that that Court, the institution of which we owe to the humane instincts and peaceful endeavours of the Czar, is destined to have important uses in the future. My Lords, everything which tends to a better understanding with France must inevitably appeal to your Lordships. As the representative of the French Republic at this Court has said so well lately—

> "The business relations of the two countries are so important that it would be absurd to allow anything to cause a rupture of them."

The Treaty to which I have alluded may be a very great or striking departure, but at least it is a step in the right direction, and may prove valuable as a means of avoiding the irritation consequent on the discussion of questions in which neither party sees its way to arrive at a settlement.

My Lords, while in this time of tension our minds are drawn to the events now taking place in the China Seas, we cannot pass over without due reflection those occurrences in the Near East which during the past few months have seemed to portend such grave possibilities. With reference to that paragraph in the Speech which deals with the reforms formulated by Austria-Hungary and Russia, acting in this matter in the name of all the Signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, the correspondence shows that while His Majesty's Government have been willing to give their assent to the proposals which these Powers have put forward for a settlement of the difficult state of affairs which has arisen, they have from the first regarded them as a minimum. In view of the approach of the season when the climate will no longer offer an obstacle to military operations, it is to be earnestly hoped that no time will be lost in giving effect to the necessary measures. In the case of these reforms not proving effectual, it is not beyond the scope of the Governments concerned to suggest other remedies. Indeed, His Majesty's Government have specially reserved to themselves the power of suggesting further reforms. I would especially invite your Lordships' attention to the project of a reorganised gendarmerie under a General of foreign nationality, in the service of the Imperial Ottoman Government, to whom military officers of the Great Powers will be attached. YourLordships will readily realise that the better administration of Macedonia constitutes an important factor in the maintenance of European tranquillity, and it is our duty and our interest to express an earnest hope that the measures recommended by Russia and Austria-Hungary may prove to have in them that which is essential to the good government of the races subject to the Porte.

As regards Thibet, the House is aware that last autumn a mission, with an escort to secure its safety, was despatched by the Government of India to meet Thibetan and Chinese officials, with a view to securing the future observance of the Articles of the Convention of 1890, and the trade regulations arranged under Article IV. of that Convention. The policy involved in the mission, I need scarcely assure your Lordships, is not to acquire territory, neither is it conceived in any aggressive spirit. The object in view is to obtain assurances that treaty obligations will be observed and that encroachment may not be renewed. I would recall to your Lordships that we have formerly had occasion to complain of aggression on the part of the Thibetans. I refer to the invasion by them of Sikkim in 1886. An aggressive attitude has again been adopted. Our representative has been treated with insolence; boundaries have been ignored; treaty obligations have been ignored. Your Lordships will easily recognise that His Majesty's Government have had no alternative but to seek and to insist on reparation. It is well known to this House how necessary—how essential it is in the East that we should claim and maintain rights which belong to us as the fruits of fair negotiation, and never for a moment tolerate that our representative should be treated lightly, far less subjected to indignity.

The next subject which claims the attention of your Lordships refers to our colonies. The House is aware that for many years past our Australasian Colonies—true to their inherent instincts of loyalty—have not allowed us to be alone in our maintenance of an Imperial Navy. But that which has been deemed by them in the past to be sufficient for that purpose, is now found not to be adequate to their self-imposed duty, and we observe—and observe, my Lords, I think with great pride—that our colonies are anxious and willing to increase their material support to the Navy. Whereas Australia and New Zealand before this date have only jointly contributed £126,000, they have now agreed to double their contribution. The mention of New Zealand, that Colony whose watchword is "Forward" in all that is patriotic, leads me to ask permission here to advert to another striking proof of the Imperial mind of that Colony. I refer to the Act passed in November last in the Colonial Legislature for the purpose of encouraging trade within the British Empire. That Act imposed duties of a very substantial amount upon foreign imported goods, and in one case—that of tea—entirely remitted the duty on that commodity when grown within the British dominions, whilst placing an additional equivalent duty on the foreign grown article.

My Lords, it has been truly said that times change and we change with them, and I would ask your Lordships to consider the application of the aphorism to our own case. For during the reigns of two Sovereigns the populations and necessities of these Islands have waxed and multiplied so exceedingly that probably those who formerly saw a sufficiency of existence within the area of these Islands would surely now, under changed and magnified conditions, share with us what has been so aptly described as "the dream of Empire." That dream, my Lords, has not been a dream which has been dissipated with the dawning day, for, unlike most dreams, it has found its realisation, and to-day it must be acknowledged by all subject to this Crown that there is a common tie which binds our colonies and ourselves to the Alma Mater here. And in this there is perhaps no finality. For who can say where a present controversy, which is now being discussed, not only through the length and breadth of the Empire but also throughout the civilised world, may eventually lead us? This theme offers a tempting subject for discussion, but I feel that I should be wanting both in respect to your Lordships' House, and also in regard for the rules of debate were I to pursue it further; but may I say that I do not believe that we have yet arrived at the final and ultimate destiny of our Empire.

In turning to the domestic topics foreshadowed in the Speech, the all important question of Army reform presents itself. Some comfort may be derived from the knowledge that the experiences which the late war have produced have been exhaustively examined by Lord Elgin's Commission, which collected a mass of material unique in our military annals. As one of the consequences of the Report of that Commission, the Prime Minister appointed a Committee, composed of three distinguished gentlemen, who have been engaged in elaborating a scheme of War Office reform, based on the lines of the Admiralty Board, the result of whose deliberations have now been before your Lordships for the last twenty-four hours. It would seem that, whatever the ultimate effect may be, their recommendations must appear to your Lordships at any rate to be thorough. They have recommended, amongst other things, besides a supreme direction in the Committee of Defence, the institution of a new Army Council which will terminate the inconvenience attaching to a system of dual control at the War Office.

There will be no difference of opinion amongst your Lordships that there is always more and more need for increased efficiency with regard to our Army. Notwithstanding a general feeling of admiration and respect for every unit of the British Army, whether at home or beyond the seas, still, with the experience of three years which we leave behind us of uninterrupted warfare, and with a prudent estimate of the future with its rumours of wars and possible wars, we should be doing an injustice not only to ourselves but also to that Army and that Empire, were we not to avail ourselves of this and every opportunity to add efficiency to our military system, and lay an adequate foundation to meet the unknown possibilities with which a world-wide Empire like ours is constantly brought face to face. In this connection perhaps it may be permissible to recall the oft-quoted platitude that on the efficiency and preparedness of our arms must to a very great extent depend the success of our diplomacy. It behoves us, moreover, never to forget that scarcely a year passes but that some portion of our Army is called upon, not only to be ready to act in support of our diplomacy, but also to act in defence of our possessions, wherever they may be.

In calling the attention of your Lordships to the subject of Alien Immigration, the House will recognise the advent of an old friend. We must all acknowledge, my Lords, that the problem has become an exceedingly serious one. This view is supported, not only by the condition of our labour market at the present minute, but also by the action of the Legislatures of some of the most progressive civilised countries of the world, as well as by the fact that in this country for many years past the subject has received the close attention of successive Governments. I do not wish on this occasion to enlarge on that aspect of the question or to refer in detail to the various inquiries and reports which will be in the recollection of your Lordships, but noble Lords will not lose sight of the fact that as a direct consequence of other nations having prohibited the influx of workers without any possible means of support and with no prospect of employment, we have naturally become the recipients of those who are found undesirable to other countries—countries quite as industrial as ours, and, moreover, many of them with virgin possibilities, in which respect they have an advantage over us with our congested and growing population and limited area of expansion.

There is another aspect of the question to be submitted to the House. It must be remembered that many of these immigrants arrive on our shores, not only without resources, but even without an elementary knowledge of our language, and are naturally attracted to our great centres of commerce. What, my Lords, is the consequence? It would appear to be that some few are fortunate enough to obtain employment, largely by underbidding our labour market, whilst others, finding themselves without knowledge or necessary information for procuring their daily bread, and driven to despair by hunger and hardship, lapse to the inevitable goal of criminality. These few remarks may be sufficient to allow your Lordships to perceive that there is ample justification for the legislation promised by His Majesty's Government.

Earl Fitzwilliam.

Turning to the Bill to amend the Workmen's Compensation Acts, I would submit to the House that the whole history of a workman's security for his stock-in-trade, which perhaps it is unnecessary for me to define as his labour —be it skilled or unskilled—has gradually been built up on liberal and equitable lines to its present state, and it will be well to remember that up to now provision has been made for all workmen engaged in dangerous trades, who, through no fault of their own, have become what has been termed "the wounded soldiers of industry." Heretofore these principles have been deemed sufficient as applying to a large number of workpeople, though not to all. But experience and the forward tendency of the age have shown, and are showing us daily, that a further step in advance may legitimately be adopted. It has become apparent that there are others who, although not exactly to be included in the radius of what were formerly known as dangerous trades, are yet entitled to protection by legislation. There are working men who in the pursuit of their daily task constantly incur risks as dangerous and frequent as do their more fortunate fellow-workers who have hitherto received the benefits of the Acts. Surely we are justified by such a consideration in our contention that the time has come to perfect and complete a measure which it has been deemed necessary to refer for examination and report to a Departmental Committee of the Home Office because it does not at present fully meet the case for which it was designed.

In passing from a subject affecting the prosperity and safety of the working classes, your Lordships will observe, on reference to the Gracious Speech, another subject affecting the moral and material welfare of those classes. I refer to the mention of a Bill to amend the law of licensing. Such a measure will be welcomed by all who do not push their convictions—however honestly and ardently cherished—beyond a judicious limit. The publican, in the absence of proved misconduct, has the right to pursue his calling—a lawful calling—without undue harassment. It is rather the tendency of the fanatic than of the well-balanced reasoner to invoke the fires of Smithfield to purge what he deems to be heresy. Your Lordships — in your desire for temperance—would be the last to argue that the grant of licences should be unchecked. But in dealing with a subject which gives rise to so many divergent views, the only rule of safety appears to reside in holding fast to a principle. My Lords, the principle which I think will commend itself to this House is that it is not in accord with the dictates of common honesty or justice that any man engaged in the liquor trade should be dispossessed of the means of earning his livelihood unless on proof of gross misconduct. Your Lordships may have an opportunity of observing later in the session that His Majesty's Government have not been unmindful of this principle. In conclusion, I beg to tender my most respectful thanks to your Lordships for the kind way in which you have listened to my remarks.

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty in reply to the Gracious Speech from the Throne."—(Earl Fitzwilliam.)

LORD HYLTON: My Lords, in rising to second the Address, and to speak for the first time in this House, I, too, must ask for your Lordships' indulgence. Before attempting to discharge the duty which has been imposed upon me, I should like, in a few words, to refer to the great loss which the country and the House have suffered since Parliament was prorogued, by the death of the late Marquess of Salisbury. Others infinitely more qualified than myself will probably speak on this subject, but those who merely had the advantage of listening to him in this House, cannot fail to retain a lifelong impression of the wisdom of his utterances, the dignity of his address, the keenness and polish of his wit. And anyone who, like myself, has had some slight experience in the Diplomatic Service will, I think, feel convinced that his name was held in higher respect in every foreign country than that of perhaps any other Englishman for more than one generation.

There is one other topic to which I will still more briefly allude. A change has just taken place in the Leadership of this House. Speaking from these Benches one cannot forget the deep debt of gratitude which our Party owes to the noble Duke, the late Leader of the House. But I do not wish to say a word of a Party character on this occasion. In his capacity as Leader of this House the noble Duke enjoyed the goodwill of both sides alike, and I hope I shall not be considered presumptuous in expressing my belief that both sides alike cordially hope that he may still render great public service for many years to come, whatever quarter of the House he may occupy, whether in or out of office.

I now turn to the Gracious Speech from the Throne. With regard to the treaty signed between France and Great Britain, I think your Lordships will view with pleasure any extension of the system of arbitration as a means of arriving at a fair and peaceful solution of international disputes. The class of questions which will call for solution under the new treaty may be of a limited scope, but the principle adopted appears easily capable of enlargement; and your satisfaction in this matter will, I feel, be the greater, inasmuch as it affords a further proof of the amicable relations which happily exist between ourselves and our neighbours across the Channel. The same considerations apply to the hope expressed in the Gracious Speech of a similar treaty with Italy. Great Britain viewed with sympathetic interest the union of the Italian Peninsula under the sceptre of the House of Savoy, and the bonds of friendship which have ever since united the two countries have been lately cemented and confirmed by the interchange of visits between their respective Sovereigns. What I have said of the treaty with France and the proposed treaty with Italy applies with equal force to an arrangement with Holland and Portugal.

The conclusion or negotiation of treaties of arbitration with these European Powers affords striking evidence of the desire of His Majesty's Government to resort to this method of settling international differences. In the case of one difference of this kind His Majesty's Government have given practical proof of their belief in this policy by resorting to the assistance of a tribunal, not strictly speaking an arbitral tribunal, but one independent of the diplomacy of the two countries affected. The question of the Alaskan Boundary is not a new one. In the year 1825 the Russian and the British Governments signed a treaty or arrangement by which the boundaries of the Russian possessions in North West America and of our own territories in that quarter of the globe were defined. At that time no one seems to have entertained a suspicion that doubt or difficulty could thereafter arise owing to the terms in which the frontiers were described in the treaties. The whole region was sparsely inhabited, its geography little known, and most of its territory unexplored. So far as we can judge at the present day of what was passing through the minds of the statesmen of 1825 when they signed the treaty, they signed it under the impression that they were laying down boundaries which required no further definition. Time passed; in 1867 the United States bought Alaska from Russia; a larger population became settled in some parts of this hitherto almost uninhabited country, and, in consequence, questions arose as to what was meant by the definition of the treaty of 1825. On comparing the language of the treaty with more recently acquired geographical information, it was argued that more than one interpretation might be given to its meaning, and that in more than one portion of the frontiers. Papers laid before Parliament explain these details.

It sometimes happens that the provisions of a will lead to doubts and litigation, and in the end have to be decided in accordance with what the law lays down as having been the intention of the testator. This is precisely what has happened in regard to the Alaska boundary. No one can go into the witness-box at the present day and say with certainty what the negotiations of eighty years ago intended. But an exhaustive examination of the whole case has taken place before the Tribunal appointed for that purpose, and although it was so constituted that its deliberations might not have been conclusive, it was able to come to a conclusion.

The award has been favourable to the American rather than to the Canadian interpretation of the treaty of 1825. The extreme American claims have not been conceded, but the award is, undoubtedly, in favour of the American contentions rather than of the Canadian contentions. In one sense the question may be said to affect Canada more perhaps than the Mother Country, but in one sense only, for Great Britain can never feel indifferent to any matter touching the prosperity or welfare of the Dominion of Canada; and I say this, not as a vague compliment to Canadian loyalty and Canadian patriotism, but because I am sure that such are the sentiments of the people of this country towards Canada. The Colonial Secretary, in a speech to the Canada Club on the 19th ult., well pointed out that the consolatory speeches of well-meaning friends give little satisfaction to a litigant who has just lost his case—but I believe that in Canada, as well as in this country, many will be found ready to acknowledge that it is for the benefit of all parties that this question, which might at any moment have given rise to serious international differences, should have been set at rest.

With regard to the paragraph in the Speech relating to Somaliland, the House will have noticed with satisfaction the success of our troops under General Egerton—success all the more gratifying after one or two disappointments which have occurred in that region—disappointments not, I believe, owing to the strength or the character of the enemy, but merely to climatic conditions and to the want of water. Your Lordships will have seen with pleasure the statement in the Gracious Speech that Italy, whose sphere of influence adjoins our own in that region, has rendered us every possible co-operation, both by sea and by land.

Your Lordships will, I think, participate in the concern expressed in the Gracious Speech as to the differences which unhappily exist between Russia and Japan. Whilst we cannot shut our eyes to the critical nature of these differences, we must all share the hope that a peaceful solution may not be impracticable and honourable to both the nations concerned. We may reflect with some degree of satisfaction on the one hand on the pacific tendencies of the Emperor of Russia, which have been repeatedly proved both by word and action ever since he ascended the Throne, and, on the other hand, on the calm and statesmanlike attitude displayed by Japanese diplomatists throughout this crisis.

I now come to the paragraph respecting Macedonia. As far back as the time of the Treaty of Berlin, the Turkish Government undertook to introduce good administration into all the provinces of European Turkey, and the great Powers who were Signatories to that treaty incurred certain responsibilities in the matter. I think it must be admitted that great forbearance has been shown to the Turkish Government, and every allowance has been made by the Powers for the grave intrinsic difficulties which no doubt attend the institution of any form of government in Macedonia which would be equally acceptable to the various nationalities inhabiting those Provinces. Your Lordships are aware that these Provinces contain an extraordinary mixture of races and creeds, which must in any case render the task of their rulers a difficult one. But, my Lords, after making every allowance for the difficulties I have indicated, it has remained the clear duty of the Powers to press for reform in this region. Reforms have been pressed upon the Turkish Government times without number. Times without number the Sultan has promised to introduce adequate measures. Unfortunately, His Majesty's beneficent intention and pledges have failed to be carried into effect. What has been the result of this failure on the part of Turkey to provide a satisfactory administration in Macedonia? My Lords, the answer to that question can best be expressed by the simple word "Anarchy," and anarchy marked by all the horrors which usually attend such a condition of affairs. If proof were required of my statement, I would refer your Lordships to the Blue-book which has just been presented to Parliament respecting affairs in South-Eastern Europe, and which affords melancholy reading. The situation is aggravated by the animosity displayed towards one another by the different subject peoples.

Your Lordships will probably consider it unnecessary to endeavour to apportion the blame for the lamentable occurrences which have taken place among the various antagonistic parties. What we are concerned with is the fact that the ever increasing anarchy in this unhappy country reached such a pitch some twelve months ago that the great Powers unanimously concurred in intervention with a view to bringing about practical reform, and the task of seeing those reforms carried into effect has been entrusted to the Governments of Austria-Hungary and Russia. Your Lordships will see from the Papers laid before Parliament that the policy of His Majesty's Government has been, in co-operation with the other Powers, to urge by every possible means on the Porte the execution of the "Vienna Programme," strengthened later on by the more stringent provisions introduced after the meeting of the Austrian and Russian Emperors in October last. With regard to the more stringent provisions then adopted, I think your Lordships will give some credit to His Majesty's Government, and I would refer the House on that point to a despatch from the noble Marquess the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to Sir Francis Plunkett, dated September 29th last. I need not trouble your Lordships with all the details of the scheme of reform, but the appointment of two civil agents—an Austrian and a Russian—to act as assessors to the Turkish Inspector-General, together with the nomination of a distinguished Italian officer with the rank of General to re-organise and command the gendarmerie, form too important a feature in the scheme to be passed over in silence. These officers have now taken up their duties, and, including their subordinates, there will soon be, I believe, some 50 or 100 foreign officers distributed throughout Macedonia who will watch over the action of the Turkish troops; and this material supervision, backed up by the moral weight of the Concert of Europe, seem to attach a fairer chance of success to the present scheme of reform than has been the case on any previous occasion. The authors of this scheme do not claim perfection on its behalf, but the public declarations of European statesmen have been made in its favour, and all they ask is that the public will exercise a little patience in their criticisms as to its ultimate merits.

Before passing from this subject I should like to call your Lordships' attention to the conduct of our Consular representatives in Macedonia. Exercising rigid impartiality, they have incurred dangerous enmities on all sides; two of their foreign colleagues have been assassinated within the last twelve months; their own lives have been threatened, as you will see from the Blue-book, and many of their despatches have been practically written under fire. Our principal Consuls and Vice-Consuls in the Levant are selected from a body of picked men, and the noble Marquess the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and His Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople would, I am sure, bear witness to the excellent services these gentlemen have rendered under exceptionally difficult circumstances. I think the House will consider that His Majesty's Government is very fortunate in being served by such excellent officers. The Gracious Speech announces a lengthy list of measures of domestic legislation. Some of them appear more appropriately fitted for discussion in another place, whilst others have been so amply and clearly dealt with by my noble friend that I do not propose to make any observations upon them. It only remains for me to thank your Lordships for the patience with which you have been good enough to listen to me, and to second the Address.

*EARL SPENCER: My Lords, before I come to the Speech from the Throne, I must refer to some events that have occurred since the adjournment of the House last year. The noble Lord the seconder of the Address spoke in most appropriate words of the great loss the House and the country have sustained since that time by the death of that distinguished statesman and orator, Lord Salisbury. I fully share the views the noble Lord so well expressed. Lord Salisbury filled a unique position in this House—a position of transcendent power; and I am quite sure of this, that no one who has been as long as I have been in this House can forget the lucid and eloquent words which always came from his lips without an error and without check. We deeply deplore that the country has lost him. When the noble Marquess resigned the Leadership of this House, which he held with such distinction so long, he was succeeded by my friend the noble Duke, to whom reference was also made by the noble Lord the seconder. The noble Duke has not held that position very long. He has been for little more than one session Leader of this House. I venture to remind your Lordships that when he undertook the duties of that position I said that I felt confident that his high character and his high ability would enable him to fulfil them to the satisfaction, not only of his own side of the House, but of us who sit on the Opposition side. My Lords, he amply fulfilled those prophecies.

And now, my Lords, as we have his successor here to-night for the first time since he has assumed the Leadership, I hope the House may pardon me if I refer to some historical events with which his great name is connected. The noble Marquess will not be the first of his family who has been Leader of this House. Fifty-two years ago the Marquess of Lansdowne of that day stood in his place, and, on the resignation of the Government of Lord John Russell, stated that he probably would no more again in an official capacity address this House. But he did address this House on one very remarkable occasion in the same year. It was the year signalised by the death of that great warrior, patriot, and citizen, the Duke of Wellington; a most eloquent reference to that noble Duke was made by the Marquess of Lansdowne, and I will quote what the noble Marquess further said:—

> "My Lords, I stand in somewhat of a peculiar situation before your Lordships, addressing you on this subject, because it may not be known to the greater number of your Lordships—indeed, there are not many now alive to recollect it—that the individual who has now the honour of addressing you, some forty-seven years ago, in his place in the other House of Parliament when young in his Parliamentary life, was permitted and authorised by his colleagues of that time to call on that other House to do justice to the memory, and to provide for the family, of one of the greatest heroes that ever lived, and with whom alone, in the military annals of this country, the noble Duke, now no more, could be compared."

I mention this because it establishes a very interesting historical connection between the noble Marquess, now our Leader, and his grandfather, who, on two occasions, at an interval of forty-seven years, moved a vote and made an eloquent eulogy on our two greatest heroes—our greatest naval hero, Lord Nelson, and our greatest military hero, the Duke of Wellington. I am sure that we who know the noble Marquess may rely with confidence on the part which he will take in this House. We know his distinguished career in Canada and in India. We know from experience the ability and courtesy with which he has conducted many controversial debates in this House, when he has been the head of two important Departments of the State. I therefore feel assured that this House will allow me to congratulate, and will itself congratulate, the noble Marquess on the position in which he is placed, and will congratulate itself in having him as its Leader. I now come to the speeches of the mover and seconder of the Address. I have had considerable experience in this House, and I have seldom heard two more interesting speeches, or two speeches which commend themselves so much to the good feeling of the House. The noble Earl who moved the Address belongs to a very distinguished family, and I am happy to think that I can claim personal, though not political, friendship with him. The noble Lord the seconder to the Address made a singularly able, intelligent, and interesting speech. He showed great knowledge of diplomacy, and spoke in very appropriate words of many of the passages in the Gracious Speech. May I express this hope—that the desire of taking part in the public debates in this House in the future will not be damped so far as they are concerned, as I fear it has so often been, not only with young speakers but also with older speakers, by the cold and somewhat depressing atmosphere of this House?

I will now come to the words of the Gracious Speech from the Throne. I am glad to congratulate His Majesty's Government on the four paragraphs which commence the Speech. There is no subject in which, I think, the country takes at this moment a deeper interest than the question of arbitration. This subject has come prominently before the world in recent years owing to the action of the Czar and the conferences which took place at the Hague. I rejoice to think that His Majesty's Government have been able to use this noble and humane principle of arbitration—a principle which, we may hope, will not only diminish the terrible risks of war, with all the accompanying loss of life and sacrifice of treasure, but may, if properly followed, not only by ourselves, but by other nations, possibly lead to what we all must desire so heartily, and that is the diminution of the gigantic cost of preparation for war. That is one of the considerations which, I think, is prominently now before this country. The great cost of preparation for war is sapping, to a great extent, the resources of many countries, and it prevents the development of other most important reforms. It will probably affect the great question of education, to which it is so necessary to attend at this time in this country. It may also affect other social reforms; therefore, I do sincerely trust, if the example which His Majesty's Government has set with regard to arbitration is followed, we may find it will have some permanent and beneficial effect upon this enormous expenditure, which I believe everybody, to whatever side in politics he belongs, deeply deplores.

With regard to arbitration with our great neighbours in France, I sincerely rejoice at the friendly interchange of visits that have taken place between His Majesty the King and the President of the Republic; and I cannot help thinking that this country feels deep gratitude to our august Sovereign for the great impulse and support which he has given to this friendly feeling, and I venture to say we may trace, to a great extent, to his influence the successful movement which has been made with regard to foreign countries. It is satisfactory to know that the same process is going on with regard to Agreements with Italy and the Netherlands, and I should be glad if the noble Marquess is able to inform us that the Agreement with Italy has actually been made. I cannot also but congratulate His Majesty's Government on having successfully arrived at some conclusion with regard to the Alaska boundary. His Majesty the King has referred to that in very expressive words, and I think we may heartily rejoice, although in some respects we may regret part of the decision, if these misunderstandings which have been so fruitful of controversies in the past will now pass into the domain of history.

I now come to a subject as to which, I confess, I feel considerable regret. I refer to the war in Somaliland. On a former occasion I ventured to ask his Majesty's Government to give an explanation as to how far our troops were to go into the great desert and the waterless country which faced them. I pointed out what very grave results might follow such proceedings. I fear I was not very incorrect in my foreshadowing of what was about to take place. We have had long marches, and, I will not say reverses, but often very serious difficulties in our advance, and though now our arms seem to have been crowned with victory, the Mullah, or whatever he is called, like a will-of-the-wisp, flits in front of the troops, and there seems but little hope of catching him or surrounding him. I know we all feel great sorrow at the losses that have taken place, and perhaps I may say a word, and only one word, of great sympathy and affection to a friend of mine and a Member of your Lordships' House. We mourn the loss of his gallant son, and we sympathise most deeply with him and his friends in their bereavement. What I should like to know about this is, are expeditions far into a country like that essential to maintain the honour and dignity of the country, and to effect the objects we have in view? I know that negotiations with tribes of this sort are impossible; but is it impossible to occupy strongly posts round the settlements where our colonies are placed, and to defend them with the utmost strength, repelling any attack, and in that way punish these wild tribes, instead of having to pursue them in the manner in which we have had to pursue the Mullah? May I sincerely trust that the reference to General Egerton's victory may be the forerunner of the close of these operations, and that we may hear that the object we have in view has now been attained, and that we shall be able to withdraw our gallant troops, who have behaved, the officers especially, with such extraordinary gallantry, from the waterless land where they have been so long?

Earl Spencer.

The next paragraph touches a subject of the profoundest interest to this country. We have been watching with the keenest anxiety the negotiations which have been going on in the Far East between Russia and Japan. Two years ago we had a discussion in this House with regard to that subject and the treaty; but whatever may have been thought at that time of that treaty, it would not be proper or desirable at this moment to enter into any discussion upon it, and I shall entirely abstain from doing so. I sincerely trust that the hope held out by the noble Marquess, that the treaty would conduce towards peace, may have been, or will be, fulfilled, and that we may before long see removed the dark cloud which has been hanging over us, and which, though for the moment it hangs only over the East, may spread further and come nearer to us, and that we may see Japan developing her resources in peace and harmony. Anybody reading this paragraph of the Speech would believe that His Majesty's Government have been merely contemplating what has been happening in the East without taking any part whatever in it. There is no word of what they have done. There is merely the expression of a prospective hope that power may be exercised to promote a pacific settlement. I cannot suppose that this is all that has been done. I cannot help thinking and hoping that the good and friendly offices of His Majesty's Government have been warmly and courteously given to both Powers—and, possibly, more especially to the Power with whom we have a treaty—to induce them to come to amicable terms, and to prevent a war which would be so disastrous. I hope the noble

Marquess will be able to explain this paragraph.

With regard to Macedonia I have very little to say. It is a question which has been long before us. The noble Lord opposite said that all we wanted was patience. I would ask your Lordships, is not our patience nearly exhausted? The first solution proposed by Russia and Austria came to no good result. Then another solution was proposed, and during a great part of last summer the most fierce warfare was going on between the Turks and the insurgents in Macedonia. I fear that when the season becomes more favourable to the movement of troops we may again see this insurrection and this lamentable state of warfare arising in Macedonia; and I therefore feel considerably disappointed that at this season we cannot have more satisfactory assurances from His Majesty's Government. But I really hope that the Government, knowing what the feeling of the country is as to the necessity of, if possible, putting an end to the disastrous condition of affairs in this part of the dominions of the Porte, will do their utmost to support the Governments who are more active in the matter in arriving at a happy solution of this great question. I shall presently refer to the latter part of the reference to the acts of the New Zealand Legislature; but let me now express my satisfaction that the New Zealand Government, and I suppose also the Australian Government, have come to a new arrangement with His Majesty's Government in regard to their contribution towards the naval forces which protect our dominions across the sea. We have always held that we were doing the duty we were called upon to do as an Imperial Power in finding for the colonies the naval forces which they required, but we also thought that the colonies ought to contribute some sum towards the expenditure on those forces. That sum, certainly, has not been hitherto a large one. The noble Earl who spoke first had the advantage of knowing what we do not know—at least I do not know—of what the colonies are now proposing to do. I congratulate the Government on having made this advance towards getting a fairer payment for the work which our naval forces do in that part of the world.

I now come to the expedition to Thibet. We are promised Papers with regard to this question, and therefore I shall not go at great length into it. But there are one or two questions to which an immediate answer, I think, would be desirable which I wish to ask His Majesty's Government. The noble Earl opposite told us that this expedition has become necessary for various reasons. We shall look with great anxiety at the Papers to see what that necessity arises from. The convention of 1890 was carried out, I believe, when the noble Marquess was Viceroy of India. That Convention was made direct with the Chinese Government. Now we hear, certainly, that, "with the concurrence of the Chinese Government," this expedition has gone on; but why has the tradition that existed in India before, that negotiations should go direct to the Chinese Government, been departed from, and why have these negotiations not been made with the Chinese Government? There is another question. We know that this force is advancing into a mountainous country, a country where the utmost rigour of cold prevails. We are told that the cold there is somewhat like that which prevails on Mont Blanc. We know that the expedition has gone at the most inclement season, and, if the newspapers are correct, that it has already lost nearly the whole of the animals of transport. I want to ask what is the pressing need and the wrong that we have to redress which require this force to be sent at such an inclement season? I have another point. We know that in the Government of India Act, 1858, there is a particular clause, the 55th I think, with regard to the Indian Government not using its funds for the purposes of an expedition outside its own boundaries. I want to know whether the Indian Government have taken that particular clause into consideration. Is this a mere friendly group of visitors sent by the Government of India to Thibet, or does it mean more? We hear of an escort of something like 500 going with the expedition, carrying guns and other munitions of war, and there is a large body, numbering, I believe, some 2,000 men, who are keeping up the communications. I am bound to say that at present the expedition seems to be much more of a military expedition than a mere friendly diplomatic visit to the natives. I do not suppose, from what I have heard and from what I have learned, that there is much danger of our troops being attacked, or, if they are attacked, of any disaster happening to them; but there is no doubt they are suffering considerable hardships and privations.

With regard to the Estimates, I do not say much. The Estimates belong more to another place; but there are important considerations which I shall touch upon presently which affect the interests of the whole country and should not be lost sight of by your Lordships' House. I read, however, that His Majesty's Government are really considering the possibility of diminishing the terrible outlay on naval and military defence which is now weighing down the country, and may in the future be a very serious drawback to our prosperity, and I sincerely trust that they may be able to effect economy in this great expenditure. I now come to the omnibus clauses with reference to administration. I hardly think there is any what I may call a great political administrative Bill mentioned. There are, I will not call them friends, because some of them I do not at all like, but there are some old stagers travelling on the Parliamentary road which we all know very well. There are the aliens; there is the question which interests so much some of my noble friends on this side of the House—the hours of employment in shops; there is the Compensation Act, and there are other proposals; but I do not see one Bill which was pressed forward last year—namely, the Bill with regard to the Port of London. There is one Bill on which I want to make some remarks. That is a Bill with regard to the necessity for re-election in the case of acceptance of office by Members of the House of Commons. I can well understand that His Majesty's Government may desire very ardently to carry this Bill. His Majesty's Government have probably had more experience in remodelling Governments than any Government within our memory, and it is just possible that in trying to distribute offices among its supporters His Majesty's Government have sometimes been unable to make the best selection owing to the difficulty of elections. I can, therefore, quite imagine that His Majesty's Government may desire to have the existing law altered. But we do not quite look at it in the same way. I admit that in the past the Party to which I have the honour to belong have also altered the law. I think it was their Bill in 1869 which did away with the dissolution on the demise of the Crown. There has also been a measure to render unnecessary an appeal to the constituencies on a mere change of office within the Government. But this Bill goes still further. If there is anything in the old principle that a Government should not remain in office or be encouraged if it has not the support of the constituencies of the country, that old doctrine, I think, is not quite exploded, and there will be a good many people who will still wish to see it applied.

The Bill with regard to licensing and the sale of intoxicating liquors in England is a matter of very great importance. Much depends upon the way in which His Majesty's Government frame their proposals. We on this side of the House will deprecate most strongly any attempt to deprive the magistrates of their full discretion in this matter. I do not believe that there is any case whatever to show that the magistrates have exceeded their powers; and, if this Bill goes any length to thwart the magistrates in the exercise of their discretion, that measure will receive most determined opposition from this side of the House and from our friends in the other House. With regard to the Valuation Bill, it is difficult, in the words of the Gracious Speech from the Throne, to say how far it may go. It may be a mere technical measure altering slightly the machinery with regard to the valuation authorities in their preparation of the valuation lists. If, however, it follows the lines laid down by the important Commission, of which Lord Balfour was Chairman, I can assure His Majesty's Government that we shall give it the very best consideration in our power; for, in my opinion, there is no measure so much wanted at this moment as a thorough, complete, and wise reform of all matters connected with the incidence of local taxation. If the measure is of that character I do not think His Majesty's Government will find any obstructive action on the part of the Opposition.

Earl Spencer.

I have now touched upon the various points which have been referred to in the Speech from the Throne. But there are other questions which have been omitted and which, in my opinion, are of the utmost moment, and ought to be at once brought before the attention of Parliament. It is a remarkable thing that in this Speech there is no reference whatever to South Africa. At the last meeting of Parliament we had constant references to South Africa. At this time last year a distinguished statesman, who was then Colonial Secretary, had not returned from his tour in South Africa. He had been there conducting most important negotiations, and he had proposed and apparently brought about the settlement of a considerable number of questions. That gave rise to Bills and to very important discussions. Parliament, I think, will demand a great deal of information with regard to South Africa. We want to know how far the settlement of the country is progressing, and how far the farmers who were dispossessed of their farms are settling down. We want to know what number of troops have been withdrawn from that country, and what number of troops remain there. We want also to know what has been done with regard to the financial arrangements which were discussed so much last year. What has become of those loans? What has become of a certain £10,000,000 which was to be paid towards the expenses of the war into the Imperial Exchequer, guaranteed by millionaires in the Transvaal? We hear rumours that this payment is not to be made, or that it is to be deferred. We want to know whether that is to be the case. All these questions require the attention of the Government, and explanation by them.

There is also the question of labour in the Transvaal. I cannot conceive a greater question than that. We hear that it is proposed to introduce into the Transvaal—it may be wrong, but rumour says something like 100,000 Chinese. What will result from that? It will completely revolutionise the labour organisation in the Transvaal, and will have a profound effect in other colonies of South Africa. We hear more than rumours— we hear reports of what has been done in the Cape Colony, where, if I am not mistaken, there is pretty nearly a unanimous opinion against this action. Not only is this a serious thing in regard to the Transvaal, but it is also a serious thing in regard to the question of federation. If this dispute arises between the colonies will it not retard this great measure which some statesmen who know South Africa well look to as the final solution of the difficulty? I wish to be clearly understood. At the present moment the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony are Crown colonies. When we deal with self-governing colonies we have a prime principle on which we base our views, and that is that in all matters of internal government those colonies are to be supreme, and they are to settle what they consider right for the prosperity and benefit of the subjects of the Crown in those colonies. I at once admit that, if this question had been submitted to a self-governing colony, and if they had decided that it was necessary to introduce this large number of Chinese labourers, then, however much one might have disliked it, and dreaded the moral and social effect of such an act, and the position in which these Chinamen themselves would be under the restrictions under which they would be placed, I certainly should have accepted the position. But how can we tell, until free and responsible government is given to the Transvaal, that they are in favour of this stupendous and gigantic step? I think this is a matter that requires the profoundest attention. It was only yesterday that we had the Papers on the subject. It is impossible in twenty-four hours to deal with a Blue-book on the subject of the deficiency of labour in the Transvaal. But I notice there is a minority and a majority Report, and I rather think there is no mention of the immigration of Chinese labourers into Africa. Then, we have not got the important ordinance which has been passed. I have said enough to show that this is a matter of great importance; and I should like the noble Marquess to say whether I am right in the belief that the Colonial Secretary has declared, in a letter which I think appeared in a newspaper within the last few days, that he does not intend to give his assent, or to allow this great change to be effected, until full discussion has taken place in Parliament.

Now I come to another matter which has been referred to to-night—I mean the Report from the Royal Commission which was presided over by Lord Elgin. I consider that a very important and a very remarkable document. It is couched in the most moderate terms. There is no attack upon the Government, no indictment of the Government, and in some respects it even defends the Government. But anybody who studies the evidence in that Report will, I think, find a most serious indictment against the Government of the day for their conduct before the war and in the early part of the war with regard to the preparations and other matters. There are some who say that this report is not sufficient, because it only deals with the preparation for the war, the ammunition, transport, and other matters up to the time of the occupation of Pretoria. There is a great deal after that which also requires consideration. Well, I do not for a moment deny that there may be something in it; but I do think that the evidence given is a very serious matter, and that Parliament cannot for a single moment overlook it. I have heard it stated in very high quarters that we must let bygones be bygones, and that we are not to consider that which has happened in the past; we are told to let the dead bury their dead—hat we must only look to what His Majesty's Government have done and what it is now proposed to do, the changes which are probably imminent in consequence of the evidence given before the Commission. I do not subscribe to that at all. I fully admit that there have been great changes. We have, indeed, had two changes in the office of Secretary of State for War, my noble friend opposite has become Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and his successor has become—has been promoted, if I may say so, to be—Secretary of State for India. I do not think that these changes should prevent us from discussing the past.

The scheme at this moment presented to Parliament, and which, no doubt, is a very important one, must receive the most careful attention of Parliament. The Report covers the whole ground, and touches what took place in the preparations for the war. No doubt the Secretary for War is chiefly responsible for a great deal that has been found fault with. At the same time there are other members of the Government who must be held responsible. There was the then Colonial Secretary who knew of our want of preparation; he knew the position we were in while the negotiations were going on. I think he very rashly rushed to conclusions the negotiations when he knew that at any moment he might have expected that his action would bring about hostile action on the part of Mr. Kruger. He is responsible; but most of all I cannot allow that we are to absolve the Cabinet from responsibility for this great default. I do not want now to go at any length into this matter; I merely raise it to show that I shall have something to say on the subject of the blame which is to be attached to the Government. My Lords, I find that there was no plan of campaign before the war began. There was a great neglect of the information placed at the service of the Government by the Intelligence Department as to the strength of the forces of the Transvaal, the amount of ammunition, and the number of the guns that they had. All this seems to me to have been overlooked. Then as to ourselves, there was an insufficient supply of ammunition, and there was an enormous number of rifles with most imperfect sights, one of the most dangerous things to be placed in the hands of skilled riflemen. Here they had given them rifles which would not shoot properly. There are many other points which can be raised against the Government in regard to the conduct of the war. The country must be shown what has been the cause of these great errors; and I venture to say that the proper responsibility should be fixed on members of the Government, and the Government itself, for what I am afraid led to the prolongation of the war, and in many cases brought about disaster, and certainly enormous expense, to the country. We on this side of the House shall not lose any opportunity that we may have to bring these matters before the House, which is so well able to discuss questions connected with the military and naval forces.

I have only one subject more to which I shall refer, and I fully admit that it is a subject which is of the greatest national importance that can be brought before the country. I refer to the fiscal question. We all know that since Parliament was prorogued, in every political centre in the country, discussion has been going on on one side and the other with regard to this great fiscal question. It has been conducted with great courage on one side by one man, and it has been conducted on the other side by his opponents with great ability. Now I cannot help referring to the manner in which this discussion has been carried on. The result of the action of the late Colonial Secretary—one result—is that it has entirely transformed and changed His Majesty's Government. First of all came the retirement of Mr. Chamberlain. It was followed by the resignations of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary for India. Later on came the almost more important resignation of my noble friend the Duke of Devonshire, who, during the whole of the Government of Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour, had been one of the strongest pillars of that Government. At the same time another distinguished member of the Government, the Secretary for Scotland, highly respected not only in this House, but in Scotland, resigned. There were certain minor changes; and I venture to say that the Cabinet which existed before these resignations took place, before this transformation, was entirely changed.

I cannot go into the question which is likely to be raised here; I shall not to-night go into detail of the manner in which these changes took place. But I shall venture to point out the remarkable changes which have taken place in the line of the argument of the principal speaker, Mr. Chamberlain, in the conduct of his great campaign. He at first argued the question as an Imperialist. We were told that we must do something to keep united with us our colonies, that we must make some sacrifices to do that, in the building up of a great Empire, and that it was of the utmost importance that this policy of his should be carried out. I confess that it always seemed to me a strange time to propose that special measures should be taken to unite our colonies immediately after the marvellous loyalty, patriotism, and devotion to this country shown by so many colonies during the war. It seemed to me almost an insult to say that we were obliged by some fiscal measure to secure that loyalty which, before any such preference had been given, had already been displayed by the colonies. Well, that was the commencement. We were told that we must sacrifice something to secure this union and co-operation. Any increase in cost to the people was to be made good to the working classes in various ways. At one time it was by old-age pensions. That has disappeared. In the autumn campaign we hardly ever heard anything, or very little, about preference. Protection took its place. That was to meet the attitude of the colonies themselves. We know from many sources of information that Canada objects to give us any preference or to abate in any way her duties, because Canada considers that that would injuriously affect her manufactures.

We have heard something with regard to New Zealand. We have lately seen a very eloquent and patriotic speech made by Mr. Seddon in introducing a measure with regard to tariffs. It may be that in one respect he has offered to do something as regards tea, but in every other respect he has not abated in the slightest degree the duties against British manufactures. The remarkable thing is that what is the most striking thing in this Bill is the proposal to give reciprocity to foreign countries. This is offered to any foreign country which is willing to make a reduction of its duties. I will venture to say that one reason for this change of attitude on the part of the ex-Colonial Secretary was that he found that the only force which was a potent one with the constituencies was this question of Protection. Therefore, I maintain that Mr. Chamberlain's policy is now one of Protection. If that is so, your Lordships will understand how those with whom I act, who are strongly opposed to Protection, will make every effort to withstand and defeat a policy we consider so dangerous to the prosperity of the industry and trade of this country, and which will bring such difficulties on the working classes by increasing the cost of food and of necessaries of life. I wish to press on His Majesty's Government that they should declare their position. We have had statements from the Prime Minister, statements in which he has said he was quite ready to alter the fundamental fiscal position which has prevailed through generations, and what does this mean? Does it not indicate a wish to return to Protection? I am aware that he has said he is a free trader; but I cannot see how he can retain that character. He has given his benediction to Mr. Chamberlain's policy, but he has said we must not be in too great a hurry. He thinks it would be premature to adopt this policy now, that caution must be used in advancing on the lines of Mr. Chamberlain's policy, but he certainly does hold out a hope that at some future day, when the country has been prepared by the advocacy and the propagandism of Mr. Chamberlain, it may adopt preferential duties with our colonies, adopt the taxation of food; and there are those who support Mr. Balfour who would conform to that.

But is that the policy of His Majesty's Government? If we look to members of the Government we find various opinions expressed. We find these opinions of the Prime Minister, which, on the whole, are distinctly favourable to Mr. Chamberlain, supported by the new Colonial Secretary and others—I am not sure whether my noble friend opposite, the Minister for Agriculture, supports that view. On the other hand, there are Ministers who have repudiated that policy most distinctly; there is the noble Lord, now Postmaster-General, who made a most remarkable speech the other day, in which he said that though he was a supporter of Mr. Balfour, he would not remain in the Government if the Government took up anything like a policy involving taxation of food. Other Ministers have expressed similar views. But what is the Government policy—for a policy they must have—on this great question? It is impossible for a Government to remain without a clear and distinct declaration of their position. This is a point I would like to put to your Lordships—is it right that a policy should be dangled before the country, should be held in suspense for a long time? The Prime Minister has said it cannot be decided for some time, and there is an idea that not one election can decide it. Will not this hesitation have a very injurious effect on the finance, the commerce, and the industry of the country? There are continual declarations from the President of the Board of Trade and others that the trade of the country is declining, but I am convinced this is an entirely erroneous view, and that trade was never more prosperous in this country, though I admit some changes may be necessary, for we have to meet a keen and active competition from other nations, and must look to ourselves and see that we are fully armed for the struggle. The people of this country must be fully educated to meet this competition, but I cannot believe or admit that the trade and prosperity of this great country is on the wane. Such declarations cannot but be detrimental to the interests of this country abroad, and also at home. This is not agreed to by some who say the change is so far off that it does not affect the people at the present time, but I venture to think it must have a serious effect on the trade and industry of the country. I trust that very soon we shall have a decision that will remove all doubts that exist. I very earnestly appeal to His Majesty's Government to declare themselves on this subject. I understand the position taken up by Mr. Chamberlain. It is quite clear; but I defy anyone, however ingenious, however able, to understand the position of the Government. I appeal to them to make their position clear. It is their duty to do so. Though this is a matter that should principally be debated in another place, we shall not here sit quiet, but take every opportunity we can—and we hope we may not be entirely without support from some Members on the other side of the House whose patriotism will come before their adherence to Party—to bring this question before the country, if possible to awaken the people to a proper sense of the stupendous effect this great change would have on the prosperity of the country.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of LANSDOWNE): My Lords, before I address myself to the controversial matters with which the noble Earl has dealt in the course of his speech, there is one subject upon which I will ask to be allowed to say a very few words. It was touched upon by the noble Earl and also by the noble Lord who seconded the Address. I refer to the great loss, the irreparable loss, this House has sustained by the death of the late Lord Salisbury. It has been truly said his position in this House was unique. We think of him as a great statesman, as a great Party Leader, as a great diplomatist, but to us who had the advantage of sitting with him in this House he will always appear above all things a great and illustrious Member of the House of Lords. No one ever took a more prominent part in upholding the best traditions of this Assembly, no one imparted more authority and dignity to its debates; and even towards the close of his life, when those of us who watched him closely noticed, with pain, signs of the weariness which resulted from long years of public service and responsibility, even then we listened to him as we listened to no other Member of the House of Lords. Surely we who lament him may say of him, with regret and reverence, "Oh, how much wisdom sleeps with thee." I pass from this subject in order to associate myself with the noble Earl in congratulating my two noble friends who moved and seconded the Address. I do not think I ever had the privilege of hearing what has always seemed to me to be a most difficult and most embarrassing duty performed with greater taste and ability. My noble friend the mover has had the advantage of apprenticeship in the House of Commons, and has no doubt derived benefit from the invigorating atmosphere of that Assembly. The noble Lord who seconded served his apprenticeship in the Diplomatic Service; and I must say that, as I listened to his well-chosen words and noticed the felicity with which he expressed himself, I felt that the House of Lords had gained a valuable recruit and that the Diplomatic Service had lost one who would have taken a useful, I might almost say, an eminent part in that profession. Both my noble friends, speaking with becoming modesty, asked your Lordships to grant to them the indulgence never refused to those who address the House of Lords for the first time, and I ask leave of my noble friends to stand alongside them for once. I cannot claim from your Lordships indulgence as a young and inexperienced Member of this Assembly, but I am reminded by what has been so kindly and considerately said by the noble Earl that I need the indulgence of your Lordships at least as much as my two noble friends. We in this House always succeed in maintaining courteous and considerate relations between those who sit on different sides of it; and I must express my thanks to the noble Earl and tell him how deeply I am touched by the kindly references he made, not only to myself, but to a predecessor of mine, who bore the name I now bear with a distinction to which I can never aspire.

I now pass to the different matters which the noble Earl referred to in the course of his remarks. The noble Earl was good enough to congratulate His Majesty's Government on the contents of the first four paragraphs of the Speech from the Throne. I feel sure that all of us will regard with genuine satisfaction the fact that so considerable an approximation has taken place between the great country which is our neighbour on the other side of the Channel and ourselves. I do not think you will find, either here or in France, that too much credit is taken to themselves by the diplomatists of either country for this happy condition of things. It is due, no doubt, partly to those courtesies which have recently been exchanged and to which reference has been made; but I believe it to be due mainly to a deep-seated conviction on the part of the peoples of the two countries that there is no real divergence between our interests, that the greatest of our common interests is peace, and that there is no greater security for the peace of Europe than that it should be desired both by France and Great Britain.

The Treaty of Arbitration, to which reference is made in the Gracious Speech, is a very strictly limited one, but it is valuable as giving expression to the feelings which I have just endeavoured to describe; and it has been followed by a similar Treaty with Italy, signed within the last two-days, and by a Treaty with the Netherlands, which is in course of negotiation. In the case of the United States we have endeavoured to translate into practice what in the treaties with France and Italy is laid down as a matter of principle. It is quite true that the tribunal which has lately disposed of the Alaska difficulty, was not, strictly speaking, an arbitral tribunal. It affords, nevertheless, an illustration of the possibility of settling by other than diplomatic means a long-standing and dangerous international difference. I describe it as dangerous because the frontier of Alaska might at any moment have brought us into serious and acute controversy with the United States. And for this reason, that the Alaskan frontier might have been challenged not only by diplomatic protests, but by overt acts on the part of the population which has resorted to that remote country for the purpose of pursuing the mining industry. Any serious clashing on the spot between the settlers belonging to Canada, on the one hand, or to the United States on the other, might at any moment have brought about an incident of the utmost gravity. It is therefore most fortunate that we should have been successful in removing that question from the path of our diplomacy. The result in the finding of the tribunal has no doubt not been entirely satisfactory to us, and in this respect I do not draw any distinction between the interests of the Dominion of Canada and our interests. The question at issue is a question of the position not merely of the frontier of Canada, but of the frontier of the British Empire, for the defence and the integrity of which we are responsible. But, my Lords, I do not think that any one seriously expected that we should obtain a favourable verdict on all points; and I am inclined to find some consolation in the fact that our military and naval advisers tell us confidently that the two islands in the Portland Channel which, under this award were given to the United States, are of no strategical value whatever.

The noble Earl expressed disappointment that more progress had not been made in bringing about an improvement in the position of the long-suffering and misgoverned population in Macedonia. The policy of the Government has been based upon a desire to avoid a breach of the peace in Macedonia, and upon an equally sincere desire to bring about an amelioration of the condition of the population. I connect these two objects very closely, because there can be no doubt that if a conflagration were to break out in the Balkan Peninsula the greatest and most immediate sufferers would be the unfortunate inhabitants of those vilayets in which the recent disturbances have occurred. We have, at any rate, come to the conclusion that we could not do better than support the two Powers—Austria-Hungary and Russia — in the schemes of reform which they have put forward. But, as the Papers which have been laid on the Table, I believe to-day, will show your Lordships, we have spared no efforts in order to give to these schemes as much completeness as possible, and we have made it perfectly plain to all concerned that if these schemes should fail to produce the desired result, we reserve to ourselves entire liberty to take into consideration and to propose alternative and more far-reaching measures. I think we may fairly say that something has been achieved, and I trust that advantage will be taken of the next few weeks in order to accelerate the introduction of those reforms. The situation is undoubtedly an extremely grave one, and I can conceive no greater misfortune than that, either on account of dilatoriness on the part of those who are putting forward these measures, or on account of obstructiveness on the part of the Porte, we should find ourselves once more at the beginning of what may, I suppose, be called the fighting season without any real progress having been achieved in the direction which we so much desire.

In his reference to the negotiations between Japan and Russia, the noble Earl asked me whether he might infer from the language of the paragraph in His Majesty's Speech that His Majesty's Government had used their good offices with the object of bringing about an understanding between the Powers. My answer to that is this. I believe it to be an axiom of diplomacy that it is not desirable to offer your good offices unless you have reason to know that they are desired. We have not been invited to extend our good offices; and it is indeed, I believe, an open secret that one, at all events, of the disputants has intimated plainly that he does not desire mediation at the present time. We have therefore, I think, been perfectly correct in advising the use in the Gracious Speech of language which shows that our desire certainly is to promote a pacific solution, and that if the opportunity of contributing to that end should happily present itself, we should be glad and ready to avail ourselves of it.

The noble Earl referred to the paragraph in which the Speech deals with the military operations in Somaliland. He expressed a very natural feeling of impatience at the manner in which these operations are being prolonged. I feel quite as impatient as he does. But it is our duty to bear in mind that the country is one in which the forces engaged have not only to contend with a formidable enemy, but with conditions of climate which render operations most arduous and most difficult. These operations in their earlier stages were certainly not wholly unsuccessful; but they were not so conclusive but that we thought it necessary to enlarge their scope and to endeavour to deal a crushing blow to the personage who has been commonly referred to as the Mullah. The noble Earl asked us why we could not establish ourselves strongly within our own settlements and avoid entangling ourselves in operations outside their limits. The answer to that is that we have not been allowed to do so. The noble Earl is no doubt aware that we not only have settlements actually on the coast, but that there are tribes immediately adjoining those settlements who have entered into arrangements with us, and who have a right to claim our protection. Beyond those tribes there lies the friendly kingdom of Abyssinia, and beyond that our East African Protectorate. It is impossible for us to allow a region of this kind to fall a prey to a Mahdi or to a Mullah, or indeed to any one who is capable of organising a fanatical movement, the extent of which it would be impossible to foretell. You may find it convenient to leave things alone and to allow the movement to develop itself, but you have always to pay for it in the long run. We at any rate have determined that these operations shall not conclude until the Mullah has been taught a sufficient lesson. The extent of the success achieved by Colonel Egerton can scarcely yet be fully gauged, but there is no doubt that he has dealt a very severe blow to the Mullah's prestige and that our position in Somaliland is at this moment infinitely stronger than it was a few months ago.

The noble Earl spoke in feeling terms of the losses by which these operations have been attended. In all such operations we pay a penalty in the shape of a long casualty list which invariably includes an undue proportion of British officers. There is no attribute of our British officers of which we have more reason to be proud than their power of leading troops and levies drawn from comparatively uncivilised countries and races. The secret of that success is this, that they never shrink from exposing themselves wherever danger is greatest, with the result that they too often pay the penalty with their lives; I am sure every Member of your Lordships' House will join with the noble Earl in offering our sympathy to a popular and much respected Member of the House of Lords who has suffered a grievous and lamentable bereavement in this recent action. It is satisfactory to know that these operations have been considerably assisted by the Italian Government, which has allowed us to make use of Italian ports, and has in particular done a great deal to suppress that pernicious traffic in arms which does so much to aggravate the difficulties of those engaged in warfare of this kind.

Then the noble Earl asked me a series of questions with regard to the mission to Thibet, and expressed a hope that an explanation would be given of the circumstances in which that mission originated. We are laying Papers on the Table, and the Noble Earl will learn from them that this affair had its origin, not, as seems sometimes to be supposed, in a British invasion of Thibet, but in a Thibetan invasion of a State under British protection. That event took place some years ago. We treated the Thibetans with the utmost leniency; we did not deprive them of any territory, we did not ask them for any indemnity. All we did ask for was that they should enter into a neighbourly agreement with us, under which the frontier was to be clearly demarcated and facilities were given to persons engaged in trade across it. That agreement, so entered into, has been constantly broken; the boundary pillars have been removed, peaceful traders have been interfered with, our agents have been turned back, our letters have been returned unopened, and British subjects have been arrested and carried away. It is impossible that we should tolerate conduct of that kind, and the Government of India very properly determined to insist on obtaining a more satisfactory arrangement for the future. Then, says the noble Earl, "Why have you not been content to deal with this matter through the Chinese Government?" The answer to that is this. In 1890 we did deal with the Chinese Government, and the agreement then entered into by the Chinese Envoy, aided by a Thibetan assessor, was absolutely repudiated by the Thibetans. On this occasion, although we have again invoked the assistance of China, we have done so quite in vain. The Chinese Government began by sending down an officer of inferior rank and quite incapable of assisting the conduct of the negotiations. The Chinese representative at Lhasa endeavoured to dissuade the Thibetans from continuing their opposition, but he attempted to do so in vain. Finally, it may interest the noble Earl to know that the Chinese Government deputed an envoy to go to Thibet for the express purpose of settling these matters; that that envoy left Pekin in December, 1902, and is still on his way to Lhasa. I think, therefore, I am justified in saying that the Chinese Government are a broken reed to lean upon.

The noble Earl asked whether this Thibetan mission does not come within the purview of the 55th clause of the Government of India Act. That clause runs thus—

> "Except for preventing or repelling actual invasion of Her Majes y's Indian possessions, or under other and urgent necessity, the revenue of India shall not, without the consent of both Houses of Parliament, be applicable to defray the expenses of any military operations carried on beyond the external frontiers of such possessions by Her Majesty's forces charged upon such revenues."

We do not admit that the Thibetan mission, which is described in the Speech as a political mission, is a military operation. That matter has been thoroughly considered by the Government of India, and they are satisfied that there has been no contravention of the Act. So far as the people of Thibet are concerned, Colonel Younghusband seems to have been received in a very friendly manner. The opposition he has to encounter is, we believe, entirely confined to the monks at Lhasa, who constitute the civil and religious authority in that strange country.

Then the noble Earl passed to events in South Africa, and expressed his surprise that no information was forthcoming in the King's Speech with regard to the progress of settlement in that country, the number of troops employed there, the state of the finances, and last, but not least, the question of Chinese labour. I really think that a Speech from the Throne including subjects of this kind would be an extremely unusual document. So far as the general position of affairs in South Africa is concerned, I hope the noble Earl will be content to let us discuss that question on some more suitable occasion. But I do feel called upon to say a few words in reply to his observations as to the question of the employment of Chinese labour. The noble Earl said that in a self-governing colony he did not believe that the kind of action we were about to encourage or permit would be tolerated.

*EARL SPENCER: Oh, no. I said that whatever is done in self-governing colonies, however much we might criticise the importation of Chinese labour, we should not interfere.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: Of course this is not a self-governing colony; but it has been the desire of His Majesty's Government to deal with this question as nearly as possible as if we were dealing with a self-governing colony. That is the gist of our policy, and I think I am justified in pointing to the manner in which this proposal to introduce Asiatic labour has been supported in the Transvaal and in South Africa generally. I find that at the Bloemfontein Conference last year—a Conference at which all the South African Colonies were represented—a resolution was carried in favour of the introduction of Asiatic unskilled labour under proper Government control and on the understanding that the labourers should be repatriated at the expiration of their period of service. Then I find that the Labour Commission reported by a majority of ten to two in favour of that step. Then comes the action of the Legislative Council of the Transvaal, which decided in favour of the introduction of Asiatic labour by a majority of twenty-two to four. Finally, I find that a petition has been signed by more than half the male population of the Transvaal in favour of the introduction of Asiatic labour. Dealing as we were with a colony without self-governing institutions, we could not possibly have a greater weight of local authority in support of the proposed measure. I am afraid that the figure of 100,000 which the noble Earl gave us is not one founded upon fact. I believe that what is proposed is that 10,000 of these labourers shall be introduced as an experiment. Lastly, I have to say that the noble Earl is quite correct in stating that the Colonial Secretary has announced that nothing will be finally settled on this point until opportunity has been offered for a full discussion in Parliament. My noble friend the Under-Secretary for the Colonies reminds me that the Papers will be presented as soon as possible.

Now I should like to say a few words on a question which I need not tell your Lordships has aroused a deep interest in the country and has probably a deeper interest for me than for any other Member of your Lordships' House—I mean the Report of Lord Elgin's Commission. That report—the great value of which I am fully prepared to admit—may be used either for one or both of two purposes. You may endeavour to find in it the materials for an indictment of the Government which was in power when the South African war broke out. If you desire to use it for that purpose we are quite ready to meet you. The noble Earl admitted that the report was by no means a condemnation of the then Government at all points. If we are to deal with the report as an indictment of the Government of 1899, we shall ask you to confine yourselves to the terms of that report and to bear in mind, as the noble Earl has admitted, that the report is by no means one which entirely condemns us. I think I shall be able to show that on some points upon which we were most severely criticised at the time, the Commission have reported in our favour. I hope I did not correctly understand what was said by the noble Earl when he told us, as I thought, that he proposed to turn from the report to the obiter dicta of the witnesses. There is an immense amount of evidence published with the report, but I think we have a right to ask that the noble Earl should accept the finding of the Commission, and not try to qualify that finding by citations from the opinions of the witnesses who were examined by the Commission. But this historical and personal aspect of the case, interesting as it may be, painfully interesting as it may be to some of us, is not after all the most important aspect of the report. Its great value is this—that it teaches us, upon authority, the lessons to be learned from the South African war, and, as to that, I hope your Lordships will consider that we have at any rate not been slow to take advantage of the suggestions and advice which are given to us by the Commissioners. Your Lordships have already seen the report of that smaller Committee which was appointed to advise the Secretary of State as to the manner in which effect might be given to some of the Commission's recommendations; and I shall be surprised if any Member of this House is found to say that the report of Lord Esher's Committee is wanting in thoroughness or courage. We intend to act upon it so far as its main principles are concerned; and when the time comes for discussing these questions in your Lordships' House you will have before you the facts as disclosed by the report of the Elgin Commission and a clear and distinct statement of the manner in which we propose to deal with the most important subject dealt with in that inquiry—I mean the organisation of the War Office itself.

The noble Earl, at the close of his speech, addressed your Lordships upon that fiscal question which now looms so much in the foreground of our political life. I have no doubt we shall be given frequent opportunity of discussing it, and I therefore treat the noble Earl's observations as more in the nature of a reconnaissance in force than of a frontal attack. But he made one or two observations as to which I should like to say a word. I observe that, following a course which is not very unusual on the part of his friends, he attacked us, not for any policy which we have ourselves put forward, or to which we are in any way committed, but for the policy which has been put forward and recommended to the country by the late Colonial Secretary. I did not catch, in the course of the noble Earl's speech, any serious complaint of the policy which has been laid before the country by the Prime Minister, except that he did not think the Prime Minister had sufficiently defined it; he asked us whether we could tell him what that policy really was. I must say that I thought Mr. Balfour, in the document which he published, and in the speech which he delivered at Sheffield, followed later by a speech which he delivered at Manchester, had very successfully and completely defined the policy which we as a Government have accepted. It is the policy which is usually, for convenience sake, described as the policy of negotiation and retaliation. I have never heard that noble Lords opposite seriously contend that freedom of negotiation is not a freedom which we should be allowed to enjoy; and, as for retaliation, in all the speeches delivered by noble Lords opposite and their friends, I notice that there is always a saving clause about retaliation, and I also notice that that saving clause is always received by the audience with apparently much more enthusiasm than the other parts of their speeches.

The gist of the attack is that we do not conceal our sympathy with the objects which Mr. Chamberlain has proclaimed. I am here to say that I for one certainly do not wish to conceal my sympathy with Mr. Chamberlain's aspirations and objects. The aim of his policy is to draw the different parts of the Empire more closely together, to put the affairs of the Empire, if I may so say, upon a more business footing than has hitherto been the case. Is that an object which any patriotic Englishman can regard with disapproval or indifference? I certainly was under the impression that all of us, for years past, have been seeking to find some way of drawing the colonies nearer to us; and surely the present moment, when the colonies, as is shown in the Speech from the Throne, are, on their side, ready to assume a larger proportion of the burden of Imperial defence, when they are ready to give our commerce facilities which are denied to other countries, is not the moment when we can afford to say that we will exclude altogether from discussion proposals of this kind. We admit—we have never concealed—that proposals of this kind require the most careful examination. We recognise the immense difficulties which have to be overcome before a practical shape can be given to them—difficulties which are not only of an economical, but of a political kind. And, as I have once or twice ventured to say in this House, I am not sure that the political difficulties are not more serious than the economical.

Well, in these circumstances, having explained with absolute clearness the limits of the policy which we are prepared to adopt and to recommend to the country, we say that the question of an extension of that policy of the kind proposed by Mr. Chamberlain is one with which we are not prepared to deal at the present time. Is that a very ignominious position to take up? The question is one of enormous gravity. If the reward of success in dealing with it might be great, the consequences of failure might be irreparable; and I venture to say that we are only showing common prudence when we decline to be rushed into a decision. You are always complaining of us because you suppose that we have sprung this question upon you and endeavoured to rush you into a decision. Then why is it that you wish to rush us into a negative of all these proposals? If you desire time to look about you, are we unreasonable in asking for a little time for the same purpose? Our position seems to me perfectly logical, and, in the meantime, we are fully prepared to defend the policy which we have accepted; and we shall not be very much moved by the ingenious criticism which goes to show that amongst the members of the Cabinet, or the members of the Government, there may be various shades and gradations of opinion—that some of us are more sanguine and that others are less sanguine with regard to the future—so long as we present a solid front in regard to that part of the policy which we have examined and to which, as a Government, we are committed. I have endeavoured to deal with most of the points which the noble Earl has raised. I am afraid that if I had made it my business to follow him in detail on all of them I should have kept your Lordships to a late hour. It only remains for me to thank your Lordships for the patience with which you have listened to me. I have, during my long period of service in this House, constantly had to take advantage of your Lordships' forbearance and generosity, and I trust that in the new position in which I have been unexpectedly placed by the events of the last few months I may look forward to the same patience and the same kindness which your Lordships have never failed to extend to me in past years.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (The Earl of HALSBURY): My Lords, I had not intended to intervene, but there is one topic on which I wish to say a word. I refer to the great loss which this House has sustained in the death of the late Lord Salisbury. I, who enjoyed for many years his personal friendship, feel it is impossible to remain silent and not to associate myself with what has been said by the seconder of the Address, by the noble Marquess, and by the noble Earl the Leader of the Opposition. I would associate myself with those observations which have been made, and I feel that in saying anything about him in this House it is an idle thing to attempt to say anything of one with whom your Lordships were so familiar. He has too often exhibited the phenomena of "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn" in this House to render any words from those who appreciated his friendship and admired his genius necessary to enhance the admiration with which we all regarded him. He is a loss, I was going to say, not only to his own country, but to Europe; and I think even that would be less than the truth, because it will be true to say that the whole civilised world must miss one who was a great leader of men and of men's thoughts, and one to whose judgment and sagacity from time to time men of all countries and all races have appealed. But of him, as of some other statesmen, I think it is true to say that the extent of his loss the world does not always understand. His colleagues know better how great that loss is, because they know how much has been saved from time to time by the wisdom and sagacity with which affairs have been conducted. And it is the very fact of success that has sometimes buried in oblivion things which might have led to calamities which his wisdom and sagacity have avoided. The very fact of what he has done has buried in oblivion those things which might have led to war; and I can say most truly, that, in my view, on more than one occasion, his patience and forbearance, his tact and courage, have saved his country from what might have been a calamitous war. I will not trust myself to speak of him as a friend and colleague. No one, I believe, who ever came within the sphere of his influence has failed implicity to trust him, and no man ever trusted him in vain.

I will not be provoked into reference to the other matters which the noble Earl the Leader of the Opposition has brought before us. I could not help feeling while I was listening to him that his speech ought logically to have been followed by an Amendment to the Address, and in that case it would have been possible for your Lordships to have expressed an opinion one way or the other. But vague, general declamation against the existing Government, not followed by anything which can give power to your Lordships to express an opinion one way or the other, is not a form of discussion which I think is favourable to those who have an answer to give. I have no doubt that on many occasions we shall have an opportunity of discussing all these topics, and then I shall give myself the satisfaction of occasionally replying to some of the observations which I feel to be unjust, but which this is not the appropriate occasion to discuss.

On Question, agreed to nemine dissentiente, and ordered to be presented to His Majesty by the Lords with White Staves.

The Earl of Morley—Appointed, nemine dissentiente, to take the Chair in all Committees of this House for this session.

Committee for Privileges—Appointed.

Committee for the Journals—Appointed.

Stoppages in the Streets—Order to prevent, renewed.

Appeal Committee—Appointed.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS (RECESS).

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House that the following Papers having been commanded to be presented to this House by His Majesty had been so presented on the following dates by delivery to the Clerk of the Parliaments, pursuant to Standing Order No. CXI., viz.—

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS (IRELAND).

I. Abstracts showing acreage under crops and the number of live stock in each county and province, 1902-1903. (August 15).

II. (Migratory Labourers). Report and Tables relating to Irish migratory agricultural and other labourers for the year 1903. (November 4).

III. Table showing the extent in statute acres, and the produce of crops for the year 1903. (December 30).

WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA (ROYAL COMMISSION).

Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the military preparations and other matters connected with the war in South Africa; with Minutes of Evidence (Vols. I. and II.) and Appendices. (September 10).

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).

I. Return for the month of May, 1903. (August 19.)

II. Return for the month of June, 1903. (September 28.)

III. Return for the month of July, 1903. (October 14.)

IV. Return for the month of August, 1903. (October 29.)

V. Return for the month of September, 1903. (November 24.)

VI. Return for the month of October, 1903. (December 19.)

TRADE REPORTS.—I. ANNUAL SERIES.

No. 3066. China (Amoy.)

No. 3067. Portugal (Lorenço Marques). (August 21.)

No. 3068. Germany (Dantzig).

No. 3069. France (French Guinea).

No. 3070. Italy (South Italy, Supplementary). (August 27.)

No. 3071. France (Algeria). (August 29.)

No. 3072. Russia (Riga). (September 1.)

No. 3073. Austria-Hungary.

No. 3074. Greece (Ionian Islands). (August 29.)

No. 3075. Austria-Hungary (Bohemia). (September 2.)

No. 3076. Cuba.

No. 3077. Costa Rica.

No. 3078. Netherlands (Dutch Guiana). (September 5.)

No. 3079. Peru.

No. 3080. Italy (Sicily).

No. 3081. China (Wuhu). (September 10.)

No. 3082. Austria-Hungary (Fiume).

No. 3083. Netherlands (Finances of the Netherlands, 1902–3). (September 25.)

No. 3084. Japan (Nagasaki). (September 15.)

No. 3085. Germany.

No. 3086. Finland. (September 19.)

No. 3087. France (Madagascar).

No. 3088. Spain (Canary Islands). (September 22.)

No. 3089. France (Senegal and Dependencies).

No. 3090. Italy (Lombardy). (September 24.)

No. 3091. Hayti.

No. 3092. China. (October 5.)

No. 3093. Morocco (Dar-al-Baida and District). (October 10.)

No. 3094. Austria-Hungary (Bosnia and Herzegovina).

No. 3095. Italy (Ancona). (October 13.)

No. 3096. Borneo (Brunei, Sarawak, and British North Borneo). (October 15.)

No. 3097. Turkey (Crete).

No. 3098. United States (Charleston and District). (October 16.)

No. 3099. Siam (Bangkok).

No. 3100. Turkey (Salonica).

No. 3101. France. (October 21.)

No. 3102. Russia (Reval). (October 27.)

No. 3103. Morocco (Tangier and District). (October 28.)

No. 3104. Belgium. (November 7).

No. 3105. Russia (Archangel). (November 18.)

No. 3106. France (French Guiana).

No. 3107. Brazil (Pará).

No. 3108. Russia (Trans-Caucasus).

No. 3109. Persia (Resht). (December 3.)

No. 3110. Italy (Sardinia). (December 22.)

No. 3111. Switzerland. (December 30.)

No. 3112. Mexico.

No. 3113. Denmark. (January 30.)

No. 3114. Columbia (excepting the Panama District).

No. 3115. Russia (Consular District of Rostox-on-Don). (February 1.)

II. MISCELLANEOUS SERIES.

No. 596. Instruction in forestry and forest economy in Germany. (September 15.)

No. 597. Germany (instruction in mining and metallurgy in Germany and the German mining and metallurgical industries). (October 9.)

No. 598. Coffee trade in Colombia. (November 3.)

No. 599. Germany (beer brewing industry of Bavaria). (November 12.)

No. 600. Technical instruction in Germany. (The building and engineering trades' schools). (November 12.)

No. 601. Technical instruction in Germany. (Special schools and courses for mechanical engineering and electrotechnics). (January 2.)

AFRICA.

No 11. (1903). Reports on the geology of the East Africa Protectorate by the late E. E. Walker (Government Geologist). (August 22.)

No. 12. (1903). Report by the Mombasa-Victoria Railway Committee on the progress of the works and revenue working, 1902–1903 (with two maps). (August 22.)

No. 13. (1903). Report on the trade and general conditions of the British Central Africa Protectorate for the year 1902–1903, by Major F. B. Pearce, Acting Commissioner. (September 10.)

No. 14 (1903). Despatch to certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad in regard to alleged cases of ill-treatment of natives, and to the existence of trade monopolies in the Independent State of the Congo. (October 21.)

No. 15. (1903.) General Report on the Uganda Protectorate, for the year ended 31st March, 1903. (December 19.)

COLONIES (ANNUAL).

No. 395. Seychelles (Report for 1902). (August 29.)

No. 396. Ceylon (Report for 1902). (September 28.)

No. 397. Gold Coast (Report for 1902). (September 30.)

No. 398. Barbados (Report for 1902–1903). (October 8.)

No. 399. Fiji (Report for 1902). (October 10.)

No. 400. Lagos (Report for 1902). (October 15.)

No. 401. British Solomon Islands (Report for 1902–1903).

No. 402. Cocos-Keeling Islands (Report for 1903). (October 21.)

No. 403. St. Vincent (Report for 1902–1903). (October 28.)

No. 404. Grenada (Report for 1902). (November 25.)

No. 405. Southern Nigeria (Report for 1902). (November 26.)

No. 406. Straits Settlements (Report for 1902). (November 27.)

No. 407. Trinidad and Tobago (Report for 1902–1903). (November 28.)

No. 408. Basutoland (Report for 1902–1903). (December 3.)

No. 409. Northern Nigeria (Report for 1902). (December 4.)

No. 410. Malta (Report for 1902–1903). (December 10.)

No 411. St. Lucia (Report for 1902). (December 16.)

No. 412. Mauritius (Report for 1902). (December 29.)

No. 413. British Guiana (Report for 1902–1903). (January 2.)

MISCELLANOUS.

No. 22. Seychelles (Report on Para rubber). (September 15.)

No. 23. Dominica (Roads and Land Settlement. Report on the expenditure of the Parliamentary Grant-in-Aid). (September 22.)

No. 24. Grenada (Report on Land Settlement in Carriacou). (November 24.)

No. 25. Hong-Kong (Bubonic Plague: Memorandum on the treatment of patients in their own homes and in local hospitals). (December 8.)

CANADA.

Canadian Sessional Paper containing correspondence in connection with German tariff. (August 29.)

HIGHWAYS (DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE).

I. Part I.—Report of.

II. Part II. — Minutes of evidence taken before the Committee appointed by the President of the Local Government Board to inquire into the subject of highway authorities and administration in England and Wales; together with appendix and index of evidence. (August 29.)

MINES AND QUARRIES (GENERAL REPORT AND STATISTICS FOR 1902).

I. Part II. Labour.—General Report and Statistics relating to persons employed and accidents at mines and quarries in the United Kingdom and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Act. (September 1.)

II. Part III. Output. — General Report and Statistics relating to the output and value of minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the imports and exports of minerals. (October 17.)

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE (INDIAN SECTION.)

Annual Report for the year 1902–1903. (September 4.)

STATISTICS (FOREIGN COUNTRIES).

Statistical Abstract for the principal and other foreign countries in each year from 1891 to 1900–1901 (as far as the particulars can be stated), 29th Number. (September 4.)

TREATY SERIES.

No. 12. (1903.)—Convention between the United Kingdom and France respecting commercial relations between France and Jamaica; signed at London, 8th August, 1902. (Ratifications exchanged at London, 12th August, 1903.) (September 10.)

No. 13. (1903.)—Accession of Mexico to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, and Additional Act of 1900. (September 7.)

No. 14. (1903.)—Accession of Germany to the Industrial Property Convention of 20th March, 1883, &c., 1st May, 1903. (September 25.)

No. 15. (1903.)—Parcel Post Convention with detailed regulations between the United Kingdom and Chile; signed at Santiago, 21st October, 1902. (October 7.)

No. 16. (1903.)—Protocol for submitting to arbitration certain questions as to the interpretation of treaties with Japan with regard to leases held in perpetuity; signed at Tokio, 28th August, 1902. (October 23.)

No. 17. (1903.)—Treaty between the United Kingdom and China respecting commercial relations, etc.; signed at Shanghai, 5th September, 1902. (Ratifications exchanged at Peking, 28th July, 1903.) (November 3.)

No. 18. (1903.)—Agreement between the United Kingdom and France providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments; signed at London, 14th October, 1903. (November 26.)

No. 1. (1904.)—Convention for the establishment of a parcel post service between the United States and Hong-Kong; signed at Washington, 21st November, 1903. (January 19.)

CENSUS (SCOTLAND), 1901.

Eleventh Decennial Census of the Population of Scotland taken 31st March, 1901, with Report (Vol. III). (September 15.)

CENSUS (ENGLAND AND WALES), 1901.

Index to Population Tables for England and Wales in the County Volumes of the Census Report, 1901. (October 23.)

WEST INDIES.

Further correspondence relating to the volcanic eruptions in St. Vincent and Martinique in 1902 and 1903. (September 19.)

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

I. (Ireland). Forty-first Report of the Inspector for the year ended 31st December, 1902. (September 21.)

II. (Great Britain). Forty-sixth Report, for the year 1902, of the Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI. (October 23.)

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).

Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons, with Appendices, for the year ended 31st March, 1903. (September 22.)

INDIA (STATISTICAL ABSTRACT).

Statistical Abstract relating to British India, from 1892–1893 to 1901–1902, 37th Number. (September 23.)

INDIA.

Review of India in 1902–1903. (September 24.)

BANKING, RAILWAY, AND SHIPPING STATISTICS (IRELAND).

Report for June, 1903. (September 28.)

COLONIAL IMPORT DUTIES, 1903.

Return relating to the rates of import duties levied upon the principal and other articles imported into the Colonial and other Possessions of the United Kingdom. (October 9.)

COMMERCIAL.

No. 8 (1903).—Reports from certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad respecting Forestry Laws. (October 9.)

No. 9. (1903).—Return of Most-Favoured-Nation Clauses in existing Treaties of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Foreign Powers, stating the period when terminable, and showing whether they apply to the British Colonies; in force on 1st July, 1903. (October 20.)

BOARD OF MANUFACTURES (SCOTLAND).

Report of Departmental Committee appointed to inquire into the administration of the Board of Manufactures. (October 10.)

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE LAW (COLONIES).

Papers relating to laws of marriage and divorce in self-governing British Colonies. (October 10.)

CYPRUS.

Despatch from the High Commissioners covering a Report on the agricultural fund, for the year ended 31st March, 1903. (October 10.)

POLICE (METROPOLIS).

Report of the Commissioner of Police of Metropolis, for the year 1902. (October 12.)

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

Annual Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops, for the year ended, 1902. Part II., Tables. (October 16.)

TURKEY.

No. 4. (1903.) Further correspondence respecting affairs of South - Eastern Europe. (October 16.)

No. 1. (1904.) Further correspondence respecting affairs of South-Eastern Europe. March to September, 1903. (January 11.)

AGRARIAN OUTRAGES (IRELAND).

I. Return for the quarter ended 30th September, 1903. (October 17.)

II. Return for the quarter ended 31st December, 1903. (January 21.)

ARMY (MILITARY PRISONS).

Report for the year 1902. (October 19.)

LICENSING (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1903.

Tables showing the populations of counties, local government districts, and burghs in Scotland with reference to the provisions of the Act. (October 21.)

INEBRIATES ACTS (INSPECTOR'S REPORT).

Report of Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879–1900, for the year 1902. (October 21.)

PETERHEAD HARBOUR.

Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works (in continuation of [Cd. 1288]). (October 22.)

NAVAL MANŒUVRES.

Report of Naval Manœuvres of 1903, carried out by combined Mediterranean, Home and Channel Fleets, and the Cruiser Squadron, from the 5th to the 11th August, 1903. (October 22.)

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS (ROYAL COMMISSION).

Report on the Manuscripts of:—

I. The Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, K.G., K.T., preserved at Drumlanrig Castle. Vol. II. (October 23.)

II. Mrs. Stopford-Sackville, of Drayton House, Northamptonshire. Vol. I. (January 16.)

ARMY.

I. (Volunteer Corps). Annual Return of the Volunteer Corps of Great Britain, for the year 1902. (October 23.)

II. List of exceptions to the Army Regulations as to pay, non-effective pay, and allowances sanctioned by the Commissioners of the Treasury, pursuant to the Royal Warrant, dated 27th October, 1884, during the year 1902–1903. (November 17.)

III. (Recuiting) Annual Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting, for the first nine months of the year 1903. (January 19.)

IV. Return of rifle ranges in the United Kingdom. (January 21.)

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT, 1887 (EVICTION NOTICES).

I. Return of the number of eviction notices filed during the quarter ended 30th September, 1903. (October 23.)

II. Return of the number of eviction notices filed during the quarter ended 31st December, 1903. (January 26.)

EVICTIONS (IRELAND).

Return of Evictions in Ireland—

I. For the quarter ended 30th September, 1903. (October 30.)

II. For the quarter ended 31st December, 1903. (January 29th.)

JUDICIAL STATISTICS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1869.

Report on the Judicial Statistics of Scotland, for the year 1902. (October 27.)

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1902. (October 28.)

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Preliminary Conference at Berlin on wireless telegraphy; Procés-Verbaux and Protocole Final. (October 30.)

EDUCATION.

I. Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to museums under the Board of Education. (From the 1st August, 1903. to 31st July, 1904.) (November 2.)

II. Special Reports on educational subjects (Report on the school training and early employment of Lancashire children). (December 11.)

III. Statement of schemes for the formation of education committees approved during the period 1st August to 30th November, 1903, by the Board of Education (in continuation of Command Papers, 1564, 1613, 1659, 1675, and 1740). (December 18.)

IV. Reports from University Colleges (1903). (January 9.)

NATIONAL EDUCATION (IRELAND).

I. Appendix, Section III., to the Annual Report of the Commissioners, for the year 1902. (November 4.)

II. Appendix, Section II., to the Annual Report of the Commissioners, for the year 1902. (January 4.)

ANKYLOSTOMIASIS.

Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department by J. S. Haldane, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., on Ankylostomiasis in Westphalian Collieries. (November 5.)

SOUTH AFRICA (COMMERCIAL MISSION).

Report received from Mr. Henry Birchenough, the Special Commissioner appointed by the Board of Trade to inquire into and report upon the present position and future prospects of British Trade in South Africa. (November 14.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

No. 5. (1903.)—Correspondence showing the systems in force in certain foreign countries for publishing official Reports of proceedings in the Houses of Legislature. (November 14).

No. 6. (1903)—Return as to financial support given from State or municipal funds to dramatic, operative, or musical performances in foreign countries. (December 14.)

CHINA.

No. 3. (1903.)—Report by Acting Consul Litton on a journey in North-West Yunnan. (November) 14).

No 1. (1904.)—Report by Mr. C. W. Campbell, His Majesty's Consul at Wuchow, on a journey in Mongolia (with a map). (January 6.)

ARSENICAL POISONING (ROYAL COMMISSION).

I. Report of Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of arsenical poisoning arising from the consumption of beer and other articles of food or drink. Part II. being Vol. I. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices. (November 16.)

II. Final Report of Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of arsenical poisoning arising from the consumption of beer and other articles of food and drink.

Part I. Report. (November 24.)

Part II. Being Vol. II. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices (December 12.)

BOARD OF TRADE (CONCILIATION).

Fourth Report by the Board of Trade of Proceedings under the Conciliation (Trade Disputes) Act, 1896, 1901–1903. (November 16.)

EXPLOSIVES (EXPLOSIONS AT THE COTTON POWDER COMPANY'S FACTORY AT FAVERSHAM).

Reports to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Home Department on the circumstances attending explosions of nitro-glycerine, which occurred in the final washing house of the factory of the Cotton Powder Company, Limited, at Uplees Marshes, Faversham, Kent—

I. By Major A. Cooper-Key on the explosion of 23rd August, 1903. (November 19.)

II. By Captain J. H. Thomson on the explosion of 9th November, 1903. (January 20.)

INDIA.

I. Irrigation—Report of the Indian Irrigation Commission, 1901–1903—

Part I. General.
Part II. Provincial.
Part III. Maps.
Part IV. Appendix. (November 30.)

II. Sanitary Measures.—Report on sanitary measures in India in 1901–1902. Vol. XXXV. (November 25.)

III. Trade.—Tables relating to the Trade of British India with British Possessions and Foreign Countries, 1898–1899 to 1902–3. (January 28.)

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Orders made by the Light Railway Commissioners and confirmed by the Board of Trade.

a. Authorising construction of Light Railways in,

I. The City of Bath in the county of Somerset (being extensions and deviations of the existing and authorised undertaking of Bath Electric Tramways, Limited), and the abandonment of construction of certain other light railways already authorised in the same city.

II. The rural district of Dartford in the county of Kent.

III. The county of Kent from the River Thames near Greenhithe to Dartford and Eynsford, with branches to Swanley Junction and to Stansted.

IV. The borough of Burton-upon-Trent, the urban districts of Swadlincote and of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and the rural districts of Repton and Hartshorne and Seals of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in the counties of Stafford, Derby, and Leicester.

V. The borough and rural district of Dover and parish of River in the County of Kent.

VI. The county of Southampton from Totton and Fawley.

VII. The county of Gloucester, in the parishes of Henbury and Shirehampton.

(b.) Amending—

I. The Bere Alston and Calstock Light Railway Order, 1900.

II. The Llandudno and Colwyn Bay Light Railway Order, 1898.

III. The Lastingham and Rosedale Light Railway Order, 1900.

(c.) Reviving powers granted and extending period limited by Bankfort Light Railway Order, 1898, for compulsory purchase of lands, and extending period limited by that Order for the completion of the railway and works by that Order authorised.

(d.) Transferring to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Nelson the powers conferred upon the Barrowford Urban District Council by Barrowford Light Railway Order, 1901, and amending that Order and the Nelson Light Railways Order, 1901. (December 7.)

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES.

Report on the results of investigations into cider-making carried out on behalf of the Bath and West and Southern Counties Society in the years 1893–1902, by F. J. Lloyd, F.C.S., F.I.C. (December 11.)

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, GALWAY.

Annual Report of President for Session 1902–1903. (December 18.)

METEOROLOGICAL COUNCIL.

Report of the Meteorological Council for the year ended 31st March, 1903, to the President and Council of the Royal Society. (January 1.)

NATIONAL EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Appendix to Annual Report of Commissioners for the year 1902—

I. Section II. (January 4.)

II. Section I. (January 15.)

SEWAGE DISPOSAL (ROYAL COMMISSION).

Fourth Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire and report what methods of treating and disposing of sewage may properly be adopted, together with Vol. II. Minutes of Evidence; Vol. III. Reports on Bacteriological Investigations; and Vol. IV. Reports on the Land. Treatment of sewage and methods of chemical analysis of sewage effluents. (January 5.)

CHAPTER HOUSE (WESTMINSTER).

Memoranda by Professor Church, F.R.S., concerning treatment of decayed stonework in the Chapter House, Westminster Abbey. (January 8.)

POSTAL CONVENTION (DENMARK).

Agreement between Post Office of United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and Post Office of Denmark. (January 9.)

RAILWAYS (CONTINUOUS BRAKES).

Return by railway companies of the United Kingdom for six months, ending 30th June, 1903. (January 16.)

PATRIOTIC FUND.

Forty-second Report of Royal Commissioners. (January 21.)

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).

Report on shellfish layings on the Irish coast as respects their liability to sewage contamination. (January 21.)

ELECTRICITY IN MINES.

Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for Home Department to inquire into the use of electricity in mines, with minutes of evidence and appendices. (January 30.)

TRANSVAAL.

Report of Transvaal Labour Commission. (January 29.)

UNITED STATES, No. 1 (1904).

Correspondence respecting the Alaska Boundary. (February 1.)

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).

Third Annual Report, 1902–1903. (February 1.)

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

No. 3116. Belgium.

No. 3117. France (Indo-China).

UNITED STATES, No. 2 (1904).

Map to accompany correspondence respecting the Alaska Boundary (United States, No. 1 (1904).

TURKEY, No. 2 (1904).

Further correspondence respecting the affairs of South-Eastern Europe (in continuation of Turkey, No. 1 (1904)).

SOUTH AFRICA.

Further correspondence relating to the affairs of the Tranvaal and Orange River Colony.

EXPLOSIVES (EXPLOSION AT THE BLENHEIM ENGINEERING COMPANY'S FACTORY AT TUNNEL LANE, GREENWICH MARSHES).

Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department by Major A. Cooper-Key, His Majesty's Inspector of Explosives, on the circumstances attending an explosion of fulminate composition at the factory of the Blenheim Engineering Company, Limited, at Tunnel Lane, Greenwich Marshes, on 18th December, 1903.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

LUNACY.

1. Return of all sums received by the visitors of lunatics for travelling expenses, or upon any other account, from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1903.

2. Report to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made, the number of patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the visitors of lunatics pursuant to the Lunacy Act, 1890, between 1st April, 1903, to 30th September, 1903.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE .

Rules.

BARBADOS.

Prison rule relating to the vaccination of prisoners.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT ACTS, 1844 TO 1866.

Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, giving effect to the accession of Denmark to the International Copyright Convention of the 9th September, 1886, and Additional Act of Paris, 1897.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT, 1878.

Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, approving a new denomination of standard weight of fifty pounds or "half-cental."

GREENWICH HOSPITAL ACTS.

Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, sanctioning certain pensions now granted from the funds of Greenwich Hospital being supplemented from Naval Funds.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Orders in Council of the 9th October, 1903, applying the provisions of Section 238 of the Act in the case of deserters from Japanese vessels.

Orders in Council of the 16th November, 1903, confirming byelaws made by the pilotage authority for the ports of Gloucester and Burntisland respectively.

Two Orders in Council of the 29th January, 1904, providing for the remeasurement for tonnage of French and Spanish vessels in British ports.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

Order in Council of the 8th December, 1903, entitled "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903."

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1858.

Order in Council of the 8th December, 1903, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State in Council of India.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Additional rules made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to—

I. Experimental science and drawing.

II. Experimental and practical science.

Amended rules made by the Board for the examination in music.

Time-table of examinations for the year 1904.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND) ACT.

Orders in Council, dated 1st December, 1903, and 21st January, 1904, giving effect to Rules of Court.

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.

Thirty-three Minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, sanctioning forms of instruction for certain county boroughs, counties, and urban districts.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS, 1853 TO 1891 (CONDITIONAL LICENCES).

Licences granted by His Majesty under the provisions of the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A. of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864.

I. To Ellis Smith.
II. To Patrick Hardigan.

Licence granted by His Majesty to Mary Ann Phillips, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of the Holy Rood at Worthing.

Licence granted to Timothy W. Nolan, a convict, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A. of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864.

PHARMACY (IRELAND) ACTS, 1875 AND 1890.

Order in Council, dated 9th October, 1903, approving of a regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society.

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS).

Returns of descriptions of qualifications of deputy lieutenants lodged during 1902, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland.

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND).

Order, dated 9th October, 1903, and three Orders, dated 4th November, 1903, for holding Winter Assizes in Ireland.

PUBLIC RECORDS.

(Colonial Office). Schedule containing a list and particulars of classes of documents existing or accruing in the office of His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State having the Department of the Colonies which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office

Additional rule made by the right hon. Sir Richard Henn Collins, Master of the Rolls, for the disposal of certain documents.

CERTIFIED INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS FOR MANAGEMENT).

Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the certified inebriate reformatory at Ackworth, Yorkshire.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

(Incorporation of Aston Manor).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Aston Manor, dated 17th August, 1903.

(Incorporation of Hornsey).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Hornsey, dated 17th August, 1903.

(Incorporation of Gillingham).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Gillingham, dated 17th August, 1903.

(Incorporation of Bromley).—Charter of incorporation of the borough of Bromley, dated 17th August, 1903.

INEBRIATES ACTS, 1879 TO 1899 (REGULATIONS FOR STATE INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES).

New regulations, dated 29th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, prescribing the diet for ill-conducted or idle inmates of State Reformatories, and revoking Regulation 64 (b) and 66 (b), and so much of Appendix A. as relates to the diet of ill-conducted or idle inmates of the Regulation dated 21st June, 1901.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

(Special Exceptions: Creameries).—Order, dated 23rd October, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 42 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting certain special exceptions to creameries, and revoking the Order (Ireland) dated 9th June, 1902.

(Special Exception: Lime-washing, &c.).—Order, dated 2nd November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 1 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting special exceptions from the provisions respecting lime-washing, &c., to certain factories and parts of factories, and revoking the Orders, dated 16th November, 1895, 8th February, 1896, and 26th March, 1902.

Dangerous and Unhealthy Industries.—Regulations, dated 21st November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, for the manufacture of electric accumulators.

Particulars of Piecework Wages: Wearing Apparel).—Order, dated 17th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, applying with modifications the provisions of Section 116 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, to the manufacture of wearing apparel, and revoking the Order dated 22nd April, 1897.

(Special Exception: Overtime).—Order, dated 29th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 49 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, with regard to the overtime employment of women on not more than thirty days in the year, and revoking all existing Orders.

(Health: Bakehouses).—Order, dated 30th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 3, Subsection 2, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, modifying the proportion of cubic feet of space to be provided in certain bakehouses.

(Earthernware and China).—Amended special rules for the manufacture and decoration of earthenware and china as established by the awards of the umpire, Lord James of Hereford, dated 30th December, 1901, and 28th November, 1903.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Return of the amount of notes issued more than forty years, and outstanding on 28th October, 1903, which have been written off.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN OF 1855.

Account for the year to 31st December, 1903.

TREASURY BILLS.

Treasury Minute, dated 24th January, 1904, amending the regulation laid down in the Treasury Minute of 31st May, 1889, relating to tenders for Treasury Bills, under the Act 40 Victoria, chap. 2, s. 9.

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITION COMMISSION, 1904.

Treasury Minute, dated 29th August, 1903, directing that the accounts of the Royal Commission for the St. Louis Exhibition for 1904 shall be examined and audited by the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

SUPERANNUATION.

Professional qualifications. Treasury Minutes declaring that professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired on the public service are required for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the offices of—

I. Secretary to the Civil Service Commissioners (10th November, 1903).

II. Deputy Governor of a convict prison in Ireland (21st November, 1903).

Treasury Minute, dated 20th August, 1903, awarding a special pension to Sir Kenelm Edward Digby, K.C.B., late Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Treasury Minutes declaring that the following persons were appointed without Civil Service certificates through inadvertence on the part of the heads of their Departments—

I. Thomas Ashbrook Forster, Postmaster, Newtown Post Office (30th September, 1903).

II. Alfred Wellham, machine-hand, Royal Small Arms Factory, Birmingham (5th November, 1903).

III. William Edward Bird, engine driver, Royal Gun Factory, War Department (23rd December, 1903).

IV. Charles Chamberlain, principal foreman, Royal Carriage Department, War Office (2nd October, 1903).

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.

Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh to the Secretary for Scotland, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Act for the year 1902–1903.

Annual Report on the state of the finances of the University of Edinburgh, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Act.

Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow to the Secretary for Scotland, under the provision of Section 30 of the Act, for the year 1902–1903.

PRISONS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1877, AND SECRETARY FOR SCOTLAND ACTS, 1885–1889.

Rule made by the Secretary for Scotland appointing the police cells at Kirkcaldy to be a legal prison for the detention of untried prisoners for a period not exceeding fourteen days before or during trial, and of convicted prisoners for a period not exceeding seven days from the date of conviction.

LICENSING (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1903.

Order by the Secretary for Scotland under Section 109.

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAVIE TO MALLAIG).

Second Annual Report by the Board of Trade as to the condition and working of the Banavie to Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any company in working the railway, for the year 1902–1903.

INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN ENGLAND).

Return of all loans raised in England under the provisions of any Acts of Parliament, chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1903, with the rates of interest and total amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half-year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year, stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purpose or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year.

LOANS RAISED IN INDIA.

Return of all loans raised in India, chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1903, with the rates of interest and total amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half-year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year, stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purpose or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877.

Statutes made by the Governing Bodies of :

Magdalene College, Cambridge, on the 22nd June, 1903, in substitution for Statute XXV. of the statutes of the college.

Oriel College, Oxford, on the 24th April, 1903, amending Statute IV., 7, of the statutes of the college.

Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, on the 16th March, 1903, in substitution for the existing statutes of the college.

New College, Oxford, on the 17th June, 1903, amending certain clauses of Statute III. of the statutes of the college.

St. John's College, Oxford, on the 15th May, 1903, amending Statute XV., 1, of the statutes of the college.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and to be printed. (No. 1.)

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1889, UNIVERSITY COURT ORDINANCE No. IX (EDINBURGH No. 3.)

Regulations for the degree of Bachelor-of-Law (B.L.); laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and to be printed. (No. 2.)

MARGATE PIER AND HARBOUR BOARD.

Report and statement of accounts for year ended 5th April, 1903.

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD.

Accounts for year ended 1st July, 1903 ; delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

SUBSIDIES TO SHIPPING COMPANIES.

Return respecting ; laid before the House (pursuant to Order of the 13th of August last), and to be printed. (No. 3.)

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

Return of the number of aliens that arrived from the Continent at ports in the United Kingdom, in each month of the year 1904; ordered to be laid before the House.—(The Lord Wolverton.)

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

Return (in part) respecting; laid before the House (pursuant to Order of this day), and to be printed. (No. 6.)

NEW BILLS.

SEA FISHERIES BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to provide against the destruction of undersized flat fish, was presented by the Earl of Onslow; read 1ª; and to be printed. (No. 4.)

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (METRIC SYSTEM) BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to render compulsory the use of the system of weights and measures, commonly known as the metric system, was presented by the Lord Kelvin; read 1ª; and to be printed. (No. 5.)

House adjourned at twenty minutes before Eight o'clock, to Thursday next, a quarter past Four o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 2nd February, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

Message to attend His Majesty.

The House went, and, being returned—

NEW WRITS.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had issued Warrants for New Writs during the recess.

For St. Andrew's District Burghs, in the room of Henry Torrens Anstruther, esquire, who hath accepted the Office of a Representative in the Conseil d'Administration of the Suez Canal Company; City of Rochester, James Hubert Gascoyne Cecil, commonly called Viscount Cranborne, called to the House of Peers; County of Meath (South Division), James Laurence Carew, esquire, deceased; County of Leitrim (Northern Division), Patrick Aloysius M'Hugh, esquire, an adjudicated bankrupt; Borough of Belfast (West Division), Hugh Oakley Arnold-Forster, esquire, who hath accepted the Office of Secretary of State for War; Borough of Warwick and Leamington, the honourable Alfred Lyttelton, K.C., who hath accepted the Office of Secretary of State for the Colonies; South-East Lancashire (Westhoughton Division), George Villiers Stanley, C.B., commonly called Lord Stanley, who hath accepted the Office of Postmaster-General; County of Southampton (Southern or Fareham Division), Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur Hamilton Lee, who hath accepted the Office of Civil Lord of the Admiralty; City of Londonderry, James Albert Edward Hamilton, commonly called Marquess of Hamilton, who hath accepted the Office of Treasurer of His Majesty's Household; North Lancashire (Chorley Division), David Alexander Edward Lindsay, commonly called Lord Balcarres, who hath accepted the Office of Junior Lord of the Treasury; Borough of Camberwell (Dulwich Division), Sir John Blundell Maple, baronet, deceased Borough of Lewisham, John Penn esquire, deceased; County of Devon (Mid or Ashburton Division), the Right Honourable Charles Seale-Hayne, deceased; County of Salop (Ludlow Division), Robert Jasper More, esquire, deceased; City of Norwich, Sir Harry Bullard, knight, deceased; Borough of Gateshead, Sir William Allan, knight, deceased; Ayr Boroughs, Charles Lindsay Orr-Ewing, esquire, deceased.

Mr. SPEAKER also informed the House that he had received the following letters:—

> "15, Bishopsgate Street, Within, E.C.,
> "1st February, 1904.
>
> "The Right Honourable
> "The Speaker of the House of Commons.
>
> "Sir,
>
> "I have the honour to inform you that the Firm of Antony Gibbs and Sons, of which I and my brother Vicary Gibbs are members, accepted a contract with the Admiralty on the 2nd December last.
>
> "I am, Sir,
> "Your obedient servant.
> "ALBAN GIBBS."

"1st February, 1904.
"St. Dunstan's,
"Regent's Park

"Mr. Speaker,

"I have the honour to inform you that at the latter end of last year, I (as a partner in the firm of Antony Gibbs and Sons) entered into a contract with the Admiralty, and am advised that by so doing I have, under an Act of George III. vacated my seat in Parliament.

"I beg to remain, Mr. Speaker,
"Your obedient humble servant,
"VICARY GIBBS."

CITY OF LONDON (WRIT).

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.) submitted as a matter of constitutional procedure that a new Writ should not issue until a Committee had been appointed to consider and report whether the hon. Member was or was not a contractor within the meaning of the statute. He contended, according to precedents which he cited, viz., the cases of Baron Rothschild in 1845, and of Sir Sydney Waterlow in 1869—in each of which the Speaker of the day suspended the Motion for the Writ until the question had been considered by the Committee—that the question whether a Member had become a contractor with the Crown was one absolutely within the purview of the House, and was not a question for the Member himself.

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! It is a matter entirely in the hands of the House to say whether the Writ shall issue. When it is moved for it will be open to the hon. Member to object, that the proper course would be to appoint a Committee, and then the Motion will be discussed on some subsequent day.

SIR A. ACLAND-HOOD (Somerestshire, Wellington) moved the issue of a new Writ for the City of London.

Motion made and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a New Writ for the election of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the City of London, in the room of Alban Gibbs, esquire, who has accepted a contract with the Admiralty."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL submitted that the Writ ought not to be issued on the grounds he had already indicated, and that a Committee should first be appointed to find out whether or not these gentlemen were contractors. In previous cases, when gentlemen had been elected Members of the House and had subsequently discovered that by reason of their being contractors to the Government at the time of their election they were disqualified from sitting, they had been allowed to release themselves by letter to Mr. Speaker, but there was no precedent for following such a course in the present case, and he therefore hoped a Select Committee would be appointed to ascertain whether or not these gentlemen were legally contractors.

MR. SPEAKER said that so far as regarded procedure, the present cases were exactly parallel with those in which gentlemen elected at a General Election had found themselves disqualified by holding Government contracts.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL urged that there was a material difference between those cases and the present one, where the hon. Members took contracts after their election. That brought it absolutely within the purview of the House to decide whether or not they were contractors. It was not in accordance with constitutional usage for an hon. Member to thus declare himself a contractor on his own ipse dixit. Further than that, these gentlemen in their public speeches had themselves expressed doubt as to whether they were contractors.

MR. SPEAKER: I do not say it is not in the power of the House to deal with the question. I am only saying that the proceedure followed in this instance was in accordance with previous precedent. Does the hon. Member object to the issue of the Writ?

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Yes, Sir, on the ground that the precedent set in the Rothschild and Waterlow cases ought to be followed in this, and that a Committee should be appointed to find out whether these gentlemen are contractors or not.

MR. SPEAKER said that probably the most convenient course would be that debate on the question raised by the hon. Member for South Donegal should be adjourned until to-morrow, the hon. Member meantime putting his Amendment in form.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Very good, Sir.

Motion made, and Question, "That the Debate be now adjourned,"—(Mr. Swift MacNeill,)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

COUNTY OF HERTFORD (MID OR ST. ALBANS DIVISION) (WRIT).

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the election of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the County of Hertford (St. Albans Division) in the room of Vicary Gibbs, esquire, who has accepted a contract with the Admiralty."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood).

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I suppose the same course will be adopted in this case.

MR. SPEAKER: Yes, to-morrow.

Debate adjourned till to-morrow.

NEW MEMBERS SWORN.

Right hon. Alfred Lyttelton, for Borough of Warwick and Leamington.

Right hon. Hugh Oakley Arnold-Forster, City of Belfast (West Belfast Division).

Right hon. Edward George Villiers Stanley, C.B. (commonly called Lord Stanley), South-East Lancashire (Westhoughton Division).

David Alexander Edward Lindsay (commonly called Lord Balcarres), North Lancashire (Chorley Division).

Arthur Hamilton Lee, esquire, County of Hants (Southern or Fareham Division).

James Albert Edward Hamilton (commonly called Marquess of Hamilton), City of Londonderry.

Charles Tuff, esquire, City of Rochester.

Edward Feetham Coates, esquire, Borough of Lewisham.

Frederick Rutherford Harris, esquire, Borough of Camberwell (Dulwich Division).

Rowland Hunt, esquire, County of Salop (Southern or Ludlow Division).

John Stirling Ainsworth, esquire, County of Argyll.

Captain Edward Charles Ellice, St. Andrews District of Burghs.

Harry Trelawney Eve, esquire, County of Devon (Mid or Ashburton Division).

Louis John Tillett, esquire, City of Norwich.

Patrick Aloysius M'Hugh, esquire, County of Leitrim (North Leitrim Division).

David Sheehy, esquire, County of Meath (South Meath Division).

ELECTIONS.

Ordered, That all Members who are returned for two or more places in any part of the United Kingdom do make their Election for which of the places they will serve, within one week after it shall appear that there is no question upon the Return for that place; and if any thing shall come in question touching the Return or Election of any Member, he is to withdraw during the time the matter is in debate; and that all Members returned upon double Returns do withdraw till their Returns are determined.

Resolved, That no Peer of the Realm, except such Peers of Ireland as shall for the time being be actually elected, and shall not have declined to serve, for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, hath any right to give his vote in the Election of any Member to serve in Parliament.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the Commons of the United Kingdom for any Lord of Parliament, or other Peer or Prelate, not being a Peer of Ireland at the time elected, and not having declined to serve for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, to concern himself in the election of Members to serve for the Commons in Parliament, except only any Peer of Ireland, at such Elections in Great Britain respectively where such Peer shall appear as a candidate, or by himself, or any others, be proposed to be elected; or for any Lord Lieutenant or Governor of any county to avail himself of any authority derived from his Commission, to influence the Election of any Member to serve for the Commons in Parliament." (Sir A. Acland-Hood).

MR. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet) said he proposed to move the omission of certain words, the effect of which would be to confine the operation of the order to the cases of Lords Lieutenants of counties. He did not think the House should continue to endeavour to enforce an authority which they did not possess.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) seconded. He was as great a stickler, he said, for the maintenance of the privileges of the House as anyone, but it did seem to him to be derogatory to the dignity of Parliament for it to pass an order year after year which it had not the courage to enforce.

Amendment proposed—

"To leave out from the word 'Kingdom,' in line 2, to the word 'for,' in line 8."—(Mr. James Lowther.)

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): The right hon. Gentleman has now raised this question in several sessions, and on each occasion the House by its vote has shown its desire by considerable majorities to maintain this Order. I am not aware of any fresh argument or new circumstances to justify a departure from the practice the House has followed for so many years. In individual instances, no doubt, the Order may not have been observed in the past, and it may be true that the House has no power to enforce it, but I think there are objections which outweigh even these considerations. I believe the Order has a salutary effect, and that it keeps alive a very useful tradition which has worked well in the past. I am sure that the House would not desire that Peers should interfere in elections, neither do I believe that they themselves desire to do so, but I believe that if this Order were deliberately abrogated it would be a direct invitation to them to do so. Under these circumstances I venture to suggest that the House should leave well alone. This is not a matter in which the Government feel great interest, but they do hold that a Sessional Order which has obtained for so many years ought not thus to be changed unless by general consensus of opinion and with the general support of the House. Under these circumstances, I ask the House to reject the Amendment and to pass the Order as usual.

Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question," put, and agreed to.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Resolved, That it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the Commons of the United Kingdom for any Lord of Parliament, or other Peer or Prelate, not being a Peer of Ireland at the time elected, and not having declined to serve for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, to concern himself in the election of Members to serve for the Commons in Parliament, except only any Peer of Ireland, at such Elections in Great Britain respectively where such Peer shall appear as a candidate, or by himself, or any others, be proposed to be elected; or for any Lord Lieutenant or Governor of any county to avail himself of any authority derived from his Commission to influence the Election of any Member to serve for the Commons in Parliament.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been elected or returned a Member of this House, or endeavoured so to be, by bribery, or any other corrupt practices, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against all such persons as shall have been wilfully concerned in such bribery or other corrupt practices.

WITNESSES.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been tampering with any witness, in respect of his evidence to be given to this House, or any Committee thereof, or directly or indirectly hath endeavoured to deter or hinder any person from appearing or giving evidence, the same is declared to be a high crime or misdemeanour; and this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath given false evidence in any case before this House, or any Committee thereof, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Ordered, That the Commissioners of the Police of the Metropolis do take care that, during the session of Parliament, the passages through the streets leading to this House be kept free and open, and that no obstruction be permitted to hinder the passage of Members to and from this House, and that no disorder be allowed in Westminster Hall, or in the passages leading to this House, during the Sitting of Parliament, and that there be no annoyance therein or thereabouts; and that the Sergeant at Arms attending this House do communicate this Order to the Commissioners aforesaid.

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Ordered, That the Votes and Proceedings of this House be printed, being first perused by Mr. Speaker; and that he do appoint the printing thereof; and that no person but such as he shall appoint do presume to print the same.

PRIVILEGES.

Ordered, That a Committee of Privileges be appointed.

OUTLAWRIES BILL.

"For the more effectual preventing of Clandestine Outlawries," read the first time; to be read a second time.

JOURNAL.

Ordered, That the Journal of this House, from the end of the last session to the end of the present session, with an Index thereto, be printed.

Ordered, That 500 Copies of the said Journal and Index be printed by the appointment and under the direction of Sir Courtenay Peregrine Ilbert, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., the Clerk of this House.

Ordered, That the said Journal and Index be printed by such person as shall be licensed by Mr. Speaker, and that no other person do presume to print the same.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS (RECESS).

The following Papers, presented by His Majesty's Command during the Recess, were delivered to the Librarian of the House of Commons during the Recess, pursuant to the Standing Order of the 14th August, 1896—

1. Explosions (Cotton Powder Company's Factory at Faversham).—Copy of Report by Major A. Cooper-Key, His Majesty's Inspector of Explosives, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the circumstances attending an Explosion of nitro-glycerine which occurred in the Final Washing House of the Factory of the Cotton Powder Company, Limited, at Uplees Marshes, Faversham, Kent, on the 23rd August, 1903.

2. Explosions (Cotton Powder Company's Factory at Faversham).—Copy of Report by Captain J. H. Thomson, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Explosives, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the circumstances attending an Explosion of nitro-glycerine which occurred in the Final Washing House of the Factory of the Cotton Powder Company, Limited, at Uplees Marshes, Faversham, Kent, on the 9th November, 1903.

3. Sewage Disposal (Royal Commission).—Copy of Fourth Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire and report what methods of Treating and Disposing of Sewage may properly be adopted, together with Vol. II., Minutes of Evidence, Vol. III., Reports on Bacteriological Investigations, and Vol. IV., Reports on the Land Treatment of Sewage and Methods of Chemical Analysis of Sewage Effluents.

4. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of Mrs. Stopford-Sackville of Drayton House, Northamptonshire, Vol. I.

5. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, K.G., K.T., preserved at Drumlanrig Castle, Vol. II.

6. Arsenical Poisoning (Royal Commission).—Copy of Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of Arsenical Poisoning arising from the Consumption of Beer and other articles of Food or Drink. Part I. Report.

7. Arsenical Poisoning (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of Arsenical Poisoning arising from the consumption of Beer and other articles of Food or Drink. Part II. Vol. I. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

8. Arsenical Poisoning (Royal Commission).—Copy of Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of Arsenical Poisoning arising from the consumption of Beer and other articles of Food or Drink. Part II. Vol. II. of Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

9. Electricity in Mines.—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the use of Electricity in Mines, with Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

10. War in South Africa (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the military preparations and other matters connected with the War in South Africa, with Minutes of Evidence (Vols. I. and II.) and Appendices.

11. Ankylostomiasis.—Copy of Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, by J. S. Haldane, esquire, M.D., F.R.S., on Ankylostomiasis in Westphalian Collieries.

12. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1902; Part II., Labour; General Report and Statistics relating to persons employed and Accidents at Mines and Quarries in the United Kingdom, and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Acts.

13. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1902, Part III., Output; General Report and Statistics relating to the Output and Value of the Minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the exports and imports of Minerals.

14. Prisons (England and Wales).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons, with Appendices, for the year ended 31st March, 1903.

15. Factories and Workshops.—Copy of Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops for 1902. Part II. Tables.

16. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Great Britain).—Copy of Forty-sixth Report of His Majesty's Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools for 1902. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI.

17. Police (Metropolis).—Copy of Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for the year 1902.

18. Inebriates Acts (Inspector's Report).—Copy of Report of the Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1900, for the year 1902.

19. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the City of Bath, in the county of Somerset (being extensions and deviations of the existing and authorised undertaking of Bath Electric Tramways, Limited), and the abandonment of the construction of certain other Light Railways already authorised in the same city (Bath Electric Tramways (Light Railways Extensions) Order, 1903).

20. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Llandudno and Colwyn Bay Light Railway Order, 1898 (Llandudno and Colwyn Bay Light Railway (Deviation and Amendment) Order, 1903).

21. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the county of Kent, from the River Thames near Greenhithe to Dart-ford and Eynsford, with Branches to Swanley Junction and to Stansted (Dartford District Light Railways Order, 1903).

22. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending The Lastingham and Rosedale Light Railway Order, 1900 (Lastingham and Rosedale Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903).

23. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, reviving the powers granted and extending the period limited by The Bankfoot Light Railway Order, 1898, for the compulsory purchase of lands, and extending the period limited by that Order for the completion of the Railway and works by that Order authorised (Bankfoot Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903).

24. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the borough of Burton-upon-Trent, the urban districts of Swadlincote and of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and the rural districts of Repton and of Hartshorne and Seales and of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in the counties of Stafford, Derby, and Leicester (Burton and Ashby Light Railway Order, 1903).

25. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the borough and rural district of Dover and parish of River, in the county of Kent (Dover and River Light Railway Order, 1903).

26. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Bere Alston and Calstock Light Railway Order, 1900 (Bere Alston and Calstock Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903).

27. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of Southampton, from Totton to Fawley (Totton, Hythe, and Fawley Light Railway Order, 1903).

28. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the rural district of Dartford, in the county of Kent (Dartford Light Railway (Extension) Order, 1903).

29. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, transferring to the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Nelson the powers conferred upon the Barrowford Urban District Council by the Barrowford Light Railway Order, 1901, and amending that Order and the Nelson Light Railways Order, 1901 (Barrowford Light Railway Order, 1901 (Transfer, &c.) Order, 1903).

30. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of Gloucester, in the parishes of Henbury and Shirehampton (Avonmouth Light Railway Order, 1903).

31. Railways (Continuous Brakes).—Copy of Return by Railway Companies of the United Kingdom on the use of Continuous Brakes for the six months ending the 30th June, 1903.

32. Statistical Abstracts (Foreign Countries).—Copy of Statistical Abstract for the principal and other Foreign Countries in each year from 1891 to 1900–1901 (Twenty-ninth Number).

33. Commercial Mission to South Africa.—Copy of Report received from Mr. Henry Birchenough, the Special Commissioner appointed by the Board of Trade to inquire into and report upon the present position and future prospects of British Trade in South Africa.

34. Colonial Import Duties,—Copy of Return relating to the Rates of Import Duties levied upon the principal and other Articles Imported into the Colonial and other Possessions of the United Kingdom.

35. Conciliation Act, 1896 (Trade Disputes).—Copy of Fourth Report by the Board of Trade of Proceedings under the Conciliation Act, 1896.

36. East India (Sanitary Measures).—Copy of Report on Sanitary Measures in India in 1901–2 (Vol. XXXV.).

37. East India (Irrigation).—Copy of Report of the Indian Irrigation Commission, 1901–3. Part I. General. Part II. Provincial. Part III. Maps. Part IV. Appendix.

38. East India (Railways).—Copy of Report on the administration and working of Indian Railways, by Thomas Robertson, C.V.O., Special Commissioner for Indian Railways.

39. East India (Statistical Abstract).—Copy of Statistical Abstract relating to British India from 1892–3 to 1901–2. (Thirty-seventh Number).

40. East India (Trade).—Copy of Review of Trade of India for 1902–3.

41. East India (Trade).—Copy of Tables relating to the Trade of British India with British Possessions and Foreign Countries for the five years 1898–9 to 1902–3.

42. Imperial Institute (Indian Section).—Copy of Annual Report of the Imperial Institute (Indian Section) for the year 1902–3.

43. Irish Land Commission (Proceedings).—Copy of Return of Proceedings during the months of May, June, July, August, September, and October, 1903.

44. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Sixty-ninth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1902. Section I.

45. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Sixty-ninth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1902. Section II.

46. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Sixty-ninth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1902. Section III.

47. Queen's College (Galway).—Copy of Report of the President for the Session 1902–3.

48. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Tables showing the extent in statute acres and the produce of the Crops for the year 1903.

49. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland) (Migratory Labourers).—Copy of Report and Tables relating to Irish Migratory Agricultural and other Labourers for the year 1903.

50. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Abstracts showing the Acreage under Crops and the number of Live Stock in each county and province of Ireland for the year 1902–3.

51. Agrarian Outrages (Ireland).—Copy of Return for the quarter ended 30th September, 1903.

52. Agrarian Outrages (Ireland).—Copy of Return for the quarter ended 31st December, 1903.

53. Evictions (Ireland).—Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 30th September, 1903.

54. Evictions (Ireland).—Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 31st December, 1903.

55. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter ended 30th September, 1903.

56. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter ended 31st December, 1903.

57. Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Report on the Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics of Ireland for the half-year ended 30th June, 1903.

58. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Ireland).—Copy of Forty-first Report of the Inspector for the year 1902.

59. Shell-Fish (Ireland). — Copy of Report of the Local Government Board for Ireland on the Shell-Fish Layings on the Irish coast as respects their liability to sewage contamination.

60. Board of Education.—Copy of Reports from University Colleges, 1903.

61. Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects. School Training and Early Employment of Lancashire Children.

62. Board of Education (Education Committees).—Copy of Statement of Schemes for the Formation of Education Committees approved during the period 1st August to 30th November, 1903, by the Board of Education, under Section 17 of the Education Act of 1902.

63. Board of Education.—Copy of Return showing the Number of Persons on the Teachers' Register under Regulation 5 (2) (a) of the Teachers' Registration Regulations.

64. Board of Education.—Copy of Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to Museums under the Board of Education from 1st August, 1903, to 31st July, 1904.

65. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.—Copy of Report on the Results of Investigations into Cider Making carried out on behalf of the Bath and West and Southern Counties Society in the years 1893 to 1902, by F. J. Lloyd, F.C.S., F.I.C.

66. Postal Convention (Denmark).—Copy of Agreement between the Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Post Office of Denmark. Dated 22nd August, 14th September, 1903.

67. Wireless Telegraphy.—Copy of Procés-Verbaux and Protocole Final of the Preliminary International Conference at Berlin on Wireless Telegraphy.

68. Meteorology.—Copy of Report of the Meteorological Council to the Royal Society for the year ending 31st March, 1903.

69. Preferential and Retaliatory Duties.—Copy of Return of Preferential and Retaliatory Duties imposed, raised, reduced, or repealed in the years 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1853, and 1860, stating (1) the rate of duty levied, and (2) the revenue derived from, and the quantities imported, of the articles concerned, in the three years preceding and in the three years following such change.

70. Chapter House, Westminster.—Copy of Memoranda by Professor Church, F.R.S., furnished to the First Commissioner of His Majesty's Works, &c., concerning the treatment of Decayed Stone-Work in the Chapter House, Westminster Abbey.

71. Peterhead Harbour.—Copy of Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works.

72. Colonial Reports (Annual).—Copies of Reports Nos. 394 (Turks and Caicos Islands, Annual Report for 1902), 395 (Seychelles, Annual Report for 1902), 396 (Ceylon, Annual Report for 1902), 397, (Gold Coast, Annual Report for 1902), 398 (Barbados, Report for 1902–3), 399 (Fiji, Annual Report for 1902), 400 (Lagos, Annual Report for 1902), 401 (British Solomon Islands, Report for 1902–3), 402 (Cocos-Keeling Islands, Annual Report for 1903), 403 (St. Vincent, Report for 1902–3), 404 (Grenada, Annual Report for 1902), 405 (Southern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1902), 406 (Straits Settlements, Annual Report for 1902), 407 (Trinidad and Tobago, Report for 1902–3), 408 (Basutoland, Report for 1902–3), 409 (Northern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1902), 410 (Malta, Report for 1902–3), 411 (St. Lucia, Annual Report for 1902), 412 (Mauritius, Annual Report for 1902), 413 (British Guiana, Report for 1902–3).

73. Colonial Reports (Miscellaneous).—Copies of Reports Nos. 22 (Seychelles, Report on Para Rubber), 23 (Dominica, Roads and Land Settlement. Report on the Expenditure of the Parliamentary Grant-in-Aid), 24 (Grenada, Report on Land Settlement in Carriacou), 25 (Hong-Kong, Bubonic Plague. Memorandum on the Treatment of Patients in their own Homes and in Local Hospitals).

74. Canada.—Copy of Canadian Sessional Paper containing Correspondence in connection with the German Tariff.

75. West Indies.—Copy of Further Correspondence relating to the Volcanic Eruptions in St. Vincent and Martinique in 1902 and 1903.

76. Straits Settlements.—Copy of Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1902.

77. Cyprus.—Copy of Despatch from the High Commissioner covering a Report on the Agricultural Fund for the year ended 31st March, 1903.

78. Marriage and Divorce Law (Colonies).—Copy of Papers relating to the Laws of Marriage and Divorce in self-governing British Colonies.

79. Transvaal.—Reports of the Transvaal Labour Commission.

80. Army (Recruiting). — Copy of Annual Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting for the first nine months of the year 1903.

81. Army (Volunteer Corps).—Copy of Annual Return of the Volunteer Corps of Great Britain for the year 1902.

82. Military Prisons.—Copy of Report on the Discipline and Management of Military Prisons in 1902.

83. Patriotic Fund.—Copy of Forty-second Report of the Royal Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund.

84. Rifle Ranges.—Copy of Return of Rifle Ranges available for Regular Troops and Militia, and of Rifle and Carbine Ranges available for the Imperial Yeomanry and Volunteer Forces [Address 16th July, 1903; Mr. Courtenay Warner].

85. Judicial Statistics (Scotland).—Copy of Report on the Judicial Statistics of Scotland for the year 1902.

86. Census of Scotland, 1901.—Copy of Eleventh Decennial Census of the Population of Scotland, taken 31st March, 1901, with Report (Vol. III.).

87. Board of Manufactures (Scotland).—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed to inquire into the administration of the Board of Manufactures (Scotland).

88. Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903.—Copy of Tables showing the Populations of Counties, Local Government Districts, and Burghs in Scotland with reference to the Provisions of the Licensing (Scotland) Act.

89. Naval Manœuvres. — Copy of Report of the Naval Manœuvres of 1903.

90. Census of England and Wales, 1901.—Copy of Index to the Population Tables for England and Wales in the county volumes of the Census Report, 1901.

91. Highways.—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the President of the Local Government Board to inquire into the subject of Highways Authorities and Administration in England and Wales, with Minutes of Evidence.

92. Treaty Series (No. 12, 1903).—Copy of Convention between the United Kingdom and France respecting Commercial relations between France and Jamaica. Signed at London, 8th August, 1902. Ratifications exchanged at London, 12th August, 1903.

93. Treaty Series (No. 13, 1903).—Copy of Accession of Mexico to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, and additional Act of 1900. 7th September, 1903.

94. Treaty Series (No. 14, 1903).—Copy of Accession of Germany to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, etc. 1st May, 1903.

95. Treaty Series (No. 15, 1903).—Copy of Parcel Post Convention, with detailed regulations, between the United Kingdom and Chile. Signed at Santiago, 21st October, 1902.

96. Treaty Series (No. 16, 1903).—Copy of Protocol for submitting to Arbitration certain questions as to the interpretation of treaties with Japan with regard to leases held in perpetuity. Signed at Tokio, 28th August, 1902.

97. Treaty Series (No. 17, 1903).—Copy of Treaty between the United Kingdom and China respecting Commercial relations, etc. Signed at Shangai, 5th September, 1902. Ratifications exchanged at Peking, 28th July, 1903.

98. Treaty Series (No. 18, 1903).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and France providing for the Settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at London, 14th October, 1903.

99. Treaty Series (No. 1, 1904).—Copy of Convention for the establishment of a Parcel Post Service between the United States and Hong-Kong. Signed at Washington, 21st November, 1903.

100. Turkey (No. 4, 1903).—Copy of further correspondence respecting the affairs of South-Eastern Europe.

101. Turkey (No. 1, 1904).—Copy of further correspondence respecting the Affairs of South-Eastern Europe, March to September, 1903.

102. China (No. 3, 1903).—Copy of Report by Acting Consul Litton on a journey in North-West Yunnan.

103. China (No. 1, 1904).—Copy of Report by Mr. C. W. Campbell, His Majesty's Consul at Wuchow, on a journey in Mongolia (with a Map).

104. Africa (No. 11, 1903).—Copy of Reports on the Geology of the East Africa Protectorate, by the late E. E. Walker (Government Geologist).

105. Africa (No. 12, 1903).—Copy of Report by the Mombasa - Victoria (Uganda) Railway Committee on the Progress of the Works and Revenue Working, 1902–3 (with two maps).

106. Africa (No. 13, 1903).—Copy of Report on the Trade and General Conditions of the British Central Africa Protectorate for the year 1902–3 by Major F. B. Pearce, Acting Commissioner.

107. Africa (No. 14, 1903).—Copy of Despatch to certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad in regard to alleged cases of ill-treatment of Natives, and to the existence of Trade Monopolies in the Independent State of the Congo.

108. Africa (No. 15, 1903). Copy of General Report on the Uganda Protectorate for the year, ending 31st March, 1903.

109. Forestry Laws (Commercial No. 8, 1903).—Copy of Reports from certain of His Majesty's Representatives abroad respecting Forestry Laws.

110. Most-Favoured-Nation Clauses (Commercial No. 9, 1903).—Copy of Return of Most-Favoured-Nation Clauses in existing Treaties of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Foreign Powers, stating the period when terminable, and showing whether they apply to the British Colonies, in force on the 1st July, 1903.

111. Houses of Legislature (Official Reports of Proceedings), Miscellaneous (No. 5, 1903,—Copy of Correspondence showing the systems in force in certain foreign countries for publishing Official Reports of Proceedings in the Houses of Legislature.

112. Drama (State or Municipal Support) (Miscellaneous, No. 6, 1903).—Copy of Return as to Financial Support given from State or Municipal Funds to Dramatic, Operatic, or Musical Performances in Foreign Countries.

113. Trade Reports (Annual Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3066 to 3113.

114. Trade Reports (Miscellaneous Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Miscellaneous Series, Nos. 596 to 601.

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY PENSIONS.

Copy presented, of Return showing the names of all Constabulary Officers now in receipt of Pensions, of all Head Constables, Sergeants, and Constables, and of all Widows and Children to whom Pensions have been granted since the Constabulary Estimate for 1903–4 was prepared, with the amount and date of Pension in each case [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN OF 1855.

Copy presented, of Account for the year 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

TREASURY BILLS.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 24th January, 1904, amending the Regulation laid down in the Treasury Minute of the 31st May, 1889, relating to Tenders for Treasury Bills [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 1.]

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITION COMMISSION, 1904.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 29th August, 1903, directing that the Accounts of the Royal Commission for the St. Louis Exhibition, 1904, shall be examined and audited by the Comptroller and Auditor-General [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1859.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 20th August, 1903, awarding a Special Pension to Sir Kenelm Edward Digby, K.C.B., late Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATIONS.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st November, 1903, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Deputy-Governor of a Convict Prison in Ireland professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired in the Public Service are required [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATIONS.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 10th November, 1903, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Secretary to the Civil Service Commissioners professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired in the Public Service are required [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 30th September, 1903, declaring that Thomas Ashbrook Forster, Postmaster, Newtown Post Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd October, 1903, declaring that Alfred Wellham, machine hand, Royal Small Arms Factory, Birmingham, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd October, 1903, declaring that Charles Chamberlain, principal foreman, Royal Carriage Department, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 23rd December, 1903, declaring that William Edward Bird, engine driver, Royal Gun Factory, War Department, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Copy presented, of Return of the amount of Notes issued more than forty years which have not been presented for payment, and which have been written off on the 28th October, 1903, from the total amount of Notes issued from the Issue Department of the Bank of England [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.

Account presented, showing the gross amount received and expended on account of the Telegraph Service during the year ended 31st March, 1903, &c. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 2.]

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (PARTICULARS OF PIECE WORK WAGES) (WEARING APPAREL).

Copy presented, of Order, dated 17th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, applying with modifications the provisions of Section 116 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, to the manufacture of Wearing Apparel, and revoking the Order dated 22nd April, 1897 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION — CREAMERIES).

Copy presented, of Order, dated 23rd October, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 42 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting certain special exceptions to Creameries, and revoking the Order (Ireland) dated 9th June, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION — OVERTIME).

Copy presented, of Order, dated 29th December, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 49 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, with regard to the overtime employment of women on not more than thirty days in the year; and revoking all existing Orders [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (MANUFACTURE OF EARTHENWARE AND CHINA).

Copy presented, of Amended Special Rules, dated 30th December, 1901, and 28th November, 1903, for the Manufacture of Earthenware and China, as established by the Awards of the Umpire, Lord James of Hereford [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (DANGEROUS AND UNHEALTHY INDUSTRIES).

Copy presented, of Regulations, dated 21st November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, for the Manufacture of Electric Accumulators [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (HEALTH—BAKEHOUSES).

Copy presented, of Order made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, dated 30th December, 1903, in pursuance of Section 3, Sub-section (2), of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, modifying the proportion of cubic feet of space to be provided in certain Bakehouses [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—LIMEWASHING).

Copy presented, of Order, dated 2nd November, 1903, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 1 (4) of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, granting special exceptions from the provisions respecting limewashing, &c., to certain factories and parts of factories; and revoking the Orders dated 16th November, 1895, 8th February, 1896, and 26th March, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

EXPLOSIONS (BLENHEIM ENGINEERING COMPANY'S FACTORY AT TUNNEL LANE, GREENWICH MARSHES).

Copy presented, of Report by Major A. Cooper-Key, His Majesty's Inspector of Explosives, to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Home Department on the circumstances attending an explosion of fulminate composition at the factory of the Blenheim Engineering Company, Limited, at Tunnel Lane, Greenwich Marshes, on the 18th December, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

INCORPORATION OF ASTON MANOR.

Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Aston Manor, dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INCORPORATION OF BROMLEY.

Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Bromley-dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INCORPORATION OF GILLINGHAM.

Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Gillingham, dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INCORPORATION OF HORNSEY.

Copy presented, of Charter of Incorporation of the Borough of Hornsey, dated 17th August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS).

Copy presented, of Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the certified Inebriate Reformatory at Ackworth, Yorkshire [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INEBRIATES ACTS, 1879 TO 1899 (REGULATIONS FOR STATE INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES).

Copy presented, of New Regulations made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department prescribing the diet for ill-conducted or idle inmates of State Inebriate Reformatories, and revoking Regulations 64 (b) and 66 (b), and so much of Appendix A as relates to the diet of ill-conducted or idle inmates, of the Regulation dated 21st June, 1901 [by Act); to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of Licence granted to Ellis Smith, under the Provisions of the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Patrick Hardigan, under the Provisions of the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE.)

Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Mary Ann Phillips, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of the Holy Rood at Worthing [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of Licence granted to Timothy W. Nolan, a convict, to which are annexed conditions other than those contained in Schedule A of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).

Return presented, relative thereto, [Ordered 13th August, 1903; Mr. M'Govern]; to lie upon the Table.

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.

Copy presented, of Thirty-three Minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland sanctioning Forms of Instruction for certain County Boroughs, Counties, and Urban Districts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PHARMACY ACTS (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Order in Council, dated 9th October, 1903, approving of a Regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS, IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Return of descriptions of qualifications of Deputy Lieutenants lodged during 1903, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of an Order in Council, dated 9th October, 1903, and three Orders, dated 4th November, 1903, for holding Winter Assizes in Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Time-Table of Examinations for 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Additional Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to Experimental Science and Drawing [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of amended Rules made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the Examination in Music [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Additional Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to Experimental and Practical Science [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT (IRELAND), 1877.

Copy presented, of Order in Council, dated 1st December, 1903, giving effect to a Rule of Court [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT (IRELAND), 1877.

Copies presented, of two Orders in Council, dated 21st January, 1904, giving effect to Rules of Court under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act (Ireland), 1877 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.

Account presented, of the Sums received and paid in respect of the Wages and Effects of Deceased Seamen in the year ended 31st March, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.

Account presented, of the General Lighthouse Fund showing the Income and Expenditure for the year ended 31st March, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 3.]

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).

Accounts presented, of all Deposits received and repaid during the year ended 20th November, 1902, and Statement as to Money Orders issued and paid from 1855 to 31st March, 1903, and of Receipts and Payments in connection with the Transmission of Seamen's Wages from 1878 to 31st March, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 4.]

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.

Copy presented, of Statement of the Receipts and Payments for the year ended 31st March, 1903, together with an Account of the Receipt and Issue of Stores [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 5.]

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAVIE TO MALLAIG).

Copy presented, of Second Annual Report by the Board of Trade as to the condition and working of the Banavie and Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any Company in working the Railway, for the year ended 1902–3 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 6.]

ARMY (PAY, NON-EFFECTIVE PAY, AND ALLOWANCES).

Copy presented, of List of Exceptions to the Army Regulations as to Pay and Allowances sanctioned during the year 1902–3 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

SUGAR.

Return presented, relative thereto [Address 30th July, 1903; Colonel Denny]; to lie upon the Table.

EAST INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN INDIA).

Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in India, chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending on the 30th September, 1903, &c. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 7.]

EAST INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN ENGLAND).

Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in England, chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending on the 30th September, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 8.]

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (CAMBRIDGE).

Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, on 16th March, 1903, in substitution for the existing Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 9.]

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (CAMBRIDGE).

Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Magdalene College, Cambridge, on 22nd June, 1903, in substitution for Statute XXV. of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 10.]

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).

Copy presented, of Statute made by the Governing Body of New College, Oxford, on 17th June, 1903, amending certain clauses of Statute III. of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 11.]

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).

Copy presented, of Statute made by the Governing Body of St. John's College, Oxford, on 15th May, 1903, amending Statute XV., 1, of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 12.]

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).

Copy presented, of Statute made by the Governing Body of Oriel College, Oxford, on 24th April, 1903, amending Statute IV., 7, of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 13.]

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Copies presented, of Two Orders in Council of the 29th January, 1904, providing for the re-measurement for tonnage of French and Spanish vessels in British ports [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Copy of Order in Council of the 9th October, 1903, applying the provisions of Sections 2 and 3 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, in the case of deserters from Japanese vessels [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Copies presented, of Orders in Council of the 16th November, 1903, confirming bye-laws made by the Pilotage Authority for the Ports of Gloucester and Burntisland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT ACTS, 1844 TO 1886.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 9th October, 1903, giving effect to the accession of Denmark to the International Copyright Convention of 9th September, 1886, and Additional Act of Paris, 1897 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

Order in Council under the Act (The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903) [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1858.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 8th December, 1903, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State for India in Council [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL ACTS.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 9th October, 1903, sanctioning certain pensions now granted from the Funds of Greenwich Hospital being supplemented from Naval funds [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT, 1878.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 19th October, 1903, approving a new denomination of Standard Weight of Fifty Pounds, or "Half-Cental" [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1889 (ORDINANCE).

Copy presented, of University Court Ordinance No. IX. (Edinburgh, No. 3) Regulations for the Degree of Bachelor of Law (B.L.) [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 14.]

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

Copy presented, of Report on the state of the Finances of the University, made by the University Court, for the year 31st August, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 15.]

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh for the year 1902–3 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 16.]

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.

Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow for 1902–3 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 17.]

LICENSING (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1903.

Copy presented, of Order made by the Secretary for Scotland under Section 109 of the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PRISONS (SCOTLAND).

Copy presented, of Rule made by the Secretary for Scotland appointing the Police Cells at Kirkcaldy to be a legal Prison for the detention of untried prisoners for a period not exceeding fourteen days before or during trial, and of convicted prisoners for a period not exceeding seven days from the date of conviction [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 18.]

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

Copies presented, of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3116 and 3117 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

UNITED STATES (No. 2, 1904).

Copy presented, of Map to accompany Correspondence respecting the Alaska Boundary (United States, No. 1, 1904) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

1. Lunacy.—Copy of Report to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made, the number of patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the Visitors of Lunatics between 1st April, 1903, and 30th September, 1903 [by Act].

2. Lunacy.—Copy of Return of all sums received by the Visitors of Lunatics for travelling expenses, or upon any other account, from 1st January to 31st December, 1903 [by Act].

3. Supreme Court (Rules).—Copy of Rules of the Supreme Court, dated 15th January 1904 [by Act].

4. County Court (Rules).—Copy of County Court Rules, 1903 [by Act].

5. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.—Copy of Accounts of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board for the year ending 1st July, 1903 [by Act].

6. Public Records (Disposal of Documents).—Copy of Additional Rule under the Public Record Office Acts, 1877 and 1898, for the disposal of certain Documents [by Act].

7. Public Records (Colonial Office).—Copy of Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in the Office of His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [by Act].

KING'S SPEECH.

Mr. SPEAKER reported His Majesty's Speech, and read it to the House. (See page 1).

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

*MR. HARDY (Kent, Ashford): In rising to undertake the responsibility that falls on me to-day, I will not ask for that indulgence which has so often been asked by Members standing in a similar position, because during the twelve years I have sat in this House I have never received anything but courtesy and kindness from all sides. But, as in this year of climatic disturbance we have often found moments of calm and quiet, so after the tempestuous controversies of the recess it may be hoped that in this House my hon. friend and myself may enjoy a few moments of quiet sympathy. The Speech from the Throne itself leads us to a somewhat similar feeling, because in its opening paragraph it breathes of peace and goodwill. Used as we have been, alas, on many occasions in recent years, in the Gracious Speech from the Throne to references to wars and to the consequences of war, we must now feel a great sense of satisfaction when we find paragraph after paragraph pointing out other ways of settling international difficulties. It suggests a hopeful augury for a future when peaceful arbitration will take the place of the dread arbitrament of war. In this I think a right note has been struck in the first paragraph, which alludes to our relations with our neighbour the great country of France. That personal note is raised by the allusion to the King's recent visit to that country, and I must say that when we look at this and other paragraphs one cannot doubt that we owe much in this regard to the tact, bonhomie, and diplomatic powers of His Majesty himself. There is reference also to another exchange of international courtesies. We have been accustomed to visits between the heads of great States, but for the first time there has been an interchange of visits between the legislatures of the two countries, thereby helping to cement a friendship which I trust may continue. We heartily welcomed those who came to us as guests from France, and we in our turn were welcomed with equal warmth. We may trust that the people of the two great countries so contiguous to each other may long remain on terms of amity and of friendship. We have to remember that if we seek these new ways of deciding international disputes, there must always be those who get their way and those who are unsuccessful. In the next paragraph we find an allusion to that tribunal which has been dealing with questions of great difficulty and delicacy which had arisen between Canada and the United States. While we may congratulate ourselves that at last these ancient controversies have been put an end to, we have to remember that the adverse decision tried peculiarly our kinsmen across the sea, and we cannot withhold our admiration of the Canadian people for the calmness and good sense with which they received a decision which was undoubtedly unpalatable to them.

I pass on to the next paragraph dealing with affairs in the Far East. We all know that the fear of war is brooding over a vast area of country. We ourselves have in late years had bitter experience of the sacrifices of life and treasure involved in war. But that experience was only in connection with a land war, and we do not know what would be the result of a war by sea as well as by land, fought between the ancient Empire of Russia and the newer Empire of Japan. I think we may feel satisfied, however, that the Government —with its own experience of what war means—will do their utmost to maintain peace. Our interests in those distant countries are very great, and deplorable would be the effect of war upon them—commercially, politically, and in every other way. Whatever the issue of the war might be, we cannot but feel that any alteration in the balance of power in that part might lead to results which might be far more deplorable than even any attack on our trade would be. At all events, as long as there is peace there is hope, and trusting in the good sense of the Emperor of Russia and our allies, the Japanese, we may still hope for a peaceful outcome of the negotiations.

I now pass from foreign matters to those which affect our colonies. I think it must be a matter of great satisfaction to us that the Commonwealth of Australia and the Colony of New Zealand, following up what occurred at the Colonial Conference in 1902, have now expressed their willingness to take up their responsibilities, to some extent, in connection with Imperial defence, and I think we ought to note that the acceptance of responsibility on their part is at the same time an acknowledgment of the necessity of unity of policy in this connection rather than a mere selfish interest. They are willing to contribute towards Imperial defence in an Imperial manner. I think, too, we may feel very glad that the Legislature of New Zealand, following the example of Canada and of South Africa, has given sanction to a tariff which gives preference to the produce of the Mother Country in the markets of New Zealand, and I hope that this example may be followed in other parts of the Empire. With regard to the mission to Thibet, the Papers which are to be laid shortly before the House will, of course, explain its objects, and here again it must be a matter for satisfaction that it is a political mission, undertaken by the concurrence of the Suzerain Power, to enforce treaty obligations, and that it is in no sense aggressive or caused by any desire to push forward the limits of the Empire. It is, in fact, a peaceful mission for the promotion of our interests, and we hope that like many which have gone before it may remove difficulties which have been a constant source of friction on our borders.

Next I come to the Estimates. The paragraph as to these has been framed in a rather different form as compared with previous Speeches. Undoubtedly economy must be the ideal which we put forward in connection with our financial responsibility. There can be no shirking of the burdens which fall upon us in consequence of the necessity for defending this Empire, but I am sure, judging from the criticisms which have been delivered, that the national interests are closely connected with the question of defence, and we must be prepared to meet a very considerable expenditure in connection with our two great defensive forces. Only lately the Government had to purchase two battleships, the acquiring of which by other nations would have entailed very great expenditure on ourselves in order that we might maintain that standard which is absolutely necessary to secure our supremacy on the seas. We have obtained those vessels, and I do not doubt the House will acknowledge as a patriotic duty that they must be paid for. In reference to the Navy there is one critic whom we shall very much miss—one whose frank presence, rugged eloquence, and transparent single-mindedness always made his contributions to our naval debates most welcome. We shall always miss such critics, because we know that their criticisms are levelled against what they believe to be actual defects by which the supremacy of the Navy is impaired.

I do not think it would be wise to dwell to-day upon the other side of our defences. It was only yesterday the country had the advantage of learning the opinion of experts on the question of War Office reform, but it undoubtedly points to the fact that great expenditure must be incurred, though we may also hope that in future the return will be a little more worth the money. One paragraph in the Report of the War Office Reconstruction Committee seems very appropriate to the occasion. They say—

> "The experience of the South African campaign has clearly shown that the system of administration prevailing was not adapted to the requirements of war, and an examination of the methods and regulations of the War Office strengthens the impressions that the real object for which this Department exists—the preparation of the military forces of the Crown for war—has not been attained."

If we have not attained that object, I am sure the House, backed up by the country, will insist on it now being attained.

In the later paragraphs of His Majesty's Gracious Speech, there is promised legislation of a social character, dealing with matters which have been thoroughly inquired into by Committees and Commissions in the past few years, and I hope that those matters will receive the careful consideration of the House. During the last two or three years we have passed measures dealing with the sale of intoxicating liquors in England and Scotland, and one characteristic of those Bills was that they were debated with good temper and a serious desire to remedy actual defects in the law without any unnecessary opposition or obstruction. May I appeal to the House that in further amending the law we should approach the matter in the same spirit and with the same desire to remove defects and so bring about real temperance reform? We cannot expect such a matter to be uncontroversial, and when we attempt to deal with such questions as the permanency of licences, compensation, the restriction of the number of licences, and the discretion of the licensing authority, we are certainly in rather deep water. But is it not our business to find some solution of a question which, even in the opinion of those who have been most devoted to temperance reform, is a very real difficulty and a stumbling block in their path? I need not use my own words, as fortunately I can refer to words written by an expert in this matter which are better than any I could use. In a recent pamphlet the hon. Member for the Spen Valley Division of Yorkshire uses these words—

> "The necessity for abolishing and the right to abolish licences in the public interest is fully admitted, but the difficulty and hardship which are involved in selecting the individuals upon whom the loss shall fall is felt to be so great that it blocks the way both to the efficient administration of the present law and to the passing of the reforms that some of us earnestly desire.

He goes on to say—

> "Some of our friends have been so long and, to a large extent, so exclusively engaged in conflict with the liquor traffic that they have come to act and talk as though they and the liquor people were the only parties to be consulted. They almost entirely overlook and ignore that great middle element in the community which is not identified with either the temperance or the liquor party, but which is the majority of the nation and is the element in our midst with whom the ultimate decision will really rest."

It is to that middle element we have to appeal, for if it is difficult for the Legislature to take upon itself the duty of deciding between licensees, it is also a somewhat arduous duty to throw upon the licensing authorities. Since the question of compensation was last fully discussed in this House, there has been a growing feeling on every side that some form of compensation must be devised if ever you are to have a settlement of this difficult problem. Surely, then, we ought to approach it this year with a desire to find a solution. The Royal Commission, both in its Majority and its Minority Report, decided on compensation, either in value from public funds or from the trade, or by a time limit. Last year, by a majority of two to one, this House decided in favour of compensation, and during the recent recess a great temperance manifesto has been sent out, appealing to the common-sense of middle class opinion, in which it is said that some form of compensation is necessary. Public opinion being thus formed, I trust we shall approach the question with a desire to remedy the immediate grievance caused by the action of certain licensing authorities in the country, and, at the same time, devise some means by which licences may be restricted without doing injustice to individuals, so that eventually we may approach a settlement of the question which hinders all true temperance reform.

As a county Member I must say a word as to the Bill for dealing with the valuation authorities. Long as we have been promised the reform of local taxation, certain as it is that that reform is as necessary as ever it was, there is one step which must be taken before we go into that matter; we do require a strong valuation authority, and we want one basis of valuation in connection with rating. Therefore I welcome the intention of the Government to deal with the matter; first, because it is a crying grievance in itself, and secondly, because I trust it will lead to that further reform of local taxation which is one of the most important subjects of legislation. We in agricultural parts have received a certain form of relief, but it has been only of a temporary character, and when the time comes for a thorough revision of the matter the agricultural interest will again have to ask from the hands of Parliament consideration of their special grievances—grievances which still bear heavily upon them, and which always come more and more into evidence as the burden of local taxation increases.

There is one other matter, and that is the announcement that a Bill is to be brought forward to remove a somewhat curious anomaly which exists in the recollection of Members on the acceptance of office. This is a self-denying ordinance, inasmuch it will not apply to the present Parliament. Doubtless there will be found some persons on the other side who love bye-elections so much that they will object to forego the chance of having one; but surely if the matter is looked into it will be seen that this is a case for reform. Is it not somewhat ludicrous that in the reconstruction of a Ministry the battle should fall not on the leading Ministers, because they change from one office to another without the necessity of seeking re-election, but with the youngest members of the Ministry who, perhaps, have not held office before? In other cases just when Ministers ought to be devoting themselves to the details of their work they are thrown by this necessity into the midst of an election. Then there is the further fact that the requirements of re-election must at times influence the decision of the Prime Minister in selecting the best men he can find to direct the affairs of the country. The whole thing is anomalous and obsolete, and I am very glad that the Government have announced their intention of dealing with it at an early date. There is one thing which I do not notice in the Gracious Speech with which I am personally interested, having been connected with the Committee which sat on the Bill—I mean the Port of London Bill. Although not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne I may remind the House that the Bill still exists, and will come before us again this year. I do trust that another session may not be allowed to elapse before we deal with such an important matter as the port of the greatest city in the world, a measure which is necessary in order that we may regain our commercial supremacy. With regard to the last words of the Address in which His Majesty asks for guidance from on High, I cannot disguise from myself the fact that there are subjects which are not included in His Majesty's Gracious Speech, which have undoubtedly created much controversy in the country and amongst Members of this House. I cannot look around these Benches without noting this fact. Although these words of His Gracious Majesty may appear to be purely formal, yet I feel that there can be no occasion more than the present when this House should more desire some guidance in its great debates, some higher sanction in order that we may still maintain before the face of the world an acknowledgment as the oldest legislative assembly in the world, that we can still carry on our debates in a manner worthy of a great Empire, giving to each other that credit for substantial commonsense which has been the characteristic of our people. I do trust, whatever may be the issue of this controversy, that this House may still deserve to rank amongst the greatest deliberative assemblies in the world. I beg to move.

*MR. PLUMMER (Newcastle-on-Tyne): I rise to second the Motion which has just been so fittingly proposed by the hon. Member for the Ashford Division, and if in so doing, I, like him, do not commence with the customary appeal for the indulgence of the House, it is not because I do not fully recognise my need for such indulgence, but simply because whatever else my experience here may have failed to teach me, it has at any rate taught me that, to those who endeavour to secure the goodwill of their colleagues, the House will always prove to be that friend in need who is, after all, the friend indeed. One is glad, moreover, to remember the sympathy which is extended on these occasions to those called upon to perform a duty which has been described by the Prime Minister—whose absence, I am sure, the whole House regrets—as one of the most difficult and delicate duties which a Member of this House can be called upon to perform. It is, I venture to say, all the more difficult because we are assumed to have special private and privileged information on the one hand, while on the other hand we are "cribbed, cabined, and confined" by those twin tyrants of custom and precedent, which always enter so largely into the debates of this House, and which particularly govern the debate on this Motion, which I have now the honour to second.

One of the rules ordained by custom upon this occasion is a rule which, I think, will meet with general approval, and it is that the mover and the seconder of the debate should, as far as possible, divide the subjects mentioned in His Majesty's Speech, and that the seconder should refrain again, as far as possible, from dealing with those matters which have been dealt with by the mover. I shall, therefore, leave comparatively untouched those subjects which the hon. Member for the Ashford Division has dealt with, and I will pass to other subjects, some of equal importance, and some, possibly, of greater importance. What are sometimes called the foreign relations of this country must ever be of great importance to Parliament and particularly to the House of Commons as being that body upon which constitutionally rests the responsibility of voting those supplies which are inevitably required in the event of any unfortunate interruption of those foreign relations. It must, therefore, be a matter of congratulation to the House and the country that His Majesty is able to assure us of our peaceful relations with foreign Powers. Like the mover of this Motion, I agree that this result is greatly due to those State visits which His Majesty has already paid, and proposes to continue, to the Capitals of Europe, as —may we not say it in a special sense—the Great Ambassador of the Nation. The desire to maintain those peaceful relations is shown in the numerous references in this Speech to arbitration and arbitration treaties. With regard to these I would only make one remark — the hon. Member for the Ashford Division having already dealt with it—and that is that it is an old saying, the truth of which ought never to be overlooked, that "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war," and whilst to gain a victory in a war which has broken out is no doubt a great thing, to be able honourably and consistently and in accordance with our obligations to the Empire to prevent a war from breaking out is undoubtedly a greater. Unfortunately arbitration is not always possible, and when, as in the case of Somaliland, it has been found necessary to resort to force, it is particularly desirable that the support of this House should go out to those who are fighting amid great difficulties of climate and transport a half civilised foe numerically superior to us. I am sure the sympathies of this House will go out in no less a degree to the relatives of those who have fallen in the recent successful engagement, and particularly to a noble Lord attached to the Party opposite, because they have bravely met their deaths in one of those little wars which are inevitable to this Empire rather than in a great and conspicuous campaign. Sir, such a campaign is unfortunately looming largely in the far East, and I am sure the House will regret the strained relations which at present exist between two great Powers, and will re-echo the hope expressed in the speech that even at the eleventh hour a peaceful solution may be found for the difficulties which now exist. If we turn from the far East to the Near East we find similar cause for concern and anxiety, and though for a time that anxiety has been allayed it is scarcely possible for even the most optimistic observer of recent events to regard it as permanently removed. It is difficult in view of the lessons of experience that have been taught us from that part of the world to express confidence, but the House will observe with satisfaction that in connection with one reform European officers, including officers of the British Army, are to be employed to assist in carrying it out, and we must hope to ensure its performance.

Mr. Plummer.

Now, sir, I turn to a question nearer home; we find a reference in His Majesty's Speech to the danger which is threatening one of the great industries of this country, namely, the cotton industry, in the imperilled supply of that raw material upon which, of course, depends not only the prosperity of that industry, but also the welfare of a large population in Lancashire and elsewhere, which is in turn dependent upon its continued prosperity. I believe the House will welcome the concern expressed in His Majesty's Speech on behalf of a great national industry, and will endorse the hope that by the efforts now being put forward that industry may be placed in a less dependent position upon other countries, and that the position which it now occupies may be considerably relieved. Sir, a self-contained and self-sustained Empire may be but an idle dream or a visionary ideal, but at least it is a worthy ideal, and though it may prove difficult and slow of accomplishment that is no reason why this country should rest content with a greater dependency upon other countries than is absolutely necessary either in this matter of the cotton industry or in other matters.

With regard to the defences of the country the House, I am sure, will welcome any economy that can be effected, provided that it is effected otherwise than at the expense of efficiency, whilst in connection with what has been described as the general problem of Army and War Office reform, I venture to express the hope and belief that the Volunteer Forces will receive that greater support which I am persuaded is the wish of the country generally.

With regard to the promised legislation for the session, the hon. Member for the Ashford Division has largely dealt with it, but he has not referred to one measure, which I am sure the House and the country considers has been delayed too long—I mean the question of alien immigration. However diverse may be our views—and we all know they are very diverse upon that question which, to the detriment of the English language, has come to be described by the classic phrase of "dumping"—I am quite sure none can be found to contend in favour of the continued "dumping" on our shores of pauper and criminal aliens at the expense of the country generally, and too often at the expense of a large number of our fellow-countrymen in our great cities, who find it difficult enough to secure employment in some of the trades effected, at reasonable rates of remuneration and under reasonable conditions of labour.

The other measures referred to in the Address which my colleague has not dealt with are those relating to the Workmen's Compensation Act, the Hours of Employment in Shops, and the Public Health Acts, all of which indicate that what is sometimes called social legislation is to have its due share of the time of the House and that Home questions will not be overlooked amid many pressing Imperial problems. Sir, I have used the phrase "Imperial problems," but I will content myself to-day by adopting the words of the late Sir John Mowbray, who by his many years valued service in this House was well entitled to express the opinion that—

> "The spirit which animates the House of Commons as a body is much the same as it ever has been, namely, a patriotic spirit conscious of the great traditions which it inherits and anxious to work for the good of the Empire."

Sir, the Government have no doubt been the subject of much criticism, but that is the fate of all Governments, and, indeed, of all responsible and not a few irresponsible bodies. It is an old saying that a man must serve his time to every trade, save censure, critics all are ready made; whilst Lord Beaconsfield, who for many years was so conspicuous a figure in this House, used to declare that it was always much easier to be critical than to be correct.

Now it only remains for me to thank the House, and I do so most sincerely, for the patience and attention with which they have listened to what I hope have not been unworthy remarks, and in conclusion, may I add, that in my humble judgment it is well that we should be reminded—lest we forget—well that we should be reminded as we are reminded in His Majesty's Gracious Speech from the Throne, that our deliberations here ought to be carried on with a conscious sense of our obligations to Him who after all is the source of all authority and power, and by whom alone Kings reign and Princes decree justice.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament"—(Mr. Hardy).

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling, Burghs): Sir, the first thing that I will say to the House, with the certainty of having with me its full concurrence and sympathy, is to give some expression to the sincere regret with which we note the absence of the Prime Minister, and above all our regret on account of the cause of that absence. We all trust that the cause of his absence will soon disappear, but I think it is peculiarly to be regretted on this particularly occasion because I for one shall find it to be my clear and urgent duty in the course of my remarks to examine into the position of the Government upon that great fiscal question which so largely occupies the attention of the country, and to address to the Government some very plain and direct questions in regard to it. We should have all preferred that we should have the answer to these questions from the Prime Minister's own lips rather than from any other lips, but after all it is not the Prime Minister's policy; it is the policy of the Cabinet, and the Cabinet Minister whom he has deputed to represent him to-night will no doubt be perfectly competent to give us all the information we desire.

I shall not be contradicted when I say that seldom has the opening of a session of Parliament excited such keen interest as that in which we are now taking part. The personal presence of the King, accompanied by His Gracious Consort, is a source of pleasure and satisfaction to all His Majesty's subjects. It enhances the dignity of the occasion, expressing it partly by the imposing ceremony which attends his presence, and it also marks in proper constitutional fashion the high importance of our duties. But when I speak of the interest attaching to our proceedings I do not refer to the form, but to the matter and substance of those proceedings. How we stand is this. In one of the most vital spheres of political opinion and action, a revolutionary movement has been instituted and pursued with zeal, insistency, and profusion during many months, directed against the accepted and established fiscal policy of the country. In fact we are told that there are two policies of departure, and not one only. But while there are some who can detect a difference between the two policies, there are others who maintain that they are in essence implicitly one and the same, that the one is ancillary to the other, and that they are not exempt from the ordinary natural law which controls all terrestrial things, and according to which the whole is greater than its parts, and the greater includes the lesser. Be this as it may, what I am concerned with is the fact that Parliament has never yet had an opportunity—I will not say of discussing this question—we are not nearly that length yet—but of being informed as to the real nature and intention of the two schemes, if there are two. This House sat for three months after the proposed changes were broadly announced, and was never given an opportunity of discussing them. Our Parliamentary information as to the intentions of the Government was confined to two facts—that a statistical inquiry was to be conducted for the benefit of the Cabinet, and that the Prime Minister had no settled convictions. The lack of settled convictions did not appear to be a very good equipment for a Prime Minister who was setting about furnishing a new commercial system for the greatest commercial nation that the world ever saw. But there we were left, and it is only now, at last, after all this time of delay that we have the means of ascertaining the true position of this momentous matter, and the actual intentions in regard to it of the Executive Government, and the whole country waits with anxious curiosity to hear what the Government have to say. But there are one or two subordinate causes of interest at the present time also. We have practically a new Ministry in power. A turn of the wrist has been given, and there has been a kaleidoscopic change on the opposite benches. Familiar faces are found in strange places, and strange faces in familiar places. Is it a new Government? I said practically a new Government. I thought that was safe although not very definite. Is it a new Government with a new policy, or is it the old Government with a new policy? The old Government may be on the Front Bench more or less, but the old policy is mostly on the Back Benches. But then on the Back Benches also is the leader of the new policy, so that I confess I give it up. The situation is too bewildering, and the only way to cure the confusion is to appeal to the common-sense of the electors of the country.

This leads me to another cause of interest at the present moment. We have seen that remarkable array of new Members who took their seats to-day. The hand of death has been heavy upon this House, and we miss the faces of many friends whose places have had to be filled. I hope it will not be thought out of place if I say that beyond this House there is a great loss to note, which the country has had to meet, and which in all of us who are engaged in politics has excited the most sincere regret. I mean the removal from among living men of Lord Salisbury. We on this side often differed, and differed keenly and widely, from Lord Salisbury, but we had long learned to admire, not only his great intellectual endowments, but his high-mindedness, his devotion to duty, and the sound views, let me add, which he strove to act upon in his conduct of the foreign relations of our country. These losses among us have led to what is often spoken of as a general election in miniature, continuing and completing, with hardly any break, the remarkable series of by-elections we have had during the last two years. Where is now the authority of the Government opposite? It is dispersed to the winds; afflavit populus et dissipati sunt. From the first we disputed your authority. I will not go back upon the reasons for that. They are known. We maintained from the first that the result of the election of 1900 was a false result, and the facts that we founded that opinion upon were not the mere snarls of disappointed and vanquished combatants. They were facts which now, in the perspective of three years, have commended themselves to all those who look back upon that time. And yet the Government has gone on very gallantly expending the nation's money; plunging the duty and work of education at the instance of one ecclesiastical body —[Cries of "Oh, oh!"]—I do not wish to be contentious, and I withdraw the word instance, and say—for the benefit of one ecclesiastical body; plunging, I say, the work of education into the cauldron of sectarian strife, unsettling many things and settling few. And now the country, in election after election, is knocking at their door. These are the men, Mr. Speaker, with this invalid authority, who would now take upon themselves to remould our whole fiscal policy—not here a part of it and there a part of it, but to alter the whole tone and spirit and intention of it; or who, if they refrain from action, if they have not the courage to make a definite proposal, are using the influence which they accidentally, and, as events are showing, precariously enjoy, which their precarious position gives them, to further schemes which they dare not openly propose. Sir, at this stage, information is what we ask for; and later, before I sit down, I shall recur to this subject, and point out in what respect information is required.

And this is also true of questions which have arisen in many quarters of the world, in the East of Europe, in two parts of Africa, and in two parts of Asia. In all these my task will be, as it has been often since I have held my position—mainly that of interrogating and asking for Papers and claiming, on the part of the House of Commons, and putting forward its right, to be fully informed. I do not remember any time when such serious events have been occurring all over the world with Parliament still in the dark as to their true origin, and as to the part which is being played in our name. Sir, the mover and seconder have—and I think this will be the general opinion—discharged their duty in a manner which redounds to their credit. They have spoken with force and ease and have avoided any undesirable disclosures while rambling round a great many subjects. That, after all, is the principal duty of the mover and seconder of the Address. On this occasion that, I think, the hon. Members opposite have fully accomplished. [Cries of "Oh, Oh" and "Order."] I do not wish to speak disparagingly of the hon. Gentlemen mentioned, but in their praise. I have known, in my time, very indiscreet speeches made by hon. Members in moving and seconding the Address, and that certainly has not been the case on this occasion. Now, the first part of the King's Speech we all listened to with unmixed pleasure and satisfaction. We may all congratulate ourselves on the conclusion of a treaty of arbitration with France and the prospect of similar treaties with other countries. Even more important than these actual instruments between the countries is the spirit of mutual friendship and good understanding which has been established with the chief European nations, the creation and maintenance of which has been largely the noble and worthy work of His Majesty the King, who has not only served the best interests of his own country, but has also set a good example to us all, to all his subjects; and besides that has earned our gratitude and the gratitude of Europe. The visits of the President of the French Republic and of the King and Queen of Italy—the latter visit oddly enough not mentioned in this Address—have done much to cement good relations; and I think it was quite proper that some allusion should be made to those civilities which have been exchanged between the members of the Legislative Chambers of Paris and London, and which have given pleasure to the Members themselves and gratification to both the peoples.

There are other quarters of the world where the outlook is not by any means so cheerful. The situation of affairs between Russia and Japan is so critical that I think it wisest and most in accordance with my duty to refrain from any comment at all. Papers will, no doubt, be laid, and then we shall know what has been done in our name, and also what the grounds of the dispute really and actually are, of which we have no authentic knowledge at present. I trust that they will show that no effort has been spared in the past, and that the good intention and good will of this country is not confined to the future, as the wording of the Address might almost seem to convey. Turning to the deplorable story of Macedonia, I would recognise the benevolent part taken by Lord Lansdowne in instituting and supporting measures of reform and relief in that country. The first scheme of reform put forward early last year altogether failed. The second was accepted in form by the Turks in the autumn, but it may be so delayed and thwarted as to be really ineffective; and the news we have is far from reassuring. At the present there is universal suffering and discontent and suspicion, and the general expectation is that the insurrection will break out again in spring. Sir, I hope the Papers will show that the Government of this country has pursued a strong and definite policy, and that they always bear in mind the peculiar degree of responsibility in which we of this country stand towards the victims of Turkish misgovernment. But even if the Government were to be unmindful of that, the country is not unmindful of it; and it looks to the Government to leave nothing undone for the aid of this unhappy people.

Two military undertakings require notice. There is the little war in Somaliland, which has been so unduly costly in life, and which, to the outward view, does not appear to be very much advanced after all from what it was at this time last year, when I was asking the same sort of question and making the same sort of review. What everybody asks is this—"What are we doing there at all? What do we want and expect to gain by interfering with the interior of that country when our interest is confined to a portion of the coast?" Shall we never be able to curb the zeal—the patriotic and praiseworthy zeal—of the man on the spot? And shall we always continue the evil habit we have acquired of treating contemptuously everyone who opposes us, and setting down every man who stands out against us as being mad, and denouncing as Dervishes all who, after all, do not like an invasion of human imports into their own country? The other case, Mr. Speaker, is that of Thibet. Papers are greatly called for here, and until we receive them, again I say, we can hardly judge of the case. We are sending a large force in mid-winter into a country, perhaps the most inhospitable on the face of the earth—a country also which is of all least accessible from the quarter from which we apparently suspect danger. We hold that a case which justifies such action would need to be a strong one, but in our present ignorance of it, as I have said, we cannot judge it.

Sir, since the House rose, the Report of the Commission on the War has been issued, and I think the universal opinion of the country gives the highest credit to Lord Elgin and his colleagues for the manner in which that inquiry was conducted. The Report contains much that is startling, and much that is instructive, and well deserves the public attention that has been given to it. And now, yesterday, we were able to read in the papers the recommendations of the small Committee of eminent and capable men who have been inquiring into the organisation and administration of the War Office. Well, these recommendations must be quietly and carefully scrutinised. There is general agreement everywhere as to the creation of an Army Board, or an Army Council, to give the Secretary of State for War the best military advice in the best form. But as one who has long held that view—I have tried myself, with my own hand, the forming of such a council—I welcome that step in advance. The principle is sound; and the precise form which the council is to take, and the details of its composition and work, can easily be adjusted. But one thing which I should like to say and to impress on the House is this: by far more important than any form or system of administration is the maintenance of loyalty, good feeling, and confidence between the Secretary of State, the civilians at the War Office, and the military men at the War Office, and among these different classes I have just named, themselves. That is the secret of the whole position. I would not go so far as to say that "Whate'er is best administered is best," but certainly the most important thing of all is that, whether you have a board or council, or whatever you have, it should be such as to encourage that spirit I have mentioned.

With regard to the Army itself it is difficult to know how it stands. The right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State, who has been so persistent and acute a critic, has now taken it in hand to administer and build up. Perhaps he may discover from the inside real difficulties which when he viewed the matter from the outside seemed to him imaginary. I can only hope that he may succeed in combining all that was good in the old system with all the advantages he is going to confer upon us under the new system. He tells us that he sees what ought to be done—in which he is exceptionally fortunate—but he asks for time. Let me assure him—and I think I may do so in the name of the House and the country—that we shall not be impatient; because we know that he deserves consideration from the House of Commons, which fully appreciates his earnestness of purpose and his assiduity and intelligence.

Now I wish to call attention to one of the most singular facts in connection with the Speech—namely, that no reference whatever is made in it to South Africa. Is, then, that country so quiet, so prosperous, its people so contented, its finances so flourishing, that there is no occasion to refer to it? I am afraid that the truth gets through to us with great difficulty from South Africa; but we know enough to be aware that it would be almost true to say that the exact contrary of all this is the case. The promises and expectations of past years, even of last year, have been disappointed. But the outstanding question for the moment, which drawfs all others, is the question of the importation of Chinese labour into the Transvaal. A week or two ago I wrote to the Prime Minister to ask him whether he did not agree that there should be no definite or final step taken by the Government either on the spot or at home in this matter until Parliament had an opportunity of considering the question. He has not favoured me with any answer to my letter; but I saw the other day that the Colonial Secretary stated in a speech or a letter that an opportunity would be given to the House, and nothing would be done until that opportunity had been used. Therefore I would now venture to ask the Government, in the first place, that all the Papers connected with this subject should be presented to us as speedily as possible, including the Report of the Labour Commission, and the ordinance itself, and all other documents relating to the question; and then, when hon. Members have seen and had an opportunity of considering all these documents, a day should be given for the discussion of the question. That is the only satisfactory way in which we can deal with it, and I think it is a fair and reasonable claim to make. In that case I would advise hon. friends of my own who are anxious to move an Amendment or Amendments to the Address on this subject not to do so on the understanding that the opportunity I have spoken of should be given us in the future. I will not discuss, therefore, to-day the question itself; but I will only say this, and dwell upon it for a little time, because I think it is an important matter that the House should say clearly—and I believe it will attract a large degree of agreement—that the inhabitants of the colony ought not to be committed to a line of action which must irrevocably affect their future without their undoubted and express assent. Now what the Colonial Secretary says is—

> "The policy of the Government is to treat the Transvaal as though it were a self-governing colony, unless a distinctly Imperial interest is concerned."

Putting aside that question, and supposing the importation of indentured Chinese labour is not an Imperial question—which is a large assumption, if we have regard to the doctrines affecting trade and labour which are now in circulation—how on earth is a Crown colony to be treated as a self-governing community? I much prefer the words of the late Colonial Secretary on this point, because he said he had informed Lord Milner that—

> "Before I assented to any introduction of Asiatic labour, whether Chinese or Indian, I > must have reasonable proof that it was a policy which the Transvaal, if a self-governing colony, would approve."

This puts it very much better, above all when we are dealing with a Crown colony of the type of the Transvaal. It has a Governor and a hierarchy of officials; it has a council to assist the Governor composed of fifteen officials and nine nominative members. But besides that, consider the laws which are in force in that colony—under which any man whose act or word is unpalatable to the Government can be deported out of it without being tried. How can you say that you have freedom of opinion in these circumstances? Every man carries on his business or employment at the mercy of the Government—the tender mercy, I hope and believe—but still he does not enjoy full independence, especially in a matter like this, on which the Government may have taken a particular line. That is the country which is said to be treated as self-governing. It is said in the newspapers that there has been a sort of referendum. I have read also that a referendum has been refused, and that what has happened is merely that a certain memorial has been put out under the auspices of a committee who are anxious for this importation. But under those influences to which I have referred I do not think the signatures to such a memorial are of great value as an indication of the genuine feeling of the inhabitants of the colony. Therefore the conclusion I come to is that, so long as these colonies are Crown colonies, so long the responsibility of governing rests upon the Imperial Government and the Imperial Parliament, the use of Chinese labour is therefore a matter for us to consider. It is not merely that we are in an offhand way, after a casual debate, to approve or disapprove of it. It is on us the responsibility in this matter rests, and we can only judge of it when the opportunity is given to us. I am content to leave the merits of the question to the promised opportunity. I trust that in the course of this debate a statement will be made as to the financial position in South Africa, as to the instalment of £10,000,000 in the loan of £30,000,000, and as to the progress and work of repatriation and compensation, for which the House has sanctioned the expenditure of huge sums of money.

I turn to the domestic programme. The first and most obvious remark is that so meagre a list has seldom been submitted to a Parliament. The only conclusion we can come to is that the Government do not anticipate a very long or protracted session. The Government are going to stop or to control alien immigration, to the great delight of the hon. and gallant Member for Central Sheffield. It is a curious coincidence that, just at the time when it is proposed to introduce Chinamen into one of our colonies with the effect of ousting from employment our own countrymen who live there, a Bill is to be introduced by the Government to prevent the immigration of foreigners into this country because of their undue competition in labour. Another very curious fact is that a large proportion of these destitute aliens whom it is desirable to keep out of this country come from the very high-tariff countries in which we are told the workmen are so much more happy and prosperous than here. This is a Bill which we must see before we say anything about it. Then there is to be a Licensing Bill. All I would say of that is, that any restriction on the discretionary power of the magistrates will be hotly and pertinaciously resisted. I turn to a more sentimental question with me, that of Scottish education. I trust that whatever the right hon. Gentleman does will be done in harmony with Scottish traditions and providing amply for popular control. But I must confess to the House that I am subject to a most improper sentiment in regard to this matter, because I have great confidence, which I ought not to have, in the right hon. Gentleman whom I am glad to see, and every one is glad to see, in the position of the Secretary for Scotland. He is a real Scotchman; he knows Scotchmen and is known of them; and I hope also, apart from his own very proper and wise intuitions, he will take counsel with the Scottish members; and I would particularly advise him to take counsel with the four Scottish Members who have been returned to the House during the last year, who from their fresh contact with the people must know more about the subject than some of us.

There is to be no English Education Bill. There were rumours in the newspapers, as usual wrong, to indicate that there was to be. Sir, there will be no peace or success until those parts of this new system of education are removed which infringe the rights and hurt the consciences of large masses of the people.

Now at last I come back to this great fiscal question, which, like the subject of South Africa, is, in the old phrase, made conspicuous by its absence from the Speech. In the past history of this controversy, what are the salient facts? One fine day in May the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham breaks loose, declares against free trade and in favour of preference with a tax on food. He comes to the House, and, having apparently consulted nobody, makes a great declaration of policy. Then he waits to see what will happen. This was an unusual way for a Minister to proceed. If a Minister has a policy to propose he generally goes to the Cabinet first. If he dissents from a policy, and tells the House that it is so, he resigns. The right hon. Gentleman did neither. The next thing would have been respectfully to invite him to resign. I have been looking up the text-books on this question, and I find that this is how it is laid down—

> "If a Minister differs from his colleagues he must resign or else he must be held responsible for their action. He cannot be allowed, like Lord Camden, to retain office and the emoluments of office, and afterwards repudiate the action of those with whom he has been associated."

Again, it is said—

> "The Prime Minister must manage as well as rule his subordinates. When we say that a Prime Minister can dismiss a colleague we mean no more than this—that a strong Premier can say to the Queen, 'He or I must go.'"

That is the state of the law as laid down in Sir William Anson's "Law and Customs of the Constitution." Fortunately for the right hon. Gentleman, if not for Parliament and the country, an extraordinary conjunction of favouring circumstances awaited him. He discovered, in the first place, that on this question of the reversal of the fiscal policy of the country and of the constitutional relations and the fiscal relations of the Empire, the Prime Minister possessed no settled convictions. That was a most auspicious discovery for him. Then the question arose in the Cabinet—How are we to meet Parliament and conduct affairs of State with a Prime Minister who has no policy, and a Colonial Secretary who has a policy of his own and who will not keep quiet with it? Here, again, see how fortune favoured the right hon. Gentleman. The Cabinet decided to treat the question as an open one, on which their lips were sealed, and if they could have compassed it they would have liked to seal the lips of the House of Commons as well; and as an apt, candid, and correct description of this resolve they agreed to come here and tell us that a solemn inquiry, in which the whole nation was invited sympathetically to take part, was to be undertaken—an inquiry which, as they hinted, only the blind partisan or the intolerant fanatic could fail to respect. Meanwhile, outside, not a word was to be said. That leaflets covered the country under the auspices of one of the Ministers, did not matter. We know now that a Cabinet crisis was raging the whole of this time; and what I now say is that the whole thing was one of the greatest impostures ever foisted upon Parliament and the country. The climax came in September, when the Government was remodelled. I should have had a great deal to say if the Prime Minister had been present as to the part which he played in this matter; but in his absence I prefer not to make any personal allusions to his conduct, because he is not here to speak for himself. Perhaps we shall have some other opportunity. Well, now our turn for inquiry has come. I notice that some members of the Government, by the way, have been saying how delightful it is that now at last the opponents in this quarrel will speak in each other's presence in the House of Commons. I should have thought that members of the Government were the very last persons to like that condition of things, because they have been for months taking different lines on this subject, some ardent and staunch for free food, and others extreme preferentialists; and it will be very awkward for them to get up one after another in a debate. We may also have some sympathy with any one, if such there be, whose method of controversy leads him to use impressive but untenable arguments, garnished with startling but inaccurate statistics, and when the argument is refuted and the errors are exposed to take no account of the correction but go on repeating them. We may imagine how such a one in this House will sigh for the sweet insulation, immunity, and autocracy of the platform. Now the larger policy, which has been so clearly expounded with so much energy, and, let me add, with so much variety, by the right hon. Gentleman the late Colonial Secretary—that is a clearly intelligible policy. The plan has been greatly altered from time to time; that one would have expected from the natural adaptability of its author; but it is always clear. But my questions to-night refer, not to the policy of the right hon. Gentleman, but to the policy of the Executive Government opposite, and on a future occasion in this debate my right hon. friend the Member for Montrose will move an Amendment which will raise both these questions, and include, in fact, the whole subject. He would have moved this Amendment immediately, or as soon as convenient, in this debate, but out of consideration for the fact that the Prime Minister is necessarily absent it has been arranged that he should defer his Motion.

The great advantage of this movement is that the House and the country can find out now what the Government really means. The difficulty of appreciating their position has two main causes. In the first place, the extreme vagueness of the Prime Minister and others in their statement of the official policy; and, secondly, uncertainty as to its real and avowed relation with the major, and unofficial or quasi-official policy. This Government policy of retaliation has never got beyond the stage of phrases and generalities and formulas. These are no good at all. You can discuss retaliation and reciprocity and freedom to resume negotiations in the abstract for months, and get no further. As far as we can understand it, there is to be some method of dealing with outrageously unfair competition. The dumper is to be come down upon when his commodity is too cheap, and the foreign tariff is to be taken in hand when it is too high. How are you going to do it? The whole thing turns upon that. We do not know. The inquiry has taught us nothing. There is not a single case in the concrete except the Sugar Convention, and there the result is not encouraging. In the first place it was hoped that it would help West Indian sugar. But notwithstanding four months of Protection, the imports have fallen off in a year nearly by one half. Also the Indian tea trade has been retaliated upon by Russia, as the penalty of excluding her sugar from our ports. So far as it goes, the experience suggests that blows may be delivered very much at random—sometimes you may hit yourself, and sometimes you may hit the wrong man. The Government should come down from the clouds and tell us what are the machinery and procedure that they contemplate. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Croydon — it requires a lesson in geography to describe these retired Cabinet Ministers—in his letter of resignation complained very properly of having been kept in the dark. He wrote—

> "I would gladly give consideration to any practicable scheme for obtaining access to foreign markets or for meeting evils of which we complain; but we have had no scheme placed before us."

Let us see your practicable scheme. But there are some points on which explicit information can be given. This retaliatory policy, does it mean Parliamentary or merely Executive action? Is it intended that Parliament—that this House especially, with its power over its own duties—should hand them over to the Executive to impose or alter as it chooses? If that is intended, then I am afraid that is a very wide issue, and one quite apart from the question of tariffs and duties. This must be made quite clear. As to the procedure in the case of dumping, I would ask, is there to be a sliding scale of tariffs regulated by the price of imports, or is it to be simple prohibition, as under the Sugar Convention? Then, again, how is this thing to be worked as a defence against foreign tariffs? Other countries go into commercial negotiations with a full tariff, sometimes with two scales, a higher and a lower, according as they are met by the other country. But this country always obtains entrance under the lowest scale. We are not to have a full tariff. How then are we to proceed? Supposing the United States is said to be shutting out Bradford woollen goods, or Russia shutting out bleaching powder, and there appear to be grounds for taking action. The Government have, no doubt, thought out the line of action. They have thought of the imports on which retaliation in those two cases might take effect; the consequences to traders and consumers, who are in no way responsible for any high tariff, but who will nevertheless be pawns in the game. Have they reflected that some traders may secure protection by a side wind, and that others are bound to suffer from restriction? Do they realise all the confusion, all the clamour for protection from other trades, and the difficulty of abolishing a tariff, established for retaliatory purposes, when that purpose has been secured? Have they considered the case of those protected countries, where, if we are to retaliate at all, it must be upon either food or raw material? Well, those are a few of the points which want elucidation from the Government. Some of us have asked about it in the country, and we want to know what the Government's plan is. It is only by considering these practical questions that we can come to a right conclusion. The answer to them will show the country whether, quite apart from high theory and principle, the policy of retaliation is a practicable policy; and they ought to have been cleared up before the Government assumed to themselves the title to reverse, annul, and delete at their pleasure the principles upon which the fiscal policy of the country is based. Again, there is some doubt—and to this point I would invite the attention of the House—as to whether this policy, this formula, is to be put into operation, or whether it is meant only for show. But it must be a real policy, because we have had the resignation of Ministers on it; and the precedent of the Sugar Convention bears substantial testimony to the reality of what is certainly in itself a somewhat flimsy-looking thing to be called a policy. Besides, I hope the House will notice this. What did the Prime Minister say in his letter to the Duke of Devonshire, written, if one may judge from external evidence, under circumstances of some tension? He said this—

> "I see no difficulty in successfully carrying out the policy which for a fortnight you were ready to accept, by the help of the Administration which for a fortnight you aided me to reconstruct."

Surely the charm of this balanced sarcasm can hardly have carried the Prime Minister out of his depth and induced him to make an admission which he did not intend. He, at least, could see how it can be done. He says—

> "I see no difficulty in successfully carrying out the policy," and he contemplates this Administration doing it. But here we only get another contradiction and anomaly. Here is the President of the Board of Trade. He opened to us the most—I will not say charming vista; ugly vista, possibly, according to our ideas, of years and years, Parliament after Parliament—a perfect ladder of Parliaments up which we are to climb before we attain Protection, and therefore there was no harm done by whatever people said now. The country would not be committed until all these years are over. But here is the Prime Minister, on the other hand, implying that it is a thing on purpose for which the present Government has been reconstructed. It has renewed its youth for the express purpose of putting into effect a given policy. Well, then, why is that policy not mentioned in the King's Speech? If you can palliate the blows of the foreign plunderers, why do you not do it, and would it not be a much better thing to do, after all, from your point of view—I do not want to do it—than to deal with the drink trade, which is neither a languishing nor a slaughtered industry, and to which you are going to give another dose of protection?

The second point on which we seek light is the relation between the minor and the major, the official and the quasi-official policy. We have documentary evidence as to the origin of what may be called the co-ordinated policy. It occurs in the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham's letter of resignation. He says—

> "I suggest that you should limit the present policy of the Government to the assertion of our freedom in the case of all commercial relations with foreign countries, and that you should agree to my tendering my resignation of my present office to His Majesty and devoting myself to the work of explaining and popularising those principles of Imperial union which my experience has convinced me are essential to our future welfare and prosperity."

Which are the most important and significant and characteristic and illuminating words of that passage? The first two, "I suggest." So that this halfway house does not mark the natural limit to which the Prime Minister and the Government would go, it is an artificial structure suggested by the late Colonial Secretary to calm the fears of the nation, and to preserve a safe appearance and cover up the ultimate designs. To this suggestion the Prime Minister, with the utmost docility, agreed; and as he explained in his further letter—although he did not explain it, as it would appear, to the uninitiated members of his Cabinet—he and the Government accepted the duty imposed upon them, and agreed that the work should be specialised. What does the difference between the two amount to after all? It is but a pure matter of expediency. At heart they were united about the preferential policy, and they both felt that the times were not ripe for imposing the food taxes which alone could give effect to it. The whole transaction has the look of a mere affair of Party accommodation. The Prime Minister and the Cabinet were to remain at the base until the moment came for a general advance, while the late Colonial Secretary moved forward to survey the field, maintaining his lines of communication. That seems to have been the understanding; and colour is given to it by the proceedings of Ministers themselves in their subsequent speeches, and, above all, by the presence at the Treasury and in the Cabinet of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who accepts the Birmingham policy in all its branches. Now we are left asking why did the late Colonial Secretary resign at all? He would have been quite comfortable in his old place. Half the Ministry have declared for him. Look at the President of the Local Government Board. He is never weary of proclaiming his adhesion to the right hon. Gentleman. He supports a Tariff Reform League candidate in Wiltshire, against a Conservative free trader. Why, any day another letter may come "suggesting" that the time is ripe for the Member for West Birmingham to take formal command of the position that he dominates from the outside. Any day the signal may be given for a move forward from the trenches and the abandonment, bag and baggage, of the makeshift policy. What wonder if we regard the declared policy of His Majesty's Government as a mere hors d'œuvre, as trumpery as it is indigestible, to whet the appetite for bigger dishes—a mere lever de rideau, designed to prepare the minds of the audience for the full five-act tragedy of protection? Why, Sir, I come to The Times of to-day, to the political weather prophet of The Times of to-day—we always read his prophecies, although we do not always agree with them—he says—

"That a General Election may be looked for"— this is accidental on this subject—

"at no distant date may be inferred, from the preparations for the conflict which are being made by both Unionists and Liberals. So far as the Government are concerned, there appears to be no desire to precipitate affairs until—" until what?

"until Mr. Chamberlain's Tariff Commission has completed its Report."

Sir, what I say is, that the time has come for clearing up the situation. That is why I take the very first moment open to me, avoiding as much as possible personal references to the Prime Minister, as I have said, but dealing with the Government as a Government. After all, it is not a one-man Government. I do not know how many men are in it; and we are entitled to plain answers to plain questions. Let me, in one or two sentences, recapitulate. We want to know, in the first place, something more as to the character of the declared policy, and the time and manner of its coming into operation; and with regard to the larger policy we want to know whether, severally and collectively, the Government associate themselves with it, or disassociate themselves from it. There are preferential duties, and there are the taxes on food. Yes, but there are also the ten per cent. protective taxes on manufactures. We have never had an authoritative announcement from the Government of the light in which they view that part of the proposal, which, if I may say so, has, like Aaron's rod, eaten up the rest in the recent course of this discussion. The Government and its members have spoken with two voices long enough, and it is high time that they should put themselves in order before Parliament and the country by reverting to the theory of Ministerial responsibility and utterance with which we are familiar. That is all I am going to say, and I thank the House for listening to me on this great question. If I have spoken at length it is because I wish to bring the whole of the matter of inquiry fully before the House.

But now I will trouble the House only with one or two sentences on another subject, and it is the supreme importance of it which must be my excuse. It is a subject in which I suspect may be found at once the key and the cause and the cure of any real uneasiness that exists as to fiscal policy, and as to the condition of trade. What is causing serious embarrassment to the country, and bringing, more perhaps than anything else, discredit to the Administration, is the difficulty of finding the money to carry out the policy to which they have committed the country. We cannot expect any sudden relief from taxation, for they have spent and borrowed and taxed and committed the taxpayers during these prosperous years for some time to come. If lean years are before us, the expenditure of these vast sums of money is at once in a great degree the cause of them, and has largely increased the difficulties attending them. And, unfortunately, much of the expenditure to which we are committed is of a progressive nature; and here is a point I would urge upon the House. It is a point which is within my memory and the memory of those much younger Members of the House than I am. The grip of the spending services over the expenditure has greatly gained of late years on the control of Parliament and the Executive. Some of the most taking administrative schemes which have been put forward, whatever their merits may be, have the secondary effect—I mean schemes for organisation, or for increasing the facility of managing those Departments — have the secondary effect, if it is right to call it secondary, of weakening Departmental responsibility as well as Parliamentary control. In the Address there is a little ray of hope—oh, such a little one—through a narrow chink. It says—

> "The possibility of diminishing the burden is being carefully considered."

They have got to the stage of consideration! Why, the stage of action ought to have begun long ago. Consideration, however, is, at least, an improvement on last year. If I remember rightly, the Government then mentioned this great and growing expenditure without a word of indication of any means being taken to stop it. What is wanted—and to this I would invite the assistance of all Members of the House on both sides, for this is surely not a Party question—is to direct public attention to this vital matter, and that this House and the Executive alike should set their faces towards frugal administration and the reduction of taxation, satisfied that nothing will bring greater advantage to the national industries and the welfare and happiness of the people.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): In the unfortunate absence of the Prime Minister, the responsibility has been imposed upon me of discharging the task which he would naturally have discharged of replying to the questions which the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition has just addressed to His Majesty's Government. Let me, in the first place, thank the right hon. Gentleman, on behalf of my friends on this side of the House, for the reference which he made to the Prime Minister's illness. His absence from the House, still more the cause of it, is, I am sure, universally regretted. His scrupulous fairness to opponents, his constant courtesy to all, have endeared him to friends and opponents alike. My next duty is to discharge the task, which no one would have performed more gracefully than the Prime Minister himself, of complimenting my hon. friends the mover and seconder of the Address on the success with which they achieved what is, I believe, one of the most difficult tasks that can be imposed upon any Member of this House. They brought to bear upon it a tact, a consideration for the feelings of the House, an avoidance of controversy in dealing with controversial subjects, and a knowledge of the subjects they treated which, I think, make their speeches memorable even among those delivered on these occasions.

As regards at any rate, the opening paragraphs of His Majesty's Speech we are all at one. We note with gratification the reference which is here made to the cordial relations established by recent Royal visits, and fostered by subsequent international civilities between ourselves and the neighbouring Republic, and between ourselves and other nations. I think the whole country feels that we are indebted in a very special manner to His Majesty for the part he played, to use the fine phrase which has been applied to him, as a great Ambassador taking upon himself a mission of peace and goodwill towards our neighbours.

The right hon. Gentleman referred to the serious state of affairs now existing in the Far East, and said that he felt that in the complicated situation before us he had better make no comment on what was proceeding. I think I shall do well to follow his example. This is not a moment at which I think I could usefully say anything upon this subject, nor is it a moment at which His Majesty's Government have to lay Papers before the House. There will be no desire to withhold information from the House when the moment at which it can be given comes; but, for reasons which I need not mention, I think the House will see that the present is not a suitable moment for the presentation of information to Parliament. The right hon. Gentleman expressed the hope that Papers would be laid on the subject of Macedonia, and that when they were presented it would be found that His Majesty's Government had acted with a due sense of their responsibilities to the people of that unhappy country, and had used their influence to promote the scheme of reform which it is known the Powers have been pressing upon the Porte's acceptance. I understand that a Blue-book on this subject is being prepared and will be laid before the House. I can assure the right hon. Gentleman and the House that when they see that Blue-book they will find that the efforts of His Majesty's Government have been uniformly exerted to the best of their ability to impress upon the Porte the urgent need for reform, and to promote such an amelioration in the administration of the country as may remove the evils under which it has suffered. We have felt that in so doing we could best act in concert with and through those two Great Powers who are most immediately interested, and who from their geographical position have the best opportunities for carrying these reforms into execution. I am glad to think that some progress is being made, and the right hon. Gentleman may rest assured that we shall be wanting in no endeavour in order to increase it and secure relief for that country. I am bound to pass rapidly over these important matters.

The right hon. Gentleman made some inquiry about Somaliland, and the remarks he made seemed to show a very imperfect acquaintance with the circumstances which have led to the present operations. He appeared to regard them as an unprovoked attack on the part of His Majesty's Government upon a deserving ruler in rightful possession of the country, who was only anxious to prevent the dumping of foreign populations—I think that was the right hon. Gentleman's phrase.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: An invasion of human imports.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Who was only anxious to prevent an invasion of human imports into his territory. That is not history. It does not bear the remotest resemblance to it. There are certain tribes in the neighbourhood whom we have undertaken to protect as long as they live in peace and amity with us, and it was not our human invasion of this peaceful potentate's dominions, but his attack on these protected tribes which forced His Majesty's Government to act. Let me say that no one could regret the necessity for that action more than His Majesty's Government. We did not enter into an undertaking of this kind with a light heart; we knew the enormous difficulties which the character of the country imposed upon any military operations. We would gladly have remained within our own territory if we could have secured those to whom our protection was due. That was not possible. We have learned by bitter experience that you cannot afford to allow one of these fanatical Mahomedan Powers suddenly to spring into existence and obtain great proportions in these territories. We felt that we were bound, both for the immediate protection of those under our care and for the future safety of that portion of the world, to take steps to crush the Mullah's power. I trust that the brilliant successes gained by General Egerton in this campaign—which is one of extraordinary difficulty—have greatly advanced the objects which we have in view, and I hope when the operations in which he is now engaged are concluded he will have obtained complete success, and that we shall be able to retire again within our own boundaries.

The right hon. Gentleman asked for some information about Thibet. My right hon. friend the Secretary of State for India has prepared Papers, and they will be laid before Parliament in the course of the next few days. In the meantime, let me say that this political mission hardly, I think, justifies the language in which the right hon. Gentleman has spoken of it. The Government of India has been singularly patient in its dealings with Thibet. For years we have been subjected to difficulties with that country, culminating in infractions of the frontier of Sikkim, a protected State, and in the return unopened or unanswered of communications which the Viceroy addressed to the Dalai Lama. In regard to these matters of complaint, and with the concurrence of the Chinese Government, this mission entered Thibetan territory. There has been great and unfortunate delay in the arrival of the Chinese representative, who, with the representatives of the Thibetan Power, was to meet our representative. I hope that he will hasten his arrival, and that we may yet attain the objects of the mission—a peaceful settlement of our trade relations, the protection and maintenance of our undoubted Treaty rights with that country, and an agreement as to the proper boundary between that country and Sikkim. I think I have traversed over the questions of foreign affairs to which the right hon. Gentleman alluded.

As regards South Africa, the importance of the questions which are there arising is recognised fully by the Government. The right hon. Gentleman asks—as is usual and very necessary on these occasions in order that the House may be able to form a judgment—for Papers. I hope that these Papers will be circulated to-morrow in time for any discussion which hon. Members think desirable. I think the Report of the Labour Commission is what the right hon. Gentleman asked for.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Will the papers contain the evidence given before the Labour Commission, which is most necessary?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: No, I am afraid not. The Report is what was asked for before.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: In talking of the Report of a Commission we usually include in that phrase the evidence, which in this case is most necessary.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I have not made myself familiar with the evidence, which, I understand, fills a bulky volume. On that matter perhaps the right hon. Gentleman will communicate with the Colonial Secretary. The Papers to be circulated to-morrow will give very full information as to the labour difficulties and as to what has taken place, and will, I think, include all that the right hon. Gentleman has asked for specifically.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: —Will they include the debates in the Legislative Council?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Yes. The right hon. Gentleman also made some reference to the financial position of the Transvaal. It is true that the progress of the Transvaal towards prosperity has not been as rapid as we had hoped and believed would be the case. I should have thought that was not a matter for congratulation.

MR. LABOUCHERE (Northampton): I did not say it was a matter for congratulation. The right hon. Gentleman spoke of what the Government "believed," and I said "Hear, hear."

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I was not aware that the hon. Gentleman said anything at all. My remark had no reference to him; if he chooses to apply it I can have no objection. I was saying I thought it would not be a subject of congratulation or jubilation in any quarter of the House. After all, it is upon the people of the Transvaal that any temporary distress or any postponement of the return of prosperity first falls, and whatever be our view as to events which are past, we must all desire that the healing effects of prosperity may make themselves felt in that country as soon as possible.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): Chinese labour!

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: In the meantime it is, of course, the case that, having regard to the situation of the finances of the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony at the present time, and to the position of our own money market, His Majesty's Government have come to the conclusion that this is not a proper time at which to raise the first instalment of the War Contribution Loan.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, N.): Hear, hear.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The right hon. Gentleman cheers that sentiment. I am well aware that it is one of his most cherished convictions that under no circumstances shall we ever receive any contribution from the Transvaal on account of the war. I differ from him. I see no attempt on the part of the people of the Transvaal to escape from the obligation which they are under, and I am confident that at the first moment when either they or we think that the operation can be successfully and properly carried out they will be anxious to take the share which they undertook to take in the expenses of that war. As regards repatriation, I may say the work has been most successfully concluded. As regards compensation, I think the right hon. Gentleman must formulate in more definite terms the question which he wishes to put Now I turn to the more controversial part of the right hon. Gentleman's observations. His speech was, indeed, of a peculiar character. I do not remember ever to have heard a speech from the Leader of the Opposition on an occasion of this kind of such a character as that which the right hon. Gentleman has thought it right to make.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: There never was such an occasion.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I confess I think the speech bore traces of that change which the right hon. Gentleman himself indicated in that he had intended to attack the Prime Minister warmly, but that in his absence he omitted his name from a large portion of his remarks. What was the result? Instead of addressing himself in the main to the policy of His Majesty's Government, or to the conduct of the Prime Minister or his colleagues, the right hon. Gentleman delivered an attack upon my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham. He very generously and kindly substituted the name of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham, who is present to defend himself, for the name of the Prime Minister, who is unable to be present. Yet the right hon. Gentleman says that these are different policies.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: They profess to be.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I was talking about persons for the moment, not policies. I say that a large portion of the right hon. Gentleman's speech dealing with this matter was devoted to an attack upon the Member for West Birmingham—to his conduct first in remaining in the Government and then in going out of it—and not upon the policy of the Government at all. I think that is a very extraordinary and unusual proceeding. I am not aware that there is any precedent for interrogating a gentleman who is no longer a member of the Government as to the course he intends to pursue. As regards the Government, what is the right hon. Gentleman's complaint? He complains that the House of Commons has had no opportunity of discussing this question; that during all last session they were silent. I thought we had several debates. But if we did not have the question more definitely and directly put before us, whose fault was that? The Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government, again and again offered the right hon. Gentleman a day for any Motion of Censure upon the course which the Government took which the right hon. Gentleman could find the courage to produce. The Motion was never produced, and we still await that Motion, which we are now informed will be moved in the course of the next few days. The right hon. Gentleman alleges that the Government has no business, as I understand him, to continue in office. He challenges us to at once take the decision of the electorate on this subject. He denies our competence to frame any policy, or our representative capacity. Yes, but he took exactly the same line previous to the election of 1900. He and his friends of the Opposition repeatedly in this House challenged our representative capacity before that election, and invited us to go to the electors for their verdict. We went to the electors; we took their verdict. [Mr. Dalziel: You said the war was over then.] The Leader of the Opposition has ever since been trying to find some reason to explain that the electors did not mean what they said upon that occasion. The appeal to the electors on our policy will come in good time. In the meantime, I think the right hon. Gentleman should make up his mind exactly as to what line of attack he wishes to adopt. He says we are shrinking from an appeal to the electors. If that be so, why does he and other gentlemen opposite accuse us of attempting to rush a verdict without due consideration? He cannot have it both ways, he must choose one accusation or the other. If I might venture to say so, it is desirable, if possible, that at any rate the leading Members of the Opposition should agree upon the same line of argument. In the absence of the Prime Minister I am not going to deal with the history of what happened in the Cabinet. I have no authority to do so; and I understood the right hon. Gentleman himself to wish to reserve that question until the Prime Minister is in a position to be present. But this I say, and I say it without fear of contradiction, that no man was ever more loyal to his colleagues, no man was ever more generous to his supporters, than the present Prime Minister, and whatever misunderstanding may have arisen, none of those who served with him will ever accuse him of having wilfully or deliberately deceived them.

The right hon. Gentleman passed from his fancy picture of Cabinet proceedings to a series of interrogations as to what the policy of His Majesty's Government was. That policy has been explicitly and clearly stated by the only man entitled to pronounce as to the policy of the Government—by the Prime Minister himself. The right hon. Gentleman asks me, in reply to a series of detailed inquiries, to say how, when, why, and where each fiscal change is to be carried out? There is a question which has to be decided before we enter upon these details; that is whether you want fiscal reform or not. The right hon. Gentlemen wishes to know how exactly we propose to lower the tariffs, and how exactly we propose to prevent "dumping" at unfair prices. There have often been requests for information of that kind far in advance of any practical issue, but I venture to say that they have never been conceded, and that the person to resist the demand for information of this kind in regard to future legislation would have been Mr. Gladstone himself, who had not infrequent opportunity of showing how rigidly he was opposed to the declaration of detailed methods of carrying out a policy until the time came for the policy to be placed before the country. There is a question to be decided before that, and it is "Are you in favour of fiscal reform?" The right hon. Gentleman pretends to be less informed as to the fiscal question than I can give him credit for being, for he has been talking of fiscal reform at many meetings, yet he still pretends not to know what it is. I should have thought that it would have been well for him to have acquainted himself with it before he undertook to pledge himself and the country to objections at the threshold to any kind of reform whatever. The first question for the House and the country is whether they desire to reform the fiscal policy. Does the right hon. Gentleman wish to prevent "dumping?" I should be glad of an answer. [MINISTERIAL cheers and laughter]. But perhaps before he gives it he will consult the Member for West Monmouth, who, to this portion of fiscal reform at any rate, has promised his careful consideration.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT: I said I would consider any plan dealing with dumping which was proposed by His Majesty's Government.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I venture to think the right hon. Gentleman has not in his mind what he stated in South Wales. I think he said that it was a very serious question, particularly to his constituents.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT: I remember perfectly well what I said. I said I should be ready to consider any plan dealing with dumping which was proposed by His Majesty's Government, or by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: If that was exactly what the right hon. Gentleman said, then I am bound to take his account of it. But it must have been cold comfort for his constituents and for the representatives of certain South Wales industries who waited upon him on this subject when he assured them of his willingness to consider any plan dealing with dumping. In due course we are promised an opportunity of a wider discussion of this question, and I do not propose to go further with it now. I think we must wait until that opportunity offers. I altogether deny that there is any doubt about the attitude of the Government, or that there is any difficulty, for those who wish to ascertain, to make sure of what it is. As to the particular methods by which that policy is to be pursued, I think we are entitled to maintain our freedom. It is not wise in matters of negotiation to go into details too closely, and it has never been the practice of this House to bring forth detailed schemes in advance. What we ask the House to say is that our fiscal scheme stands in need of absolute reform and change; that it is a policy that has bound us hand and foot, and left us helpless in the face of these high foreign tariffs, and that it has failed to secure for us that open door which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose tells us is so vital to our existence; that our fiscal policy has failed to guard those great interests on which the prosperity of the Empire depends.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, East) rose at 7.28 to continue the debate, but, his utterances were lost in the noise made by Members leaving the House.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the Debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy).

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

MR. BUCHANAN: When the House rose at half-past seven I wanted to lay before the consideration of the House, and press a little further than my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition, two subjects. They are geographically somewhat far apart, yet they are subjects of some considerable interest in view of the statement in the King's Speech. I wanted to say a few words, first about Thibet and then about the Transvaal finance. I am sorry at this moment the Secretary of State for India is not present, because, if he answered my preliminary question, I should say no more on the question of Thibet. He has promised us Papers —they were promised in the King's Speech—but no statement was made as to when they were to be produced. If the right hon. Gentleman said they were to be produced immediately I should say nothing more on this subject until a later stage of the debate, but as no time has been mentioned, we cannot expect them to be produced immediately. I would also have asked him whether he could give an assurance that after the Papers have been produced we should be given an opportunity to discuss this question, because otherwise what may and probably will happen, will be that after the debate on the King's Speech comes to an end there will be no opportunity for raising discussion on any Indian subject until the Indian budget comes on, which is in the last week of the session. Not only is that an unfavourable opportunity, but events will then have gone forward in such a way that all the discussion we shall be able to have will be on events that have taken place instead of being able to offer criticisms on a policy of which some of us may approve and some may disapprove. I do not think either the paragraph in the King's Speech or the statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer really advances us further on the subject than we were in August last when the House adjourned. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has told us there was friction on the frontier; there were difficulties connected with grazing and difficulties in connection with trade rights on the frontier. That is almost the exact statement which was made to us in August last by the noble Lord the then Secretary of State for India in reply to a Question put to him from this side of the House. The point of difference between then and now is this, that while the noble Lord then stated that in consequence of these differences an expedition had beed dispatched under Colonel Younghusbann with an escort of 200 to a place called the Chumbi Valley over the Jeylepla Pass the state of affairs now is very different. Now, instead of a peaceful escort of 200 men, Colonel Younghusband has something like 2,000 men with him, exclusive of camp followers. It seems to me to be an abuse of the King's Speech to describe this as a simple political mission. In the first place you are sending a mission over the border into a foreign country and you are accompanying it with a large military force. It cannot be described as a political mission. Colonel Younghusband is accompanied by a force too large for an escort and too small for an army, and the conditions are exactly similar to those which led to the Afghan war. Then we had imaginary Russian intrigues in Afghanistan; now we have imaginary Russian intrigues in Lhassa. I say the course of events bears an ominous and ill-omened resemblance to the course of events that led up to the Afghan war, and we ought to have from the Government some assurance on the subject beyond the vague promise of the production of Papers at some time or other. It is useless for us to be put off by fair words; public opinion is gravely alarmed at what has taken place. The Thibetans up to the present have been a peaceful people. On the south of the Sikkim frontier the land is grand and fruitful; on the northern side it is arid and barren, and no doubt they do prefer to pasture their flocks and herds on the southern side. Of that we are aware, but so far as official statements go there has been nothing to show there has been any serious increase in that grievance or that there has been any serious character in that grievance for months and years past, yet we have this expedition to within 100 miles of Lhassa. No wonder the Thibetan people should be seriously alarmed at what we may have in view, and that they should be, to say the least, doubtful as to what our intentions are.

When one wants to see what ideas are held, one only has to look at the Anglo-Indian newspapers to see that we desire by our expedition to enforce on the Lamas of Thibet a British Agent at Lhassa, which they are strongly opposed to. And it must be remembered that they are not only opposed to a British agent but they have never allowed a Russian or any foreign agent whatever in Lhassa. We want also to annex the Chumbi Valley, a splendid country, and it is currently believed in India, at all events, that we desire to enforce absolutely on Thibet Indian trade, if necessary by force of arms, not only through the Jeylepla Pass and the Chumbi Valley but in the other directions as well. These ideas may be all imaginary, and it only needs a word from the Government to prove them so, but we have had no explanation whatever either from the Indian or the Home Government of what our motives are and the purpose for which this expedition is sent over the border into a foreign country. I will not go further on this subject on the present occasion, but I do hope before the debate on the Address ends we shall get some further imformation from the Secretary of State for India or some other member of the Government. I should not wish to carry this matter to the length of bringing a Motion before the House, but I am afraid that what happened in 1878 will happen in this case. When Sir Neville Chamberlain was sent with 1,000 men over the Khyber Pass it is true no Motion such as I have referred to was put before the House. But what happened? Sir Neville Chamberlain had to go back and war ensued,. We have now sent Colonel Younghusband with 2,000 men over the Jeylepla Pass, and no doubt collisions will occur, and then the Government will have to bring a Motion before the House. I do not know whether the time is yet ripe for bringing forward such a Motion.

I now turn to the other subject on which I desire to say a few words, the subject of the Transvaal finance. It has been alluded to by my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition, and was partly alluded to by the right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his reply. My right hon. friend confessed that he was surprised, and I am as surprised as he, that there was no mention of the subject of South Africa in the King's Speech. Occasionally no news is good news, but on this occasion I am afraid no news is the reverse of good news, and I was somewhat surprised that in the remarks of the Chancellor of the Exchequer the right hon. Gentleman omitted entirely to deal with one side of the question, because it not only affects the finance and prosperity of the Transvaal, but it materially affects the finance of this country. It must be in the recollection of the right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer and most Members of this House that on the debate on the Budget of last year the Chancellor of the Exchequer, of that time, was criticised and pressed as to the provision he had made for diminishing and paying off the National Debt, and as to the sufficiency of the provision made. His reply always was—

> "We have got £30,000,000 coming from the Transvaal, £10,000,000 in January, 1904, £10,000,000 in January, 1905, and £10,000,000 in January, 1906."

All that was to go in reduction of the National Debt as a payment from the Transvaal and Orange River Colony towards the expenses of the war. Not only did the then Chancellor of the Exchequer say that, but it was put into an Act of Parliament, because in sub-Section 2, Clause 2, of the South African War and Loan Act, 1903, it is specially provided that these repayments shall be devoted to that purpose. It was a binding agreement between the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the supreme authority of the finance of this country, and these colonies. We know now that the first instalment is not forthcoming, and what I should like to ask the right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he were here, or any other member of the Ministry, is this: What steps has the Chancellor of the Exchequer taken, as the supreme authority of the finance of this country, or what steps does he propose to take, for the diminution and paying off of debt in the current year, in view of the fact that this £10,000,000 on which he relied is not forthcoming? As I have said, it was put into an Act of Parliament, and last session it was defended again and again, because, while the Finance Bill was going through the House, my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition drew attention to Clause 6; to the want of definite security for the advance of this £30,000,000, and he was supported in his criticisms by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Bristol. The reply of the Chancellor of Exchequer was, so far as words go, as reassuring as could be, particularly with regard to the first £10,000,000.

> "Therefore," he said, "so far as the first £10,000,000 we are quite safe."

That was the assurance given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Committee stage of the Finance Bill on an Amendment moved by my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition on this specific point as late as the 22nd of June. Not only was that assurance given, but we had equally strong assurances given by other members of the Government of equal weight and authority with regard to this part of the business. What I want to press upon the House and the Colonial Secretary is this, that the issue of this loan of £30,000,000 to the Transvaal was part and parcel of the whole scheme of Transvaal finance. It was one part of the bargain by which this country was prepared to advance £30,000,000 to the Transvaal and the Orange River Colonies. I do not wish to labour the subject, but I have here several statements by the late Colonial Secretary on the subject. They start with one at Johannesburg. In setting out the scheme he described it as the second part of the agreement that another loan of £30,000,000 should be called up in annual instalments of £10,000,000; but there was a much stronger statement than that made by the right hon. Gentleman after he came home on the 6th of May, in which he said—

> "The whole arrangement, that is the two loans, must be treated together, and I might almost say that the support of the Committee to the loan now under consideration is indeed conditional on the contribution of the £30,000,000 to which I have referred."

What could be stronger than that? But he goes on to say that in order that success might be assured, and to show their confidence in their country, the capitalists of the Transvaal agreed to underwrite the first £10,000,000 of the loan. On the 27th of July, on the Second Reading of the Bill, these are the words the right hon. Gentleman used—

> "I have no doubt that a satisfactory agreement will be made between us and the underwriters of the loan to make it absolutely certain as to the first instalment of the loan that will be placed upon the market," and we have a further statement made in the House on the same day by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the question raised by my right hon. friend the Member for West Monmouth on the same subject, when the right hon. Gentleman said a draft audit was being made and being sent out to South Africa, and that when it was settled it would be laid on the Table of the House. What we want to get from the Colonial Secretary now is some further information on the subject than has been vouchsafed. So far as details go, we know nothing of what has taken place since July last. I have been informed that a Motion was tabled in the Legislative Council of the Transvaal that this money should not be advanced. At any rate we are in possession of the fact that the loan has not been brought out, and that the first instalment has not been paid. We want further information. We want to know what was the close of these negotiations which were going on in July last. Can the right hon. Gentleman inform us, and can he table the correspondence of the same? Can he inform the House of the views of the Transvaal authorities on the subject? I gather from his nodding assent that he will be able to give us full information as to why, in respect of this guaranteed advance, they have now gone back from the guarantee they gave. It is a matter in which there ought to be further investigation and information from the Government, and when the Colonial Secretary gives this information we should also like to get from him information on the other points, as to which my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition asked, with regard to Transvaal finance. The statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer is rather disquieting, both as regards the £10,000,000 and the interest of the £30,000,000. I think we ought to get from the Colonial Secretary some particulars on this subject. The House is well aware that the security for the payment of the interest on the £35,000,000 depends primarily on the railway revenue of the Transvaal, and, beyond that, on the general assets of the two colonies combined. In the middle of last summer Lord Milner had what seemed to some of us somewhat rosy anticipation as to the development of the revenue and the restriction of the expenditure of the Transvaal, and I hope we shall have from the Colonial Secretary a complete statement as to the railway revenue, and also the general revenue for the half-year ended December 31st last, and, further, as to the separate expenditure of the two colonies for that period, and the joint expenditure for the South African Constabulary. Such information would give us an idea as to how far the finances of the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony have declined during the past half-year, and enable us to make some rational estimate of the probabilities of the future. It will be remembered that when the Bill was under discussion the £35,000,000 were devoted to a variety of objects, and the amounts to be paid for specific purposes were left somewhat vague and general. Will the right hon. Gentleman now tell us what has been paid for the purchase of railways, and state the correct estimate for the settlement of the claims between the military and colonial authorities with regard to the railways? By so doing he will strengthen our knowledge of the condition of affairs in South Africa, and reassure the rational fears which we feel as to the security for the loan of £35,000,000, and as to the possible future fulfilment of the pledges of the Transvaal and the guarantors with regard to the £30,000,000, and particularly the first instalment due in January of this year.

*SIR HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): I am sure that all Members of the House who took part in the recent visit to the French Deputies appreciate the mention in the King's Speech of the great courtesy and attention which they received. It is impossible to speak in too high terms of the hospitality and kindness with which we were received by the French Deputies, the French Government, the Mayors, the Presidents of the Chambers of Commerce, and the French people generally. The President of the French Republic, in receiving the Deputation, referred in these terms to the visit—

> "There is infinite cause to be glad for the movement which is going forward and now being carried on by the two great western nations. A new era of fraternity is opening before us which must never be permitted to close."

It would have been unworthy not to acknowledge the kindness with which we were received, and the pains taken in the matter by Baron D'Estournelles de Constant and the hon. Member for the Romford Division of Essex.

The mention in the Speech of the redemption of the promise made by the Prime Minister of New Zealand to inaugurate preferential trade between Great Britain and New Zealand will afford great satisfaction. The mover of the Address referred to the fact that five years ago Canada established this preferential treatment of British goods, and on the visit of the right hon. Gentleman for West Birmingham to South Africa the Customs Convention gave a preference of 25 per cent. to British goods entering the South African markets. The fact that this preference has been established in New Zealand and that the proposal has been so warmly taken up by the Legislature and the people of the colony, cannot be otherwise than a great relief to large numbers of people in this country who are suffering from the present depression of trade. The condition of affairs in many parts of the country is well illustrated by the Labour Gazette for the present month. In the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition there was much that was interesting and amusing, but it contained no proposal or suggestion tending to provide a remedy for the actual condition of things which exists. According to the Labour Gazette, 37,500 trades unionists were out of employment at the latter end of December. If that is the case with regard to skilled artisans, it is quite certain that the state of affairs with regard to unskilled labour is infinitely worse, though no definite returns are available. During the years 1901–2–3 3,000,000 workpeople sustained decrease in wages, while on a single day in December last 370,469 people in the United Kingdom were dependent on poor law relief for their existence. Moreover, during the year 1903 261,363 persons emigrated from the United Kingdom, going for the most part to countries where their industry and labour would be protected, in despair of being able to obtain a livelihood in this country. We must express our gratitude that the first measure mentioned in the Speech is one to deal with the evil of alien immigration, to which for many years some of us have called attention. While over 260,000 people emigrated from the United Kingdom last year, their places were taken by no less than 82,000 of the scum of Eastern Europe. The Leader of the Opposition said that these people came from the most highly protected countries, thereby implying that they were dissatisfied with their condition in those countries; but what about the 260,000 who left the Free Trade market of this country to go to countries where their industry would be protected? I earnestly hope the Government will introduce the promised Bill at the earliest opportunity, and press it forward with the utmost speed. This is not the first time that such a Bill has been announced. A measure was promised in 1896, and in the subsequent session the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Croydon stated that the Government had no intention of departing from the pledges they had given on the subject, but, with the exception of the appointment of a Royal Commission, nothing further has been heard of the matter until now.

There is only one other matter to which I desire to refer, and that is the general problem of the Army and War Office reform. The scheme which appeared in the papers yesterday has been well received generally. There is one matter of military administration which is very serious indeed, and presses for early consideration and amelioration —the condition of the Militia and Volunteer forces. Both of those branches of the auxiliary forces show a serious decline. It is harder than ever to get officers for the Volunteers; the force is under-officered to the extent of between 2,000 and 3,000; recruits are coming in very slowly indeed, and the resignations are very numerous. I am aware that a Commission is at present inquiring into these matters, and it will be difficult for the Secretary of State to bring forward any scheme until that Commission has reported. The matter, however, is an extremely urgent one, and the recent speech of the Secretary of State for War gives us great hope that in his hands the Volunteer force will receive fairer treatment and better consideration than it has recently experienced at the hands of the military authorities.

MR. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland): Perhaps I ought to apologise for intervening in the debate, but I do so for the purpose of asking a definite Question on a matter of considerable public importance. In the debate on the Amendment moved to the Address last year, calling attention to the case of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, the view was taken by the Government that the present state of the law did not enable them to advise a prosecution in the case as matters then stood, but the Prime Minister gave a definite pledge that legislation should be introduced to amend the law in the respects in which it was held to be defective. The words of the Prime Minister were—

> "I ask the House to be content with the pledge that I have given, that we should endeavour to amend the law in accordance with that broad view of commercial morality so ably defended by my hon. friend."

No reference whatever is made in the King's Speech to that pledge or to the subject on which it was given. As the Attorney-General is in his place, and in view of a debate which I understand is to be raised on an Amendment referring to the matter, I trust the hon. and learned Member may be able to explain to the House why no reference has been made to the matter.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL (Sir ROBERT FINLAY, Inverness Burghs): I feel that the Question of the hon. Member is a perfectly reasonable one. As regards the inquiry with which he concluded I would remind the House that it is not necessary to include in the King's Speech every matter with regard to what it may be the intention of the Government to introduce legislation, but I shall certainly endeavour to answer fully and frankly the substance of the Question which the hon. Gentleman has put to me, and for that purpose I think the House will agree that it is probably desirable that I should enter into matters on which my mouth was closed while the case out of which this Question arises was still pending. When this matter was under discussion a year ago I told the House that nothing would induce me to say a word which would prejudice either the prosecution or the defence, and to that resolution I adhered. Now, of course, no such considerations are applicable, and I am at liberty fully to answer the Question asked by the hon. Gentleman. I desire to say, before I enter into the matter, that I hope that the fact that this Question has been raised at this stage and that I now make a statement upon it, will not in any way interfere hereafter with the fullest possible discussion of the Question which the House may desire. Opportunities may arise hereafter, and it certainly would be my desire, and I am perfectly certain that it would be the desire of the Government, that the fullest possible discussion which the House might think requisite, should take place upon this subject. In the first place, I wish to make clear one matter on which I think there is a good deal of misconception. It seems to have been supposed that the decision as to not putting the Director of Public Prosecutions in motion in the case of Whitaker Wright was the decision of the Government. It was nothing of the kind. The sole responsibility for that decision rests upon myself as Attorney-General. It is not a case in which the Government decide. It is not a case in which the Government are advised by the Law Officers. The law casts upon the Attorney-General the duty of deciding upon such a question in what I may call almost a judicial capacity. In the discharge of the duties which the law devolves upon him no other member of the Government either can or would dream of endeavouring to interfere with his discretion.

A NATIONALIST MEMBER: On what principle do you send people to gaol?

SIR ROBERT FINLAY: One other observation I desire to make is that the responsibility of the Attorney-General in this matter is not one which is to be shared with any of his colleagues. I am the first to acknowledge the invaluable assistance which I have derived in this and in all other cases from the gentlemen who have co-operated with me, but the decision rests with the Attorney-General, and for that decision those who have assisted him in the matter are in no sense responsible. The sole responsibility rests upon him alone, and it is the Attorney-General alone who is answerable to the House and the country for the manner in which he exercises his responsibility. In dealing with the question as to putting the Director of Public Prosecutions in motion the Attorney-General, as I have said, must decide almost as if he were a judge. It is for me to decide in a quasi judicial capacity. I have referred to the fact that last year I said that on the subject of the grounds of my decision my mouth was closed, because a summons was then pending before a judge for leave to prosecute, and I felt that anything I attempted to say in justification of myself might have operated either to help the prosecution or the defence, and no consideration relating to myself would induce me to utter one syllable which would interfere with a fair and unprejudiced trial of any case which was pending. Now I am at liberty, after what has taken place, to state what my grounds were; and I think that, in answering the Question put by the hon. Gentleman, the House is entitled to expect from me not only a categorical answer to the Question, but also an explicit statement of the grounds upon which I took the action I did in the case of Whitaker Wright, and of the grounds upon which I thought, as I still think, that an amendment of the law is urgently required. What I have to say, of course, as to the grounds on which I acted relates solely to the case as it appeared on the materials then before me in 1902, when I had to decide upon it. I am about to deal with the case as it was then presented to me. With regard to the subsequent prosecution and the result of these proceedings, I have one thing to say to the House, and one only, and that is that since the case has been terminated the Treasury have, with my full concurrence, determined that they ought to bear the cost of the prosecution. I now proceed to state what were the grounds that actuated me in the course which I took.

Whitaker Wright was, as is well-known to the House, the managing director of the Globe Company. The Globe Company was a company which carried on a highly speculative business. In the year 1900 it had got into very great difficulties, and Whitaker Wright, on behalf of the company, engaged in an enterprise which was intended to restore its fortunes. That enterprise was this—he endeavoured to establish what is called a corner, on a very large scale, in the shares of a company called the Lake View, a corner in Lake View Consols; and the particular operation that he was engaged upon was this—he entered into contracts for the purchase of Lake View Consols on a very large scale, and at the same time he was taking measures to secure that the very shares which he was buying should be under his control, so that many of the sellers to him would have to go to him when the day for delivery came and give him any terms he chose to ask for in order that they might be in a position to fulfil the purchase. That was the operation. If that operation had succeeded, as it very nearly did succeed, the fortunes of the Globe Company would have been to a very great extent retrieved. It failed. The enterprise in itself was, in my view, contrary to every sound code of commercial morality. I believe that it is an absolutely immoral thing for a man to enter into a transaction of that kind when he is buying and at the same time is taking steps to prevent those from whom he is buying from being able to fulfil their contracts, except by submitting to any terms he may choose to dictate. Further than that, I have no doubt whatever that such an enterprise falls within the range of the criminal law if it is carried out by several persons in combination, at least if any circumstances of misrepresentation attend it. I most carefully considered this question in the summer of 1902, and I most certainly should have directed a prosecution of Whitaker Wright for a conspiracy of this kind if it had been possible to obtain any evidence that others acted in conspiracy with him in the matter. I was informed that no evidence of that kind was obtainable. So strongly did I feel upon this point that I adjourned the consultation in order that inquiries might be made as to whether any such evidence could be obtained. I was informed that no such evidence was obtainable, that Whitaker Wright had operated in substance alone. I do not think that the criminal law can reach an enterprise of this kind carried out by one person by himself and not in combination with others. The law of conspiracy would not apply. The question, therefore, was reduced to this, whether I could properly direct a Treasury prosecution of Whitaker Wright for issuing a fraudulent balance sheet.

The balance sheet of 1900, in my opinion — and I of course speak only of the case upon the evidence as it was submitted to me in the summer of 1902—contained statements which were grossly untrue. That was the impression I formed upon the evidence before me, and I do not pretend to speak as to anything else. But then a further question arose before a prosecution could be properly directed, and that was the question as to the intent with which these misrepresentations had been made. Now I feel very strongly that the law ought to be that any wilful misrepresentation in any document issued by officials of a company ought to be punishable. The shareholders and the creditors of the company are entitled to know the truth; and whatever the intent with which a misleading statement is put forth, if that misleading and untrue statement is wilfully made, I think the officials of the company who make that statement ought to be punishable. But beyond all controversy that was not the law up to the end of December, 1900. It was necessary, further, that the misrepresentation should have been made with intent to defraud certain classes of persons. The question depended upon Section 84 of the Larceny Act of 1861. According to the provisions of that section there must not only have been misrepresentation in a document issued by the officials, but that misrepresentation must have been with the intent to deceive or defraud shareholders or creditors, or to induce persons to become shareholders in the company, or to induce persons to entrust or advance property to the company, or to become security for the company. The section does not provide at all for the case of misrepresentations made with the general intent to defraud the public, unless it happen to fall within the particular classes to which I have referred as enumerated in the section. The most material intent for this purpose was the intent to deceive or defraud shareholders or creditors. The word deceive in that collocation, in my mind, means, substantially, the same thing as defraud—that is, to mislead persons on questions of fact with a view to prejudicing them pecuniarily. I cannot better illustrate my meaning than by quoting to the House the language in which Chief Justice Cockburn charged the jury in a case under this section in the year 1880. The case was one of great magnitude, the trial of which extended over many days. It was a prosecution under this same Section 84 of the Larceny Act of 1861. It was a case in which the assets of the company had been dissipated in rash speculation, and after that had taken place the directors issued a balance sheet in which certain of the assets of the company were most grossly overvalued. The summing up of Chief Justice Cockburn appeared in The Times of May 6th, 1880. In the course of that summing up he dealt with the question of the intentional misrepresentation of the facts in stating that assets that were said to be worthless were of the value of between one and two millions. Then he came to the question of intent, and he said, addressing the jury—

> "But even if you should be of opinion that the accounts were intentionally falsified, that alone would not be sufficient to determine this question, because, even if you are of opinion that the defendants acted contrary to their duty in treating this property as a real and substantial asset of the company, you will have to say whether you are satisfied that they did so with the fraudulent purpose of defrauding the shareholders and the creditors of the company or to induce persons to become shareholders in order to defraud them also. There would scarcely have been any intention on their part to defraud the shareholders and the creditors, because it is plain that the very best thing that could be done under the circumstances in the interests of the shareholders and of the creditors was to keep the bank going."

Sir John Holker, I should observe, was then Attorney-General, and this was a Treasury prosecution. The Chief Justice continues—

> "Sir John Holker suggested that that was the very motive of the fraud he imputes to the defendants. But how could keeping the bank going defraud the shareholders or the creditors? No doubt to have made the real state of things known would have been to have produced an immediate depreciation of the property of the shareholders, and it was in the interest of the shareholders that the facts should be kept, as it were, in abeyance, and not at once disclosed so as to alarm the public."

I do not think that ought to be the law. I think that if an untrue statement is made by officials of a company in the balance sheet they ought to be amenable to the criminal law. But in deciding this matter one could only deal with the criminal law as it stood at the time when the transactions took place. I therefore had to inquire before I set the Public Prosecutor in motion whether, on the facts before me, the intention of Whitaker Wright in making these misstatements in the balance-sheet was to defraud any class of persons mentioned in the section. After most carefully considering the matter on all the materials that were at my disposal in 1902, when I determined this point, it seemed to me that the purpose of these mis-statements was really to support a corner which, if successful, would have re-established the fortunes of the company, to keep the company going till it succeeded; and, however reprehensible the whole enterprise in its very nature was, however reprehensible these misrepresentations which were intended to assist it were, that it was done, not with intent to injure, but with a desire to benefit, the shareholders and the creditors of the Globe Company. That was the real substance of the matter with regard to this transaction in the year 1900. As regards the balance sheet of 1899, there is one further observation which I should make. The Official Receiver did not bring the balance sheet of 1899 before me at all as a possible subject of prosecution. It was brought before me subsequently in the month of December, 1902, by Mr. Flower.

I, with my colleagues, had a long consultation upon this point. The Official Receiver reported to me that, in his opinion, the case upon this balance-sheet of 1899 was a very weak one upon the fact of misrepresentation. Upon these materials I came to the conclusion that I ought not to direct that the Public Prosecutor should institute a Treasury prosecution in this case.

I need hardly say that the fact that the case is not taken up by the Public Prosecutor sets no bar whatever against a prosecution by anyone else. Anyone may issue a prosecution, and anyone, where a company is in liquidation, may apply to the judge for a direction that, at the expense of the estate, a prosecution be instituted. My decision was given and announced in this House in the summer of 1902. It was open to those who desired a prosecution either to prosecute themselves or to apply at once to the judge in whose court the winding-up of the company was proceeding. Nothing of that kind was done until the month of January, 1903. During the six months that elapsed before that application was made, attempts were made in various ways to induce me to give the weight of the name of the Director of Public Prosecutions to the proposed proceedings. I think the House will agree that it is absolutely unnecessary for me to notice any suggestions that were made, that my action in this case was due to any unworthy motive; and I think the House will further agree with me that it is important, and, indeed essential, that those with whom the responsibility of administering the criminal law rests should not allow themselves to be urged into action either by pressure or by dread of misrepresentation of their motives.

There is another consideration which had weight with me in determining whether this was a case in which the Director of Public Prosecutions should lend all the weight of his name and authority to the proceedings that were desired. Many Members of the House will be aware that in the year 1902 an action was pending by the Globe Company against certain brokers for selling shares in the Lake View Company, in breach, it was said, of agreement not to sell under a certain price, and by that sale under the agreed price causing the collapse of the whole scheme on which Whitaker Wright had relied for the restoration of the fortunes of the Globe Company. If that action had succeeded large damages would have been recovered for the shareholders and creditors of the Globe Company. That action was continued by the Official Receiver; it had been commenced by the company before the company went into liquidation. The question of directing a prosecution was never brought before me until after that action had failed, as it failed in the summer of 1902. In that action Whitaker Wright had been the principal witness —in fact, the material witness who was put forward on behalf of the company. All the matters which were relied upon in respect of the application for a prosecution had been known for a long time and were known while that action was pending. The question I had to consider was whether the Public Prosecutor should, at the instance of the Official Receiver, when the action failed, lend the weight of his name to a prosecution in respect of these very matters which had been known at the time when Whitaker Wright was put forward as a witness in support of that action. It seemed to me that such a course would have been open to very strong and just observation.

As regards the alteration of the law in the future, I have two things to say. The first is this—I am not prepared to recommend to the House to proceed to deal with the law affecting what are called corners, or the analogous subject of rigging the market. The question is one of very great intricacy, and legislation upon it, however desirable in the interests of commercial morality, would be attended with very great difficulties. I should like that something should be done in this matter, but it cannot be done until after very full and complete inquiry into the whole subject, and the views are ascertained, not only of lawyers, but of business men, with regard to it. With reference to the question of making punishable the issue of statements by officials of public companies which they know to be untrue, I have a very strong and definite opinion that legislation ought to proceed on the lines adopted in the 28th Section of the Companies Act of 1900. By that section, which relates only to documents required by, or for the purposes of the Act of 1900, any wilfully false statement in such a document is a misdemeanour. The provision is not encumbered with the necessity of proving intent to defraud any classes of persons such as contained in the 84th Section of the Larceny Act of 1861. Now, surely this is right. Shareholders and creditors, in regard to statements promulgated by the officials of companies, are entitled to have the truth, and any wilful mis-statement by officials of companies in such documents should be an offence. If there is no intent to defraud, that ought to go and would go in mitigation of punishment, but if a mis-statement is wilfully made, in my judgment in every case, it ought to be amenable to the criminal law. If such a change were made it would relieve all those who have to deal in subsequent cases with such problems as came before me in 1902, from the difficulty which attended the proposal that I should direct the Public Prosecutor to institute a Treasury prosecution in this particular case. I think I have answered the Question which was put by the hon. Gentleman opposite, and in conclusion, I have only to say this: any Attorney-General would be unfit for his position, who from any by-motive failed to prosecute in a proper case, and more than that, and on the other hand, any Attorney-General would be unfit for his position, who, because a particular prosecution would be a popular thing to do, sets the Public Prosecutor in motion without being satisfied that it is a proper case for that intervention. Indeed where a case has in it materials which are likely to inflame public feeling, I think it is the duty of the Attorney-General, under whose orders the Public Prosecutor has to act, to be very cautious as to what his action is. Whatever view may be taken of the conclusion at which I arrived on the materials which were before me in 1902, I feel perfectly certain that the House—and I hope I may say that every hon. Member, in whatever part of the House he may sit —will have no doubt that in this case I acted to the best of my ability, and with a single eye to the discharge of those delicate and responsible duties which the law casts upon the Attorney-General.

Sir Robert Finlay.

*Mr. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): The hon. and learned Gentleman has, with that lucidity which we all admire, dealt with this case as it concerns himself personally. I do not rise to offer any observations on his remarks further than to say that I am sure I for one willingly concur in the sentence with which he concluded his speech. I rise rather to make some remarks in continuation of those which fell from the hon. Member for East Perthshire earlier in the evening, and which I wish had been listened to by a more crowded House than that which the hon. Member addressed. He put some very searching questions to the hon. Gentlemen who is now in the position of Colonial Secretary, and I am about to follow up those questions by some others. In the excellent speech to which we listened from the Leader of the Opposition, it was remarked that this was the first time for long —ten or twelve years, I think I might say —that we have had no mention in the Speech from the Throne of South Africa. I venture to say that the right hon. Gentleman who holds the seals of that office has found and will find that South Africa bulks very largely in the labours he has to undergo, and will do for many a day. We are all familiar with the rosy pictures drawn from the Benches opposite, and notably by the late Secretary of State for the Colonies, with regard to the state of that country—how we were to get repayment of the money advanced, how the country was to be a field for emigration of white labour and so forth. The right hon. Gentleman made a most remarkable speech on 6th May last, beside which the speech of any company promoter perfectly pales. In that speech, which occupies nearly thirty columns of "Hansard," the right hon Gentleman came under some very serious obligations. I hope in this connection we shall have from the Colonial Secretary very explicit assurances on the head of finance. With respect to the £30,000,000, the late Colonial Secretary used rather significant language on the 6th May, 1903. He then said—

> "It is true we are not dealing to-day with the raising of the £30,000,000 which will be required in order to pay the British Exchequer the contribution the colonies are willing to make; but the whole arrangement must be treated together; and I might almost say that the support of the Committee to the loan which is now under consideration is under condition not upon the contribution of £30,000,000 to which I have referred."

My hon. friend dealt so fully with the details of the finance that I shall not say a word more on that subject.

I turn to what the Leader of the Opposition said as to the importation of Chinese labour into the Transvaal. We want a great deal more information on that subject. It is quite true that the right hon. Gentleman has given us to-day two Reports of the Labour Commission, but these Reports are unaccompanied by the evidence. The right hon. Gentleman knows very well that the essence of the case often lies in the evidence. I notice in running through the Reports that they refer to the evidence, and, therefore, I venture to say that the Reports are very imperfect, and of very little use indeed, until you can refer to the evidence. I hope when the right hon. Gentleman speaks he will tell us when we may expect the evidence that was placed before the Labour Commission. This subject cannot be over-estimated in importance. It is many years now since the action of George III. and his Ministers in refusing to allow the American Colonies to put an end to the slave trade of that day. The whole difficulty in the United States came from the action of the English Ministers with respect to the intrusion of black labour in that country. I do not know that the right hon. Gentleman remembers the debates on the question of Kanaka labour in Queensland, but if he looks into "Hansard," he will see the part that many of us took in regard to that question. It is remarkable that one of the first acts of the Australian Commonwealth Parliament was to put an end to the Kanaka difficulty. From the 31st of March this year, no Kanaka can be imported into Australian territory. Anyone who looks into the question of Chinese labour must see that it has in it the seeds of a problem of the most serious consequence to South Africa. Anybody who lives in San Francisco will tell you that you must be mad to allow it. Not only have we not got the evidence with the Reports, but we have not received the correspondence that passed between Lord Milner and the late Colonial Secretary on the subject. We want information brought to date by the official dispatches on the matter. We want an opportunity, free from the trammels of the debate on the Address, of discussing this question in all its relations. I wish to call the attention of the right hon. Gentleman to a promise which he gave. It was rather a remarkable promise for a Secretary of State to give. He said on 25th January, through his private secretary—

"Mr. Lyttelton desires me to say in reply to your letter of the 22nd inst., that it is intended to give an opportunity for a full discussion in Parliament of the question of the importation of labour."

I claim the fulfilment of that promise. To "give" an opportunity implies much more than that the Opposition shall "take" one.

It is the one vital matter before the people of Cape Colony. The right hon. Gentleman talks of treating the new territories in these matters as self-governing colonies. I venture to say that the first thing to do is to give them the institutions and rights of self-governing colonies. The opinion of the Legislative Council is hardly worth the paper it is written on so far as it conveys the opinions of the inhabitants of the Transvaal. I hope we may look forward to getting from the new Secretary of State more information of a detailed and official character as to what is going on in these new territories than we have received in the past. I must say in sitting down that we meet here under rather unfavourable circumstances owing to the most regrettable absence of the Prime Minister. I do earnestly hope that he will soon be restored to health, for we have at present a headless Government. No one could have listened to the Chancellor of the Exchequer—and I say this without any disrespect to the right hon. Gentleman—without feeling that the House was being left rudderless, because the pointed and authoritative inquiries of the Leader of the Opposition had been left unanswered. I hope that will be remedied in a few days, and that we shall have some one here to speak with the voice of authority on all the vital matters which must come before us.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition has made an attack of considerable force—I might almost say ferocity—on His Majesty's Ministers on the occasion of the Address. I think he has shown a want of consideration for the position of His Majesty's Government. They have lost some of their greatest figures. In Lord Salisbury they have lost a great statesman, who has left his impress on the politics of Europe; they have lost the late Secretary for India, and three Chancellors of the Exchequer; they have lost that eminent statesman whom the Prime Minister writes to as "Dear Duke," but whom the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, with greater familiarity or affection, addresses as "My dear Devonshire." The forlorn remnant who now sit a little band of heroes on that Bench must feel what their position is. They know that, though like the lords of the Philistines they sit on the roof making sport, there is beneath them a blind Samson bowing himself between the pillars to bring down the whole structure upon their heads. I think, therefore, that more consideration should have been shown than the speech of the right hon. Gentleman displayed. I will not detain the House at this late hour on that, but will come to the points referred to in the King's Speech. One has already been touched upon, but if the hon. Gentleman who drew attention to it will permit me to say so, I think he missed the point of the case. An expedition has been sent into Thibet. The Gracious Speech tells us that it is sent with the concurrence of the Chinese Government, but not a word is said as to whether we have the concurrence of Thibet. That is the most important point of all. If there is concurrence of Thibet, then this is a mission; if not it is an invasion. I put the specific Question whether this is a mission or a military operation of invasion to any Gentleman on the Front Bench who feels competent to answer it, and I take the Attorney-General for choice. It is really an extremely important Question, because if this is a military operation—and in my belief it is—the clause in the 1858 Act for the government of India, forbidding any application of the Revenues of India for military operations beyond the Indian frontier without consent of both Houses of Parliament, has been disobeyed and the law broken. The right hon. Member for West Birmingham is not here, but I may remind the Chancellor of the Exchequer that in 1878 this very question was raised by the right hon. Gentleman, who gave notice of a Motion in these words—

> "That this House regrets that in the present instance the consent of the nation, through its representatives, was not obtained before war was declared, and that the Government withheld from publication the Papers."

That was the exactly similar case of the war in Afghanistan and I may remind the House that the Member for West Birmingham, Lord Hartington, and Lord James of Hereford all voted against the Government of the day on this very ground. We are therefore entitled to most specific information, firstly, as to the reasons for the mission or military operation, secondly, as to its quality, and thirdly, as to whether in addition to the assent of China the assent of Thibet has been obtained to this missionary or invading operation.

With regard to China and Japan I hope no Member of this House will say more than the very least he can on the subject. I shall say very little, but this I must say. We have had for centuries but one ally in the world—Portugal. We have now taken another in Japan. Japan is the second country in the world which in a treaty we call an ally. Let the House and His Majesty's Government remember that when you have given that name by treaty to a State, and if that State should come to extremity, it is impossible to abandon them. I shall say no more on that subject except that up to this moment, and at this moment, it is this country that holds the balance. In any naval war coal is the determining factor, and we hold the coal. My hope and trust, and I would add my belief, is that His Majesty's Government have made their position and intentions clear in this matter to those who are concerned—absolutely clear, though in terms no doubt of the utmost courtesy. I do not believe they have failed to do so. If they have their responsibility would be great indeed. Let me remind the House what happened after the Russo-Turkish War of 1878, which bears in a most important degree on the situation at this moment. Lord Beaconsfield, speaking in July, 1878, after he had returned from the Congress at Berlin, used these words—

> "One of the results of my attending the Congress at Berlin has been to prove, what I have always suspected to be the absolute fact, that neither the Crimean War, nor this horrible devastating war which has just terminated, would have taken place if England had spoken with the necessary firmness."

The Question I put to myself and to Ministers is: "Has England spoken with the necessary firmness in this case, and is she now speaking with the necessary firmness?" If not the most serious consequences may ensue. I pass now to the most important Report on the proposed new supplementary body to the Defence Committee. It is dated 11th January but it is not yet in our hands, and I must say I feel some surprise to find no mention of it in the Gracious Speech from the Throne, except a casual and incidental reference to it, as if it had something to do with the question of economy. This most important subject lies at the root of the whole thing, at the root of our conduct in regard to this very Russo-Japanese War, at the root of our conduct in Thibet, for the Defence Committee is the very body to which we must look for guidance and we should take the advice of such a body before embarking on the very first steps in these matters. The subject is so extremely important that I do trust the greatest attention will be given to it by the Government. It is my belief that the new body, which, as I have said, is intended to be a supplementary body to the Committee of Defence, is entirely mis-conceived; that its constitution is wholly wrong, and that it will occupy a position which will render it nothing but a fifth wheel in the coach. It is proposed to make a new department, but the gentlemen who recommend it seem never to have had before their minds the official heirarchy or the necessity of finding a place in that hierarchy for the suggested new department. Who is to be at the head of it? The suggestion is that the head of it should be the Prime Minister, an official unknown to the English law but who usually is, and always ought to be, First Lord of the Treasury. When that is so is this new department to be under the Treasury; when it is not so, when, as recently, the Prime Minister is Lord Privy Seal, then under whom is the department, as a department, to be? To this some answer is required. The constitution of the proposed nucleus of a department is also to my mind fatally defective. The object is that it is to be permanent, but this body has no permanency about it. The secretary is to be appointed for five years, and the nucleus is to be composed of six or seven gentlemen of inferior rank, naval and military, to be appointed for only two years. Therefore, I do seriously say to the Government that there is a necessity for the reconsideration of the constitution of this body. I lay before the Government two points. First of all, you should have on such a body as this an archivist, someone corresponding to the Clerk of the Privy Council who keeps the book of the Council; and secondly, it is absolutely essential that you should have as a member of this body a man cognisant with international law, especially in sea matters. My suggestion has been that the archivist, clerk of council, or chancellor should be an international lawyer. My own belief is that no body to consider and co-ordinate our strategic and political problems can be satisfactory unless it be in the nature of a permanent Royal Commission, with a permanent clerk or archivist whose salaries should be charged on the Consolidated Fund in order to prevent their acts being discussed in this House, for that I would prevent.

The references to finance in the King's Speech are certainly not encouraging; to many they will be discouraging. The House will remember that when the late Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced his Budget last year I most earnestly warned him that his estimates were exaggerated, and I affirmed to him more than once my confidence that his estimates of revenue would not be reached. As we now know, they will not be reached. It seems to me quite certain, however, that the Government were under the belief that these estimates would not only be reached, but would be surpassed, for it is on that theory alone that I can understand their buying the two Chilian warships for £1,800,000. The House will recollect that I suggested in March last to the Government to buy these warships, but the First Lord of the Treasury then said that they would not buy them because the vessels were not suited to our requirements. I cannot reconcile their former statement and their present purchase. My own belief is that they are and were always better ships than we had ourselves, and that it was a very good step on the part of the Government to make the purchase. But they could not have done so unless they believed that they were going to have a surplus to enable them to accomplish it. The Government could not treat these £1,800,000 as a portion of the sum to be spent on their naval programme and spread over several years; the money being actually expended must, I conceive, be treated as a portion of the expenditure of the year. If that be so, and if my rough estimates of the probable financial results of the year ending 31st March next, are at all near the truth, I can only foresee a deficit of £4,000,000 or £5,000,000 which is rather an alarming outlook.

Then as to the £10,000,000 of the Transvaal loan guaranteed by the great mineowners, we are now told that this is not an opportune time to issue the loan. But the loan is guaranteed; and it is the guarantors who have to see how and in what manner they will provide this money. They have guaranteed it to us, and we have a right to call upon them to fulfil their guarantee. I am the first to admit that the moment is not favourable for the issue of any loan—neither this loan, nor the Irish loan, nor anything else. Nobody who studies the finances of the country can be without great apprehension for the future, were it only for the fact that Consols during the reign of this Government have fallen 27 per cent. Our finances are in a very uncertain, dangerous, and unstable condition, and it is very uncertain to look forward to a time which will be opportune for the issue of this £10,000,000 loan, or any loan at all. I see no such opportune moment in any prospect of the near future.

I wish to address a few remarks to the so-called fiscal question, which in reality is not a fiscal question at all, but a tariff question. Now I speak for nobody but myself, but I will say, and I think there are some who will agree with me, that if the road of taxing food is to be entered upon, I will not follow in that road whoever may lead. That however is not the road the Government are taking; that is not the policy of the Government as explained by the only man competent to explain it, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer has too modestly said. As to retaliation, I think that the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition was a little unfair in his description of the retaliation policy of the First Lord of the Treasury, whose absence I deeply deplore, and the cause of it. The policy of the Government, and of the First Lord of the Treasury, as regards retaliation is the most strictly limited policy ever presented to the world as a policy. Its central point is the exclusion of the taxation of food or raw material. It excludes also the creation of a high and a low tariff, although that is the only means I can see by which tariff retaliation can be effectually carried out. It is, furthermore, not to include a general tariff war, nor is any retaliation to be carried out without the assent of Parliament. I had the honour of elucidating this point by a letter to the Prime Minister who said he did not contemplate any change in the law, which implies that no new tax would be imposed without Parliamentary consent. Retaliation is therefore limited in an extraordinary, and to me in a most satisfactory degree, and I, for my part, am prepared to give the fullest and most favourable consideration to any proposal of retaliation limited in that manner. But it is impossible to forget that since the declaration of the Prime Minister at Sheffield, which I, for one, fully and completely accept, there have been other voices besides his. The Lord Privy Seal, the Postmaster General, and the President of the Council are convinced Free Traders; they are more than free fooders, they are Free Traders; but the Minister for Agriculture, the President of the Local Government Board, and what is more, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, are very different and have openly avowed their full sympathy with the food taxers. In fact the Government has been speaking with two voices—some members of it with one, some with another—and the Prime Minister occasionally with both. Therefore it is absolutely necessary, for those who, like myself, are convinced that it would be ruinous for this country to tax food, to have some clear and unambiguous enunciation of the policy of the Government. When we have the great advantage of the presence here of the First Lord of the Treasury, I trust that he will give us complete satisfaction on this point. We intend to support the Prime Minister as against the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, and we feel confident that he will stick to the guns that he trained upon the enemy in his great speech at Sheffield.

Now I have alluded to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I feel great interest in the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I congratulate him on attaining so great a position as he now enjoys. The Chancellor of the Exchequer also feels a great interest in me. He has most kindly and thoughtfully written a letter to one of my constituents in which he stated that nobody who knew me would attach the slightest importance to anything I said. While the Chancellor of the Exchequer was making that magnificent oration which so stirred the House to-night, I wished and longed that I could have the same feeling towards him that he has towards me, and that I need not pay any attention to him. But that is impossible. For, after all, he is Chancellor of the Exchequer. There is no doubt about that; hard as it may be to believe, it is the fact, and doubtless, among all the young Catos that have ever sat on that Bench and risen to speak, he gives a greater promise of developing in later days the effect produced by his right hon. friend, or relative, in his unparalleled efforts and stupendous successes at Newcastle, at Leeds, at Cardiff, and greatest of all in the Guildhall of London. There is, however, even in him, a certain want of definiteness as to the view of the Government on this question, and I may observe here that the First Lord of the Treasury has very largely added to the doubts some of us feel as to the attitude of the Government by what he said at Bristol so late as 14th November. He said there—

> "A new charge is now brought against us, namely, that the members of the Government, who are agreed on the immediate practical issue, are not agreed as to the desirability or practicability of further developments. This is no doubt a fact."

Thus there are not only two voices, there is admitted undoubted disagreement in the Government itself; wherefore it is most desirable, and indeed absolutely necessary, that some plain, definite, unambiguous statement of the policy of the Government should be made. Having that in view, it is in my opinion scarcely decent to initiate a debate in the most regrettable absence of the First Lord of the Treasury, who, it is true, is the only man competent to give us authoritatively the last declaration of the policy of the Government. It seems to me that it is impossible that the debate could be conducted adequately in his absence; I go farther, I consider it is absolutely improper that an Amendment to the Address should be moved from the Front Opposition Bench during his absence. Therefore I would appeal to right hon. Gentlemen opposite to curb their impatience, and to appeal to the Government to grant what I feel sure the Government would accord, a special day for the discussion of a special Resolution raising the whole tariff question. In my opinion, that is the proper course to be taken, and it would be calculated to draw forth from the Government the declaration which we all desire. That some such declaration is necessary I think must be apparent to the House and the whole country. I myself follow and adhere to the declaration which the Prime Minister made at Sheffield, but we who have been somewhat disturbed by the various utterances that have since been made, including his own, feel that some further declaration is now necessary, and we hope and believe that, as at Sheffield so now, the Prime Minister will declare himself in accord with those of us who are determined to oppose to the last and to the very utmost any attempt to tax the food of the people.

LORD HUGH CECIL (Greenwich): I wish to intervene for a very few minutes in the debate. I do not desire to talk lightly on what may be a very serious matter to a great many people inside and outside the House. I concur with my hon. friend in thinking that this matter would have been raised more conveniently by a special Resolution; but when the debate does come on I think the House is entitled, and especially the Members of the Ministerial Party, to have a declaration from the Government on their fiscal policy more definite than anything which has yet been given. It is no mere academic question, and should not be treated as such, either in this House or in the country. It is in fact being made, whether with the approval of the Prime Minister or not I do not know, a test of Party loyalty and membership of the Party. Months ago I was told, long before the Duke of Devonshire's letter in connection with the Lewisham election, that a tariff reform candidate would be run against me at Greenwich. Many other Members had a similar experience. A more striking, a more surprising, a more scandalous thing has recently taken place, a member of the Government, the President of the Local Government Board, who sits on the Government Front Bench in virtue of Free Trade votes, using, or, as I should say, abusing his position, went down and supported the candidature of a gentleman who was standing in opposition to a Conservative Member of the House. The justification alleged for this is that there is a policy before the country which every loyal Conservative is bound to accept. Then we ought to know with the utmost precision what that policy is. There is a story of a 17th century persecution which is familiar to many Members, according to which King Charles I. propounded a certain oath requiring people to accept the government of the Church of England as laid down by Archbishops, Bishops, Archdeacons, et cetera, and those subjected to this oath very reasonably complained that they did not know what the phrase et cetera covered. But the lot of people in those days was easy compared with that of members of the Conservative Party now, because they had a great number of details of the ecclesiastical establishment, whereas we have almost nothing except the et cetera. We are being told in great urgency that the policy of the Government is a policy of fiscal-reform. What does "fiscal reform" cover? The Prime Minister directed us to ask ourselves whether we were in favour of fiscal reform. He might as well ask whether one is in favour of taking medicine. So much depends on what the medicine is. The Chancellor of the Exchequer seemed to indicate that all that was meant was an admission that the commercial and industrial position of this country was not in its essence unreformable. Of course anyone can point out defects. I admit to the full that high foreign tariffs are a great evil; but in admitting that one does not necessarily admit that anything which calls itself a remedy is to be adopted. It is not wicked to be a protectionist and not wicked to be a free-trader, but it seems to be wicked, because it is exceedingly cruel, to propound to the country and the members of a Party a policy the limits of which no one knows. If we are to have a standard of orthodoxy in the Conservative and Unionist Party, and if Members are to be driven out who cannot accept that standard, then that standard should be stated with the utmost clearness and precision. When I am asked whether I am in favour of the policy of retaliation, I am obliged to make a very long speech in reply, explaining in what points I agree, and in what points I differ. It is exceedingly cruel to propound to the country, and to members of the Party, a policy the limits of which no one knows.

There are two points which I wish to see cleared up. First of all whether, in the view of the Government, it is premature to propose the taxation of food. What is the meaning of the word "premature?" Does it mean that it would be mature in a year, or three years, or at any time to which politicians need have no regard — say ten years? Does the House understand that the Government are pledged not to put a tax on food any time in these ten years? One still more important element in the policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham is a duty averaging 10 per cent. on manufactured goods. Does the Government contemplate at any time supporting such a proposal as that? If I followed the Prime Minister's speech at Sheffield, I understand that my right hon. friend rejected that policy. But it is clearly a point that should be settled, for either the Government are in favour of it or they are against it. This particular policy involves the whole distinction between Protection and Free Trade. Surely when there is a violent feeling excited in the country, when Members are threatened with exclusion from Parliament, the House ought to be told whether this general duty of 10 per cent. is what they are required to assent to or not. The matter has got to a point at which dexterity becomes unfairness, and a clear and straightforward statement ought to be made, and I am quite certain, whatever may be the case with one or two Members, that a great many votes in the House will depend on the sort of declaration the Government will make.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): I understand that the Government have no objection to adjourning earlier to-night than usual. I beg, therefore, to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. John Redmond)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS reported, That, in accordance with Standing Order 79, he had conferred with the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, for the purpose of determining in which House of Parliament the respective Private Bills should be first considered, and they had determined that the Bills contained in the following List should originate in the House of Lords, viz.:—

Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway.

Appleby Corporation Gas.

Barnard Castle Gas.

Barrow-in-Furness Corporation.

Barry Railway (Extension of Time, &c.).

Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).

Belfast and North East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas.

Belfast Corporation (Tramways).

Bexhill Corporation.

Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways).

Bridlington Corporation.

Bristol Corporation.

Bristol Tramways (Extensions).

Buxton Urban District Council.

Cambrian Railways.

Cardiff Railway.

Chesterfield Corporation Tramways and Improvements.

Chesterfield Gas and Water Board.

Coulsdon Tramways.

Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power.

Derwent Valley Water Board.

Ebbw Vale Urban District Water.

Edwardes Square Protection.

Elysée Palace Hotel Company.

Filey Improvement.

Gosport Water.

Great Western Railway.

Great Yarmouth Corporation.

Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas.

Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad.

Holywood Tramways.

Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment).

Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust (Substituted Bill).

Ilford Urban District Council.

Ipswich Dock Commission.

Isle of Thanet Light Railways.

King's College Hospital.

Lancashire Electric Power.

Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway.

Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power.

Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company.

Liverpool and Wigan Churches.

Llanelly Harbour.

London, Chatham, and Dover Railway.

Maidenhead Bridge.

Manchester Corporation (General Powers).

Manchester Corporation Tramways.

Manchester Ship Canal.

Manchester Ship Canal (Finance).

Matlock and District Gas.

Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.

Metropolitan District Railway.

Metropolitan Railway.

Mid Cheshire Tramways.

Milwr and District Mines Drainage.

Minehead Urban District Council Water.

Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.

Newcastle and Gateshead Water.

New River Company.

New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company.

North Wales Electric Power.

Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council.

Oakengates, Dawley, and District Joint Water Board.

Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway.

Preston and Blackburn Tramways.

Preston and Lytham Tramways and Tramroad.

Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways.

Preston Corporation Water.

Saint Bartholomew's Hospital.

Saint Mary Woolnoth.

Shipley Urban District Council.

Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time).

South Staffordshire Mines Drainage.

Stretford Urban District Council.

Ticehurst and District Water and Gas.

Trafford Park Dock and Railway.

Tynemouth Corporation.

Tynemouth Gas.

Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.

Ulster Electric Power.

Victoria University of Manchester.

Victoria University of Yorkshire.

Weaver Navigation (Additional (Finance).

Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance).

West Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment).

West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time).

Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier.

West Riding Tramways.

Withnell Gas.

York Town and Blackwater Gas.

Adjourned at a quarter after Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 3rd February, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS [LORDS].

Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following cases, viz.:—

Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway.
Appleby Corporation Gas.
Barnard Castle Gas.
Barrow-in-Furness Corporation.
Barry Railway (Extension of Time, etc.).
Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).
Belfast and North East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas.
Belfast Corporation (Tramways).
Bexhill Corporation.
Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways).
Bridlington Corporation.
Bristol Corporation.
Buxton Urban District Council.
Cambrian Railways.
Cardiff Railway.
Chesterfield Corporation Tramways and Improvements.
Chesterfield Gas and Water Board.
Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power.
Derwent Valley Water Board.
East Argentine Railway.
Ebbw Vale Urban District Water.
Edwardes Square Protection.
Elysée Palace Hotel Company.
Filey Improvement.
Gosport Water.
Great Western Railway.
Great Yarmouth Corporation.
Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas.
Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad.
Holywood Tramways.
Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment).
Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust (Substituted Bill).
Ipswich Dock Commission.
Isle of Thanet Light Railways.
King's College Hospital.
Lancashire Electric Power.
Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway.
Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power.
Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company.
Liverpool and Wigan Churches.
Llanelly Harbour.
London, Chatham, and Dover Railway.
Maidenhead Bridge.
Manchester Corporation (General Powers).
Manchester Corporation Tramways.
Manchester Ship Canal.
Manchester Ship Canal (Finance).
Matlock and District Gas.
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.
Metropolitan District Railway.
Metropolitan Railway.
Milwr and District Mines Drainage.
Minehead Urban District Council Water.
Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway.
Newcastle and Gateshead Water.
Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.
New River Company.
New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company.
Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council.
Oakengates, Dawley and District Joint Water Board.
Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway.
Preston and Blackburn Tramways.
Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways.
Preston Corporation Water.
Saint Bartholomew's Hospital.
Saint Mary Woolnoth.
Shipley Urban District Council.
Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time).
South Staffordshire Mines Drainage.
Stretford Urban District Council.
Ticehurst and District Water and Gas.

Tynemouth Corporation.
Tynemouth Gas.
Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.
Ulster Electric Power.
Victoria University of Manchester.
Victoria University of Yorkshire.
Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance).
Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance).
West Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment).
West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time).
Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier.
West Riding Tramways.
Withnell Gas.
York Town and Blackwater Gas.

And they have certified that the Standing Orders have not been complied with in the following cases, viz.:—

Coulsdon Tramways.
North Wales Electric Power.
Trafford Park Dock and Railway.

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, originating in the Lords, the Standing Orders have not yet been complied with, viz.:—

Coulsdon Tramways [Lords].
North Wales Electric Power [Lords].
Trafford Park Dock and Railway [Lords].

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz.:—

Rotherham Corporation.

London County Council (Tramways and Improvements).

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

PETITIONS.

BEERHOUSES.

Petition from Newport, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

CHARYULU, BANDARU APPALA.

Petition of Bandaru Appala Charyulu, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

GOUNDEN, MUTHIA.

Petition of Muthia Gounden, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).

Petitions against alteration of Law; from Cambuslang; Beith; Walbottle; Westerhope; Haltwistle; Liverpool; Rastrick; Highworth; Cheltenham; Manchester; Forest Hill; Greenhead; Greenock; Tideswell; Matlock; Goose Green; Horton; Port Glasgow; Samlet; Prudhoe; Allenheads; Boston; Dawley; Bedlington; Pemberton; Henshaw; Pelton Fell; Birtley; Strensall; Paisley (two); Dunston; Haxby; North Lonsdale; Swindon; Alston Cross; Nottingham; Kirkby; Alloa; Melton Mowbray; Chichester; Liverpool; Glasgow; Frosterley; Wolsingham; Garston; Northampton; West Auckland; Ouston; Chopwell; Clara Vale Tent; Washington; Parkstone; Verwood; High Bickington; West Woodburn; Heatherlands; Broomhill; Kennington; Alston; Beeston; South Lambeth; Oldham; Hoxton; Aston Park; Little Hulton; Seaton Burn; Dudley; Scotswood; Lower Broughton; Salford; Blyth (two); Collingbourne; Andrew Bryson and another; Northumberland; Barrington; Backworth; Fittleton; Southsea (two); Portsmouth (two); Buckland; Ammanford; Boston; Amble; Market Lavington; Wishaw; Hackworth; New Hirst; New Hartley; Altarnum; Davidstow; Trevadlock; Gunnislake; Egloskerry; Callington; Lezant; Leghill; Dennington; Gravesend; Scarborough (two); Luton; Apsley Guise; Warrington; Eston; Guisbro'; William Woolfries and another; Hawick; Shillingstone; Walford; Aston; Loughborough; Bristol; Portesham; Sunderland; Bridport; Brixham; Gloucester; Juniper Green; Penryn; Widdrington; Bolton (eight); Middlesbrough; Chelston; Mitchell; St. Stephens; Padstow; Withill; Grampound Road; St. Austell; St. Dennis; Pendleton; Kennington; Jordanhill; Alloa; Tillicoultry; Islington; South Molton; Greetland; Elland; Sandbach; Salford Dock; Salford (two); Exmouth; Axminster; Hove Edge; Stourbridge; Brighouse; Malvern; Whiteinch; Halifax; Marnhull; Alnwick; Warrington; Chardstock; Leominster; St. Blazey; Sauchie; Halton-le-Gate; Dublin; Llanidan; Partick; Dreghorn; Stevenston; Devonport; London Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance (two); Newcastle (four); Coleorton; Wansbeck; West Hartlepool (two); Cwmbran; Bournemouth (two); Winton; Christchurch; Muirkirk; Troon (two); Dalmellington; Glenbuck; Ayr; Auchinleck; Lugar (two); Girvan; Edinburgh (three); Risca; H. W. Garbutt and another; Shiney Row; Birkenhead (three); Alva; Rishton; Kelty; Markinch; Buckhaven; South Wingfield; Peak Dale; Bugsworth; Haggs; Grangemouth; Larbert; Laurieston; Lennoxtown; Carron; Blackbraes; Bonnybridge; Kilsyth; Milngarvie; Ivybridge; Clapham Park; Putney; Bradford (three); Salford; Hetton-le-Hole; New Lambton; Midhurst; Dundee (two); Lochee; Stockport; Cockermouth; Dittisham; Barnard Castle; Stanhope; New Hatcham; Southgate; Leytonstone; Riddings; Jesmond; Widnes; Inverness; Bolton-on-Dearne; Otley; Dukinfield; Old Hetton; Lancaster; Whitley Bay; Hucknall Torkard; Penistone; Birdwell; Crane Moor; Maryport; Stalybridge; Trowbridge; Bradford-on-Avon; Westbury; Salford; Ryhope; Chard; Cambois; Townhill; Cardenden; Cefn-canol; Meifod; Llanrhaiadr; Hernant; Llanfair Caereinion (two); Llandycwm; Carmel; Siloh; Rehoboth; Maengwynedd; Llanfyllin; Bridlington; Paul; Charlesworth; Glossop; Fairfield; Leicester; Great Meols; West Kirby; Wallasey; Seacombe; Ellesmere Port; Middlewich (two); Northwich (three); Barnton; Whitegate; Frodsham; Cullompton; Christow; Bristol; Oldham; Salisbury; Crewe; Perranwell; Goonhavern; Truro; South Petherton; Bampton and Huntsham; Dumfries (two); Annan; Sanquhar; Topsham; Whalley Range; Fence Houses; Thornaby on Tees; Withington; Dearham; Gotham; Mid Cheshire; Stirling; and Durham; to lie upon the Table.

NADAN, SIVASULRAMANIA.

Petition of Sivasulramania Nadan, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

RAMCHANDA, GANESH.

Petition from Ganesh Ramchanda, for inquiry into his case; to lie upon the Table.

RATING OF GROUND RENTS AND VALUES.

Petition from St. Pancras, for legislation; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY.

Petitions for prohibition; from Bawtry; Taunton; Glastonbury; and Yeovil; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Copy presented, of Further Correspondence relating to the Affairs of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

BARBADOS.

Copy presented, of Prison Rule relating to the Vaccination of Prisoners [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

COUNTY COURTS, ENGLAND (FEES).

Copy presented, of Treasury Order, dated 30th December, 1903, regulating Court Fees in County Courts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

Paper laid upon the Table by the Clerk of the House:—

INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES (COUNTY OF MONTGOMERY).

Further Return, relative thereto [ordered 14th February, 1900; Mr. Grant Lawson]; to be printed. [No. 19.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).

Copy ordered, "of Account of the Receipts and Payments of the Accountant General of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland, in respect of the Funds of Suitors in the said Court, including therein Funds to the credit of Lunacy Accounts, in the year to the 30th day of September, 1903; together with a Statement of Liabilities and Assets, and particulars of Securities in Court, on the 30th day of September, 1903."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1902-3.

Copy ordered, "of Accounts of the Civil Contingencies Fund, 1902–3, showing (1) the Receipts and Payments in connection with the Fund in the year ended the 31st day of March, 1903; (2) the distribution of the Capital of the Fund at the commencement and close of the year, together with Copy of Correspondence with the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).

Copy ordered, "of the Report of the Directors of the National Gallery for the year 1903, with Appendices."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

PARLIAMENTARY CONSTITUENCIES (ELECTORS, &c.) (UNITED KINGDOM).

Address for "Return showing, with regard to each Parliamentary Constituency in the United Kingdom, the total number and, as far as possible, the number in each class of Electors on the register now in force; and also showing the Population and Inhabited Houses in each Constituency (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 34, of Session 1903)."—(Sir Charles Dilke.)

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.

Copy ordered, "of Accounts relating to Trade and Navigation of the United Kingdom for each month during the year 1904."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.)

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

Return ordered, "of the number of Aliens that arrived from the Continent at Ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1904."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Expenses of Military Operations beyond the Thibet Frontier.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): To ask the Secretary of State for India has any portion of the revenues of India been applied, during the past or the present year, to defray the expenses of any military operation carried on beyond the external frontiers of His Majesty's Indian possessions by His Majesty's forces charged upon such revenues; if so, what is roughly the amount of such revenues so applied; and what is the number of His Majesty's forces now employed beyond those external frontiers in Thibet.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) No portion of the revenues of India has been applied during the past or present year to the expenses of military operations beyond the external frontiers of His Majesty's Indian possessions. The numbers of the escort with the political mission to Thibet, and of the troops required to keep open communications, is about 3,000 men.

Distress in Ireland—Distribution of Seed Potatoes.

MR. JAMES O'KELLY (Roscommon, N.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in view of the failure of the crops, and the consequent distress in the West of Ireland, he will bring in a Bill enabling district councils to purchase and distribute seed potatoes among the small tenant farmers.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) It is unfortunately true that there has been a shortage in the yield of the crops in parts of Ireland due to the unfavourable climatic conditions that prevailed in the latter months of the past season, but it is not apprehended that the shortage is such as to lead to the occurrence of anything approaching exceptional distress. Although the potato crop was rather below the average it was by no means a failure, and I am advised by the Local Government Board that there are not sufficient grounds for introducing legislation with the object mentioned.

Compulsory Purchase in West of Ireland.

MR. JAMES O'KELLY: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in view of the terms demanded by landlords in the West of Ireland for the sale of their estates, and their effect on the resettlement of the people on the land in Connaught, he will bring in a Bill conferring compulsory powers of purchase on the Congested District Board and on the Estates Commissioners.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The same question is raised in the Amendment to the Address standing in the name of the hon. Member for North Leitrim. I would prefer to postpone my reply until that Amendment is reached.

Chinese Labour in South Africa.

MR. BROADHURST (Leicester): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he can inform the House as to the progress of the efforts made to import Chinese workmen into the Transvaal Colony; whether the Government have been consulted in the matter; and, if so, what decision, if any, the Government have come to regarding these proposals of the mine-owners.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I must refer the hon. Member to the Papers which are being published to-day.

Lord Curzon and the Governor-General of Shiraz.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: To ask the First Lord of the Treasury can any information be given respecting the recent incident at Bushire which induced Lord Curzon to leave that port without exchanging visits with the Persian Prince, Governor-General of Shiraz, who had arrived at Bushire to welcome him; had the form of ceremonial been arranged at Teheran between His Majesty's Minister and the Persian Government, and did Lord Curzon subsequently insist on such ceremonial being modified; has the course adopted by Lord Curzon been approved by His Majesty's Government; and can Papers be laid containing the Correspondence on the subject interchanged with the Persian Government as well as with Lord Curzon and His Majesty's Minister in Persia.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) The form of ceremonial originally arranged between the Persian Government and His Majesty's Minister at Teheran was subsequently modified by the former in certain particulars before the Viceroy's arrival at Bushire. The desire and intention expressed by His Majesty the Shah of showing courtesy and hospitality to the Viceroy was unhappily frustrated owing to the arrangements locally made. His Majesty's Government share the regret of the Persian Government at an untoward incident which is now closed, and with regard to which it is therefore undesirable and unnecessary to lay any Papers.

NEW MEMBER SWORN.

John Johnson, esquire, for the Borough of Gateshead.

BALLOT FOR BILLS AND MOTIONS.

Ordered, That no Bills, other than Government Bills, be introduced in anticipation of the ballot, and that all Members who desire to ballot, whether for Bills, or Motions for Tuesday, 9th February, and Tuesday, 16th February, and Wednesday, 10th February, and Wednesday, 17th February, do hand in their names at the Table during the sitting of the House on the first or second day of the session, and that a copy of such Notices be handed in, at the latest, during the sitting of the House on the third day of the session. That the ballot for the precedence of the said Bills and Motions be taken on the third day on which the House sits, at a convenient time and place, to be appointed by Mr. Speaker, and that the presentation of Bills on the fourth sitting day be taken as soon after Twelve o'clock as Mr. Speaker may deem convenient.—(Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas.)

CITY OF LONDON WRIT.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [2nd February], "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a New Writ for the electing of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the City of London, in the room of the hon. Alban George Henry Gibbs, who, since his election for the said City, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.) said he had placed on the Paper notice of an Amendment which was in accordance with precedent, its object being to secure the appointment of a Select Committee of seven Members to consider whether Messrs. Vicary and Alban Gibbs were disqualified from sitting or voting as Members of the House under the Statute 22 Geo. 3, cap. 45. This Amendment was similar to the one moved in 1869 in the case of Sir Sydney Waterlow, who had given notice to the Speaker that he was a contractor to the Government. On that occasion the House did not accept the mere allegation of his contractorship as a matter about which there was no dispute, but it exercised its own discretion in the matter. Now he was making no imputation whatever on the Messrs. Gibbs; they were doing, no doubt, what they thought was right and proper. But the statute referred to in his Amendment was very specific. It said that no person, directly or indirectly, undertaking or enjoying the whole or any part of any contract made with the Commissioners of the Treasury, or generally on account of the public service, was disqualified from being elected to Parliament all such time he held such contract or any share thereof or received any benefit or emoluments arising therefrom. What had occurred in this case was that Messrs. Gibbs acted as brokers on behalf of the Chilian Government and executed a contract for the sale of two warships to the British Government. It was a very great question whether such a proceeding made them contractors under the provision he had quoted. There was no more difficult question to decide in law than the one affecting the relations of principal and agents. Even Messrs. Gibbs had considerable doubt as to their actual position, and Mr. Vicary Gibbs in one of his speeches said he did not know whether he was a contractor or not. He (Mr. MacNeill) had written a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer warning him that in accepting the resignation of Mr. Gibbs he would, under the circumstances, be exceeding his discretion in the matter of the Stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds. He could not trace a single instance in which a Member of the House of Commons, having entered into a contract with a Government Department, had been allowed to resign without the House exercising its own jurisdiction to find out whether he was a contractor or not. It was not enough for a man to write to Mr. Speaker saying "I am a contractor"; the question was one of the law and not of fact; it was an inference to be drawn from a long series of Acts. This was not a mere dilettante matter of Parliamentary formality, it was a question of the rights of the House, because it was necessary that transactions of a pecuniary nature between the Government and private Members should be brought under the cognisance of the House. He submitted it was absolutely necessary for the protection of the rights of Parliament that the House should itself decide whether or not Messrs. Gibbs were in the position of contractors. He begged to move.

Amendment proposed—

"To leave out from the word 'That,' to the end of the Question, and add the words 'a Select Committee of seven Members be appointed to consider whether Mr. Vicary Gibbs and Mr. Alban Gibbs are disqualified from sitting or voting as Members of this House under the Statute 22 Geo. 3, c. 45, and to report their opinion thereon.'"—(Mr. Swift MacNeill.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's) said the hon. Member who had raised this question had told them that the House ought to decide whether or not these gentlemen were contractors; but he had to maintain that the precedents cited by the hon. Member—those of Sir Sydney Waterlow and Baron Rothschild—were not analogous to the present case. The question that arose in the case of Baron Rothschild was whether he was qualified to retain his seat in the House because he had contracted for a Government loan, and whether such a proceeding amounted to a contract within the meaning of the Act. The Committee to whom the question was referred decided that he was not a contractor within the meaning of the Act, and that he was therefore qualified to retain his seat, and that decision was afterwards made clear by statute. In the case of Sir Sydney Waterlow there was a petition against his election in 1868 on the ground that he held a Government contract, but the petition was withdrawn, and the hon. Member sat during an autumn session. In the following year, however, the question was again raised, a Committee was appointed, and they reported that Sir Sydney Waterlow was disqualified, and that his seat was vacant. In both those cases there was a doubt whether any disqualification had occurred, and the Members, by retaining their seats, must be held to have disputed their disqualification. In other words, they were fighting against proposed disqualification, and desired to continue their membership of the House. That fact distinguished those cases from the present ones. In the present case two gentlemen, who were lately Members of the House, had admitted to the Speaker that they had accepted a contract, and that they were disqualified from sitting in the House, and in the usual course, a Motion had been made for the issue of new Writs to fill the vacancies caused by the forfeiture of their seats. They were anxious to resume the places which they had forfeited by accepting the contract. As had been stated by the hon. Member for South Donegal, there was no question of imputation against them; they had acted in perfect good faith and in a manner which reflected very great credit upon them. It must be remembered, too, that very grave questions were coming before Parliament, and it was most undesirable that at this juncture two important constituencies should be unrepresented. If a Committee were appointed, it might sit for a considerable time, and meanwhile the seats would remain vacant. No doubt the House always took great interest in questions affecting its honour and prerogatives, but in this case there could be no doubt that the action of the hon. Gentleman was perfectly bonâ fide and was based on the advice of the most distinguished counsel. He ventured to think in the circumstances that the Writs should issue, and that the House should not leave two important constituencies like the City of London and Mid Hertfordshire unrepresented at a time of very great importance like the present.

Question put, and agreed to.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Ordered, That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the City of London, in the room of the hon. Alban George Henry Gibbs, who, since his election for the said City, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service.

COUNTY OF HERTFORD (MID OR ST. ALBANS DIVISION) (WRIT).

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [2nd February], "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the County of Hertford (Mid or St. Albans Division) in the room of the hon. Vicary Gibbs, who, since his election for the said County, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

Question again proposed.

Question put, and agreed to.

Ordered, That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Member to serve in this present Parliament for the County of Hertford (Mid or St. Albans Division) in the room of the hon. Vicary Gibbs, who, since his election for the said County, has undertaken a contract, with the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the public service.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

SECOND DAY'S DEBATE.

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Question [2nd February].

"That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,—

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Question again proposed.

*MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): I make no apology, Mr. Speaker, for intervening at the earliest possible moment to call the attention of Parliament to the Irish question, and to the well-nigh universal demand of the Irish people for a radical change in the system of government under which their country has been pauperised and depopulated in the past. I know that there are a great many people in this country, of all Parties, who quite naturally are anxious, if they can, to get rid of the Irish question even for a day, and I noticed with interest that in all the speeches made on the Address to the Throne yesterday not one solitary reference whatever was made by any speaker to Ireland. Now, I think that feeling is perfectly natural, but what does, I am bound to say, surprise me is that there seem to be serious statesmen on both sides of this House who seem to think it is possible to get rid of the Irish question. Greater delusion than this was never entertained. You cannot get rid of the Irish question. Nothing that you can do, either by the way of force on the one side or concession on the other, can relieve you from the necessary consequences of maintaining in Ireland a system of government opposed to the will of the governed. These consequences are chronic unrest and discontent in Ireland, and chronic disturbance here in the Imperial Parliament. The truth is, this problem is too vast, too far-reaching, and too urgent for it to be possible to cease even for a few short months to trouble the public mind in England, to intrude itself into the consideration of great English questions, and to haunt and disturb the serenity of the Imperial Parliament. At this moment all England is stirred by the fiscal question, and the British people are appealed to with passionate earnestness to save the Empire by conciliating the colonies. But every honest man must know that the conciliation of the colonies fades into insignificance compared with the importance of the conciliation of Ireland. We are told that there is no concession too great to be made for the purpose of buying the continued friendship of Canada and Australia. Why, Sir, for this purpose you are asked actually to uproot those great principles of fiscal policy which for fifty years you have all regarded as the very foundation of your greatness and prosperity, and you are told, at the same time and from the same quarter, to disregard altogether the hostility of Ireland, to make no sacrifice to win her friendship, though every man well knows that so long as Ireland's hostility to the Empire continues, so long all the talk about the unity of the Empire is mere clap-trap, and that Ireland contented, Ireland peaceful, Ireland friendly, would be of more value to the Empire than the possession of all the colonies put together. This question of discontent and disloyalty to the Empire in Ireland is one which I say you cannot get rid of for a single day. I noticed, with great interest, that quite recently the Duke of Devonshire solemnly declared that there was no room for two great questions like the fiscal question and the Irish question at the same time, and yet, within one week after that declaration, the Gateshead election took place, where, in spite of the votes of both English Parties, the issue in the end turned not upon protection or free trade, but upon Home Rule for Ireland, and was decided by the votes of Irish Home Rulers in the constituency.

Some men seem to think that because last year we obtained a valuable Act of Parliament remedying some of the evils of your past misgovernment, that therefore the Irish question would be heard of no more, that it was shelved. Such an idea argues an absolute ignorance of the very essence of this Irish question. No concession can weaken the force of our demand for self-government. On the contrary, every concession strengthens that demand and strengthens our arms, and every concession we have obtained, and every concession we may obtain will be used by us for the furtherance of the remainder of the contest for self-government. I read the other day a letter written by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Leeds, who is the chief Whip of the Liberal Party, to one of his constituents, in which he said—

> "So far as I am concerned I am a Home Ruler, but I have frequently said to my constituents that the Nationalist Party have accepted, at anyrate for the present, the alternative policy of the Conservative Party."

I read that statement with amazement. It disclosed to me a strange and, in the right hon. Gentleman, an utterly unaccountable inability to understand the real meaning of this Irish question. It was, as a matter of fact, an entire misrepresentation of our attitude. We accepted no alternative policy. We accepted the Land Act of last year just as we accepted the Land Act of 1881, just as we accepted the Local Government Act of 1898, just as we accepted every Act which has removed or mitigated any Irish grievance, and we would indeed be fools did we not do so. But to say we accepted any, or all, of these things as an alternative policy to Home Rule is absurd, and it is untrue, and this statement from a high official source like the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Leeds, the Chief Whip of the Liberal Party, makes it necessary, in my opinion, for us to define our position once more, if not for the benefit of those who are the Government to-day, then for the benefit of those who hope to be the Government to-morrow—and who, for all I know, may be hugging the comfortable delusion at this moment that they can obtain Irish support on an alternative policy. Now I repeat that for us there is no such thing as an alternative policy to Home Rule. If your Government in Ireland were as good as it is notoriously and admittedly bad, we would be still Home Rulers. Our position is that we assert we have the right to rule ourselves. We certainly have the capacity and the knowledge, and the intimate sympathy which you have not, but above all that we say we have the right. That right we will never surrender, and we say without the slightest hesitation that Ireland would prefer to be governed even badly by her own Parliament than to be governed well by the Parliament of any other nation in the world. But we are not governed well. Your Government in Ireland not only springs from usurpation and wrong, from violence and corruption—which is denounced and admitted to-day by all your greatest writers and historians—it is not only a Government which depends every hour of its existence upon a small minority in Ireland, and is every hour of its existence in direct opposition to the will of the majority of the governed, but your Government, on its merits, is a bad Government, a wasteful, extravagant, corrupt, and inefficient Government.

We have heard a great deal in recent years from some distinguished quarters about inefficiency. Well, the English Government of Ireland is the most inefficient Government in the whole world. It is wasteful in every Department, it is corrupt in every Department. Perhaps I ought to stop for one moment to explain the meaning of "corrupt." I do not at all mean corrupt in the vulgar sense of bribing by money to do disgraceful things, although such things have happened. What I mean is—I put it in this way—the only class in Ireland that supports the Government is the class of the placemen. For the minority in Ireland, for every happy child who is born as a member of the loyal minority in Ireland, there is a place of some sort or kind. I am a member of the Irish Bar, and it is not likely I would make any disgraceful accusation against the Irish Bar, but I venture to assert there is not a member of the Irish Bar who is a supporter of the English Government, and an opponent of Ireland, who is not pretty certain, if he has any brains at all, before long to get a place. I say that is corruption, and I say it is true to say to-day in that sense, as was said by Mr. Lecky of the English Government, that the whole unbribed intellect of Ireland was against you. And I say, in addition to being wasteful and corrupt, the Government is inefficient. Let me give an example of what I mean. To-day, admittedly, Ireland lags behind every nation in Western Europe in trade, commerce, agriculture, in technical skill, in science, and in art. Why ? Is it because the Irish race are less talented than the people of any other race in the world ? Anyone who knows anything of the history of the world, and especially anyone who knows anything of the history of the British Empire, will make no such assertion. No ; Ireland lags behind in the race of nations because there is no nation in which education has been so denied, neglected, and starved. There is not any test of a Government better than this test of education, and I say the Government, which for a century has denied, neglected, and starved education, is a Government which cannot justify its existence before the public opinion of the world. That is what you have done in Ireland. First of all you denied education altogether,and made it a penal offence. Then you established a system of education which to-day has no parallel in the whole history of the world, and that system you maintain down to this moment.

Let me first take the case of primary education. I leave on one side what may be regarded as matters of ancient history. I deal to-day with the system in force at this very moment. The system of primary education in Ireland to-day came into existence so far back as the year 1831. Lord Stanley, then the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant, who, I think, was Lord Grey, formed a Board of unpaid gentlemen called a National Education Board, and the whole primary education of the country was put into the hands of these gentlemen, and that Board exists down to this very day unchanged except in one small particular from the year 1831. That Board is absolutely unrepresentative. It is absolutely irresponsible. From an educational point of view, as I will show you it is admittedly incompetent, and through its whole history it is anti-national in its feelings. The Board consists, I think, of sixteen members unpaid, and a paid Resident Commissioner. There is no qualification for membership on this Board at all. The only one essential condition is that it shall be half Catholic and half Protestant. At first I think only one-third of the Board was Catholic and two-thirds Protestant. This Board is made up of most worthy and estimable country gentlemen, country squires, country landlords. Five of the members of the Board are learned Judges, whose presence on the Board I cannot for the life of me understand, and others of them are officials who have retired from other departments of service, and, so far as anyone has ever been able to find out, not a single one of these men is selected for any educational qualification whatever. I do not want to weary the House, and therefore I would refrain from reading the names, but if anybody calls in question the accuracy of my description, I will read the names. There is Mr. Edmund Dease, a respectable landlord, Mr. James Morell, Sir Henry Ballingham, another most estimable landlord, Chief Baron Pallas, Judge Shaw, and so on right through the list. No one will controvert my assertion that there is no qualification required, and therefore this Board is totally unrepresentative. I say in addition it is irresponsible. No one represents this Board in this House. No one has authority to speak for that Board in this House. No one has authority over that Board in Ireland. Neither the Chief Secretary, nor any department of Dublin Castle, has any authority over this Board. We have repeatedly had experience in this House of the Chief Secretary rising to answer questions about primary education, and he has always complained of the fact that, although he was the channel to convey information to this House, he had no authority over this Board, that the Board held its meetings in secret, and that when he applied for information they were perfectly entitled to deny the information if they chose. Was such an absurd system ever heard of as a Board of this character, responsible to no one in this House, nor to the Government in Ireland, or anyone else? The Board is anti-national and has been through its whole history. There is not amongst these Commissioners at this moment one single man who is in sympathy with the wishes and aspirations of the national feeling of the Irish people. Is it not ludicrous that a Board of this kind, charged with the duty of education of the little children of the Irish race, should not have one solitary representative of national feeling on its body. The natural result of that has been that the tendency of this Board all through has been to denationalise the little children of the Irish race. Irish history, Irish poetry, the Irish language, everything Irish has been banished from its schools. It was only the other day, after a bitter and vehement contest, that we were able to force this Board to allow the little Irish-speaking children coming out of Irish-speaking homes to be taught through the medium of the Irish language. I would like to quote a few words written by Mr. Starkie, the present Resident Commissioner, the paid servant of this Board, as to the merits of his employers. He says—

> "I fancy few practical educationists will deny that the National Board were guilty of a disastrous blunder in thrusting upon a Gaelic-speaking race a system of education produced after a foreign model, and utterly alien to their sympathies and antecedents. Such an attempt was unsound, both philosophically and practically. Neglecting the principles of continuity which pervades all human things, it disregarded the home training and associations of the children, and thus rending in twain the nascent intelligence, rendered all real development impossible. True education is a refining and developing of the whole intellectual life and character, and I think there can be little doubt that the Board were guilty of narrow pedantry in neglecting as worthless the whole previous life of the pupil, and the multitude of associations, imaginations, and sentiments that formed the content of his consciousness. The consequences of such a system are inevitable. To this unhappy blunder may be attributed the want of initiative, and independence and distaste of knowledge, which so hampers the industrial development of Ireland—qualities so alien to the quick sympathies and alert intelligence, which are the most salient characteristics of our race."

Thus, Sir, the administration of this Board has been, from an educational point of view, narrow and incompetent even on the authority of their own Resident Commissioner, and from an Irish point of view has been grossly anti-national. I do not care to go into the question further than to point out that whatever may be the case to-day, when this Board was established it was run from a religious point of view on bigoted and most dishonest lines. That can be proved by referring to the declaration of Archbishop Whateley, when he declared in so many words that the object of the Board was to proselytise the Catholic children of Ireland. He said—

> "The education supplied by the National Board is gradually undermining the vast fabric of the Irish Roman Catholic Church. I believe, as I said the other day, in mixed education (as carried out in the system of the National Education Board) we give up the only hope of weaning the Irish from the abuses of Popery. But I cannot venture openly to profess this opinion."

This quotation is taken from a diary of the Archbishop, which of course did not see the light for many days after it was written. Under the blessings of English rule you have primary education in the hands of a Board established in 1831, entirely unrepresentative, absolutely irresponsible, anti-Catholic in its inception, anti-national down to this moment, so incompetent that it is denounced and condemned by its own Resident Commissioner, and so incapable of reform that Archbishop Walsh resigned his position on that Board in absolute despair. No wonder that this system of education is to-day unanimously denounced by the people of Ireland, and no wonder that Ireland lags behind the nations of the world in all the essentials of prosperity and advancement. What is the remedy? The only possible remedy is Home Rule. This antiquated, irresponsible, unrepresentative, narrow-minded, bigoted, and incompetent Board must be swept into the dust bin. It would not be tolerated in England for twenty-four hours. What we want is a Department of Education responsible to the public opinion of Ireland. That is the only possible remedy, but it is not possible so long as Ireland is deprived of the right of self-government. To abolish the Board, as he had heard some people suggest, and to put their absolute power into the hands of a new ring of irresponsible officials in Dublin Castle, would be to alienate still more the confidence of the Irish people. We want a Department of Education responsible to the public opinion of Ireland, and this we cannot have until we have self-government. And so the disgraceful and ruinous tragedy of the neglect of Irish primary education goes on.

The same story is true of intermediate education. Many members of the Intermediate Education Board are eminent men, but none of them can be picked out as educational authorities or as qualified for the work upon which they are engaged. For twenty years the Intermediate Board had full control of intermediate education, and they carried on a system of cramming and payment by results to such an extent that they did irreparable injury to the education of the youth of the country. But at last the people cried shame upon them, and they had to admit their failure. With a touch of true Gilbertian humour, they resolved themselves into a Commission to inquire into the defects of their own work. Since then there has been some improvement, but so recently as the 1st of April last year the Chief Secretary declared that under the present system the money devoted to intermediate education was money thrown away.

> "Money," said he, "has been lavished in Intermediate Education in Ireland. . But how can such expenditure be turned to good account when Elementary Education is not levelled up to the necessary standard, when only 55 per cent. of the children attend the schools, and when continuation schools do not exist? Money devoted to Intermediate Education under such circumstances is money thrown away."

If that be the state of inefficiency of the Government of Ireland in primary and intermediate education, if that be the disgraceful story of the neglect and starvation of the education of Irish children in primary and intermediate schools, what is to be said about the question of Irish University education? The inefficiency of the Government in this vital matter, its dishonest evasion of an admitted duty, its unwillingness or incapacity, or both, to remove an admitted grievance which poisons the whole life of Ireland, and which condemns Ireland to hopeless failure in the struggle with the nations of the world for existence—I say the treatment of this question by the Government, taken alone, is sufficient to utterly and completely damn and condemn their whole system of the government of the country. For fifty years this grievance has been admitted, and every attempt made to deal with it has failed for the same reason that has destroyed every effort of this House to deal with Irish grievances, namely, because it was an effort made by men who did not understand the requirements of Ireland, and who would not listen to the advice of the Irish people. You establish first a Queen's University, Queen's Colleges, in Ireland. They were denounced by O'Connell in the name of the Catholic laity, and by the Irish Bishops on behalf of the clergy. Their failure is admitted, and the Queen's University is dead and gone. In disregard of Irish advice, you then establish an Examining Board, which you dignify by the name of a Royal University. After twenty years your Royal Commission has declared that this Royal University also is a failure, and must go. You of the Conservative Party, representing a Conservative Government, pledged yourselves publicly and privately to deal with this question year after year, and session after session, until your pledges on this subject have become a by-word in Ireland. In 1885, the late Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was then Leader of the House, explicitly and solemnly pledged the Government that if they were in office next session they would introduce a practical measure to remedy this grievance. They were in office "next session," and with the exception of three years they have been in office ever since, and that pledge has never been redeemed. In 1889, in answer to Mr. Parnell in this House, the present Prime Minister pledged himself on behalf of the Government to produce a Bill dealing with this question next session.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover) dissented.

* MR. JOHN REDMOND: In August, 1889, Mr. Parnell questioned Mr. Balfour on this subject, and asked whether any immediate steps were in contemplation, and whether the Government proposed to make this important subject one of the earliest Government measures next session, and in reply Mr. Balfour said—

> "With regard to the question put to me by the hon. Member for Cork, I have to say that there is, of course, no possibility of dealing with this question except under a Bill, and I cannot give any pledge at this moment as to the exact order in which the various questions will be dealt with by the Government next session."

The right hon. Gentleman then speaking on behalf of the Government as Leader of this House—[AN HON. MEMBER: As Chief Secretary]—well, that gives more point to what I was going to say. He spoke then as Chief Secretary, and it might be said that he spoke for himself, and not in the name of the Government, that really he was outstepping the limits of his authority, and that he had no right to make such a declaration. But the right hon. Gentleman is now Prime Minister, and I want to know by what rule of morality he can now refuse when he has authority, when he is Leader of this House and Prime Minister of this country—how he can justify the refusal to carry out those pledges which he gave. From 1885 to this moment those pledges have remained unfulfilled. The truth is, that the Conservative Party are playing with this question and fooling with it, and they have found it, I am afraid, somewhat useful to them in dealing with Irish Parties. They are doing the same to-day. Lord Dunraven the other day published a letter in the Irish newspapers, in which he formulated a scheme for the settlement of this question. Now that scheme was represented to us in Ireland as the Government scheme. That was put forward as representing the Government scheme. We were told, in addition, that that scheme would receive the support of the Ulster Presbyterians, because they are very closely interested in this matter. Part of the scheme was to make Queen's College, Belfast, one of the component colleges of the University of Dublin, and, of course, to give large endowments to Queen's College, Belfast, so as to bring it into a proper position to meet the needs of that great city. We were told that the Ulster Presbyterians were favourable to this scheme. Well, what about the Catholics? I took it upon myself, speaking to my constituents a few weeks ago, to say that in my judgment the scheme would have been accepted by both the hierarchy and laity of the Catholic Church any time for the last twenty years. They have the whole Irish Government unanimously in favour of it. The Chief Secretary, the Lord Lieutenant, and Sir Antony M'Donnell. I do not know which is the more eager and enthusiastic on this question. They have the Prime Minister of England in favour of it. According to statements that have been made, they have a very large section of the Cabinet in favour of it. Some of the statements represent that an overwhelming majority of the Cabinet were in favour of it, and yet because Lord Londonderry goes down to Belfast and addresses a meeting of rabid Orangemen, and says that he will oppose this scheme, it is to put on one side. The whole question once more is to be shelved.

Now I may be told that there are great difficulties in the way of that scheme. Not only Lord Londonderry and his friends, but certain Senior Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin, are opposed to it. Let me say to the right hon. Gentleman that we are not wedded to this particular scheme. If the right hon. Gentleman finds it easier to fall back on the scheme of the Royal Commission, well let him do so, and that will be candidly, fairly, and impartially considered by us. What he has no right to do is to attempt to shelve this question and to hang it up indefinitely. Now I will be perfectly plain and straightforward on this matter. I think I quite see through the Government's game. My honest belief—I do not say it personally to the right hon. Gentleman, and let him not take it to himself individually; I am speaking of the Government—I am firmly convinced that they intend to humbug and befool the Irish Members on this question. Lord Londonderry, I believe, was right when he said in Belfast that no responsible Minister had ever proposed a Catholic University. Nobody has said that it was to establish a Catholic University. That is not the scheme. There is no proposal to establish a Catholic University. A correspondent writes to Lord Londonderry and says that the phrase was equivocal, and that while his Lordship might be against a Catholic university he might be in favour of Lord Dunraven's scheme. He asked for a specific reply on Lord Dunraven's scheme.

What was the answer? A letter in yesterday's London Times, in which Lord Londonderry said that no responsible Minister—we were told that this thing was to be submitted to the Cabinet; apparently it has not—that no responsible Minister had ever made such a proposal as Lord Dunraven's scheme. I think Lord Londonderry was right when he said in a speech in Belfast that the Government, as a whole, has no intention, and never had any intention, of introducing a scheme for the settlement of this question, and that all their pledges, assurances, and promises, were false as dicers' oaths. But they want to remain in office for the rest of this session, and, no doubt, these mysterious negotiations about which we have all heard a great deal in months past in Ireland—all these private assurances about the Cabinet, about the Government, and about this scheme, and that scheme, and all the public pledges—I suppose we will have a repetition of these again to-night—were simply intended for the purpose of inducing the Irish Members to refrain from attack. More than that, I fancy that when the Government go to the electors when the general election does come, they would like very much to have these pledges about a Catholic university in the air, so that they might successfully attempt to wheedle and humbug the Irish voters in Great Britain to vote for their candidates in every case, in the supposition that they were in favour of a Catholic University. Let me tell the Government perfectly plainly that their game is too transparent in this matter. It has been played too often, and it will fail this time. The Irish people are saying to the Government to-day—

And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.

To-night I call on the right hon. Gentleman for an explicit statement on this matter. Let us get out of this region of fog. Let us get out of this region we have been living in in Ireland of private negotiations and private indications that this person was favourable and that person favourable, and that everything would go right before the end of the session. Let us come down to the plain facts. What is the right hon. Gentleman going to do? I think I ought to make an explicit statement to him, and I say that, on this question of the settlement of the University question, nothing short of the immediate introduction of legislation this session will satisfy us. We thus have three branches of education—primary, intermediate, and University—marked by the same inefficiency under English rule in Ireland. Now I ask any impartial man whether the case for Home Rule is not complete if I stopped here, and did not say one other word. The Government which, for a whole century, has thus bungled, neglected, and starved education—primary, secondary, and university—cannot justify its existence.

But after all, education, vital as it is, is only one department or element in the national life of our country. In every other department the inefficiency is the same. The same ignorance, the same dishonesty, the same failure. Take for instance the case of the financial relations between the two countries. You are niggardly of education in Ireland, but you are prodigal of taxation. Ireland some years ago accused Great Britain of robbing her of several millions a year, and that accusation became so insistent that you were forced to investigate it. A tribunal was appointed for the purpose. Now let the House mark, Great Britain was the defendant, Great Britain appointed the tribunal herself, Great Britain packed the tribunal herself with all her own greatest financial authorities. Yet that tribunal so appointed and constituted brought in a verdict in favour of Ireland, a verdict to the effect that Ireland was overtaxed to the extent of about £3,000,000 a year, and that that had gone on for half a century. That was in 1893-4. Since then, so far from relief having been given, £3,000,000 additional has been put upon Ireland, and in the most cruel way, because it has been added almost entirely to the taxation of the poor. You in this country have been engaged, and you boasted of it, in the task of endeavouring to bring down indirect taxation at any rate to the level of direct taxation. But you did not do so in Ireland. The indirect taxation of Great Britain is nearly 50 per cent. of the whole. In Ireland it is 75 per cent. of the whole, and every addition you have made to the burden of Ireland for the last ten years has been a burden that has fallen upon the poorer classes of the community. When the result of the Financial Relations Inquiry was first made known, your answer was that the inquiry had not been sufficiently full, that there were other portions of the case to be considered, and you said a new Commission was to be appointed. You have not since appointed that Commission and you never suggested it since, and you have gone on, during all those ten years that have passed, piling up the taxation of the country; and the last defence made to this House by the late Chancellor of the Exchequer a couple of years ago, was of the most audacious character. He said the general taxation of the whole of the three countries has been enormously increased in consequence of the war. Ireland being the poorest part of the United Kingdom has contributed the smallest proportion of this general taxation, "Therefore," he said, "your grievance has disappeared." Of course, according to that doctrine, all you have to do is to go on increasing the taxation of Ireland, and when you have added three or four or five millions more to her taxation, your Chancellor will say, "Why, I have wiped out all your grievance." I am bound to say the Chief Secretary does not take that view at all. I heard with deep gratification some of his declarations last year. I remember when he used these words—

> "He really believed Ireland had been a sufferer, and he was quite sure that the question whether or not the two countries had received as partners in the common Exchequer, founded in 1813, their fair share of the mutual advantages was a question which should not be left in obscurity as now."

Yes, it is left in obscurity now, and I say it is a monstrous injustice that while this question is being hung up in this way, and after the verdict of the late Commission, you should go on piling up the general burden on Ireland. Not only has the general burden been increased, but in every conceivable way Ireland is being cheated every year by the British Treasury. Let me take one example of what I mean. When the equivalent grants were first established, the principle was laid down by Mr. Goschen that Scotland and Ireland were entitled to get from the General Exchequer a proportionate sum for their purposes. And the proportion was fixed by Mr. Goschen at eighty for England, eleven for Scotland, and nine for Ireland. We always, on these Benches, protested against that proportion; we have always said that it was grossly unfair, but we were powerless in the matter. Last year the Chief Secretary came to our aid when in this House he declared that we were right all through, that the proportion was quite unfair, and he proposed quite a different basis, which he put into the Irish Development Fund Bill. Speaking on this question, he said—

> "On other similar occasions, in 1889 and 1890, I think the equivalent grant to Ireland and to Scotland (England, eighty; Scotland, eleven; and Ireland, nine) was calculated upon the proportion of taxation coming from Ireland or Scotland to the common Exchequer. That leads to results which all must hold to be illogical, and results which everybody in Ireland holds to be unjust, because the greater the increase of the taxation the less is the proportion that comes from Ireland, the poorest partner in the business, and so the less is her equivalent grant. As the evil increases the remedy diminishes, and you have only to force up taxation to a sufficiently high point to extinguish the remedy altogether, or to give it in what may be called homeopathic doses. Therefore we make this new departure. We say that the set-off to Ireland shall be calculated, not upon the quota coming from Ireland, as compared with the quota coming from England, towards common purposes, but shall be calculated on the population of the two countries as revealed by the last census."

I do beg the House, which is often carried away with the idea that we on these Benches are given to exaggeration, to listen to how this system of equivalent grants has worked out. Take, for example, the question of technical instruction—

> "What are the results? In the nine years, in the case of England, between 1892 and 1900, sums amounting to £6,276,404 were devoted to technical instruction in England and Wales. Ireland lost two years altogether in that period, but in the remaining seven years she was only able to spend £71,900 on technical instruction, and out of that comparatively insignificant sum no less than £55,000 was expended in the last year."

That is to say, Ireland has been robbed by that transaction of a vast sum of money in connection with grants for technical education.

> "Ireland had to dash down the money on some ill-considered project or lose it altogether."

It was to remedy this that a policy of setting up the Devolution Fund Grant was initiated so that Ireland should not be defrauded of its fair share of the grant from the common Exchequer of the United Kingdom, and it was to protect Ireland that the Chief Secretary felt it his duty to adopt the new fiscal method. Now if the basis for the equivalent grants in 1889 and 1890, namely, 80–11–9, was unjust, as it is now admitted to be, we have been robbed every year that has passed of large sums of money, which by now amount to a vast figure; and mark the injustice is a continuing one, for the admitted unjust basis remains in force with reference to all equivalent grants before the one of last year. In my opinion that is a good instance of the way in which not only is the general burden of the taxpayers heaped up in Ireland, but where in every individual case that is possible, the British Exchequer robs Ireland of her fair share of grants from common taxation. We are robbed therefore not only in education but in money. And what of the legislative work? Every year in the last century this Parliament has proved its incapacity or unwillingness, or both, of passing legislation satisfactory to Ireland. Let me take as an example the Land Act of last year. On that question this Parliament passed some forty or fifty Land Acts, but so ignorant was this Parliament of the task and of the real meaning of the problems which it had to grapple with; so incompetent was it for the task of governing Ireland; so deaf was it to the voice of the Irish Members, that all these forty or fifty Acts of Parliament were absolutely valueless, and last year you found yourselves confronted with the Irish land question once more in an acute phase. And believe me, you are not yet done with the question. Last year I most freely admit Parliament was anxious and willing to settle this great question, and I say that the failure of the Act of last year in so many respects proves in a startling manner that even when this Parliament has the will and provides the necessary time, it has not the capacity to legislate satisfactorily for Ireland, What happened last year? The Irish Members put forward certain Amendments which they considered, in their judgment, were essential in order to make it a workable and a satisfactory measure. Some of these Amendments were opposed on their merits as mischievous by the Government, and they were defeated. Other of these Amendments, which we declared to be absolutely necessary for the proper and effective working of the Bill, were declared by the Government to be unnecessary, and we were induced to withdraw them by pledges from the Ministers and from the law officers of this House that the phraseology of the Bill, as it stood, carried out our intention. And what has been the ludicrous result? Why, an Irish Judge has already given a decision—and those who followed the Bill with any interest last year will see the force of what I am saying—to the effect that the bonus cannot be handed over to the tenant for life. That blocks out, in my judgment, something like three-fourths of the landlords of Ireland; and the Irish law officer who sat on that Bench opposite during the discussions on that Bill, who heard the Chief Secretary making all his speeches and giving all his promises, and making those statements which induced us to withdraw our Amendments, have now on other portions of the Bill, given opinions totally at variance with the opinions of the Chief Secretary and which, if enforced, will, in the judgment of most men who know anything of Ireland, render the Act an absolute nullity so far as Connaught and the congested estates are concerned. That is to say that they will make the Act of last year worthless as an engine of peace in those very places where the land agitation has been most acute. What an argument for Home Rule! What answer is to be given to it? I admit that last year you did your best; you were anxious to settle the land question, but you would not listen to our advice; you would not take our Amendments, and you have floundered once again into hopeless failure on many phases of this question. The whole question of the working of the Land Act will come up for discussion at a later period, and therefore what I have to say on that subject I will reserve till then. So far as I am concerned for the moment, I only allude to the Land Act as an illustration of my argument, which is that nothing can be satisfactory in the government of Ireland except the restoration of the rights of self-government to the Irish people. I take it for granted that the Chief Secretary will introduce an amending Bill this session, although no mention is made of it in the King's Speech. All I can say is that so far as we are concerned no so-called amending Bill will be accepted by us unless it deals with all the defects which have been disclosed in the Act from the point of view of the tenants, as well as from the point of view of the tenant for life and the landlords.

Now I might go through every other department of Irish government. I might deal with the Irish Local Government Board—the most absurd system of government in the world—where you have freely elected governing bodies of the people thwarted and interfered with at every stage by a body which is quite irresponsible, and over which the people of Ireland have no control at all, and in the membership of which is Mr. Richard Bagwell, who was appointed after the Act of 1898 was passed, a gentleman who signalised his appointment by instantly denouncing as an outrage the right of the people of Ireland to local government, which he was appointed to administer. I might deal with the Board of Works, where the right hon. Gentleman has placed his late private secretary, Mr. Hanson, as one of the three administrators of this important Irish Department. I have nothing to say against Mr. Hanson. He has served the right hon. Gentleman well. I always found him most courteous, obliging and competent, and I am sure that he is a very able young man. But, after all, is this a system of government which will stand examination: that those young English gentlemen who have served for two years as private secretaries are to be brought over from England and put in charge of a great working department of Irish government to the absolute exclusion of Irishmen. I might go through all these departments one after the other, and show the failure of English government. This system which I have endeavoured to sketch cannot be mended; it is too rotten to be mended; the only remedy is to end it. "I say the time has come to reform altogether the absurd and irritating anachronism which is known as Dublin Castle; to sweep away altogether these alien boards of foreign officials, and to substitute for them a genuine Irish Administration for purely Irish affairs." These are the words of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. What has changed since 1885 to make these alien boards of foreign officials more competent for the government of Ireland than they were then? No, if there has been any change it has been in the other direction. It has been in this, that our demand for Home Rule is stronger to-day than it was then. Why in 1898 you gave a great system of free local government to the people, such as you have in England. You gave it with fear and trembling. Lord Salisbury had warned you that it was more dangerous to do that than to give Home Rule. Yet you granted it. What has been the result? Why, that the Irish people in the working of that Act have shown, untrained though they are in the arts of government, the steadiness, the sobriety, the moderation, and the good sense which are necessary for the successful work of governing themselves. I ask the Government, where do they stand upon this question? Has their experience taught them nothing? Have they learned nothing from their experience of the last few years in the softening of class animosities, in the hope which they have often expressed, and which I am sure they share, of the early settlement of the land question, in the hope of the spread of better feelings in Ireland, and of the possibility of a really united Ireland? Do they really see no possibility of meeting this natural demand of an intelligent people to be allowed to govern themselves—to govern themselves where you have shown your incapacity to govern them? Can we take Lord Dudley as representing the Government? Lord Dudley is an able man. He has made some most remarkable pronouncements in Ireland. Speaking on the 20th November, 1902, he said—

> "There were those who seemed to believe that the only way in which a great Empire could be successfully maintained was by suppressing the various distinguishing elements of its component parts—in fact, by running it as a huge regiment in which each nation was to lose its own individuality, and to be brought under a common system of discipline. That was not his view. In his opinion, they were much more likely to break up an Empire by any such attempt. Lasting strength and loyalty were not to be secured by any attempt to force into one system or to mould into one type those special characteristics which were the outcome of a nation's history, but rather by a full recognition of the fact that those very characteristics formed an essential part of the nation's life, and that under wise guidance and sympathetic treatment they would enable her to play her own special part in the life of the Empire to which she belonged. It was upon that principle that he would proceed during his term of office, believing that any national development to be lasting or healthy must be spontaneous."

Again, he said—

> "The opinion of the Government was, and it was his own opinion, that the only way to govern Ireland properly was to govern it according to Irish ideas instead of according to British ideas."

What is the meaning of these words? In the ordinary acceptation of the meaning of language those words mean Home Rule, and they were so interpreted in Ireland. Were they that, or simply one more attempt by playing on words to deceive the people? Let me say for myself that I utterly decline to believe that, so far as Lord Dudley is personally concerned. But I am dealing, not with Lord Dudley, but with the Government policy in this matter. I ask, where do the Government stand upon this question? Our position is perfectly plain. We are a Party of independent opposition. We are in opposition to every Government that does not accede to our demand for legislative freedom. For myself, I have sat in opposition in this House for twenty-three years. I have taken part in the overthrow by Irish votes of Conservative Governments and of Liberal Governments. I know not, of course, what the future may have in store for us, but I have a pretty clear conception of what our duty is. In my judgment, it is our duty to offer a vigorous and active opposition to the Government unless they show that they have made some appreciable advance on the road to Home Rule. My colleagues and I have been for many weary years travelling on a long and painful road. Many of us have grown old and grey through years of disappointment and disillusion. If we have to go on to our graves without success we will do so ungrudgingly, and bequeath this contest to our children. Let me say, however, for myself that I am fairly sanguine of the near future. I think I see in this country a widening of knowledge of Ireland a growing appreciation of the real character of the Irish people and of the moderate nature of their demands, and therefore I decline to say one word or to give one vote which, in my opinion, is calculated to make it more difficult for any English Party or any English Government to end this contest by some great measure of appeasement and justice, which, when it comes, believe me, will be as great a blessing to Great Britain as it will be to the long-suffering and faithful people of Ireland. Never forget that you can, by the mere concession of justice, convert Ireland in twenty-four hours into a friendly nation only too eager for what Gladstone called "the blessed oblivion of the past." But by the continuation of injustice you perpetuate a history of hatred and ill-will between two democracies who ought in God's providence to live side by side in amity and peace. It is for you to choose.

MR. WYNDHAM: The hon. and learned Member for Waterford has spoken with that eloquence which is always at his command on the subject which I believe is nearest to his heart. We know, not only from what he has said to-night, but from what he has said again and again in previous debates, that, in his opinion, no efforts which we make in this House to further the advancement of the people of Ireland are of avail, and that nothing but the concession of a Parliament with the fullest power to that country can remedy any of the evils under which Ireland may suffer. He has been very frank. In his courtesy he sent me formal notice that he intended to raise the whole question of Irish government, and he has been as good as his word. Not one Department has escaped his scathing criticism.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: Oh yes, several.

MR. WYNDHAM: As far as I am personally concerned as the head of nearly all these Departments, I do not propose to blow my own trumpet for an hour and a half; but, speaking for those with whom I work, for my colleagues on the Local Government Board and every other Department with which I am officially connected, I repudiate the epithets which the hon. and learned Member has thought fit to apply to those hardworking public servants. They are not English. They are not foreigners. They are all Irishmen.

*MR. JOHN REDMOND: Is Mr. Stephenson an Irishman? Is Mr. Hanson an Irishman? Are you an Irishman?

MR. WYNDHAM: I am excluding myself. I am speaking for my colleagues in those Departments. Sir Henry Robinson, Vice-President of the Local Government Board, is an Irishman, Sir Horace Plunkett, the Vice-President of the new Department, is an Irishman, and taking the Department of the Board of Works, Mr. Holmes, the Chairman, is an Irishman, and so I might go on. Irishmen bear the far greater proportion. It is a small point, but so much has been said about foreign rule that we had better clear the matter up. The hon. and learned Member mentioned Mr. Hanson. Why was he appointed? Mr. Hanson was appointed because he was the most competent person to go there, and I was very sorry to lose his services. He was not appointed at my instance. What is the Board of Works? The Board of Works is under the Treasury in Ireland, and it is the channel through which Ireland receives the greatest benefits she receives under the Union. During the last ten years the Board of Works has advanced, by way of gift or loan to Ireland for Irish purposes, over £7,000,000. Is it an intolerable outrage on the national feeling of Ireland that one man selected by the Treasury as peculiarly competent to deal with financial transactions should be an Englishman, though he was the man, in their opinion, who was best fitted to discharge the functions? The whole of the contention falls to the ground, and the fact that Mr. Hanson was my private secretary in Ireland for three years, and had in that position obtained a wonderful grasp of Irish problems, was an additional recommendation. The hon. and learned Member began by saying it was a delusion to suppose that we are to get rid of the Irish question. I have never shared in that delusion. I have spent five years of my life as private secretary to the Prime Minister in Ireland, and I have been three years Chief Secretary, and I know how important are many matters in Ireland which require, deserve, and, in my opinion, receive attention in this House. But the hon. and learned Member in his concluding period said the legislative efforts of this House were not satisfactory to Ireland. I am not surprised, if he puts the Irish demand as he put it to-night. All the desires which he has cherished in the past, including Home Rule, are apparently to be granted, and satisfactorily and exhaustively granted, in the course, one might almost say, of a single session. Does he suppose England at the end of every year says, "Now, Heaven's blessing fall upon these God-inspired Ministers; we cannot have a single thing in addition to what we already possess?" There is no country in the world so satisfied with its Government as he thinks his countrymen ought to be satisfied with ours, if we did our duty.

The purport of the hon. and learned Member's speech was perfectly clear; in the latter part he wished to bring home to the Government, and in the earlier part to the Opposition, the fact that he is the head of a real third Party in this House, of an independent Party. I surmised that that was his intention almost as soon as he began to speak, and my surmise was confirmed by his very pointed allusion to a recent speech made by the hon. Member for Leeds. He stands here to ask that which we stand here to refuse, a separate Parliament for Ireland, and he says until that is granted to Ireland no legislation passed by this House can meet Irish needs. Some might hastily be tempted to ask in reply, "In that case, what is the use of attempting to legislate for Ireland?" That is not my position; far from that. The hon. and learned Member spoke of our legislative attempt as a concession; I take grave exception to that. I have never since I have been in the House of Commons supported, or initiated in recent years, any measure for Ireland with any idea in my mind that I was asking any Irish Member not to offer his views on the Constitutional problem. I have not brought in these measures, or supported them in earlier years, with a view of "killing Home Rule with kindness," or of reconciling the irreconcilable. I asked my friends last year to support me in passing the Irish Land Act, because I thought it was our duty to pass that measure for Ireland. I have supported Unionist legislation upon what I conceive to be the platform of the Unionist creed, and that is, that we are political equals with equal claims on the time of Parliament and the resources of the common Exchequer.

Mr. COGHILL (Stoke-upon-Trent): Have we got anything in return for the Land Act?

Mr. WYNDHAM: My hon. friend who differed from me as to the policy of the Government last year, will hardly expect me to repeat all the arguments I used in our numerous debates. I think I made my position perfectly clear. I believed that that Act would confer great benefits on Ireland, and at a later moment I will return to that point. But I never asked the House, nor did the Prime Minister, to pass that Act in order that the hon. and learned Member should not get up, if he sees fit to do so, and declare that he is still a Home Ruler; and, what is more, I should never consider such a transaction as at all honourable, in the primary sense of the word honourable. The Irish Party are here this afternoon, as they have been on many previous occasions, as an independent Party. I have no understanding with the Nationalist Party, led so ably by the hon. and learned Member, over any prospective legislation. My aim is more modest, my aim is to avoid misunderstandings with the Irish Nationalist Party, and with every other section of political belief in Ireland, and amongst my friends on this side of the House. And to avoid misunderstandings, two courses must be pursued; I must refrain, as I always seek to do, from using any word that might give umbrage to the legitimate pride of Irishmen in their nationality, a pride which they share with Englishmen and Scotchmen, but I must also refrain from indulging in rosy and ambiguous periods which might lead them to believe that I was prepared to concede Home Rule, or contribute £3,000,000 a year for Irish purposes. What has happened in recent years? Last year or the year before, on the Address, the hon. and learned Member moved an Amendment dealing with the land question, which was a pressing matter in Ireland. When we did not deal with it in 1901, and when we did not succeed in carrying a measure in 1902, the hon. and learned Member denounced us; last year he co-operated with the Government in passing a measure. But before those years he made an annual appearance in this House, moving an Amendment in the sense in which he has spoken this afternoon.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: In the twenty-three years I have been in the House I only did that once.

Mr. WYNDHAM: I think the hon. and learned Member is in error, I think he did so in 1898 and 1899.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: Perhaps I did twice, but that would scarcely justify the phrase "annual appearance."

Mr. WYNDHAM: In 1895, 1898, and 1899 the hon. and learned Member came to this House and moved as an Amendment to the Address that there should be an independent Parliament given to Ireland. He stated then that the measure brought in by Mr. Gladstone in 1886 was a compromise, but, I hasten to add, a compromise accepted in good faith by the Irish Party. Our position on that Motion is now precisely what it was in the years 1895, 1898, and 1899, and it was in 1898 very ably defined, as one would have anticipated, by the present Prime Minister, whose absence we all deplore, and no one more than myself, when endeavouring to deal with Irish matters with which he is so conversant. He said then, as I said this afternoon, of the Land Act of last year, that we desired to give local government to Ireland—the question then at issue—for reasons altogether outside the controversy on Home Rule. That is what I have been saying. I desire this House, when occasion offers, when time admits, when resources are available, to deal with Irish questions on their merits, and altogether outside the long and bitter controversy on Home Rule. I do not quarrel with the hon. and learned Member for holding one view as to the proper constitutional relations between the countries, and he is not entitled to quarrel with me for holding another. I hold that view, and shall continue, as far as I am able, to persist in asking this House at proper times and seasons to give its attention to Irish problems, and to see that Ireland receives her fair share of the financial resources of the Empire. But then, on the constitutional problem, the Prime Minister in 1898 went on to say—and this is pertinent to the question raised by the hon. and learned Member—that in his opinion Irish sentiment, in so far as it does desire Home Rule, would not be satisfied with a subordinate Parliament. The hon. and learned Member was moving an Amendment on the Address asking for an independent Parliament. That is my view. I do not believe that finality would attach to the concession of a subordinate Parliament to Ireland. I believe that Ireland demands, and is entitled to, political equality with Great Britain. I know that political equality can only take one of two shapes; either it must be embodied in the relations which now exist between Ireland and Great Britain—that is to say that every citizen has an equal right to vote for a Member in this House, or to sit as a Member in this House—or else it must be embodied in some such relation as that which subsists between Norway and Sweden. Those are the only two forms of political equality I know. I believe Ireland would not be finally satisfied with political inequality, even if that could be accompanied with a greater deference than is now paid to our view. I deny that we are guilty of not deferring to Ireland; I declare that we use our very best efforts to collect Irish opinion, and that when there is a general consensus of opinion in Ireland we come down to this House and ask the House to take note of the fact and to pass legislation on that basis. But when Irishmen talk of the Irish views they mean the views which they and those immediately associated with them entertain, and they frequently mean views which are not only unpalatable to other sections of Irishmen, but which are bitterly resented by other sections of Irishmen. It is not in the power of any British Parliament to legislate in order to satisfy every section of Irish opinion. I dissent from many of the propositions which the hon. and learned Member put forward. He will not mind my saying, since I include myself in that category, that politicians are not often good historians. There are a few exceptions; the late Mr. Lecky, whose death we deplore, was one, and the right hon. Member for Montrose Burghs, a politician, is a good historian. But with a few exceptions good politicians are bad historians, and also, as a rule, worse prophets. On this side of the House we sometimes say that Mr. Disraeli was a good prophet; on the other side hon. Members sometimes claim that Mr. Cobden was a good prophet. As a rule politicians are more usefully engaged in attacking the problems which are under their nose with the resources which are to their hands—and it is in that sense that I have attempted to discharge the duties which have fallen upon me in Ireland—and in attacking those immediate problems, with such resources as may be for the time available, they find again and again that the time at their disposal is limited by the claims of many other subjects, and that the attention of their audience is frequently distracted to other issues, and cannot be lured back to the theme in which a particular politician is engrossed. Political experiments cannot be carried on as if they were chemical experiments. You cannot deal with Ireland and the Irish question or problem all the time, and with nothing else. Take the two greatest experiments ever tried in Ireland—first, the experiment of Home Rule when she really had it, in Grattan's Parliament; that was a failure, an admitted failure.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: (Donegal, S). Oh, no, it was not.

MR. WYNDHAM: At any rate it could not be carried out as an isolated experiment. You had the American War and the French Revolution. Then comes the next great political experiment in Ireland, the Union. That was followed by the great contest with Napoleon, and the earlier years of the Union could not carry out all the promises of the Union or bring to Ireland all the benefits which the authors of the Union hoped she would reap. So it is now. The hon. and learned Member invites me to debate the question of Home Rule as against the Union. I am going to waive, if I may, the academic constitutional argument. We shall never agree about that. We hold that the relations of Ireland to England must be governed by the relations of these two metropolitan islands to the Empire as a whole, and that we cannot even discuss Ireland alone or Great Britain alone.

It will be more germane, I think, to the argument and the attack which the hon. and learned Member has delivered if I put forward two other arguments for the Union. One is that Ireland benefits by the Union, so far as credit is concerned at any rate. I am not going into a financial relations debate. I do not accept the application of the words which the hon. and learned Member quoted from me if he gives to them so wide an extension as I think he did. The words he quoted were—

> "The question whether Ireland gets her fair share should not be left in obscurity."

I was not talking then about the broad financial relations question. I was talking of the Equivalent Grant, and I was using that as an argument for the Development Grant as it was given last year. I adhere to that view. I think it most important that when some equivalent grant is given to Ireland it should be an open statement of fact, that it should not depend upon whether Ireland spent it that year or not, and that, even if Ireland is fairly dealt with, you will never persuade Irishmen that they are fairly dealt with, or anybody else, unless your statement of account is one which is intelligible to the persons concerned.

The other and further argument for the Union is that the difficulties of Ireland are largely due to racial and religious dissensions. If that were not the case, I think the Chief Secretary of the day and those who work with him would not be exposed to quite as much criticism as they are to-day. The hon. and learned Member's prophecy is this—that if Home Rule were granted, then all these difficulties of a financial character—all these difficulties due to deep-rooted dissension would disappear.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: A prophecy based upon history.

MR. WYNDHAM: That is his prophecy. My prophecy is that it would have been very difficult, I think impossible, for Ireland to have carried out the financial provisions of the Land Act of last year. I do not believe that Ireland, or any other country of that size, could possibly borrow £100,000,000. More than that, I know, to my cost, that it is very difficult for the combined Exchequers of the two countries to do it. It is an immense operation. The money market is in a very poor state, and it requires the earnest efforts of all those who care for the Land Act to see that the finances of the measure go through, and go through to a successful issue. I have all along felt that the financial foundation of the Land Act was the most important part of it, and that any minor defect in the edifice reared upon that foundation could be corrected in due time. During this autumn I have given my constant attention to this problem, which is a problem, I think, that can be solved. I believe that the Act can be financed, but it can only be financed at a certain pace. The hon. and learned Member said that we had neglected, I will not say flouted, all Irish advice during the passing of the measure.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I did not put it quite so strongly as that.

MR. WYNDHAM: That if we had taken their advice some of the defects in the Act would have been removed. I do not remember the hon. and learned Member or his friends moving any Amendment to what I may call the bonus clause.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: We did move an Amendment to the bonus clause, but not, perhaps, to the particular part to which the right hon. Gentleman is referring—that is, as to the tenant for life getting the bonus—because we received assurances which we thought were satisfactory.

MR. WYNDHAM: The hon. and learned Member, when he was dealing with this part of the subject, stated that unless the bonus were given to the tenant for life-purchase would not take place over a great part of Ireland. I think he is right, and therefore it cannot be urged that to amend that defect in the Act is a benefit conferred on the landlords. It is not so. You cannot divide the Act into benefits to the landlord and benefits to the tenants so far as purchase is concerned. Everything which facilitates purchase is a benefit alike to both classes and to the community at large. It will be my duty to amend the Act in that respect. I pass no comment whatever upon any interpretations which have been passed, or which may be passed, upon the drafting of the Act. It is for the Judges of the land to interpret Acts of Parliament as they leave this House; but the author of the Bill, the Minister responsible for the Bill, alone stands condemned if any of the language has been so ambiguous as to admit of an interpretation other than the declared intention of Parliament.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: It is very generous of you to say so.

MR. WYNDHAM: In this case the intention of Parliament was not only declared in debate; it was confirmed by division; and I am honourably bound to see that the intention of Parliament is carried out. I cannot anticipate that there will be much difficulty in doing that, because my personal honour is bound up with the matter. But I only know of one legal decision which does cast doubt on the phraseology of the Act. The hon. and learned Member—and here I come into vehement collision with him—said that the law officers had made this or that decision. The communications made by the law officers to a Minister are as privileged as any communication made by a lawyer to his client in private life. I therefore decline absolutely to say what my legal advisers have said or have not said. I am responsible for the drafting of the Act, and if in any particular it is discovered that it does not carry out the declared intentions of Parliament, why, then, in those particulars it must be amended.

But when I say I will bring in an amending Act I do not mean to say I will re-open the land question. I mean I will bring in a formal and explanatory Act making all clear which is in doubt and carrying out all the intentions that were expressed in this House and acquiesced in by all Parties. I take a more sanguine view of the Land Act than the hon. and learned Member seemed to take this afternoon. I am where he was when he spoke at Newcastle, County Down, on 26th September. I need not quote his words, but they were to the effect that in the Land Act as passed there were grounds for confidently anticipating the ultimate solution of the land question.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I think so still.

MR. WYNDHAM: And I know of nothing which has occurred to cast doubt upon that belief. I regret very much that one of the signatories to the Land Conference Report has retired from this House. From the moment that he put his name to that document no man supported more loyally, both in spirit and in letter, the compromise which was arrived at between the representatives of the landlords and the representatives of the tenants, and therefore I am sorry that he is no longer in this House in order to take part in any further debate which may, in this year or in future years, arise upon the land question.

The policy which I suggest on the land question is by administrative effort to make the best of the Act which has been passed, and not, at the first symptom of any difficulty, to throw up our hands in despair and say that we must go in for another land session. There is no ground for that of any kind or sort, either as to the quantity of sales that is going on under the Act or as to the adequacy of the Act to deal with certain special problems. The Act, after all, only came into operation on 1st November.

We had to get a house to put the Estate Commissioners in, we had to bring in a number of draft regulations——

* MR. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): And such a house!

MR. WYNDHAM: The hon. Member interrupts me, but I can assure him that to initiate the administration of a measure of that size is no joke, and the amount of transactions in which agreements have been arrived at is, to my mind, satisfactory from an Irish point of view. Agreements have been lodged in respect of 135 estates, embracing 3,070 holdings, and involving—that is to say, they will involve—the advance of £1,500,000. To arrive at an agreement involving £1,500,000 in three months warrants me in saying, I think, that the Land Act has fulfilled the expectations formed of it. The real difficulty is the financial difficulty, and the difficulties upon certain aspects of the land question will all settle themselves at the pace at which we can advance the financial progress of the Act. I said last year that it would not be possible to advance more than £5,000,000 a year in any one of the first three years, in the first place because the administrative labour is very great, and in the second place because it would be madness on the part of the Commissioners to attempt to raise money at a very rapid pace. Let me bring that home to hon. Members who sit for Irish constituencies. The losses due to the flotation of this loan will fall upon the Development Grant.

MR. JOHN REDMOND was understood to dissent.

MR. WYNDHAM: The hon. and learned Member shakes his head. We have pledged the whole credit of the country, if need be, for the advance of £100,000,000, and accompanied that with a free gift of £12,000,000 towards the solution of the land question. It would have been competent for the Government to say, "We advise that, because Irishmen attach most importance to some solution of the land question, but you cannot have that and also an equivalent grant for the money given to English primary education." Indeed, some hon. Members reproached me last year for accompanying the Land Act with the Development Grant of £185,000 a year. Naturally, speaking as the Minister for one Department, I should be glad if I had the purse of Fortunatus. But we must deal with the resources available in our hands; and I still hold that this House behaved in a liberal, as well as in a most wise, manner when it permitted me to pass that measure involving so large a loan on the credit of this country and so large a free gift in cash. And therefore the losses due to the flotation were imposed upon the Development Grant. That is a very serious matter. If the stock which is issued is issued at a considerable number of points below par, the loss upon the Development Grant to Ireland will be very heavy. I am not going to suggest any figure, but if the stock was floated at very much below par the loss would amount to many thousands of pounds, and it would be continuous. There would be a loss in the first year, and the next year there would be an additional loss, and so forth. So, if you try to borrow money in larger sums than those which I have indicated you will imperil the Irish Development Grant. I have myself felt during the autumn that instead of anticipating difficulties which have not arisen under the Land Act, as has been done in some cases, it would have been a good thing if all classes of Irishmen interested in the working of the Act had put their heads together to assist in bringing about the successful flotation of this loan. Hon. Members opposite have criticised the great Irish banks for holding so much money on deposit and paying small interest upon it, and, perhaps, investing it out of Ireland. Now there is an opportunity for the Irish banks and other persons endowed with wealth in Ireland to show that they realise how important it is to Ireland as a whole that this loan should be brought out at a satisfactory figure. I would not have mentioned that subject in this House had I not observed an undue lack of attention to that aspect of the land problem. Finance is fundamental to the successful solution of the land question in Ireland; and I believe that the Development Grant, supplying as it does a buffer State upon which this loss, if there be a loss, will fall, does enable us to go on even at a period when it is very difficult to borrow money in the City of London except at injurious rates. It behoves all who care for Ireland, and are in a position to do so, to assist in the flotation of the stock for this great national object; and it also behoves Irishmen to consider that you cannot go ahead at an extreme pace without casting an enormous burden upon the whole community in Ireland, because the Development Grant exists, not for the agricultural community alone, but for the urban community as well. It would not be fair, in my judgment, for those who belong to the agricultural community to insist on going ahead when the loss falls upon the whole nation. I do not mean to say there should be undue delay; but to wait a year, or two years, is not much to ask of those who in respect of legislation have been a favoured class. I have been addressing the House at some length, but the hon. and learned Member for Waterford opened up a wide field of controversy. The hon. and learned Gentleman explicitly asked me to state what my position was in regard to the question of University education in Ireland.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: The position of the Government.

MR. WYNDHAM: Well, Sir, my position is precisely the position occupied by the present Prime Minister in 1890.

MR. JOHN REDMOND said of course he should be interested in knowing what the personal position of the right hon. Gentleman was, but the question he asked was—What was the position of the Government?

MR. WYNDHAM: The Government do not propose to bring in any measure dealing with the University question now, and I think the Government are right. This question, though in my opinion it is an education question, is not so regarded by a great number of people in Ireland and in England and Scotland. To them it partakes also of a religious question. And the Government hold, and I hold most strongly, that you have no right to put the pressure of Party discipline and Party comradeship upon any single man in respect of a question of that character. [OPPOSITION cries of "The Education Act."] I have yet to learn that any supporter of the Government was wounded in his conscience by the Education Act. This is an educational question in my judgment. The opportunities for higher education in Ireland are very small by comparison with Great Britain, and relatively they are becoming smaller, because in this country we have long since come to the conclusion that what we mean by higher education is a teaching body, and not an examining body, and there has been a multiplication of teaching bodies in Great Britain. London University was an examining body and has become a teaching body. Victoria University is a teaching body, and Birmingham University has been founded and is also a teaching body. I speak for myself, because I want to have no misunderstanding on this matter with any of my hon. friends. I wish them to know what my opinions are. I do not think it would be right for me to disguise them, and I speak for myself, and myself alone. In the first place, the Government will not bring in a measure dealing with this question. In the second place, I hold that this is a question which ought to be settled, and I hold that opinion in common with many very distinguished statesmen who have sat on the Conservative side of the House during many years. [A NATIONALIST MEMBER: A pious opinion.] Now, if that be my position, is it one which I ought not to occupy? I do not think that my position is open to any criticism from hon. Members opposite. I have never given an undertaking on behalf of the Government in connection with this question. I have never given an undertaking in public or in private. I have to all and sundry, when they have approached me on the subject, given my views in the past, and I am ready to do so in the future. My views are that Ireland needs greater opportunities for higher education, but that they cannot be obtained until there is a substantial agreement between all parties interested in Ireland. The approach towards substantial agreement in the past year has, I think, been very great and marked, and it will end, in my judgment, in all sections of feeling and belief in Ireland coming to a solution that will be satisfactory to all. I know that many do not share that view. Almost every person who speaks of the University question in England, and some who speak of it in Ireland, believe that there is a desire on the part of many people in Ireland to found a Roman Catholic University. That is not so. Then they say "That is a quibble; a college is the same thing." They believe, unless I misjudge them, that this college would be of a denominational character, with denominational tests. That is not so. Nobody proposes that there should be tests. I will not go at greater length into the matter this evening. I wish my hon. friends to understand that I am personally in favour of extending the opportunities for higher education in Ireland; but I do not think the Government ought to take the question up as a Government, and I do not believe the question can be solved, except on the basis of a general agreement in Ireland. I do believe that Irish opinion is approaching towards general agreement; and, for my part, I will never support any proposal to impose tests at this time of day.

I cannot proceed at greater length in the reply which I could give to many of the detailed criticisms which the hon. and learned Member has seen fit to pass. My duty, as I understood it, was to remove any misunderstandings. That I have done. Whether the position of the Government is acceptable to hon. Members or not I do not know. At any rate it is intelligible. In our opinion, we ought to give to Ireland fully that which they are entitled to as our political equals in the United Kingdom, and that Ireland should have an equal claim upon the time of Parliament and an equal claim upon the resources of the common Exchequer. It should be our duty to seek to make harmony possible and easy. The motto Divide et impera has no application to the relations between Great Britain and Ireland. We do not seek to divide Ireland in order to impose a yoke upon her. Our duty as Unionists is to remove stumbling-blocks from the path of peacemakers in Ireland, and to increase by every means in our power the growth of a spirit of reconciliation in that country. We believe that when Ireland is harmonious and strong Ireland will be contented. We believe that when Ireland is contented she will take her place at our council board and play her part throughout the Empire. I am entitled to state my view as clearly and fully as the hon. and learned Member has stated his view. That is the belief that we may still work with; that is the belief in which I have asked my hon. friends in the past to work with me, and I believe they will consider impartially any proposals which may be made from time to time for achieving these objects in Ireland. There is much more to be done in Ireland. The Irish question is not yet settled. It will not be settled in a year, in a decade, or in fifty years. You are dealing with a poor, impoverished agricultural country, which has suffered much in the past and which demands your patient labour if it is to be put in the possession of the full opportunities of national life. Much can be done in Ireland by small means—means which, I fear, the hon. and learned Member would deride. Let me give an example. I should not be justified, after the liberal manner in which this House last year acted towards Ireland, in coming again to ask this session, or next session, that a further sum from the common fund should be voted for purely Irish purposes. But even if that be not done, it is possible to effect very many objects in Ireland. I do not agree with the criticism the hon. and learned Member passed on the Irish Government, but I know it is a costly Government, and I believe that savings can be effected in that Government; and I believe that because it has been done. Last year, when this House undertook to give a free gift of £12,000,000 for purely Irish purposes, I stated that it would be possible to institute savings which in five years would amount to £250,000. All the steps have been taken to produce that result, and it will be produced. It will go on accumulating, and in ten or twelve years that saving will amount to £270,000 a year; and more can be effected. It is right and proper that such additional savings, and other savings of a similar character on the cost of Irish Governments should be used to meet the peculiar needs of an impoverished agricultural country, and that they should be looked upon, as the Irish Church surplus fund was looked upon, as Irish money which, within bounds, should be applied to purely Irish purposes. There is nothing novel in that allocation of Irish money to Irish purposes.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.,): Then where does the free gift come in if it is made up by savings?

MR. WYNDHAM: I am sure the hon. Member does not wish to repudiate the bargain come to between the two sides of the House last year. Last year we agreed to give £12,000,000, and I promised the House that there would be a saving of £250,000. That, I hold, should be devoted to Irish purposes.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I do not repudiate anything.

MR. WYNDHAM: I understand the hon. Member does not wish to repudiate the agreement arrived at last year.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: My point is that the right hon. Gentleman says there is a free gift of £12,000,000, whereas this gift is to be made up by savings effected in the administration. I therefore say that it cannot be called a free gift.

MR. WYNDHAM: The hon. Gentleman does not repudiate what I stated. It is a distinction as to phraseology. I am not pretending that in this matter we have been thriftless or generous in any lax sense of the term. On the contrary, I say that we have used our best efforts to deal fairly and justly with Ireland in the matter of financial relations and arrangements, and I hold we shall continue to do so, but I would point out that that cannot be done when it would be improper for me to come to this House and ask for further sums of money. I cannot suppose that the reply which I have made will be satisfactory to the hon. and learned Member. He is the head of an independent Party, and is free to act without any concern for the political welfare of the present Government, and the present Government is quite free to act in what it considers the best manner for the benefit of Ireland, of the United Kingdom, and the Empire as a whole. For my part, I shall ask my hon. friends to continue to tread the path which has been followed by our leader, the present Prime Minister, who, while at all times maintaining his and our views of the proper constitution of the two countries, has been ready, according to our lights, and within the limits which we think necessary for the safety of the Empire, as I think we always shall be, to assist the development of a full national life in Ireland along every path of industrial, intellectual, and artistic progress.

MR. HALDANE (Haddingtonshire) said one did not know which to admire most—the literary charm of the right hon. Gentleman's speech or the skilful manner in which he evaded the real point of the speech of the hon. and learned Member for Waterford. The right hon. Gentleman began his speech by discussing the question of an independent Parliament and other topics which did come into the speech of the hon. and learned Member, whose views they all knew on the point. The hon. and learned Member's point was that certain pledges had been given by the Prime Minister and others which had not been carried out. It was all very well to talk of an independent Parliament, but, while he did not agree with that proposition, that did not prevent him saying that the remarks made about education and other things in connection with the administration of Ireland was a most damaging attack on the position of the right hon. Gentleman. What was the right hon. Gentleman's position? He went on the Unionist principle that the government of Ireland should be in accordance with Irish ideas. He had a good deal of sympathy with the right hon. Gentleman himself. The University question was not the only one in which the right hon. Gentleman's position was differentiated from that of some of his colleagues. The right hon. Gentleman was adding another to the long list of conspicuous witnesses to the failure of that policy. The hon. and learned Member, in regard to University education, referred to promises made long ago, which promises remained unfulfilled. The right hon. Gentleman, when pressed on this point, stated his own opinion; but they could not forget that that was the stock answer they received from Ministers. He could not forget that the Prime Minister, at Manchester in 1899, declared practically that, unless this question of University education was settled, Unionism was a failure. Years had passed, and now they had the stock answer—that the Government could not carry out what some of its members thought was an act of justice to Ireland. He could not forget, further, that in 1899 there was a proposal from the Opposition side of the House that the question should be made a non-Party one, but the Government neglected to take any steps. He did not believe, if the Government declared what their policy was, and showed that it was not a policy in the interests of any particular religion, they would find that opposition which they anticipated. But they had never put forward any scheme. They had never taken their life in their hand and invited the opinion of the House on any scheme. How could they suppose that any progress was likely to be made until they took up the whole question in a way in which it could be dealt with.

The right hon. Gentleman spoke of an advance in this matter. He did not agree with him. In 1898 exactly this point of advance had been reached. There was a scheme at that time which amounted very much to what Lord Dunraven was now proposing, only, he thought, it was in the even better form of a scheme for two Universities. That scheme had been greatly canvassed in Ireland, and he had the best reason for knowing that there was substantial agreement on it. He would remind the right hon. Gentleman how that scheme had been facilitated. In the summer of 1897 the Irish Bishops met at Maynooth and passed four resolutions. The first of these was that they would accept an open University. In these resolutions the Irish Bishops accepted the principle of an open University, of a majority of laymen being on the governing body of the institution, and a provision that no state funds should go to the promotion if religious educa tion, or anything leading up to it. The matter went further, of he mistook not. They were willing to trust the Government to deal fairly with the governing body, and put proper representatives of education on it. They offered no objection to a scheme of two open Universities—one in Dublin, and the other in Belfast—one in which there should be, in point of fact, something of a Catholic atmosphere, and the other in which the atmosphere should be Presbyterian. That scheme was much discussed in Ireland; it was before the people there; it was known here, and there was every disposition to treat it as a a non-Party question. Notwithstanding that, however, no progress had been made with the question from that time to this. He was not blaming the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary. The right hon. Gentleman was again only another witness in that long train of people who had succeeded to a post of the highest responsibility, and who, moving in the direction of trying to devise some means of governing the people of Ireland according to their own notions, found themselves hampered in their efforts to do so. The right hon. Gentleman said that he was strongly in favour of reform of the higher education in Ireland. That might be. Every Chief Secretary and every responsible Minister in Ireland had felt it was the greatest scandal that that country had not that development of higher education in a fashion suited to the genius of her people.

To-day they had a condition of things in which there were two Universities—one a University admirable in its type, and with splendid historical traditions associated with it. But the University of Dublin, which catered for a class, could not do what was necessary for the whole Irish people. It could not do it in the fashion which the popular Scottish Universities did for the population of Scotland, or in the way some of the new Universities in England were doing for the middle and the lower middle classes of England. Then there was the Royal Irish University; but that was an examining body and nothing more; it had no connection with any college. Ireland was far behind both Scotland and England, and yet he ventured to say that it needed University education possibly more than either of these two countries. He remembered talking with a distinguished Irishman, a Unionist, holding a high position, who said that, for conscience sake, clever young men in Ireland, sons of middle-class parents, who would in the ordinary course go to a University, refrained from going where their creed forbade them. The result was that their sphere of ambition was narrowed, they were shut out from the higher professions, and had to go into journalism or some such career. He knew nothing more deplorable than the way in which the easy passage from class to class, and the association of people of different opinions in a common basis of culture, which the University gave, was denied the youth of Ireland, and that healing influence taken away from them. He knew it was said on both sides of the House that they did not want any University teaching which was dominated by denominationalism, or by a particular Church. Supposing that to be so, they were leaving three-fourths of the people of Ireland uneducated. Why not concede religious liberty to the people of Ireland? Why make them feel that they must make this sacrifice, or be disloyal to their creed? If the Government chose to be in earnest on this matter, they could deal with this question without violating a single canon laid down by the strongest of their supporters. The hierarchy would not oppose an open University; at any rate they were prepared to acquiesce in it; the Presbyterians of Belfast were ready to acquiesce in it likewise, and it seemed to him a grave responsibility that the Government should come once again with the oft-repeated tale, to which they had listened so frequently in the past, that they could not, as a Government, bring in a measure to deal with this question. Surely it was open to them, holding the views expressed by the right hon. Gentleman, to let the House of Commons decide on this question by a majority. Let the time be given for the House to express its views freely and fully, and let no Party considerations stand in the way of that expression of opinion. Surely the time had come for the Government to take the course shadowed forth in the speech of the right hon. Gentleman. If they did not, this question was doomed to sterility. He did not wonder at the speech of the hon. and learned Member for Waterford, or at his attitude of disgust with the Government. He did not wonder at the hon. and learned Member insisting on the introduction of a Bill. He believed if the Government would find the time, make this question an open one, accept loyally the decision of the House of Commons and bring in legislation to give effect to it, the hon. and learned Member for Waterford would probably be prepared to abate somewhat his hard conditions and assist in carrying it through.

All those things made it extremely difficult to take a progressive course in regard to Ireland. In the last few years there had been a change in the situation of that country. They had witnessed an uprising of a new element in the political situation. What with the deliberations which had taken place in regard to the Irish land question, and now on the education question, the situation in Ireland seemed to him to have very materially altered on all hands. The prejudices of people about Irish self-government, and about the devolution of large powers to the people of Ireland for managing their own affairs were vanishing away. He should like to see that continued and advanced by dealing on some non-Party basis with this question of education. He believed it could be done. What was required was to establish a relation of confidence between the responsible leaders in Ireland, and the responsible leaders over here, and that might be done by consultation. He rejoiced to think that there were other signs of that better state of things, but he was disappointed when an opportunity came in which these hopes might be to some extent realised, that the Government should fall back into the old hopeless position. He sympathised with the right hon. Gentleman, who was wider-minded than some of his colleagues; but he could not think it was worthy of him to allow this opportunity to slip through his fingers. Better to risk the life of the Government than to leave this question in its present position. It was not by trying to save their life in this case that they could save it. It was by taking risks that they could do more for those whom they represented and for the cause of Irish education. He knew of no course which would be more calculated to rouse that enthusiasm which he feared was waning in the supporters of the right hon. Gentleman opposite, than that he should frankly come forward with a great scheme like that which Lord Dunraven had foreshadowed of two colleges in one University, or two open Universities for Ireland, —which he believed would be the best— and commend it to the judgment of the House of Commons, leaving it to the House to deal with it. If that were done he was convinced that the House would assert its true instincts, would recognise the justice of the case of Ireland, and would, by a large majority, pronounce for the settlement of this question, which would redeem them from what he called more than a scandal.

MR. BLAKE (Longford, N.) said that the right hon. Gentleman limited his observations almost entirely to one very striking and most cogent and important illustration, but still only one of the many illustrations given by the hon. Member for Waterford as a justification to the continuous demand of the Irish people for self-government. After the declaration of the Chief Secretary, he differed a little from the views of the right hon. Gentleman as to the good effects which had been produced by the system of Parliamentary manipulation such as he had proposed, in reference to the University question. There was a time when there was a very encouraging debate on non-Party lines on that question, as far as men of light and leading in this House were concerned, but it did not appear to him that, even on that auspicious occasion, those in whose hands the right hon. Gentleman had formally placed the settlement of this question, were in the slightest degree influenced by the arguments, assertions, and views put forward by the leading minds in this House. The right hon. Gentleman said that no advance had been made, but if no advance had been made, it was acknowledged that reasonable and satisfactory views had been assented to on the part of the hierarchy. The Chief Secretary had not denied the statement that no proposal had been made by any responsible Minister, even to the Cabinet of the open mind, to consider the settlement of the Irish University question. That was a statement of a colleague of the right hon. Gentlemen and was quoted and not denied. It was inaction on the part of the right hon. Gentleman not to have made such a proposal, because no one was better qualified to judge the strength of opinion in the quarter to which he had referred the ultimate arbitrament and decision of the question. The Prime Minister and the right hon. Gentleman were throughout responsible. The great majority of the Irish people were acquiescent. That, therefore, was not the quarter to which the question was referred. It was the Londonderry quarter, whose gracious views on liberty, on the extinguishment of religious prejudice, and on the effacement of old notions of religious ascendancy were to prevail.

The right hon. Gentleman referred to the high principles which ought to obtain in the settlement of a question of a religious nature, because he said this question partly partakes of a religious nature; all Party discipline, all ties of comradeship were to be set on one side. The Irish Members, however, now understood the situation; they understood that the hopes, which had not been for the first time excited by negotiations, went a considerable length towards ideas of good feeling and benevolence, and it was hoped would produce corresponding feelings on the part of those to whom they were addressed; the result was that the Irish people were again fooled; they had learned once again the lesson which he thought had been adequately taught by the action of the Prime Minister himself, that after all it was a very doubtful advantage, in the present system of political Parliamentary and Party government, to suggest the existence of open questions and non-Party views on matters of that kind. The Prime Minister, he had no doubt, used all the influence he could. He spoke in this House openly and fully his individual opinion. There was hardly anything he could not do with his followers, but he could not settle the Irish University question. He felt he could not, he found he could not, and he acknowledged he could not. Were they therefore any further forward because the most powerful political personage in the country had expressed his view in favour of the settlement of this question? Were they any better off because the Chief Secretary, speaking for himself alone, had expressed his sympathy while acknowledging his impotence? Could anyone doubt that within one year this question would be settled if the Irish people had the power of settling it? The right hon. Gentleman had made ample confession of the wrong which was being done to the country, but if he refused the Irish people the power of settling their own affairs, he was responsible for the wrong done by this question remaining unsettled because of a prejudice on the part of the people of this country, or the still keener prejudice of the allies of the right hon. Gentleman in Ireland.

The right hon. Gentleman spoke of equal political rights and of equal claims on the time of Parliament. He himself was Irish and had equal claims to justice. Had the situation which now existed in Ireland ever happened in England, at any rate in modern times? General election after general election, notwithstanding alternations of hope and fear, and notwithstanding the difficulties which accumulate around a Party which went on under disappointment and trouble and failure, notwithstanding the allurements of honourable office and emoluments which after all did much towards the devotion of a political Party in this country, the Irish people returned by four to one representatives of one set of political views and aims. Was it conceivable that a question which the Prime Minister acknowledged was a matter of justice, which the Minister mainly responsible for the Government of Ireland regarded as one of justice and capable of settlement, should remain unsettled, although four to one of the population and four to one of the representatives of the country had been calling and calling and calling in vain for a settlement? Is it not a matter for wonder that Ireland, which, centuries and centuries ago, spread the light of learning throughout Europe, and which was now, under very difficult circumstances, still devoted to learning, should be deprived of the benefits of University education? He pointed with pride and satisfaction, as a testimony to the natural capacity of the Irish nation, to the fact that notwithstanding the obstructions which were placed in their way the Irish Members were not afraid or ashamed to enter into conflict in the high field of Parliament and to hold their own in debate against the minority representations from their own country, which was possessed of fortune, had enjoyed University education and was fostered and nurtured in Parliamentary and political ambitions by gifts of honour and place which had been given to an extent not given to any other twenty-one Members of any section of Parliament. The national representation could not only hold their own against that section but also against the rest of the House. He could not understand how any political assembly anxious for the advancement and welfare of all parts of the Kingdom could hesitate about this matter. He could not understand, if the House of Commons believed in the advantages of highly trained intellects, why it should not settle this question. The right hon. Gentleman had referred to a University on the Scottish form; all they wanted in Ireland was a University with the means of doing the work of a University, with a satisfactory endowment and one not to be used as the funds of Trinity College and some of the older Universities were now being used. They wanted money and that was the reason why it was no use in talking about open questions and proposals not made directly by the Government of the day.

The University question was the most cogent evidence of the failure of the Government to do what was best for Ireland. The hon. and learned Member for Waterford had opened the question from the most fundamental point of view. He had opened it as a question of right and justice for the sentiment of the country, and the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary acknowledged that he knew that the hon. and learned Gentlemen had brought forward the question nearest his heart. Yes, but not nearest his heart alone; nearest the hearts of all his colleagues who surrounded him, and the hearts of all those who lived in the country from which the Irish Members came—some of them twenty or thirty years ago — to call for a solution of this problem, nearest to the hearts of those far more numerous and wealthy scions of the Irish race who had been driven, mainly in consequence of the action of the Government, from Irish soil; nearest to the hearts of those millions of Irish who lived in this island, and who told the Government recently what their opinion was; nearest to the hearts of the many abroad in countries which owed allegiance to this Empire, where they had equal political rights, and where they were able to participate in and take their fair share of the control of the destinies of the country which they called their own; yet nearest to their hearts they felt as the sons of Ireland did; nearest to their hearts remained the Irish question, a sentiment not unreasonable and not to be condemned by right feeling men as hostile. In those who had been forced to leave the land of their birth and their homes and who had by a natural process, obtained their political freedom, sentiments of hostility had been largely mitigated, but there remained always a feeling for Irish freedom. That feeling existed in the mighty English-speaking Republic in respect to which it was the greatest desire of this country to obtain permanent political relations of good will and friendship, based on community of tongue and association and community of aspirations in respect to the affairs of the world. The Irish of that country were, and would continue to be, a barrier in the way of this country obtaining its wish until justice was done to Ireland. He had known nothing more remarkable than the effect for good, among the Irish of the United States, of the proposals of Mr. Gladstone for Home Rule.

The right hon. Gentleman had said this question could not be treated as an isolated question, that they could not deal with questions relating to Ireland, Scotland and England separately. The right hon. gentleman called them two metropolitan islands! Two! Let not the right hon. Gentleman mock the Irish Members by calling Ireland a metropolitan island. There was only one metropolis, and that ruled Ireland as well as itself. He accepted the suggestion that in this great question of policy they were entitled to look at the whole situation, and were fully entitled to consider in a question of policy relating to the Empire its relations to the rest of the world. If they wanted to strengthen the Empire as a whole in the face of the world, it was by contentment to Ireland given by the means which had been proved by the Government to give contentment to different places under more difficult conditions that the Empire should be strengthened. The great weakness of this country was its treatment of Ireland, and yet they were told that the weakness must continue for ever. The difficulties spoken of by the right hon. Gentleman with regard to an Irish University were not limited to sentiment about the University. He had spoken of racial and religious questions. As to the racial question, enough had been said. What was the English race? How many strains of blood went to make this composite nation? As to the religious question, in which, however, little Christianity and less charity was to be found, that difficulty had been tersely expressed by the phrase that Home Rule meant Rome Rule. How did it come about first of all that the priest should occupy such a high place with reference to the views of the people of Ireland? That question had already been answered. The educated part of the community, the landlords, had disassociated themselves from the people long ago. The mass of the people, from whom might have been drawn picked men who, with a University education, would have been able to cope with the educated class, had been left uneducated and kept down, they had naturally and reasonably turned towards the Irish priests, and it was only natural that the priests should assume a position of greater prominence in the affairs of their flock than otherwise might have been the case. But what was it that brought forward the Irish priest in political conflicts and made him feel that it was his duty to take that position? It was that this country had all the religious and natural instincts of the people against it. This country had established a union of politics and religion, and had rendered it not only natural and possible but probable that the priest should take an active part in leading those who had been left with no other leaders in the sense of educated men.

The granting of Home Rule would dissolve the relation between the religious faith of one section of the community, and the political condition of the community altogether. Once the dominant pressure of this great national question was ended, there would arise in Ireland the natural and healthful play of difference amongst parties. They would not be parties, Protestant and Catholic; the local questions which came up would be questions into which the religious element would not enter. The parish priest would remain a citizen, influential by reason of his character and the confidence reposed in him, but he would no longer lead the people as one man. His flock would necessarily be divided, and it would be his duty to act according to a wholly altered state of things; the difference of opinion would render it prudent and proper that he should no longer take the prominent part in Irish politics of which complaint was often made. So far for Home Rule, meaning Rome Rule, in the sense of entailing the undue and unhealthy predominance of the priest, it was the one thing which, by a necessary process, would effect the change desired. How could the English people expect the Irish nation to rest contented with the condition in which Irish questions at present stood? How could they expect anything but discontent when Irish representatives in Parliament, in the proportion of four to one, were powerless to obtain relief, and when Irish questions were settled according to the views of the minority of Irish Members, many of whom were always placemen, and almost all expectant placemen? Let Englishmen put themselves in the place of Irishmen. How would they feel if England were as much smaller as she is larger than Ireland, and if her representatives, in the proportion of four to one, were powerless in the common Parliament, and her destinies systematically arranged by the minority? Irishmen would be less than men if they did not insist upon their right to Home Rule. Of course there were questions of difficulty. There was no question at all that any constitutional reform not accomplished by force was a reform granted by Parliament, that any Parliament obtained by Ireland must be a statutory Parliament, and that what Parliament had done Parliament had power to undo. Those propositions naturally and inevitably followed, and they were frankly acknowledged by all Irishmen. What they said was that they would have no mere formal freedom in the Parliament of Ireland, but substantial freedom to govern Ireland according to her own will. He knew how a subordinate Parliament granted by the British Parliament worked; he was aware of the degree of freedom and self-government which existed, although its acts might be disallowed and its charter annulled. Those were great reserve powers with which Irishmen did not propose to quarrel, which were to be used only for the purpose for which they were reserved, and which would leave to the Irish people that reality of self-government which, being a sensible people, was all they cared for.

They had not abated their demands; but would always choose their own time and method for bringing them forward. The Chief Secretary would be wise to wait a little before attempting to teach the Irish Party politics. They had their views as to when a Home Rule Motion should be put forward. There was no sort of wisdom in proposing every session such a Motion as a mere matter of course; it was for them to decide when and how they would challenge the opinion of the House, and probably they understood the game quite as well as the right hon. Gentleman. It was a very abnormal state of things which put the Irish Party and the Irish people at large, in such a relation to the Government of the day that they were about the last to learn what was going on in the concerns of the country. There were whispers in corridors, an occasional letter in the paper—a balon d'essai—signed by a noble Lord, suggestions here and suggestions there, but there was none of the sympathy between governors and governed which ought to exist—except so far as concerned the minority who supported the Administration, who knew everything, and who dictated to the masses of the people, while the representatives of those masses were left to such methods as he had described for understanding the condition of affairs. The Irish people did not conceive the Grattan Parliament to be the failure which had been alleged. If the House considered the then condition of politics, the situation in which the rights of Roman Catholics and popular rights then were, what Grattan's Parliament did, and the progress it made, it would be admitted that Grattan's Parliament needed no defence against the attacks of the right hon. Gentleman. He agreed, however, that Grattan's Parliament was a very different thing from what would now be regarded as an ideal Parliament. As to the contention that Ireland received benefits from the Union, he believed that if she, being a poor country, were governed on a scale having regard to her poverty, if she were not drawn at the heels of the British Parliament, and governed on a scale having reference to so-called Imperial objects—of which many were disastrous failures and others doubtful experiments—her difficulties would not be as great as they at present were. Sweetness of feeling and tone would be compensation for any loss of money by England which was largely drawn out of Ireland, and even when sent over to Ireland very largely expended, not according to the need of the Irish people, but expended extravagantly and for purposes that had not received the assent of the people.

He did not propose at all to enter upon the subject of the Land Act. The proper time for that would be when the amending Bill was introduced. The Chief Secretary had told them that his Bill was going to be limited to the correction of somebody's blunders in draftsmanship, and that he would see that what Parliament intended should be carried out in the Act. He did not propose to open the door for further discussion. They would of course take their own course. Giving the right hon. Gentleman credit for good intentions in connection with the Act of last year, with all his political sagacity illumined by the intimate knowledge of the circumstances and conditions of Irish life by the Irish Members, notwithstanding the happy feeling that prevailed last session, and notwithstanding the utmost desire upon the Irish Benches to minimise causes of difference, yet they were compelled to bring forward many topics; the right hon. Gentleman laboured long and hard to meet their views, but notwithstanding the utmost desire to avoid subjects of contention, and a desire on their part to meet the right hon. Gentleman as far as they could, they were yet compelled last year to speak strongly against, and as far as they could prevent, the passage of certain parts of the Land Bill; this left them now not merely perfectly free but absolutely bound, after experience had demonstrated that these defects which they predicted had already arisen, to take the opportunity of stating them to this House, not merely vindicating their judgment—which was a poor matter—but endeavouring to obtain redress of those things which obstructed the Act. The Irish Members were bound to endeavour to cure the defects in the Act which, if they were allowed to remain, would make the operations of the Act slower, and would prevent its beneficial operation for the people of Ireland, and its safe operation for the people of this country. He rejoiced that they had raised at the opening of the session this inexorable attitude—an attitude which they were sent there to take, and as to which they would be false to their constituencies if they shrunk from maintaining—on the great national question which to their mind embodied and overwhelmed all other questions. All other questions were susceptible of being solved, if Home Rule be granted, by those whose interest it should be to solve them. This solution of the Home Rule question was the one that would relieve them of these questions. There was no alternative to the freedom of Home Rule which they demanded for Ireland.

MR. AUSTIN TAYLOR (Liverpool, E. Toxteth) said that all the enthusiasm on the Unionist side of the House was so much concentrated in another quarter, namely, in the corner occupied by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, that there was scarcely any enthusiasm for the Government itself. It never occurred to him that the hon. Member for Haddingtonshire would prescribe as a tonic for the Government an Irish Roman Catholic University Bill. That might improve the position of the Government in Ireland, but in various parts of England it would be received with the greatest disfavour, and so far from improving their position and avoiding a catastrophe, he could not conceive anything more likely to precipitate divisions in a Party, already divided, than what had been suggested across the floor of the House by the right hon. and learned Member for Haddingtonshire. The question of Home Rule which at the moment occupied their minds was one which possibly to-day needed no definition, nor was it necessary for hon. Members on the Government side of the House to define their position, which remained as it was when the question was first raised. Perhaps in the present state of Parties and the present divided state of public opinion it might be desirable to re-affirm from all sides of the Unionist Party their determination to adhere to the Union as one of the main factors o Unionist policy. He readily understood the reasons which led the Chief Secretary to define, as he had done with admirable lucidity, his own position on the question. Even the hon. and learned Member for Waterford admitted that if every Irish grievance was removed the demand for Home Rule would still remain in all its pristine vigour. This was not a very encouraging prospect for English politicians who believed that by gradually removing Irish grievances they were removing arguments for Home Rule. As he understood the hon. and learned Member for Waterford, if every Irish grievance and injustice were swept away to-morrow the demand of the Irish people for Home Rule would remain and they would still be confronted with this claim for independence. He thought on the Government side of the House they ought to re-affirm their determination, not from motives of bigotry or racial prejudice, but from the point of view of practical politics, that they would not go back one single inch upon the Union or the position they had taken up in regard to it.

On this question of a Roman Catholic University for Ireland he would like to say a word or two. He had listened carefully to the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and he must confess that he could not quite make out what was his position on this question. He understood the right hon. Gentleman to say that the Government did not propose to bring in any measure dealing with University education in Ireland this session. But there was something in the words and also in the manner of the right hon. Gentleman which gave him the impression that if action were taken by a private Member on this subject that action would receive the benevolent neutrality, and possibly the benevolent interest, of His Majesty's Government. That seemed to him something of the same attitude that the Government had adopted on another question. The Government thought that on the fiscal question the country was not yet ripe for food taxation, and, therefore, while public opinion was gradually maturing, the Cabinet assumed the attitude of not initiating a policy. They left it to a private individual—certainly not an ordinary private individual, but one who stood high in the estimation of his countrymen—to educate the country to the point of legislation. In the same way it appeared to him that the Government were going to wait until the House was educated up to the point of sanctioning a scheme for a Roman Catholic University in Ireland. They were not going boldly to take the responsibility of initiating such legislation, but they were going to wait and affect a benevolent interest to the missionary efforts of private individuals.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: Send Jesse Collings out.

MR. AUSTIN TAYLOR was bound to say that suggestion never occurred to him. It might commend itself to the hon. Member.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: It would be in keeping with the rest of their actions.

MR. AUSTIN TAYLOR said he was very much surprised to hear from the hon. and learned Member for Waterford that the Conservative Party was pledged to this policy. He did not think that the Conservative Party was pledged to the policy of a Roman Catholic University for Ireland. He turned up a speech of the present Prime Minister delivered in 1900 when this question was last debated in the House. The right hon. Gentleman used some remarkable words on that occasion to the effect that this was an agreed upon open question between both Front Benches, and therefore he could not assume responsibility in the matter except for himself. If the Prime Minister three years ago could only treat this matter as an agreed upon open question between the two Front Benches certainly it was clear that he could not pledge his Party, and he could not see that those who had entered this House since the date when the right hon. Gentleman spoke, were in any way pledged to such a policy. For his part he should like to say definitely and distinctly that if the Prime Minister had pledged, as was assumed, the Conservative Party to any policy of establishing a Roman Catholic University for Ireland he emphatically repudiated any such pledge so far as he was concerned.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: The thing is done.

Mr. AUSTIN TAYLOR said he was free from responsibility in the matter, and he was perfectly entitled to make his position clear to the House. The previous speaker spoke of the proposed University for Ireland in a way which placed the proposal in a new light to him. If he understood the hon. Member rightly he spoke of it as a means of emancipating the people of Ireland from the leadership and guidance of the priests. He must confess that shed quite a flood of light on the proposal. It had been to him one of the standing mysteries of the Irish people that, while they were so determined to assert their freedom and their civil rights, they were so emphatic in maintaining and sheltering clerical authority in religious matters. It did seem to him a curious proposal that they should endeavour to relieve the masses of the people in Ireland from undue dependence on priestly influence by suggesting the setting up and endowment of what, so far as he knew at present, could be nothing else but a close religious corporation for the guidance of the great masses of the people. He said that, of course, subject to the details of any scheme that might be put before them, but, pending its production by a private individual or the Government, he desired not to discuss this matter further. He felt bound to say that whether the Motion came before the House from a private individual or from the Government, those who in this House had fought for the principle of liberty in this country and in opposition to religious monopoly in all its forms were justified in scrutinising most closely any proposal to set up similar institutions even in a country where, he admitted, they were much more consonant with the spirit of the people. It was in that spirit that any such proposal would be jealously and carefully scrutinised by a very large body of Members on that side of the House, not merely by that small minority from Ireland to which allusion had been made, but by those who represented many English constituencies whose feelings on this matter were strongly and deeply moved.

*Mr. T. W. RUSSELL said there were two matters in the speech of the Chief Secretary to which he wished to refer. The right hon. Gentleman opened by defending the Board of Works, and he had defended, as he had a perfect right to do, the appointment of his private secretary to the office of Commissioner of Works. Mr. Hanson was a very able man. No one who knew his work during the passing of the Land Bill would deny it, but he wished to point out that this Board had for a long time been the dumping ground of private secretaries. He said advisedly that the monuments of incapacity of that Board were strewn all over the country. There was no Board that had done worse work in Ireland, and that was saying a great deal. He did not care whether a man was English, Scotch, or Irish if the work was properly done, but anyone who cared to compare the Local Government administration in England with that of Ireland would find a very great difference, and that not in favour of Ireland.

The next question he wished to refer to was that of the Land Act. He should have been glad to leave this to the occasion when the Amendment on the subject was proposed, but the Chief Secretary went at great length into the subject and that led him to infer the probability that the Amendment would never be reached. He took it that the Chief Secretary had put his case on the Land Act before the House, and for all practical purposes the debate was at an end. [Cries of "No!"] That was his opinion, and he proposed to say what he had to say upon it now that he had the chance. Nobody had declared the Land Act to be a failure. Nobody could say anything of the kind. Before the Chief Secretary spoke tonight it was well known that more than £1,000,000 worth of Irish land had been sold, and agreements and arrangements were being made for at least £2,000,000 worth more. While he did not know any responsible person who had declared the Land Act to be a failure there were things that required to be said about it. He would not deal with Mr. Justice Ross's judgment here. It was a landlords' question in one sense. But if the landlord did not get the bonus there would be more to pay for the land. He did not complain of the decision. Lawyers in Ireland were agreed that the decision was justified by the wording of the Act, but they all agreed that a decision the other way would have been equally justified. Mr. Justice Ross had knocked the Land Act over for the present, and it did not surprise anybody who had followed the history of Land Acts in the past. There was a much more serious matter, and he trusted the Chief Secretary, if he was going to deal with the question, would see to it. What was one of the great objects of the Land Act? One of the great objects was to affect what was called the Western problem. He very much doubted if the Chief Secretary, with all his powers and all his eloquence, could have got the Bill through the House if it had not been that the House felt something was at last going to be done in earnest for the Western people. What did it come to? The Land Act was in a precarious position. If the landlords in the West of Ireland were able to sell their patches of land—those uneconomic holdings of four and five acres in extent—at a high price and retain the grazing lands because the bonus could not be paid on untenanted land—and that was the opinion prevailing—the position was one of the gravest danger. The main purpose of the Act would be frustrated if these men were allowed to sell their patches of land, which were no security for the British taxpayer, and to retain their grazing lands. The problem of the land in the West of Ireland was unsettled now.

There was another matter to which he wished to refer—the condition of the Act as regarded Ulster. Now, he had been of one opinion all through this controversy in regard to the Ulster landlords. When he seconded the Motion of the hon. Member for Waterford in February, 1900, he stated that the basis of the Ulster position for compulsion was the belief universally felt in Ulster that the landlords there would not sell. They got their rents regularly; they were paid as regularly as the interest on Consols; they brought more than Consols or any other gilt-edged security, and why should they sell? At the Land Conference they had the assurance that if the demand for compulsion was given up the landlords would be willing to sell, provided they secured their second term net income. Compulsion was therefore waived. And what happened in Ulster? He spoke from actual knowledge, because careful records had been kept, and reports were received from every estate, where the landlords had offered to sell or where the tenants were willing to purchase. Twenty-two of the largest landlords had refused to sell on any terms, headed by the Marquess of Downshire—a landlord with some 4,000 or 5,000 tenants. And mark, Lord Downshire was not a landlord with an evil character, but a landlord the history of whose estate stretched back into last century as owned by the best landlord Ulster ever had. Let the House consider the position of these tenants. They were not men who refused to pay their rents. They were not men who had caused disorder and the necessity for the police. ["Hear, hear" from the IRISH Benches.] Precisely, he had been told that if they had they would have been better off. That was what his friends opposite told him. He maintained that these men had been admirable citizens of this country, and loyal in every sense of the word. And now they were forced to look on whilst men in the South and West of Ireland, who had avowedly given trouble, were getting their land by State aid, and would be occupying owners with enormous State advantages, while they were grinding out judicial rents to the landlords who would not comply with the wish of Parliament that the partnership should end. There was a second class of landlords who came forward with the plea :—"I do not want to sell my land; my family has been here for generations, for centuries. The relations between the tenants and myself have been of the best character. I do not want to sell, but in order to comply with the evident wish of Parliament I will do so upon terms." And then, curiously alive to the wish of Parliament, they put their land up roughly at twenty-seven and a quarter years purchase of the rent with the bonus added! Now, under the Ashbourne Acts and the Act of 1891 the average price of land in Ulster was eighteen years purchase, and these gentlemen would sell to their tenants at thirty years purchase, including the bonus. That was the second class of landlords they had to face in Ulster. What had been done? Two considerable estates had been sold. One was the estate of Mr. Archdale in North Fermanagh, who was for the tenants all through. His agent proposed terms which were unacceptable to the tenants, but when Mr. Archdale heard of it he stepped in and sold at reasonable terms. The other estate which had been sold was that of Mr. Close in County Armagh. There were a handful of small properties with fifteen or twenty tenants which had also been sold. There could be no doubt that only a very few sales had taken place, and what was worse than that, the negotiations had, to a large extent, been broken off. Take his own constituency. What had been the usual reception the tenants had got? The largest owner in South Tyrone sent a letter to his tenants. He stated that he bought his land at a high price. If they were willing to pay a certain sum for it they could have it, if not he had nothing more to say to them. There were 600 tenants on that estate, and they were very likely to vote strongly Unionist at the next election. What was likely to happen if this went on in Ulster was that the Ulster Members would be found sitting on the Opposition side, and not on the Ministerial Benches.

MR. STOCK (Liverpool, Walton): You will be there!

*MR. T. W. RUSSELL: Oh no, I wont be there (on the Opposition Benches). You are going over. I am going to stay where I am; I am going to stay where I am whatever happens. I have got a firm grip of my holding and I mean to keep it. What he wanted to point out was this: One of these landlords replied the other day to a perfectly respectful request from the tenantry on the estate, saying—

> "So and so in one part of the country has got so much, so and so in another part has got so much. This part is more peaceable than either, and I ought to get more."

Did that require any comment? A circular was put into his hand to-day issued by one of the largest land agents in Ireland and printed just as an Act of Parliament was printed—on the same kind of paper. Now what did that circular which was issued on four estates in Ulster say? It gave some elaborate calculations, which of course the farmers would not pay attention to because they had got their own idea about the arithmetic of the question, but the land agent went on, and in italics pointed out that Mr. Chamberlain's scheme was coming on—[NATIONALIST cries of "Oh"]—that it would raise the price of agricultural produce, that they would be better off and would be able to pay him more. The whole thing was an elaborate conspiracy to boom the price of land, to get too much out of the tenants, and put a great burden upon their shoulders first and ultimately on the shoulders of the British taxpayers. He confessed he did not see what the right hon. Gentleman was to do with the present situation in Ulster. All he could say was that it was a very grave and dangerous situation. These men, let him tell the Chief Secretary, were not easily roused, but when they were roused they knew what to do—and in Irish history they had done it before. The Ulster tenants who had fought for the Union, who had paid their rent, who had performed all the duties of citizenship, would not allow an Act of Parliament to be so perverted by men who cared nothing for the peace of the country but only for their own pockets. They would not allow an Act of Parliament to be so perverted that it would bring advantages and blessings to the men of the South and West which would be denied to their comrades in the North of Ireland. That was the position in Ulster and a General Election would prove it. He did not see that the Chief Secretary could intervene in a matter like that at present. It would have to be done by Parliament—he supposed very much as the education question was settled—by independent Members bringing in Resolutions on Bills. That was the way the Government was acting. All sense of responsibility was done away with. But there was one remedy which was clear and these Ulster tenants had made up their minds. What was the principle underlying the Land Act of 1881? The principle was so far as rent was concerned that where the landlord and the tenant failed to agree as to the rent that rent was fixed by a Parliamentary tribunal. The Land Court decided what the rent was to be. To apply that principle was not an outrage against any law. If the landlord selling and the tenant buying could not agree, then let the Estate Commissioners fix the price subject to the condition the landlords accepted at the Land Conference, that they should be secured their second-term net income. That would be a perfectly straight proposal. Your Ulster landlord cared nothing for the peace of the country. The whole battle of the Union with the Ulster landlord had been a battle for rent. He told the House frankly that so long as these gentlemen took up that position, and had no respect for the wishes of Parliament, and went back upon the terms they agreed to at the Land Conference, the position would be serious. He had never yet advised any tenant to give his landlord less than would secure his second-term net income. He told the House that if that state of things went on the Ulster tenants would force a settlement upon the lines adopted by Parliament as regarded rent, and they would be justified in doing so as honest citizens.

MR. POWER (Waterford, E.) said they had heard a speech from the Irish Chief Secretary, and in that speech he said it was a principle of the Unionist Government to endeavour to ascertain what Irish opinion was and then to endeavour to legislate on those opinions. Upon that principle he could not see why, when Irish public opinion was almost unanimous upon this great question, that legislation should not be introduced. In all other countries if a majority of a nation favoured a particular policy, that policy as a rule was adopted; but the fact that the Irish representatives by a large majority favoured any particular measure was enough to make the Unionist Government go against that measure. If Irishmen regarded a Bill in a certain light it was absolutely certain that the majority of the Unionist Party would go against it. It had been held that, whenever they were able to prove any grievance they only had to bring it before Parliament and it would be removed. Irish Nationalists, however, had always maintained that even if the British Parliament had the time it had not the will to deal with Irish legislation. Even if the British Parliament had the will to legislate for Ireland it had not the time. With regard to education, millions of pounds had been spent upon primary and secondary education in Ireland, and most of the money had been spent in bolstering up a system of education which the vast majority of the Irish people disapproved of, and which they would probably never give their adhesion to. He was bound to say, with regard to the question of Irish education, that he was forced to the conclusion that largely at the bottom of this University and education question, lay the question of bigotry. Those who studied the history of Ireland could arrive at no other conclusion. It would have been far easier in the past for the people of Ireland to have bowed the knee to the oppressor, but they had never been mere time-servers. The history of Ireland showed the rare devotion of her people to their old political and religious faith. If they had been time-servers, they would have bent the knee before the oppressor and accepted the position which was forced upon them by conquest. But the Irish people believed in a higher ideal; they were proud of the sufferings of their forefathers, who had proved their devotion to their country through centuries of persecution. He thought this debate had furnished them with an additional reason for demanding the restoration of their Parliament in Ireland, without which they could never have peace and contentment in that country. The speech of the Chief Secretary was a very remarkable one, and it had furnished them with another proof of the incompetence of this country in dealing with any Irish matter, no matter how thoroughly Irish opinion was made up on the subject. He had heard the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bristol give distinct pledges with regard to the University question, and he had also heard the Prime Minister make explicit promises upon the same subject, but not a single one of those promises had been complied with. Did anyone imagine that that state of things could prevail in the Home Rule Parliament? When the Irish Parliament was throttled it had a great future before it, one of its principal Bills would have been directed towards the emancipation of the Irish people. If that Parliament had been allowed to exist they would not now have been discussing the University question, for religious education would have been settled upon a basis honourable to all classes, and useful to the Irish nation. The Irish Parliament, although Protestant, had it continued to exist, would have done more good for Ireland in ten years than this country has attempted to do since the Union was brought about between the two countries.

Whatever test they applied to Home Rule, it could not be denied that British rule in Ireland had been a dismal failure, for the people were now in a chronic state of poverty, and after a wet summer they were in absolute want. During the famine in the West of Ireland, the right hon. Gentleman was compelled to institute Government relief work, and that proved the awful poverty which existed in those districts, although the authorities endeavoured to deny it. In times of distress the men's wages in those districts were as low as 3s. per week, and the highest pay which any able-bodied man got on those relief works was 6s. a week without any food, and even for these miserable wages men in the West of Ireland were prepared to tramp long distances. In most civilised countries which were properly governed the population increased, but in Ireland the population had largely decreased. Since the time of Queen Elizabeth there had not been a reign more disastrous to Ireland than the reign of the late Queen. In the decade 1842 to 1852 more than 4,000,000 people were evicted from homes built by themselves on farms reclaimed by themselves, and within the same period no less than 1,250,000 persons perished from starvation. Even now in his constituency people pointed to the places where the dead carts went round collecting the bodies of those who had died of starvation, and pointed to the vast graves into which, without coffins, they were shot. The remedy for the present state of things was to throw upon the people of Ireland the sense of responsibility and make them accountable for the government of the country. In the dominions of the Empire there were many self-governing colonies, and those colonies had made great progress. In the one case where Home Rule was refused, for some time no progress had been made. Prosperity had always followed the granting of Home Rule. As Mr. Gladstone had said, there were some who believed the Irish had been born with a double dose of original sin, and with such persons there was no arguing, but the Irish people believed they could rule their own country, and that success would attend their efforts. They had been told that it would disintegrate the Empire if Home Rule were granted to Ireland; that if our Parliament was added to those that existed in the Empire, the Empire would crumble to the ground. Such a suggestion was tampering with the intelligence of man. In 1885 he was invited to address a constituency in the Tory interest, and although he did not care for the task he went, and the reason that influenced him was that he was told that if the Unionist Party could be returned with a working majority the Unionist Party would not only grant Home Rule to Ireland, but give the Irish Parliament the right to protect its industries, not only against foreign, but also English imports. It was curious how this policy of Protection should have worked in the minds of the Irish people as it had done ever since 1885. He would ask the English people to get out of their minds the idea that the Irish people could ever give up their attachment to their native Parliament, without which they could have no prosperity or success. If the Government would throw on the people of Ireland the responsibility for controlling their own affairs and preserving law and order in that country they would establish a condition of peace and contentment which none of the Coercion Acts had ever been able to do.

Sir ROBERT REID (Dumfries Burghs) said he desired to say a few words, because he was unwilling that no Member on his side of the House should express an opinion on a subject which had so much engrossed the attention of the Liberal Party. He spoke, of course, for himself alone, but he wished to say that he held the same opinion that he held when Mr. Gladstone's proposal was made to the country. It was quite unnecessary to enter on an argument in favour of this policy of Home Rule or upon any question of machinery, or how such a policy was to be carried out. It was a question of principle. The policy was brought forward, not as a matter of plain expediency, but as a matter of sacred duty, and in that light it was regarded by the many hon. Gentlemen who supported Mr. Gladstone's views. He could quite understand that hon. Gentlemen might say they had changed their minds upon this subject. That was a perfectly honourable position to take up, though he did not think it was a wise one. It was also quite competent for hon. Gentlemen to say they thought it necessary to postpone the consideration of this policy; but such a position should be supported by an explicit statement of the reasons why it was taken up, and by an equally explicit statement of the alternative policy. He believed the present time was particularly propitious for entertaining this important question seeing that the House of Commons had been reduced to such a condition of congestion that its business could not be carried on effectively. The Estimates could not now be considered in the way all desired they should be considered, as there were only a limited number of days allowed, great questions of foreign and domestic policy were left unconsidered or not fully considered, and the expenditure of the country did not receive the investigation it should. They all knew the conditions of government in Ireland, and it seemed to him that an opportunity of linking together the interests of Great Britain and Ireland had not been seized. He repeated that he had risen because he thought it desirable that some hon. Members on his side of the House, for themselves only, should express the strong feeling they now entertained, as strong as ever, of the urgent necessity of dealing with this important question.

*Mr. SLOAN (Belfast, S.) said he thought it was only proper that some statement should be made by the representatives of the North of Ireland with regard to their attitude towards Home Rule. Home Rule, in their opinion, was not local self-government in the terms demonstrated there by several Members; but it was a question of Rome Rule, and it was on that ground that they offered a strenuous opposition. It struck him very forcibly that if they had in Ireland some better manifestation of the spirit of equality towards those who were in a minority, there might be a posibility of giving some considertion to the demands that had been made both by the Irish Members and by the Liberal Party. He remembered so recently as the 22nd or 24th of January that one man in the town of Drogheda was the victim of threatenings and abuse led by three or four Roman Catholic priests, and that in order to obtain the bare necessities of life he had to make application in Dublin. He might refer to persecutions in Limerick or to the persecution of Dr. Long, or to the aims and methods of the recently organised Catholic association which had for its object the boycotting of the Protestants out of their habitations. If Parliament gave such a Party self-government the people to whom he referred would be compelled to look for other places where they could have honest employment, live peaceable lives, and have some equality. He had spoken to many Members who were strongly convinced that Home Rule would be the salvation of Ireland, but if the efforts made for Home Rule in this House by the hon.

Members on the Nationalist Benches were turned in the direction of bringing peace and blessing to the people whom they represented, and to the clerical element of the south and west of Ireland it would have a great deal to do with the enlightenment of Members on the Government side of the House, as to their ability to control their own affairs. The Government had often made concessions to Ireland which in the opinion of some of them had been very one-sided. The proposal to establish a Roman Catholic University was one (no matter what Government brought it in) which would have the strenuous and uncompromising opposition of the Protestants of the north of Ireland. He felt there was a great deal to be said on both sides of the question, but if persons with Protestant convictions were to be literally forced to become members of the United Irish League in order to get the bare necessities of life, what would be the state of affairs if that organisation got the whole control of the affairs of the country? If there was to be no peace until Home Rule were granted they would have to put up with the turmoil and obstruction to which the House was accustomed, and they would appeal to the country to send to this House a majority of Members who were so opposed to Home Rule that business might be carried on notwithstanding the obstruction of Members representing the west and south of Ireland. He denied that this was a question of bigotry and intolerance. Hon. Members opposite had their opinion and they on the Government side of the House had their opinion, which was that they were better under the rule which they had at the present time than they would be if they had a Parliament at College Green, for the simple reason that the hon. Members opposite would always be in the majority, it would be a question of Roman Catholicism versus Protestantism, and anything in the interests of the Roman Catholic Church would have the acceptance of the hon. Members, while the minority would be subject to their verdict whether it were right or wrong. He absolutely repudiated the assertion that the Presbyterians of Belfast were in favour of a Roman Catholic University. Whatever might be the opinion of individual members of the Government, he was glad to know that it was not their intention to bring in a Bill this session dealing with this controversial question, on which there was such difference of opinion in Ireland. He hoped that in future Irish Members would not consider him any worse in his bigotry then they were in theirs.

MR. JOSEPH DEVLIN (Kilkenny, N.) said there appeared to be ignorance as to why the Government had not introduced an University Bill for Ireland. The real reason was to be found in the hon. Member for South Belfast; he being the representative of the policy which had rendered it impossible for the Government to grant educational justice to Ireland. The hon. Member was the chief orator of an institution known as the "Customs House steps" in Belfast, the arena of the lovely and beneficent charity he had so beautifully preached this afternoon, but so beneficent was his mission in Belfast that he had been expelled from the Orange Lodge for the intolerance he had displayed. He (the speaker) emphatically denied that there had ever been any intolerance to Protestants as alleged by the hon. Member, but would the House believe that for years the hon. Member himself had been engaged in endeavouring to make the lives of decent and respectable Catholics impossible in Belfast, and in preaching a policy not only of bigotry but of boycotting towards Catholics?

MR. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, it is scarcely fair that the hon. Member should charge me with advocating boycotting without some fundamental proof of what he says.

MR. JOSEPH DEVLIN: The police records of the prosecution of his chief associate, a man on whose labour he now bases his reputation, show that his chief associate has been imprisoned for eighteen months for preaching the policy of boycotting and assassination of Catholics.

MR. SLOAN: Might I ask the hon. Member for an instance in which I have been engaged in a mission of boycotting Roman Catholics.

Mr. JOSEPH DEVLIN: The hon. Member has preached at the Customs House steps that his hearers should not go into the houses of Catholic traders—particularly those of Catholic publicans, to whom they are the chief customers.

Mr. SLOAN: May I, with all due respect, say to the hon. Member that the advice I gave to individuals not to go to public-houses was not confined to Catholics but was universal, viz., that they should not go into any public-houses.

Mr. JOSEPH DEVLIN said the hon. Member knew his hearers would go into public-houses of some description, but he urged them not to go into those conducted by Catholics. He did not object to the hon. Member preaching on the Customs House steps in favour of his auditors not going to public-houses, but when he came to the House of Commons with words of peace on his lips while pursuing a policy of hatred against the Catholic minority in Belfast, the House had a right to understand what his position really was. He, however, had risen for the purpose, not of discussing the methods by which the hon. Member carried on his religious propaganda, but of pointing out that the hon. Member was the chief obstacle to the granting of a Catholic University to Ireland. The Chief Secretary had stated that he would leave the matter an open question. It was becoming the customary policy of the Government to leave every matter of transcendent importance an open question. The right hon. Gentleman was, he believed, in favour of educational justice being done; the Prime Minister had made clear pronouncements on the subject. Earl Cadogan had declared for a Catholic University, and other Members in and out of the Cabinet had spoken on the same side—but all these representative men conferred nothing. The position was controlled by Lord Londonderry, who was the agent of the intolerant section in Ireland as he was the agent of all the retrogressive forces in England.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [3rd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,—

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Laurence Hardy.)

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

Mr. JOSEPH DEVLIN said the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary in the course of his speech, when defending himself, said it was always his idea to consult Irish opinion in those matters of conduct affecting Ireland which had been before the House for its consideration. The constitutional manner in which the opinion of all peoples could be expressed was through their representatives in this House, but the Irish Members had not been consulted, either directly or indirectly, on any question affecting the well-being of their country. Let them take the question of the University and equality for the Catholics of Ireland. How had Irish opinion been consulted in that matter? Ninety per cent. of the Irish Members of that House were in favour of a measure of education and justice for the Catholics of Ireland. The constitutional will of the Irish nation had been expressed to-day in a manner in which an opinion had not been expressed in any part of the world before. Lord Dunraven, the leading Unionist landlord and the spokesman of the Irish Unionist Party, had actually come forward and submitted a proposal for a University, which had been accepted by everyone who was just and tolerant in the country. Protestant Bishops had come forward and supported that proposal as one worthy of acceptance by the people of Ireland. The Leader of the Nationalist Party had spoken the will of the great majority of the people of Ireland; great public meetings of all schools of thought in Ireland had been held in every county, at which not only were strong claims made for equity and justice, but passionate appeals made for this great educational reform, and if that was not an expression of the will of the people he could not say what was. The right hon. Gentleman had been talking with his tongue in his cheek. He did not mean what he said. It was his function to present proposals to the House and to govern Ireland, and if he abrogated those functions of government he should let them take the responsibility on their own shoulders. They were the representatives of the great majority, but a little rabid faction in the north of Ireland was to be the deciding factor in matters which so largely affected Ireland. This University question had been dangled before the Irish people for petty and contemptible political purposes. In Gateshead, during the time of the election, Lord Morpeth, the candidate of the Government, held out the promise of a Catholic University for Irelandin order to attract the votes of the English Catholics, and in this way lure the Irish people from the cause for which Irish representatives were pleading to-day. On the other hand, in Ireland, Lord Londonderry appealed to the lowest and basest passions of a small and bigoted minority in order to secure the landlord vote. In relation to the University, the Government had pursued a double-faced and hypocritical policy. The matter had been fully considered by the Government, and yet it was dangled before the Catholic electors of England and Ireland in order that they might be lured away from Home Rule, which was the only thing which could settle the question. He objected, as an Irish Catholic, to being denied those educational advantages, which encouraged intellectual progress and inspired intellectual effort, in the interest of a pampered few in Ireland, who had lived and thrived upon the illiterate and uneducated people of Ireland. The only possible policy for Ireland had been declared from the Irish Benches to-day. He believed if the Government introduced a University Bill to-morrow, it would, like the Land Bill, be unsatisfactory. Home Rule was the only possible means by which this and other great changes for the better, in the interests of the Irish race, could be brought about. Therefore he supported the speakers who had gone before him on those Benches. The Chief Secretary and the Attorney-General of a tottering Government had been unmasked to-day, and the Party of which he was a member — by the strength of its unity, its discipline and belief in its ultimate aims —would compel the Government to give to Ireland that which alone could give satisfaction and ultimate prosperity to their race—namely, Home Rule. This question of the University was not merely one question; it had been introduced into the debate as the last logical reason why the justice which Irish Members as the representatives of their constituents demanded in the name of the Irish people should be given.

At no time before had the people been so united. They had seen that during the hundred years that this Parliament had operated, their country had gone down in population, their lands had gone out of cultivation, and their towns were crumbling to the dust. They had been denied educational advantages, and the only difference now was that everything was being done by the Government with better consideration, although an equally mean policy was being pursued, as in the days when they tried to destroy the Irish nation by more cruel methods. The Government must remember that their policy throughout had failed to give satisfaction to the people. They now said the Irish people were disloyal, and that they did not consider the Empire in the manner in which they ought; therefore the Government had failed not only from an Irish point of view but from an Imperial point of view, and the only policy for this Parliament was to give Ireland a great institution of government of its own, where at least the will of the people would be respected, and where Irish genius and capacity would be allowed fairplay in the government of the country whose destiny and fortunes were committed to their care. Notwithstanding the attempts to make Ireland illiterate, to rob them of those educational advantages which had been given to the minority of Ireland, let them look at what the Irish had done in the path of progress and democracy in every English-speaking nation of the world. In Amercia they could see the Irish capacity for government and Irish brawn and Irish brain building up the fabric of that mighty Republic 3,000 miles away. In Canada the Members of the House of Commons almost unanimously affirmed the desirability and justice of Ireland being given the right to govern itself. In order to retain Australia it was being found necessary practically to tax the food of the people, yet when Canada spoke out in favour of Home Rule for Ireland the late Colonial Secretary did not think it worth while to place the message sent by the Canadian Prime Minister to the King upon the Tables of the Houses until forced to do so by the Irish Party. Therefore in his opinion, on every ground, Ireland was entitled to a Parliament of its own. The University question, raised in the House to-day, was the last great proof of the necessity for Ireland having returned to her her own Parliament, and for his part he was certain with regard to the base charge which had been made against the people, that the tolerant spirit always displayed by them, except in one corner of Ulster, would continue, and the charge against the Catholics that they persecuted those with whose religious creed they disagreed would be found to be false. Leader after Leader of the Irish Party had been Protestants, and it was a slander on the Irish race to say that Irish Catholics had ever treated Irish Protestants with other than the warmest consideration. That attitude would be more accentuated when Ireland received Home Rule. He associated himself with his colleagues on this subject, and declared that whatever might happen to English Parties the Irish question would last until the problem had been solved in the only way in which it could be solved, and when it was solved it would be better for Ireland, for England, and humanity.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.) said that it was necessary to bring this question forward in order to bring to the blunted intelligence of the people of this country the fact that Ireland was in earnest with regard to this matter. He had been eighteen years in this House, and during that time had never except on one occasion made a speech directly on Home Rule. On the other hand he had never spoken a word in the House on any other subject, whether it concerned Egypt or Peru or anywhere else, without seeing how far he could make his speech affect the Irish question and force it on the attention of the House in such a manner that the House would be glad to get rid of the Irish Members and restore them to their own country. He repudiated the high and optimistic tone of the Chief Secretary. The right hon. Gentleman was Under-Secretary of State for War when Lord Wolseley was Commander-in-Chief, and he hoped the right hon. Gentleman had read all the evidence in the War Report. Lord Wolseley had said in his evidence that there was a matter which they could not speak of in public or discuss in the House of Commons, and that was the fact that they had to remove Irish Militia regiments to England in time of war and replace them by English Militia regiments, because they could not trust Irishmen in Ireland with arms in their hands, and these were the base methods by which the Union was being kept up.

With regard to what had been said by the hon. and learned Chairman of the Party as to the Members of the Party, the Party was not only a united one but an inapproachable one. Since they had had the franchise they had never touched English money, or accepted place under the Government. They had devoted their energies to going their own way, to obtain their own Parliament on College Green, where Irish laws should be made. So far as the Ulster Unionist Members were concerned, no body of men since 1885 had been so well paid for their loyalty Since 1885, there had been some twenty-eight Ulster Unionist Members in the House, of that number two, and two only, left the House of Commons without getting office or place under the Crown. Three went out of the House before they got their reward, because they died, one left because he was expelled, two left because their pecuniary circumstances necessitated it, five became judges at £3,000 a year, one became a Peer, and the remainder took small minor offices, such as the Mastership of the Mint, and things of that kind. The Chief Secretary, in his finest literary style, said Grattan's Parliament was a failure. It was nothing of the kind, and when Grattan, five years after the Parliament was destroyed, came to this House, he said at the close of his speech, with evident emotion, when referring to that Parliament—

> "The Parliament of Ireland, whose cradle he had rocked, he mourned to its grave."

The old Irish Parliament was composed exclusively of Protestants, and what did that Protestant Parliament do? Why in 1793 they enfranchised Irish Catholics. They admitted Catholics to both grand and common juries and allowed them to form part of the Army, and he believed that had that Parliament not been put an end to by the carrying of the Union it would have given full emancipation to the Irish Catholics. Mr. Lecky had shown in his history that having regard to the tendency of the age the Irish Protestant Parliament was the most liberal Parliament in the world. He believed that Irish Protestants today would be liberal if the English Government would let them alone, and not endeavour to set Protestant against Catholic and Catholic against Protestant. It was ridiculous for English statesmen to say, in Piccadilly language, that the Irish Parliament was a failure. Would the hon. and gallant Member opposite get up and despise the Irish Parliament.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON (Armagh, N.): No.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL said he was glad the right hon. and gallant Gentleman said "no," although it had weakened the force of the argument he was going to use. To his knowledge the grandfather of the right hon. Gentleman was offered a peerage and a bribe of £30,000 if he would vote for the Union, and he felt sure that his right hon. and gallant friend was now a happier man than if he had been a Peer with a history of that kind behind him. For every word he was about to utter upon this question he had documentary evidence. The Irish Parliament was destroyed for this reason. In the first place there was a revolutionary wave all over the country during the various negotiations between the Irish Secretary and the English Secretary, who was then responsible for Irish government. Negotiations were then going on for the carrying of the Union. At that time the Irish Parliament was on the eve of reforming itself, but it was nevertheless destroyed, and Irish reforms were kept back for another thirty-five years. It was well known in this country at the time that when Irishmen were denied reform they adopted unconstitutional methods, and that was what the people of this country wished Ireland to do in order to give them an excuse for putting an end to the Irish Parliament. The Irish rebellion was fomented by the English Government in order to carry the Union, and it was allowed to go on to a certain stage. One year before the Irish rebellion Lord Castlereagh, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and the Duke of Portland had every step of that revolutionary movement in their hands, and yet they took no steps to suppress it. He wished to tell them what this Irish Parliament which was said to be a failure, had done. It passed all those popular measures to which he had alluded. At that period a meeting of the Irish Bar was held to protest against the Union, and a majority of them voted against it. Three years afterwards, of the thirty-three members of the Irish Bar, only three were not then "placed," and the whole Bench was stuffed with them. Lord Clare, the greatest opponent of Irish rights and liberties, who spoke of Ireland as "this damnable country," said at that time that Ireland was increasing in prosperity at a rate astounding to herself. That was before the Union, but how did her prosperity increase after the Union? Reports of speeches in the House of Commons were not pathetic reading as a rule, and they did not shed tears over the Budgets of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but for the sixteen years after the Union, the Budgets of the Chancellor of the Exchequer were pathetic reading, for they were trying to save their country from the wrong done them by the English Parliament, by which the Irish Parliament was destroyed and robbed.

The Chief Secretary for Ireland, in one of his triumphant periods, said they gave equal rights to Ireland, and that everyone had equal privileges as citizens of this great Empire. He would remind them that Pitt said the same thing when introducing the Union. What equality of laws had they given to Ireland? He did not know anything more mean or dastardly than the conduct of the English Government in endeavouring to withhold from the mass of the Irish people the blessings of University education. Lord Selborne once said that he was the son of a poor clergyman, and he owed his success in life to the fact that his father and mother provided him with a University education, which had enabled him to face the greatest difficulties in life, and yet they denied these advantages to Irishmen, not because they were Catholics, but because they did not wish them to have an equal chance with the privileged minority who have been riding roughshod over the people of Ireland. When they were pleading for the advantages and benefits of an enlightened education for the people of Ireland, did any hon. Member know what Ireland was before the English Government robbed her, for their own base purposes, of the benefits of education? Why, there was scarcely a monastery in northern Europe which did not contain the writings of Irish scholars. Ireland was the land of scholars until the English Government made it the land of Cromwellian settlers. Although he was himself a Protestant, he represented the most Catholic constituency in Ireland. He had been their representative for eighteen years, and he had their confidence and affection. His constituents were devoted to their Catholic principles, but when they returned him to Parliament they had not allowed differences of religion to overreach the question whether he was a true-hearted Irishman or not. When would the most robust of Unionists, who cried themselves hoarse about Imperialism, return a Nationalist from the aristocratic district where they resided. There was no real persecution in Ireland. Persons who said they were persecuted were those who had no true Christian principles, and who had a great deal of sectarian animosity among them. He believed they could appeal to the great heart of the British public to restore to Ireland her own rights and liberties. He asked whether it would not be better to restore to Ireland her liberties instead of letting her continue to hold the English Parties in the position resembling the couple in the old-fashioned barometer, where the little old man came in and the little old woman went out. The English claimed to be apostles of liberty and spoke of giving equal rights to all white men in the Transvaal. Let them give equal rights at home.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON said the hon. Member for South Donegal had made a very interesting historical speech, manifesting deep insight and immense muscular power. The hon. Member appeared to be now absolutely certain why the Roman Catholics of South Donegal had chosen him as their representative. He himself thought he knew: it was the spirit of revenge on the British House of Commons, which, he was sorry to say, still rankled in the breasts of some of the Irish people. The hon. Member had given them his opinion of Home Rule. He was glad to hear from his lips—indeed he thought he had heard it from the lips of other hon. Members in times gone by—that Grattan's Parliament was the beau ideal of an Irish Parliament.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: We never said so.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON said the hon. Member for South Donegal had said so several times in public, but probably he had already forgotten it.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I said it was not a failure.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON said he was very glad to hear that the beau ideal of an Irish Parliament was one entirely composed of Protestants. But he had never gone so far as that himself. As to the question of Home Rule, of course it was the duty of the hon. and learned Member for Waterford to bring the subject forward, and he was very glad he did. The debate to-night had the advantage that it obviated debates in the course of the next ten days on Irish affairs. [Cries of "No."]

MR. JOHN REDMOND: There is an Amendment on the Land Question.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON said that, however that might be, he quite understood the reason of the hon. Member for Waterford in bringing forward the question of Home Rule. The great difficulty in the way of the Irish Home Rule Party in the future would be to get over their own actions during the last ten years. When Mr. Gladstone brought in his Home Rule Bill, Irish Unionists were supposed to be hopelessly bigoted on the subject. One Member opposite—he was not quite sure that it was not the hon. Member for South Donegal—told him that he was entirely mistaken in his views about Home Rule. He said: "If we carry Home Rule you will be placed in a position of great height." He replied that that was very likely, but it would be by means of a rope. He asked any candid Radical opposite whether his views on Home Rule at the present day were exactly the same as they were in 1886, and whether he really believed that if they had a Home Rule Parliament the Protestant minority would be treated with perfect fair play? He remembered hon. Members opposite in some of their speeches saying: "Give us Home Rule and we will be a loyal people." Well, they had an opportunity since then of seeing whether they would be loyal and show fairplay under any circumstances. During the Boer War they had had an opportunity of showing they were not absolutely hostile to the British Empire, instead of which they showed their capacity for Home Rule by using every opportunity of showing their delight and exultation at British reverses. He was not blaming them for that. They had over and over again declared themselves to be the enemies of Great Britain, and he had no doubt they were still. Again, when the Local Government Bill was passed, the hon. Member for Waterford said they would see that the Irish people would exercise fairplay in dealing with the minority, and give them a fair position in managing the affairs of the counties. Outside a few counties in Ulster, where the Loyalist minority predominated, they kicked out, almost to a man, every Loyalist in Ireland. He did not say there were no exceptions, but he defied contradiction, backed by proof of that statement. In his own county, for example, where the minority of Protestants was not so small, they turned out, in almost every case, every Loyalist who stood for a position under the Local Government Act. Everywhere the Nationalists predominated they kicked the Loyalists out of the local bodies. [NATIONALIST cries of "No."] He admitted there were exceptional cases in which Protestants had been returned. The hon. Member who had last spoken was a Protestant sitting for a Nationalist constituency, but the hon. Member was an exception to any rule.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: No, he is not.

MR. MACVEAGH (Down, S.): How many Catholics were elected in your own town of Portadown? Not one.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON said that if that were so, the town had followed a bad example. But the lesson taught by the county council elections was that under Home Rule the Loyalist Protestant minority would be crushed under foot. If hon. Members had any doubt as to what the result of Home Rule in Ireland would be they should make inquiries. The Nonconformist Members of Parliament, and ministers in this country were in a great majority Radicals. They were very strong Protestants, and they bitterly opposed the Education Bill of last year on Protestant grounds, and yet with all their boasted Protestantism they were perfectly ready to hand over the Irish minority to be trampled upon by the Nationalist politicians. In introducing a Home Rule Bill, and trying to cause the British people to accept a Home Rule Bill, the main stumbling blocks and difficulties which hon. Gentlemen opposite would have to overcome would be those which they themselves had raised and which could not be denied. On the question of University education he listened to the speech of the Chief Secretary with great interest. He knew his opinions before. He had always been perfectly candid about them in the House of Commons. He had told them that the Government would not bring in a Catholic University Bill at present as a Government, which he supposed meant that someone would that session bring in a Bill which would embody his views and probably those of the Prime Minister. He was perfectly certain that if a Bill had been introduced it would have blown the Government into fragments. [Cries of "No, no."] With regard to University education of course anybody who opposed a Roman Catholic University in Ireland was called a bigot. That was the euphemistic way in which the Nationalists described people who were opposed to them on any point. Why were they bigots? He called a bigot a man who tried to force his own religious belief down the throats of other people. He would be the first to oppose a condition of higher education in Ireland which would interfere with anyone's religion. It was well known, and hon. Gentlemen opposite could not deny it, however they might dislike Trinity College, Dublin, it in no way interfered with religion of any kind. Roman Catholics were as free to enter it as Protestants; a Roman Catholic could become Provost, or hold a Fellowship; he could rise in Trinity in the same way as his Protestant fellow countryman. A great change had taken place in Ireland in later years.

The hon. Member for South Donegal had given the House a bit of history. He would also give a small addition to that history which was well worthy of the attention of the House of Commons. In 1795 it was proposed to establish a Roman Catholic College at Maynooth, and a petition was presented to the Irish Parliament by Grattan from the Roman Catholics of Ireland against the proposed establishment of the college. Perhaps the House would allow him to read what these Roman Catholics said in that petition, because curiously enough he absolutely agreed with every word of it. The petition ran as follows—"That the exclusion of persons professing the Protestant religion, or whose fathers profess the Protestant religion, appears to petitioners to be highly inexpedient, inasmuch as it tends to perpetuate that line of separation between His Majesty's subjects of different religions which the petitioners do humbly concede it is the interest of the country to obliterate; and the petitioners do humbly submit that if the youth of both religions were intimates in those branches of classical education which are the same for all, their peculiar tenets would in all probability be no hindrance hereafter to a friendly and liberal intercourse through life; that the petitioners having in common with the rest of their brethren, the Catholics of Ireland, received as one of the most important and acceptable benefits bestowed on them by His Majesty and the Legislature, the permission of having their youth educated along with the Protestant youth of the Kingdom in the University of Dublin, and experience having taught and fully demonstrated the wisdom and ability of that permission, petitioners see with deep concern the principle of separation and exclusion they hoped removed for ever now likely to be revived and re-enacted." That was the view of the Roman Catholics of Ireland at that period.

AN HON. MEMBER on the IRISH BENCHES: Who signed it?

COLONEL SAUNDERSON said that the hon. Member would find it in the Irish Parliamentary Register, Vol. 15, p. 203. Now it was proposed to revive all that, as they learned from a speech made the other day by Archbishop Walsh, at St. Stephen's Green College, Dublin, before those distinguished gentlemen the Jesuit professors. History recorded this lesson, that it was the hands of the priests which had been most opposed to Christianity—[Cries of "Oh, oh!"]—(to his idea of Christianity, progress, and the higher education.) That was a difficulty which the hon. Gentlemen would have to get over whenever another Government sat on the Ministerial Benches; he thought that was a long way off.—[Cries of "Oh, oh!"] The hon. Member for South Tyrone appeared to think that it would be soon. He did not agree with him because he thought the Government had some very remarkably good qualities. He thought so far as their qualities went they were a very respectable lot of men, but he had no doubt in his own mind that the swing of the pendulum would have ceased long ago if affairs had depended altogether on their superhuman merits. But it was the safety which Charles II. took when his brother James warned him of assassination. Charles II. replied, "They would never assassinate me to make you king." He did not in the least tremble for the fate of the Unionist Government. He ventured to say that if the Government brought in a Bill embodying the views of the Chief Secretary and also of the Prime Minister it would blow the Government into fragments. Whatever Government brought in a University Bill, the British people would have to remember that it would and must be a priests' Bill, over which the Roman Catholic clergy would have absolute and supreme control. He wanted to know how the Nonconformists, who so much disliked the Education Acts, would consent to hand over the educational progress of Ireland into the hands of the men who had always tried to stamp it out.

The hon. Member for South Tyrone had given a most gruesome account of the Ulster landlords in his speech about the Irish Land Act. Ulster landlords were accustomed to that from the hon. Gentleman and from Members opposite; but their ideas of Ulster landlords were entirely different from theirs. The hon. Members said that the Ulster landlords refused to sell their estates. That was not his experience. He had offered to sell his estate. The hon. Member for South Tyrone said that the Ulster landlords were trading on the loyalty and peaceable condition of the tenantry. It happened that he had a considerable number of tenants in Cavan. His ancestors had held their property since the reign of James I., and the great majority of his tenants were Roman Catholics, and he did not know in the whole record any instance of the landlord and tenant being on bad terms. Although his tenants were Roman Catholics and, politically, Nationalists, they were as peaceable and friendly a tenantry as those of any man in Ireland, so that he had just as much inducement to withhold selling as the landlord spoken of by the hon. Member for South Tyrone. Yet he had expressed his perfect willingness to sell to his tenants on what he considered fair terms; that was to say, for something which, although it would not provide him with as much as he had at present, would produce something near it. He wanted still to live in Ireland, and he considered that the Land Bill was carried on that very idea, and the bonus given as an inducement to the landlord to enable him to sell to his tenants on those terms. The hon. Member for South Tyrone said the tenants were tired out and would adopt other means, which had been successful in the South and West of Ireland. He was glad the hon. Member was not a tenant of his, for if he thought that the hon. Member was lurking in a ditch or behind a tree——

* Mr. T. W. RUSSELL said he did not say that. What he had said was that if these loyal tenants found out they were to be deprived of the rights Parliament intended for them, whilst these rights were to be given to men who had disturbed the peace in the South and West of Ireland, this would make Ulster disloyal, and change the Ulster representation on that side of the House.

Colonel SAUNDERSON said the way the tenants in the South and West emptied out the landlords was by shooting them. That was the great lesson to be learned from the tenants in the South and West who occasionally indulged in the sport. But he did not believe that the Ulster landlords had any intention of taking up this non possumus stand. The periodic revaluation by the Land Commissioner was a strong inducement to any landlord to sell, and Irish landlords would be absolute fools if they rejected what he believed to be the most generous and wonderful offer ever made to any tenantry in the world.

Mr. WILLIAM REDMOND said that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for North Armagh, like many opponents of the demand in Ireland for University education, altogether misrepresented that demand. The right hon. Gentleman would not, he was sure, wilfully misrepresent in the House of Commons the views of those who advocated Irish University education; but he must know that when he declared that the demand was made for a university controlled by the priesthood, he was making a statement notoriously contrary to fact, and which had been repudiated in set terms over and over again by the representatives, not only of the laity, but of the hierarchy and the clergy of Ireland. The right hon. Member for North Armagh was evidently under the impression that it was necessary, in order to neutralise the growing feeling in Ireland for University education, to misrepresent altogether the demand made by the Irish people and priesthood on this matter. The right hon. Gentleman had read a statement contained in a petition presented to the Irish Government at the time of Grattan's Parliament, but there was not a single word in that statement inconsistent with the position now taken up by the Catholic people in Ireland in the demand they were making for a University. There was no desire in the wide world that the youth of Ireland should be permanently separated by religion or other matters. The right hon. Gentleman must know perfectly well that it was the refusal of the claim of equal treatment in the matter of University education that was really bringing about that estrangement and that feeling of separation between the young men of Ireland which was so much deprecated by Grattan, and at the present time. The right hon. Gentleman truly stated that the Prime Minister, whose absence from the debate everyone deplored, was in favour of the claims made by the Catholics of Ireland for a University; and he asked the right hon. Gentleman and the House of Commons if it was conceivable for a single moment that if the claims of University education were such as those described by the right hon. Gentleman, they would receive the sanction or the support of the Prime Minister, or those of his colleagues who had not hesitated to declare in the strongest possible way that they wished this question to be settled. It was not merely the Catholics of Ireland who were making this claim. Nobody knew better than the right hon. Gentleman that this was one of those claims in which the Catholic majority were joined to an extraordinary extent by the Protestant minority in Ireland, and the right hon. Gentleman ought, in common candour, to have informed those who listened to him that this was not a claim of the Jesuit Fathers, the Catholic Bishops, or the laity, but that it was maintained by the vast majority of the Protestant people of Ireland. [Colonel SAUNDERSON: No.] The right hon. Gentleman denied that. He occupied, no doubt, amongst the Protestants of Ireland a position of a considerably representative character, but he must forgive them for saying that, in a matter of this kind and importance, gentlemen like him, who were wedded to the Orange Institution in Ireland, did not represent the majority or the weight of Protestant opinion in Ireland. They preferred in matters of this kind to look for the unbiassed and fair opinion of the people of Ireland in the utterances of men like Lord Dunraven and other eminent Protestant gentlemen, who had quite recently signed a declaration in favour of the settlement of the university question. Not only Lord Dunraven, and Protestant noblemen who carried weight in Ireland among their class, but others in this country had also sanctioned the position of the people of Ireland, which was likewise supported by the Prime Minister and by some Protestant bishops and ecclesiastics in Ireland. At any rate, no man in the House could speak more exactly than he did of what was the feeling in the district he represented, and he said without hesitation that all classes, sections, and creeds in the county of Clare were in favour of the settlement of this question.

A very few weeks ago a meeting was held in that county, attended by the representatives of the masses of the people and by nine-tenths of the representatives of the Protestant landlords and tenantry, and that meeting expressed its strong approval of a settlement of the Irish University question on lines satisfactory to the majority of the people. The right hon. Member for North Armagh seemed to imagine that there was some dark plot on foot to establish in Ireland a University or college which would be absolutely under the control of the Catholic bishops; but the right hon. Gentleman should have stated in fairness that the Catholic bishops had over and over again declared that they made no such demand, and that a college such as was outlined by Lord Dunraven would meet with the approval of the Catholic hierarchy and laity as well. At any rate, the right hon. Member for North Armagh was alone in the House amongst the representatives of Ireland in practically making a protest against what was undoubtedly the expressed desire of the vast majority of the Irish people and of a great majority of the Members of the House who had had an opportunity of expressing their opinion. It had already been pointed out in the debate that the refusal of the Government to deal with this matter was one of the strongest arguments that could be put forward in favour of the establishment of an Irish Government for the management of Irish affairs. What were the facts? This question had been inquired into by a Royal Commission, which had issued a Report in favour of the demand made by the majority of the Irish people, and yet in spite of that the Government, through the lips of the Chief Secretary, declared its inability or unwillingness to deal with the question. He could not say that he was in any way surprised at the decision of the Government. He never expected that the Irish University question, any more than any other Irish question, would be settled unless a period elapsed of agitation and strong protest in Ireland. He ventured to say that it was one of the curses connected with Ireland that no Irish grievance could possibly be remedied until there took place first practically a stage of revolution tempered by want of balance until it became overpowering. He did not know what action would be taken in Ireland when the intention of the Government was known, but he was perfectly certain that in the long run a day would come when it would be admitted that this demand was just and proper, and that in the interests of the Irish people and good government it ought to be conceded. He thought it was altogether unnecessary at that time of day to argue the claims of Ireland to a Catholic University. If he were asked to make out a case for it, he could not do better than refer to the speeches made on the question by the Prime Minister himself, who had proved in the most convincing manner that the Catholics of Ireland suffered from an inequality, that the grievance ought to be remedied, and that until it was remedied it would cause a condition of unrest and dissatisfaction. The debate was initiated not merely for the purpose of raising the University question, but for the purpose of stating broadly and plainly once more the position of the Irish people in reference to their claim for national self-government, and, whatever else the debate might effect, it could not fail to prove that the demand of the Irish people for the restoration of their legislative independence had not changed.

It was now considerably more than thirty years since the question of Home Rule was presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Issac Butt, then the Protestant Leader of the Irish National party. That claim was met by the Irish official of that day just as the present Chief Secretary had met it. The right hon. Gentleman said that while he did not profess to be a prophet, he believed that legislation of a necessary and beneficial character in all directions in Ireland would cause the demand of Ireland for Home Rule to gradually weaken and disappear in the long run. If a Land Act were passed, or any other concession were given, they were told, as Mr. Butt was told thirty years ago, that the Irish nation would settle down, and that the demand for Home Rule would disappear. Thirty years have passed. Land Bill after Land Bill has been passed; there have been new concessions in every direction and well-intentioned efforts to meet the grievances of Ireland,—some of them more or less successful—and what had been the result on the Home Rule demand? It had been to intensify, if possible, the desire of the Irish people to rule themselves; and after thirty years of attempts to satisfy Ireland, that country sent the overwhelming majority of her representatives in this House to demand as emphatically, as clearly, and as unhesitatingly as ever the right to govern herself in her own way. The hon. Member had said that he had spent a third of his life in Parliament, but he had spent just half his life in the House of Commons, and he had often wondered that it had never occurred to the ordinary English Member that the Home Rule question, so far from being merely a great Irish question, was also a great English question. No doubt could be entertained that if Ireland suffered from the lack of Home Rule, England and the House of Commons undoubtedly lacked self-government and Home Rule in English affairs which might have been enjoyed were it not that the Irish question was being eternally presented.

There were not, he was sorry to say, any Members who directly represented the working-classes in Great Britain. He wished heartily and sincerely that there were more. The working-classes were relieved of most pressing and necessary reforms, but the affairs of the British people had been blocked, because it had been proved that there was no proper time to consider the affairs of three great countries like England, Ireland, and Scotland. The Chief Secretary said that his idea was that Ireland and Great Britain should be equal partners in the legislative establishment, but at the very bottom of their claim for Home Rule was the argument that, however willing the House of Commons might be to do justice to Ireland, it had not the necessary time. Why should the Irish people, the English people, or the Scottish people have to wait in order to have pressing matters affecting their country attended to? The Chief Secretary and the Attorney-General, who knew Ireland perfectly well—few people better—know that there were matters connected with every Department in Ireland which called for legislation, and that if they were attended to they alone would occupy the time of Parliament for a whole session, yet the Irish people were obliged to wait until English affairs, Scottish affairs, and Imperial affairs had been attended to. If he were an English representative he would feel not only impatient but indignant to the last degree if he found that his opportunity of benefiting his constituents was impaired and interfered with year after year by the discussion of Irish affairs. He did not know whether it had been observed by the majority of Members of the House of Commons or not, but he himself was absolutely convinced that there was a movement among the masses of the English people in the direction of Home Rule. He did not say it was a movement prompted altogether by sympathy with the demands of the Irish people, but there was a demand in the direction of Home Rule in the interests of Scotland and Wales as well as of Ireland. and he was convinced that a century would not have advanced very far before an attempt would be made to settle the question. He had often asked himself on what really was the opposition to Home Rule based. The Chief Secretary said he could conceive no change from the present system short of an independent Government in Ireland, such as the system in existence in Norway and Sweden. It was no part of the business of the Irish people in the present time, and in the absence of any desire on the part of the Government to deal with the matter, to go into the details of the system of self-government which would be acceptable to them, but did the right hon. Gentleman consider the system of government which prevailed at present in over a score of different parts of the British Empire which had absolute and complete legislative independence? Only the other day Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the first thing which tended to maintain and consolidate the British Empire was the system of absolute self-government, which prevailed in every part of it except Ireland. He could not understand how those who gladly conceded to different parts of the Empire the fullest system of self-government refused a similar system to Ireland, where the existing Government had been proved to be a lamentable failure. He had never been able to get from any British citizen a satisfactory explanation of the opposition to Home Rule. It was not that the Irish people were incapable of managing their own affairs. The Attorney-General, Chief Secretary, Lord-Lieutenant, and all connected with the Irish Government had conceded that the Irish people would be able to govern themselves in as capable and intelligent a manner as the people of any other part of the English-speaking world. Was the demand refused because of fear of what a self-governing Ireland might do to England? The right hon. Gentleman referred in his speech, as he invariably did, to the attitude of Ireland in connection with the late war. He supposed the argument at the bottom of that was that because the Irish people were on the side of freedom it would be unsafe to give them any legislative powers that might be used against England. No one who had inquired into the powers of the Parliament proposed by Mr. Gladstone would have the slightest fear that it would be able to do any injury to England. He would go further and say that an Irish Government sufficient for the wants of the Irish people would have no intention and no desire whatever beyond governing Ireland wisely and well.

Not only were the Irish Members opposed to the Boer War, but a large number of the British Members and a large section of British people were also opposed to it, and it was now beginning to be proved that the men who were opposed to it were the best friends of this country. The result of the war had absolutely justified the warnings and forecasts of the Irish and Radical Members who opposed it. They were told that it was to protect the interest of British subjects in South Africa that the war was undertaken, yet the very first result had been to oust English, Scottish, and Welsh labour from South Africa in favour of Asiatic labour, which was a curse in every country where it was found, and which would make South Africa not only not worth fighting for but not worth living in. In opposing the war the Irish people were actuated by the same feeling as they were at the time of the American War of Independence. At that time, too, gentlemen like the right hon. Gentleman the Member for North Armagh said that the war was being opposed by wretched Irish rebels who were the enemies of England. It was quite true that the Irish people were in full and complete sympathy with the Americans in the War of Independence, but it is now proved that the men who protested against that war were right, and if the advice of the Irish people had been then taken America might to-day be a portion of the British Empire. He ventured to assert, and he thought he might appeal even to members of the Dublin Castle Government to bear out his opinion, that so far from there being the slightest desire, inclination, or intention on the part of the majority of the Irish people to interfere with any section of the inhabitants on account of their religious belief, exactly the opposite was the case, for it could never be said of the Irish people that they persecuted anyone on that account. He deplored, as all Irishmen must deplore, that in certain parts of the country, where semi-political and semi-religious associations existed, feeling at times ran very high, but the right hon. Gentleman the Member for North Armagh as well as the hon. Member for South Belfast, need not imagine that because they represented Ulster Protestant and Orange constituencies they had a monopoly of all knowledge of the condition of affairs in the North of Ireland. There were many sitting beside him who also represented Ulster constituencies, and he for seven years represented one in which the people were nearly equally divided between Roman Catholics and Protestants. He knew the danger that arose from the bitter feeling there created, and he was therefore the more convinced that it only needed the establishment of an Irish Parliament, with full, fair, and just powers, in order to put an end at once and for all to that hateful system of religious rivalry which undoubtedly made life at times in certain parts of Ireland almost unbearable. The hon. and gallant Member for North Armagh posed as if he and his friends were afraid of the majority of the people of Ireland should they get the power in their hands——

Colonel SAUNDERSON: Not in the least.

Mr. WILLIAM REDMOND said he did not mean to suggest that the right hon. Gentleman was physically afraid of anybody. The point was that he seemed to be under an apprehension that the majority of the people in Ireland would do injustice to the minority, and that where the Catholics were in an overwhelming majority they would be guilty of persecution and unwarrantable interference with those who were of a different religion. He ventured to assert that no instance could be cited in the South of Ireland where that had proved to be the case.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON: I should say Limerick.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND said he was glad that the case of Limerick had been mentioned, because it enabled him to call the attention of the House to the fact that that case had been discussed over and over again, and that the complaint had been proved to have no foundation in fact. He would repeat that in those portions of Ireland where the Catholics were in an overwhelming majority the Protestant minority lived in the most absolute security, in peace, and on friendly terms with their neighbours. The hon. and gallant Member for North Armagh was an old opponent of his in that House. They had faced one another for years and advocated their respective opinions, but he did not believe the right hon. Gentleman would get up in his place and express his opinion that if the Nationalists obtained the controlling voice in the Government of Ireland they would tolerate interference with or persecution of any men or any set of men on account of their religious beliefs. It was therefore unworthy on the part of the Government to decline to satisfy the aspirations of the people of Ireland because of an unfounded fear of religious intolerance which had never been proved to exist. It could not be denied that at the present time the Government of Ireland was carried out practically in compliance with the wishes and desires of the minority of the people, and the right hon. and gallant Gentleman had that day had the satisfaction of hearing the Minister responsible for Irish affairs state that the passionate demand of the vast majority of the Irish people in connection with education was to be ignored in consequence of the representations made by himself and his friends in the North of Ireland. Such a state of things could not possibly conduce to good government in Ireland, or to the satisfaction and contentment of the Irish people. It could not possibly strengthen the Empire or facilitate the transaction of business of pressing importance in connection with England, Scotland, and Wales, and surely it was not too much for them to ask at the commencement of a new century that a new system should be tried for governing Ireland. No one could deny that the present system had been a dismal failure, and that ever since the Irish people had been deprived of their Parliament dissatisfaction and discontent had prevailed there. If he were a British Member he would look forward to the commencement of a new century under the old system with great misgiving. The position was intolerable. It was, of course, within the power of a majority of the people through their representatives to maintain the present system, but as long as it was maintained the Irish people would continue to send representatives to renew again and again the demand for the restoration of the right to rule themselves, and they made that demand once more that night in the confident belief that sooner or later it would be granted, and that the British people would find that their best policy would be to trust the Irish people and to treat them no longer as outcasts and rebels, but to recognise that they were as much entitled to manage their own affairs and to rule their own destinies as any one of the great self-governing colonies which England possessed in other parts of the world.

There were those who at the present time were prepared to make any sacrifices for what they called the permanence and consolidation of the British Empire, and sacrifices of an extremely grave character were likely to be demanded of the people. Indeed they were to be asked to tax their food in order to earn the goodwill of our colonial possessions. But it was an insult to our colonies to insinuate at the present time that any sacrifice was required on the part of the masses of the British people to secure them contentment and satisfaction in their possessions. He believed that the colonies were satisfied and contented and that they would remain so because they possessed the fullest right of controlling their own affairs, and to interfere in the faintest manner with any of those rights would be a very serious matter. The possession of independent legislative powers had made the British Empire a success in every portion of the globe, and it was noteworthy that Ireland was the one spot in the whole English-speaking portion of the globe which was discontented and disloyal under the British flag. The time had arrived when the question of giving Ireland national self-government might be dealt with with great advantage and good result to the majority of the British people. If the demand was to be opposed let it be opposed not on grounds which were insulting to the Irish people and untrue in their character, but upon reasonable and fair argument. Let them not suggest that it was opposed in order to protect the Protestants of Ireland against persecution by the Catholic majority. The hon. and gallant Member for North Armagh had long been the advocate of the present system of government in Ireland. Those with whom he had been associated had received posts as the rewards of their advocacy of British rule, and the right hon. Gentleman presented an almost pathetic picture in his loneliness on those Benches. He was practically left absolutely alone to fight this battle. They were told by the Unionists of Ulster they were in dread of Home Rule, and that they regarded the question as even more important than the fiscal dispute which was now raging. The were told further that they were prepared to fight to the last breath, but the arguments advanced against Home Rule were exactly of the same description as those which had been put forward for the last twenty-five years, and they heard the old story of the Jesuitical desire to curtail the knowledge of the people and the customary complaint of the Irish Members' opposition to such unnecessary enterprises as the Boer War. The hon. Member for Donegal in an interesting historical speech had made reference to Grattan's Parliament, and had referred to the fact that one of the ancestors of the right hon. Gentleman was a staunch opponent of the Union and of the destruction of the Irish Parliament. Surely there was no reason why, under fair and equal laws, a descendant of the right hon. and gallant Gentleman might not, like his ancestor, take his place side by side with the majority of the people of Ireland, and help in governing the country wisely and beneficially in the interests of the whole people. He could only say, in conclusion, that nothing would satisfy the people of Ireland except the concession of those rights of self-government which he believed every common sense man was in favour of granting at the present time.

*Mr. MOON (St. Pancras, N.) said he desired to draw the attention of the House to a subject mentioned in two paragraphs of His Majesty's Speech. It was evident that His Majesty's Ministers as well as the House recognised the urgency of the question connected with the Balkan Peninsula, and the gravity and seriousness of the situation even a year ago was indicated in the despatch of February 17th, 1903, by theS ecretary of State to our Ambassador at Vienna—a despatch which recapitulated the observations that Lord Lansdowne had made to the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador on the same day. The despatch stated that the—> "Government had, for a long time, been deeply convinced of the necessity for the introduction of measures of practical reform in Macedonia."

He would have liked to sketch the course by which the inequalities and the economic pressure in European Turkey had become more and more serious and especially in proportion as large slices and tracts of European Turkey had been lopped off, but the hour did not permit. The House was aware that in spite of the repeated declarations of the Porte that all the subjects of the Sultan were equal, there had been no approach to equality. From time to time the Softas or theological students of Constantinople were allowed to spread over European Turkey and preach what might be called anti-Christian crusades, in a manner which had excited the Moslem population against their Christian fellow-subjects. The result had been that at different times during the last half-century there had been a dismal cycle of oppression, revolt, suppression, or repression. The rebels had not observed the rights of property; they had in many cases behaved atrociously, but they had not been guilty of the appalling outrages against women and children that had stained the action of the Turkish troops, whether regular or irregular.

According to the despatch of Lord Lansdowne, dated September 21st, 1903—

> "Acts had been perpetrated which, after making every allowance, must be condemned as quite inexcusable on the part of the authorities and forces of an established Government."

Under these circumstances it was imperative that no time should be lost in introducing effective and adequate reforms. In January last Austria-Hungary and Russia propounded a scheme of reform which the Turkish Government accepted in less than a week, and offered to apply it to the other vilayets of European Turkey. Then there was intolerable delay; in August the insurgents commenced rising, and it was not until September that fresh steps were taken, when the Secretary of State, realising that things had got still worse, telegraphed to Sir Francis Plunkett, requesting him to place before the Austro-Hungarian and Russian Governments two alternatives, the first of which was the—> "Appointment of a Christian Governor unconnected with the Balkan Peninsula or with the Powers signatory of the Treaty of Berlin."

His noble friend would doubtless say that during the last month a start had been made in putting matters on a satisfactory basis, but he would remind the House that a gendarmerie under European officers had been established in Turkey before, and the delay certainly gave colour to the doubts entertained in many parts of Europe as to the disinterested character of the action of Austria-Hungary and Russia. He had an Amendment to the Address on the Paper with regard to Macedonia, but he did not propose to move it. He did not wish to be impatient, nor did he say that fairly vigorous steps were not now being taken, now that M. Demerik and Herr von Müller were in Macedonia and that General de Giorgis had arrived at Constantinople, but he did desire to express the hope that the Government would watch closely, carefully, and thoroughly the course of the reforms, that they would bear in mind that their Secretary of State had proposed the alternative of a Christian Governor, and that the little States—Denmark, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium—concerned in that alternative had from time to time produced great and efficient men. He hoped if before the end of the winter these reforms did not produce effect the Government would revert to the first alternative.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY (Devonshire, Honiton) said it was an unfortunate hour to go into this very important question, but he did not think it was necessary to go back to the unhappy state of things which they found in Macedonia. There was no doubt that England was the chief mover in obtaining the cancelling of the San Stefano Treaty when Russia was near Constantinople, but their responsibility was shared by the other Powers which were signatories to the Treaty of Berlin. They made themselves responsible with England for the reforms to be carried out, not only in Macedonia, but in Armenia. The hopes and promises had been entirely disappointed, and practically nothing had been done. In the words of Lord Salisbury, they had put their money on the wrong horse. It was unnecessary to attempt to apportion blame between different parties. The revolutionary bands, no doubt, had much to answer for, but it must be admitted they were subjected to great provocation, that a large number of helpless and guiltless people had suffered in consequence of the existing state of disorder (which had been becoming acute ever since the Greek War), and that the scheme of reorganisation had had no practical result. It could not be wondered at that when the disturbances entered upon an acute stage the English Foreign Secretary should have endeavoured to place the reforms on a wider and a more practicable basis, and should have suggested the appointment of a Christian Governor which was practically the only solution. Unfortunately, however, he suggested an alternative, and that alternative of a Mussulman Governor with Christian advisers had been adopted, and yet there had been no reforms instituted. Meantime, the winter was passing, and the outlook did not appear to justify the sanguine hope expressed in the Speech from the Throne. Russia, by practically excluding the vilayet of Adrianople from the proposed scheme, had shown that she was not eager for reform, and it was difficult to believe that she had any desire to see an autonomous State or an enlarged Bulgaria interposed between her and the sea. He could not but think that her desire was to maintain the status quo, leaving things to continue in their present rotten condition. Meantime Turkey was growing weaker and weaker; she had lost the nations which once formed her strength, but she was hoping that Russia would be so fully occupied in the East as to have no time to press reforms upon her. The outlook was serious. The Bulgarians were in a far stronger position than a year ago, their army had been reorganised, and there could be but little doubt that if Russia's hands were fully occupied by affairs in the East, Bulgaria would be inclined to try conclusions with Turkey. He hoped that some of those practical measures which were foreshadowed in Lord Lansdowne's dispatch of September would shortly occupy the attention of His Majesty's Government. He assured them of his warm appreciation of the interest they were taking in this matter, and his belief in their earnest desire, in difficult circumstances, to assert England's humanity and wish to see good government re-established in these regions, and by the establishment of independent States to form the surest barrier against Russian advance to the South that could be secured. While assuring the Government of the desire of himself and his friends to support them, he felt bound to express their firm belief that unless strong measures were taken in the next few months hostilities would commence, and there would be a scene of misery, misrule, and general agitation involving extreme danger to the whole of the South-East of Europe.

MR. HUGH LAW (Donegal, W.) expressed satisfaction with the references to Macedonia in the King's Speech, which satisfaction would certainly not be diminished by the tone and terms of the speech of the Secretary of State yesterday in another place. No one would be disposed to quarrel with the principles as laid down by the Secretary of State as being those which should govern the action of the British Government in the matter. But while there was every reason to thank the Government for the attitude they had taken up, there were only too serious grounds for believing that the reform scheme to which they had given their adhesion would not meet the necessities of the case. It was marked by grave omissions and defects. The House would be interested to hear the reasons for the entire omission from the scheme of reform of the vilayet of Adrianople, to which there were very grave reasons why the same control should be extended. He had recently visited that vilayet, and everywhere he came across villages in ruins, some actually burned to the ground, and others practically deserted by the inhabitants. In fact, the portion of the vilayet of Adrianople nearest to the Black Sea was really a desert. The population had indeed escaped some of the more atrocious sufferings of the winter, to which the people of the vilayet of Monastir had been subjected; but there was only too grave reason for saying that the state of Adrianople was no less bad than that of any other part of the provinces which had been the subjects of the recent troubles.

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

On the Motion for the adjournment of the House,

MR. O'MALLEY (Galway, Connemara) asked whether the Government had any information confirming the report that Russia had declared war.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): No, sir; none whatever.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 4th February, 1904.

SAT FIRST.

The Viscount Colville of Culross sat first in Parliament after the death of his father.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—

Acton Improvement.

Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway.

Amersham, Beaconsfield, and District Water.

Appleby Corporation Gas.

Arlesey Gas.

Baker Street and Waterloo Railway.

Barnard Castle Gas.

Barnet District Gas and Water.

Barrow-in-Furness Corporation.

Barry Railway (Extension of Time, &c.).

Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).

Belfast and North-East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas.

Belfast Corporation (Tramways).

Bexhill Corporation.

Bexhill Water and Gas.

Birkdale Improvement.

Bishop's Stortford and District Gas.

Blyth and Cowpen Gas.

Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways).

Bridlington Corporation.

Bristol Corporation.

Brixham Gas.

Brymbo Water.

Buxton Urban District Council.

Cambrian Railways.

Cardiff Railway.

Carlisle Corporation.

Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway.

Cheshire Electricity and Power Gas.

Chesterfield Corporation (Tramways and Improvements).

Chesterfield Gas and Water Board.

Chippenham Gas.

Colney Hatch Gas.

Corbridge Gas.

Corporation of London (Southwark and other Bridges).

Croydon Gas.

Crystal Palace District Gas.

Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power.

Derwent Valley Water Board.

Doncaster Corporation.

Donegal Railway.

East Argentine Railway.

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.

Ebbw Vale Urban District Water.

Edwardes Square Protection.

Elysée Palace Hotel Company.

Felixstowe Gas.

Filey Improvement.

Gas Light and Coke and other Gas Companies Acts Amendment.

Gomersal Gas.

Gosport Water.

Great Central and Midland Joint Railways.

Great Central Railway.

Great Eastern Railway.

Great Eastern Railway (Steamboats).

Great Northern and City Railway (Extension of Time).

Great Northern Railway.

Great Western Railway.

Great Yarmouth Corporation.

Hampton-in-Arden Gas.

Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas.

Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad.

Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways.

Holywood Tramways.

Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment).

Humber Commercial Railway and Dock.

Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust (Substituted Bill).

Ipswich Dock Commission.

Isle of Thanet Light Railways.

Kettering Improvement.

King's College Hospital.

Kirkby-in-Ashfield Urban District Gas.

Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Steam Vessels).

Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Various Powers).

Lancashire Electric Power.

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation).

Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway.

Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power.

Leyton Urban District Council.

Lincolnshire and Yorkshire Electric Power.

Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water.

Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company.

Liverpool and Wigan Churches.

Llanelly Harbour.

London and India Docks Company.

London and North-Western Railway.

London, Camberwell, and Dulwich Tramways.

London, Chatham, and Dover Railway.

London County Council (General Powers).

London Port and Docks.

London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway.

Lytham Improvement.

Maidenhead Bridge.

Manchester Corporation (General Powers).

Manchester Corporation Tramways.

Manchester Ship Canal.

Manchester Ship Canal (Finance).

Matlock and District Gas.

Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.

Metropolitan District Railway.

Metropolitan Railway.

Midland Railway.

Milwr and District Mines Drainage.

Minehead Urban District Council Water.

Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway.

Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway.

Newcastle and Gateshead Water.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.

New River Company.

New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company.

North and South Woolwich Electric Railway.

North Staffordshire Railway.

North-Western Electricity and Power Gas.

Norwich Water.

Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council.

Oakengates, Dawley and District Joint Water Board.

Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway (Abandonment).

Plymouth Corporation.

Portmadoc, Beddgelert and South Snowdon Railway.

Preston and Blackburn Tramways.

Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways.

Preston Corporation Water.

Radcliffe Tramways and Improvement.

Reading Corporation.

Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water.

Romford and District Tramways (Extensions).

Ryde Gas.

Saddleworth and Springhead Tramways (Abandonment).

St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

St. Marylebone Electric Lighting.

St. Mary Woolnoth.

Selby Urban District Council.

Sheffield, Laughton, and Maltby Railway.

Sheppy Gas.

Shipley Urban District Council.

Skipton Water and Improvement.

Soothill Nether Urban District Tramways.

Southend-on-Sea Gas.

Southend Water.

Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time).

South Shields Gas.

South Staffordshire Mines Drainage.

South Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway (Extension of Time).

Strabane, Raphoe, and Convoy Railway.

Stretford Urban District Council.

Surrey Commercial Dock.

Sutton Gas.

Swindon Corporation.

Thames River Steamboat Service.

Thames Steamboat Trust.

Thurles Urban District Council Water.

Ticehurst and District Water and Gas.

Tottenham Improvement.

Tynemouth Corporation.

Tynemouth Gas.

Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.

Ulster Electric Power.

Victoria University of Manchester.

Victoria University of Yorkshire.

Wallasey Tramways and Improvements.

Watford and District Tramways (Extension of Time).

Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance).

Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance).

Wellington (Somerset) Gas.

West Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment).

West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time).

Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier.

West Riding Tramways.

Whitby Gas.

Withnell Gas.

Wolverhampton Corporation.

Yorktown and Blackwater Gas.

And the Certificates that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have not been complied with:—

Coulsdon Tramways.

London County Council (Tramways and Improvements).

North Wales Electric Power.

Rotherham Corporation.

Trafford Park Dock and Railway.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND).

Forty-seventh Annual Report of the Registrar-General (Abstracts of 1901).

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.

Account of the sums received and paid in respect of the wages and effects of deceased seamen in the year ended 31st March, 1903.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.

Account of the General Lighthouse Fund, under the Acts 57 and 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 679, and 61 and 62 Vict. c. 44, showing the income and expenditure for the year ending 31st March, 1903.

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS, AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).

Account of all deposits received and repaid by the Board of Trade on account of Seamen's Savings Banks, under the authority of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, during the year ended 20th November, 1902, and of the interest thereon; statement showing the number and amount of seamen's money orders issued and paid at ports in the United Kingdom and at ports abroad from 1855 to 31st March, 1903; also statement showing the receipts and payments in connection with the transmission of seamen's wages, home and foreign, from 1878 to 31st March, 1903.

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.

Statement of the receipts and payments made by the Board of Trade for the year ended 31st March, 1903; together with an account of the receipt and issue of stores.

ROYAL PARKS AND GARDENS.

Rule for Holyrood Park; Provisional Rule for Hyde Park, St. James' and the Green Parks, Regent's Park, Greenwich Park, Hampton Court Park, Hampton Court Gardens, Richmond Park and Green, and Bushy Park.

COUNTY COURT, ENGLAND (FEES).

Treasury Order, dated 30th December, 1903, regulating Court fees in County Courts.

POST OFFICE.

(Money Orders). Statutory Rules and Orders (1903), No. 806.

(Telegraphs). Account showing the gross amount received, and the gross amount expended, in respect of the Telegraph Service from the date of the transfer of the telegraphs to the State to the 31st day of March, 1902 (in continuation of No. 31, of Session 1903).

BUILDING SOCIETIES.

Ninth Annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts; with an abstract of the annual accounts and statements of the societies for the year 1903.

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.

Order, dated 23rd September, 1903, entitled the Foreign Animals (Amendment) Order of 1903 (No. 3).

Order, dated 2nd February, 1904, defining a foreign animals quarantine station at the port of Southampton.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Annual Accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government Securities purchased.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

THE FISCAL QUESTION.

The Earl of WEMYSS: My Lords, there is a notice standing in my name on the Paper to the effect that a humble Address be presented to His Majesty praying him to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into and report on the present state and prospects of our trade, and whether any change or other action is needed in furtherance thereof. I had put this Motion down for Monday, but since I gave the notice I find that a great meeting is to be held at the Guildhall on that day, so I would ask leave to postpone the Motion till to-morrow week as the more convenient course.

The SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of Lansdowne): Lord Wemyss having postponed his Motion, and Lord Newton having put off the Motion standing in his name until Tuesday week, there are no further Orders on the Paper, and I understand, therefore, that it will be convenient to adjourn until Thursday next. I move to that effect.

The Marquess of RIPON: We see no objection on this side of the House to the adoption of the course suggested by the noble Marquess. There is a Chapter of the Garter fixed for Tuesday at Windsor, which will take away a number of noble Lords.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (The Earl of Halsbury): The judicial business will, of course, proceed as usual.

The Marquess of LANSDOWNE: Certainly. I exclude the judicial sittings from my Motion.

On Question, Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at twenty-five minutes before Five o'clock, to Monday next, a quarter before Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 4th February, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Acton Improvement Bill. "To confer upon the Urban District Council of Acton further powers with regard to the supply of electricity and the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Amersham, Beaconsfield, and District Water Bill. "To extend the limits of supply of the Amersham, Beaconsfield, and District Waterworks Company, Limited, and to confer further powers upon that Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Arlesey Gas Bill. "For extending the limits of supply of the Arlesey Gas Company; for the raising of additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Bill. "To authorise the Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Company to acquire additional lands; to confer further powers; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Barnet District Gas and Water Bill. To enable the Barnet District Gas and Water Company to acquire additional lands, construct additional works, and raise further capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Bexhill Water and Gas Bill. "To extend the limits of supply of the Bexhill Water and Gas Company; to authorise the Company to raise additional capital, and to construct additional waterworks; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Birkdale Improvement Bill. "To authorise the Urban District Council of Birkdale to acquire land to construct an outfall sewer, and to make further provision in regard to the health, local government, improvement, and finance of the urban district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Bishop's Stortford and District Gas Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the Bishop's Stortford and District Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Blyth and Cowpen Gas Bill. "To confer further powers on the Blyth and Cowpen Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Brixham Gas Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the Brixham Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Brymbo Water Bill. "To authorise the Brymbo Water Company to extend their limits of supply, to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Carlisle Corporation Bill. "To extend the boundaries of the city of Carlisle, to consolidate the parishes in the city into one parish, to make further and better provision for the health, good government, and improvement of the city; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Bill. "For conferring further powers upon the Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Cheshire Electricity and Power-Gas Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the Cheshire Electricity and Power-Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Chippenham Gas Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the Chippenham Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Colney Hatch Gas Bill. "To authorise the Colney Hatch Gas Company to raise additional capital, to acquire lands, to enlarge their works, to alter name of company, to amend their existing Acts; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Corbridge Gas Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the Corbridge Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Corporation of London (Southwark and other Bridges) Bill. "To empower the Corporation of London to rebuild Southwark Bridge, and to confer other powers upon them with respect to that and other bridges; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Croydon Gas Bill. "To change the name of Croydon Commercial Gas and Coke Company to 'the Croydon Gas Company,' and to confer further powers on the Company with respect to the raising of additional capital, the construction and maintenance of additional gas works; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Crystal Palace District Gas Bill. "To alter the provisions of the Acts of the Crystal Palace District Gas Company with respect to the illuminating power of gas supplied by them and the testing of g s; to change the name of the Company to 'the South Suburban Gas Company'; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Doncaster Corporation Bill. "To confer further powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Doncaster with reference to their water, gas, and electricity undertakings; to make further and better provision with regard to the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the said borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Donegal Railway Bill. "To authorise the Donegal Railway Company to raise further moneys by the creation and issue of guaranteed preference stock for the purpose, amongst others, of completing the Ballyshannon Extension, and to empower the Company to own and work motor-cars and other vehicles; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Company," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Felixstowe Gas Bill. "To incorporate and confer powers upon the Felixstowe Gas Light Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Gas Light and Coke and other Gas Companies Acts Amendment Bill. "To amend the Gas Light and Coke and other Gas Companies Acts Amendment Act, 1880; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Gomersal Gas Bill. "For consolidating the capital of the Gomersal Gas Company; for enabling that Company to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Great Central and Midland Joint Railways Bill. "To constitute as a separate undertaking certain Railways of the Sheffield and Midland Railway Companies' Joint Committee and certain other Railways authorised to be constructed by the Great Central and Midland Railway Companies jointly; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Great Central Railway Bill. "To authorise the construction of new works and the acquisition of lands by the Great Central Railway Company in connection with their undertaking; the construction of new Railways by the Cheshire Lines Committee and the Seaforth and Sefton Junction Railway Company respectively, and the acquisition of lands by the Great Western and Great Central Railways Joint Committee and the Manchester South Junction and Altrincham Railway Company respectively in connection with their respective undertakings; the acquisition by the Great Central Railway Company of the undertakings of the Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay and Buckley Railway Companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Great Eastern Railway Bill. "For conferring further powers on the Great Eastern Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Great Eastern Railway (Steamboats) Bill. "To amend the powers of the Great Eastern Railway Company with respect to the use of steam vessels," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Great Northern and City Railway (Extension of Time) Bill. "To extend the time for the completion of railways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Great Northern Railway Bill. "To confer powers on the Great Northern Railway Company with reference to the construction of works and the purchase of lands; to extend the time limited for the compulsory purchase of certain lands by the Company; to empower the Company and the Great Central Railway Company to purchase lands, and to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of certain lands by those Companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Hampton-in-Arden Gas Bill. "To incorporate the Hampton-in-Arden and Meriden Gas Company, and to enable that company to supply with gas certain parishes in the county of Warwick," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways Bill. "To confer powers on the Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways Company for widening and altering roads and acquiring lands in the counties of Middlesex and London; to authorise the sale of the undertaking of the company to the Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Limited, and to provide for the dissolution and winding-up of the Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Humber Commercial Railway and Dock Bill. "To empower the Humber Commercial Railway and Dock Company to construct a new dock with connecting railway and other works and entrance into the River Humber; to abandon the dock and works authorised by The Humber Commercial Railway and Dock Act, 1901; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Kettering Improvement Bill. "To make further and better provision with regard to the electric light undertaking of the Council, and for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Kirkby-in-Ashfield Urban District Gas Bill. "To empower the Urban District Council of Kirkby-in-Ashfield to supply gas and to provide for the transfer to the Council of so much of the gas undertaking of the Sutton-in-Ashfield Urban District Council as is situate within the urban district of Kirkby-in-Ashfield; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill. "To authorise the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to provide and work steam vessels between the ports of Goole and Hull and certain Continental ports; and to subscribe to the funds of steamship companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (Various Powers) Bill. "To authorise the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to construct new railways; to widen certain existing railways, and to construct other works; to acquire additional lands; and to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill. "To consolidate, with amendments, certain of the local Acts in force within the city of Leeds; to make further provision in regard to the various undertakings of the Corporation, and to make better provision for the health and local government of the city; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Leyton Urban District Council Bill. "To authorise the Urban District Council of Leyton, in the county of Essex, to construct and work tramways, and to confer further powers on the Council in regard to their tramways undertaking and their electrical undertaking; to empower the Council to execute certain street widenings, to provide for vesting in the Council certain lammas lands as open spaces and recreation grounds; to make further provision for the improvement, health, and local government of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Lincolnshire and Yorkshire Electric Power Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the Lincolnshire and Yorkshire Electric Power Company," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water Bill. "For incorporating the Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water Company and empowering them to construct works and supply water; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

London and India Docks Company Bill. "To facilitate the passage of traffic to and from the docks of the London and India Docks Company; to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands required for and for the completion of certain works; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

London and North Western Railway Bill. "For conferring further powers upon the London and North Western Railway Company in relation to their own undertaking, and upon that Company and the Great Western Railway Company in relation to their joint undertaking; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

London, Camberwell, and Dulwich Tramways Bill. "To define the widening of Rye Lane, Peckham, referred to in the Peckham and East Dulwich Tramways Act, 1885 and 1887; and to confer further powers upon the London, Camberwell, and Dulwich Tramways Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

London County Council (General Powers) Bill. "To empower the London County Council to acquire lands for various purposes; to make provisions with respect to sanitary and other like matters; to authorise the exchange of certain lands at Tooting Bec Common; to empower the Council of the Metropolitan Borough of Woolwich to purchase lands for various purposes; to change the name of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade; to confer various powers upon the London County Council and upon the Councils of Metropolitan Boroughs; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

London Port and Docks Bill. "To impose rates on goods imported into the Port of London, and to make provision for the improvement of the dock accommodation at, and the navigation of, the said Port; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway Bill. "To confer further powers upon the London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Lytham Improvement Bill. "To authorise the Urban District Council of Lytham to acquire Land to erect a Town Hall, to make further provision in regard to their gas undertaking, and to the health, local government, improvement, and finance of their district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Midland Railway Bill. "To confer additional powers upon the Midland Railway Company and upon that Company and the Great Eastern Railway Company and upon the Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee and the Norfolk and Suffolk Joint Committee, for the construction of works and acquisition of lands; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway Bill. "To empower the Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway Company to make a deviation railway in the county of Westmeath and an extension railway in the county of Louth, and to enable that Company and the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to enter into working and other agreements; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

North and South Woolwich Electric Railway Bill. "For incorporating the North and South Woolwich Electric Railway Company, and for empowering them to construct a railway from North Woolwich to South Woolwich, in the counties of London and Essex; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

North Staffordshire Railway Bill. "To confer further powers on the North Staffordshire Railway Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

North-Western Electricity and Power Gas Bill. "For conferring further powers on the North-Western Electricity and Power Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Norwich Water Bill. "To empower the City of Norwich Waterworks Company to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway (Abandonment) Bill. "For the abandonment of the Plymouth and North Devon Direct Railway," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Plymouth Corporation Bill. "To confer further borrowing powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Plymouth," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Radcliffe Tramway and Improvement Bill. "To confer on the Urban District Council of Radcliffe further powers with regard to their tramways undertaking; to construct new tramways and street improvements; to extend the Town's Yard; and to make further provision in regard to the supply of electricity, and for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Reading Corporation Bill. "To authorise an increase in the public libraries and museums' rates in the borough of Reading; to provide for the establishment of a superannuation fund; to make further provision in regard to the health, local government, and improvement of the said borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Bill. "For extending the limits of supply of the Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Ryde Gas Bill. "For conferring further powers upon the Ryde Gaslight Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Saddleworth and Springhead Tramways (Abandonment) Bill. "For the abandonment of the Saddleworth and Springhead Tramways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

St. Marylebone Electric Lighting Bill. For conferring further powers upon the Mayor, Alderman, and Councillors of the metropolitan borough of St. Marylebone with regard to the supply of electricity; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time,

Selby Urban District Council Bill. "To enable the Urban District Council of Selby to construct new waterworks and to make further provision with regard to their market, water, and gas undertakings, to enable them to rate and acquire Selby Bridge, and for the improvement, health, and local government of the district," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Sheffield, Laughton, and Maltby Railway Bill. "For making railways in the West Riding of the county of York; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Sheppy Gas Bill. "For consolidating the capital of, and for conferring further powers on, the Sheppy Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Skipton Water and Improvement Bill. "To authorise the Urban District Council of Skipton to construct additional waterworks; to extend their limits of supply; and to make further provision with regard to the supply of electricity; and for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Soothill Nether Urban District Tramways Bill. "To enable the Soothill Nether Urban District Council to make and maintain tramways and street improvements; to acquire land for the purpose of a refuse destructor; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Southend-on-Sea Gas Bill. "For conferring further powers on the Southend Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Southend Water Bill. "To empower the Southend Waterworks Company to raise further capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

South Shields Gas Bill. "To confer further powers upon the South Shields Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

South Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway (Extension of Time) Bill. "To extend the time limited for the compulsory purchase of lands for and completion of the railways and works authorised by the South Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway Act, 1901; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Strabane, Raphoe, and Convoy Railway Bill. "To empower the Strabane, Raphoe, and Convoy Company to construct railways in the Counties of Tyrone and Donegal; to change the name of the Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Surrey Commercial Dock Bill. "To authorise the Surrey Commercial Dock Company to raise further capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Sutton Gas Bill. "For conferring further powers upon the Sutton Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Swindon Corporation Bill. "To enable the Corporation of the Borough of Swindon to make new Tramways, and to make further provisions with reference to markets, and for the health, local government, and improvement of the borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Thames River Steamboat Service Bill. "To provide for the acquisition and construction of piers and landing places on the River Thames in the Administrative County of London by the London County Council, and to make provision for a service of vessels for passengers and parcels; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Thames Steamboat Trust Bill. "To incorporate trustees for the maintenance of a service of steamboats on the River Thames, to transfer to them the undertaking of the Thames Steamboat Company (1897), Limited, to provide for the transfer to them of certain piers on the River Thames, and for the guarantee by the London County Council of interest on moneys to be borrowed by the trustees; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Thurles Urban District Council Water Bill. "To authorise the Urban District Council of Thurles, in the County of Tipperary, to construct waterworks for the supply of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Tottenham Improvement Bill. "To confer further powers upon the Urban District Council for the District of Tottenham in the County of Middlesex," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

Watford and District Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill. "To extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands, and for the construction of the Tramways authorised by The Watford and District Tramways Act, 1901; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Wellington (Somerset) Gas Bill. "For incorporating and conferring powers on the Wellington (Somerset) Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Whitby Gas Bill. "To confer further powers upon the Whitby Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

Wolverhampton Corporation Bill. "To empower the Corporation of Wolverhampton to construct tramways, and to make further provision in regard to their tramway, electricity, and market undertakings, and the health, local government, and improvement of their borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

PETITIONS.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).

Petitions against alteration of law: from Trelewis; Leeswood (two); Nerquis; Bryndu; Appledore; Gravesend; Radcliffe Close; Kirkconnel; Penpont; Eaglesfield; Frawsfynydd; Halifax (five); Rochester; Aberdeen; New York; Willesden; Evenwood; Northumberland; Ffynnon Greew; Cilcain; Tavistock; Ashton-under-Lyne; Honicknowle; Liverpool (five); Billy Row; Marske; Hutton; Exeter; Alexandria; Kirkintilloch; Kilpatrickin; Renton; Leven; Dalmuir; Thornhill; Peterborough; Hopkinstown; Hafod; Todmorden; Midgley; Porth; Kilbrandon; Thornley; Hull; Cilcain; Northwich; Thornhill; Whiteparish; York; Deal and Walmer; Barnstaple; Vriog and Fairbourne; Corwen; Blaenan; Millom; Blantyre; Tamworth; Egremont; Oxford; Sunderland; Driffield; Frodingham; Tarvin; Tarporley; Ramsbottom; Heywood; Aintree; Stockton; Lochee; St. Leonards; Lincoln (three); Swansea (four); Sydenham; Lee; Rehoboth; Rhiwlas; Llandynan; Bryn Eglwys (two); Llansannan; Nantyr; Hyfrydle; Conway; Colwyn Bay; Eirienallt; Henhan; Caistor; Scunthorpe; Brigg; North Kelsey; Carmarthen; Chasetown; Manley; Salford (three); South Cardigan; Penpark; Altrincham; Bucklow Hill; New Delaval; Thornton; Saffron Walden; Newquay; Queen's Dewsbury; Ore; Roche; Falmouth; Dalton in Furness; Chorley; Lytham; Stirling; Glasgow (two); Oban; Strachur; Bideford; Coombe Martin; Muddiford; Ilfracombe; Barnstaple; Appledore; Rowland's Castle; Warsash; Fareham; Hayling Island; Netley; Lynton; Congleton; Stokesley; Stockport (three); Pumpherston; Gainsboro'; Swanage; Bournemouth; Burslem; Bristol; Willenhall; Thornaby-on-Tees; East Greenwich; Willington Quay; Throckley; Gosforth; Whitehaven; Silver Stream Tent; Edinburgh (four); Royston; Shafton; Gainsborough; Chipping Norton; Dalry; Kilmaurs; Springside; Clevedon; Bristol; Barnsley (two); Rutherglen; Renfrew; Mapplewell; Worthing; Birstall; Wyke; Haverton Hill; St. Helens (four); Askam; Llangefni; Penygarned; Brynsiencyn; Llangoed; Lesmahagow; Strathaven; Leadhills; Stonehouse; Douglas Water; Douglas (two); Carluke; Boothtown; Bewdley; Batley; Rushden; Mickley Square; Law; Hexham; Corbridge; Ovington; Penrhyn Dendreeth; Trawsfynydd; Harlech; Llandrillo; Glannan Tryweryn; Llandanwg and Llanfair; Bala; Tent No. 2735 Independent Order of Rechabites; Maentwrog; Blaina Festiniog; Towyn Corris; Dolgelley (three); Arthog; Gwydelwern; Machynlleth; Cefnddwysam; Aberdovey; Chudleigh; Llandderfel; Carlin How; Kingsteignton; Teignmouth; Kingskerswell; Chagford; Newton Abbott; Brotton; Lustleigh; Shaldon; Heathfield; Madog; Beulah; Brynmair; Dartmouth; Choppington; Nomansland; Amesbury; Lanivet; Saltash; Wideawake Tent; Lostwithiel; Pelynt; Bodmin; Birmingham (two); Ferryden; Plymouth (two); Coseley; Bilston; Carlingcott; Radstock; Retford; Llannwchllyn; Derby; Redcar; Newcastle on Tyne; Penmacline; Aspatria; Glazert Bank; Keighley; and Denholme; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY.

Petitions for prohibition: from Plymouth; Bideford; and Barnstaple; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

INEBRIATES ACTS, 1879 TO 1899 (REGULATIONS FOR STATE INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES).

Paper [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 20.]

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).

Return [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 21.]

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.

Account [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 22.]

EAST INDIA (SUGAR).

Return [presented 2nd February] to be printed. [No. 23.]

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Copy presented, of Returns of Accidents and Casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several Railway Companies in the United Kingdom during the nine months ending 30th September, 1903, together with Reports of the Inspecting Officers, Assistant Inspecting Officers, and Sub-Inspectors of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain Accidents which were inquired into [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 24.]

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 25.]

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.

Copy presented, of an Order, entitled The Foreign Animals (Amendment) Order of 1903 (No. 3) [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.

Copy presented, of an Order defining a foreign animals quarantine station at the port of Southampton [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS).

Copy presented, of the Postal Order (Inland) Amendment Regulations, 1903, dated 14th September, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1902–3.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 26.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 27.]

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 3rd February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 28.]

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNTS).

Appropriation Accounts presented, for the year ending 31st March, 1903, together with the Reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon and certain Reports upon Store Accounts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 29.]

ROYAL PARKS AND GARDENS.

Copy presented, of Provisional Rules for the Royal Parks and Gardens in connection with the Regulations prescribed by the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

HOLYROOD PARK.

Copy presented, of Rule for Holyrood Park in connection with the Regulations prescribed by the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND).

Copy presented, of forty-seventh Detailed Annual Report of the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in Scotland (Abstracts of 1901) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE:—

1. Bank of England. Accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government Securities purchased, and of the amount of Balances of Sums issued for the Payment of Dividends, &c., for the year ending the 5th January, 1904 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 30.]

2. Building Societies. Copy of Ninth Annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the Proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts, &c., [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 31.]

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Notices for Recovery of Income Tax in Scotland.

MR. M'CRAE (Edinburgh, E.): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware that notices for recovery of income tax within ten days have been issued in Scotland; whether this is in accordance with recent Treasury instructions; and whether similar notices have been issued in England.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) The issue of the notices in question commenced, both in Scotland and England, on 22nd January, this date being in accordance with the instructions to which the hon. Member refers.

Issue of Transvaal Loan.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer how long the Government have agreed to postpone the issue of the first instalment of the new loan to the Transvaal Government which the late Colonial Secretary said on the 27th July last would be placed on the market probably in January, 1904; and whether the agreements as to underwriting will still hold good.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) It is not possible to say when the conditions of the money market will become favourable enough to ensure the successful issue of the loan. The postponement of the issue does not affect the agreement as to underwriting it.

Extinction of Debt.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he proposes to take for the paying off of debt during the current year, in view of the fact that the £10,000,000 due from the Transvaal under guarantee has not been paid.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) I do not propose to take any step which will interfere with the Sinking Fund arrangements made last session.

Sudbury (Ontario) Nickel Mines.

MR. NORMAN (Wolverhampton, S.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether his attention has been called to communications which have been received at the Colonial Office from Canadian official authorities regarding the future control of the nickel mines in the Sudbury District of Ontario; and, if so, will he say whether any replies, and if so, what, have been made to such communications; and whether His Majesty's Government proposes to take any steps to facilitate and control the use of this nickel for Imperial purposes.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The communications to which the hon. Member refers were duly forwarded to the Admiralty, and the inquiry should be addressed to the representative of that Department.

Amount of Unfunded Debt.

MR. BUCHANAN: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present amount of the unfunded debt, specifying the amount of Treasury Bills and Exchequer Bonds outstanding, the rate of interest and period for which these securities have been renewed.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) There are £21,000,000 Exchequer Bonds outstanding, bearing 3 per cent. interest, of which £7,000,000 fall due next August, and the remainder in December, 1905. There are £21,133,000 Treasury Bills outstanding, of which £16,633,000 are twelve months' Bills bearing interest that varies from £3 4*s*. 4*d*. to £3 15*s*. 10*d*. per cent.; £4,000,000 are six months' Bills bearing interest that varies from £3 4*s*. 2*d*. to £3 15*s*. 10*d*. per cent., and £500,000 are three months Bills bearing interest at £4 2*s*. 3*d*. per cent. These Bills are exclusive of any Ways and Means Advances raised by Treasury Bills, which are necessarily paid off before the end of the financial year.

Release of Mrs. Maybrick.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR (Wicklow, W.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether Mrs. Maybrick has been released from penal servitude; and, if so, on what conditions.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas.) Mrs. Maybrick has been granted a licence under the Penal Servitude Acts, and is at present in a home, which she will be allowed to leave towards the end of the summer. In accordance with the wishes of the authorities of the home, and with Mrs. Maybrick's own earnest desire, which is, I think, entitled to consideration, I do not propose to make public further details as to time or place.

Magistrates and Passive Resisters.

Mr. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware that in a number of instances benches of magistrates have directed that persons summoned for refusal to pay that portion of the rates which is applied to denominational schools should be placed in the prisoner's dock; and whether he will issue a circular or otherwise represent to magistrates that this course is illegal and should be discontinued.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) My attention has not been drawn to any case such as the hon. Member indicates. It is certainly not a usual practice to put persons summoned for non-payment of rates in the dock, and except in very special circumstances I do not think it would be right to do so. But no question of law is involved, nor have I any authority to issue instructions to magistrates in the matter.

Beer Poisoning—Standard of Purity.

Sir CUTHBERT QUILTER (Suffolk, Sudbury): To ask the President of the Local Government Board whether his attention has been called to the confirmation by the Royal Commission on Arsenical Poisoning of the opinions expressed in the Minority Report of the Beer Materials Committee issued five years ago, prior to the outbreak of the beer poisoning epidemic, that legislation or other provision was necessary to prevent the use of deleterious substances in the manufacture of beer, and that a court of reference, as recommended by the Committee on the adulteration of food products (a recommendation since endorsed also by the Food Preservatives Committee), should be established for fixing standards of purity for the purposes of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts; and, if so, will he say what action it is proposed to take to give effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission, more especially as regards the protection of the public against the use of injurious ingredients in beer, and the fixing of a standard of purity.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) I had, before the issue of the Report of the Royal Commission on Arsenical Poisoning, had under consideration the expediency of promoting legislation with a view to the constitution of a court of reference for the decision of certain scientific questions in relation to food of the kind referred to in the Question, and I had been in communication with the Board of Trade and the Board of Agriculture on the subject. I am continuing to give attention to the matter, but having regard to the large and important recommendations of the Arsenical Commission, I think it will be necessary that a conference should be held of representatives of the Government Departments concerned before a decision as to the course to be adopted can be arrived at.

Employment in the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON (Middlesex, Ealing): To ask the President of the Local Government Board if, with the object of testing the assertions recently made that employment, in the aggregate, has fallen off in the United Kingdom and Ireland, he would have a Return made from the census tables of 1881, 1891, and 1901, giving, under a few general heads, the total number employed, including all in Government or municipal service, together with the total population of each period, and the percentage the employed bear to the population of each period.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) The Census Returns do not give the numbers of the population that are employed or unemployed at the date of each census, but only show the occupation usually followed by each individual when employed. I regret, therefore, that it is not in my power to cause the Return desired by my noble friend to be compiled.

Causes and Effects of Tariff Wars on the Continent.

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he will lay upon the Table of the House the information recently received from His Majesty's Representatives and the Consular service abroad, relating to the causes and effects of the tariff wars between France and Italy, France and Switzerland, and Germany and Russia.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) The Reports received on this subject will be laid upon the Table and distributed in a few days.

Alleged Atrocities on the Congo.

Mr. CHANNING: To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any official or other confirmation has been received of the statements recently made by the Rev. T. H. Weeks, Baptist Missionary, in the West African Mail, writing from the Monsembe Station on the Congo, to the effect that a number of men, women, and children have been killed in villages in that district for failure to pay their taxes; and, if not, whether inquiry will be directed into these allegations.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) This subject is dealt with in the Report from His Majesty's Consul for the Congo which is shortly to be laid before Parliament.

Preferential Tariffs—Views of Indian Government.

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: To ask the Secretary of State for India if any reply has been received by the India Office from the Government of India in response to a telegram sent on 7th August, 1903, by the then Secretary of State asking for the views of the Indian Government upon the subject of preferential tariffs; and, if so, would he lay it upon the Table of the House.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) I have received the reply of the Government of India, and I will lay the Papers on the Table of the House.

Crown Law Officers—Salaries and Fees.

Mr. LAMBERT (Devonshire, South Molton): To ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he will state what were the total amounts, including salaries and fees, paid to the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General respectively for the year ending 31st March, 1903; also, for the same period, the amounts paid as salaries for the department of King's Proctor, Solicitor, and Director of Public Prosecutions.

(Answered by Mr. Victor Cavendish.) The following amounts were paid to the Law Officers respectively for the year ending 31st March, 1903, viz.:—

	Salary.	Fees.	Total.
	£	£	£
Attorney-General	7,000	4,816	11,816
Solicitor-General	6,000	3,701	9,701

The salaries for the department of King's Proctor, Solicitor, and Director of Public Prosecutions for the same period (exclusive of payments for copying work) amounted to £21,912. The office of King's Proctor is at present held by the Solicitor to the Treasury and Director of Public Prosecutions, but it is altogether a separate office, and Lord Desart receives under existing arrangements no salary for performance of the duties of that office.

Exeter Education Authority — Removal of Children from One School to Another.

Mr. H. C. RICHARDS (Finsbury, E.): To ask the Secretary to the Board of Education if his attention has been called, or the consent of the Department given, to the notice recently issued in the city and county of Exeter by the education authority to the effect that no child be allowed to be removed from either of the elementary schools under the control of the education authority to another unless the consent of the authority be first obtained; if so, will he state upon what authority this notice was issued; and what steps he proposes to take to prevent the issue of similar circulars.

(Answered by Sir William Anson.) My attention has only this morning been called to the notice referred to, a copy of which reached the Board of Education yesterday. The notice would appear to be designed simply to meet the difficulty caused by capricious and frequent removals of a child from school to school. I will communicate with the local authority in question as to the methods proposed to be adopted for attaining the end in view. The Board hold that as a general rule it should rest with a parent to decide which school his child shall attend, and any complaint by a parent as to undue restriction of this freedom would receive the careful consideration of the Board.

Operation of Labourers Acts in Ireland.

MR. KENDAL O'BRIEN (Tipperary, Mid): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in view of promised legislation in connection with Irish labourers, he will, for the information of the House, issue as a Parliamentary Paper the reports which he has received from the Local Government inspectors on the operation of the existing Acts and the direction in which they think new legislation may be most advantageously applied.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The reports furnished by these inspectors are confidential documents, and as such it would not be in accordance with practice or precedent to publish them.

Strength of Volunteer Force.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): To ask the Secretary of State for War if he will state what is the present strength of the Volunteer Force, and how it compares with the state of affairs on 1st February, 1901; and what is the present deficiency in officers.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) As regards the totals of all ranks, the returns being rendered quarterly, the latest figures available are for 1st January of each year, and are as follows:—1901, Strength 277,910; 1904, Strength 241,280. As regards the officers the present establishment is 9,454, and the deficiency on the 1st February was 2,333; this includes 184 seconded or supernumerary officers.

War Office Reorganisation Committee—Circulation of Report.

MAJOR EVANS-GORDON (Tower Hamlets, Stepney): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether the Interim Report of the Committee on War Office Reorganisation, which was supplied to the Press on Monday, will be laid upon the Table and circulated to Members.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) This Report will be laid upon the Table and circulated to Members.

Transport of Government Stores to Gibraltar and Malta.

MASTER OF ELIBANK (Edinburgh, Midlothian): To ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office if he will state the nature of the shipping contracts for the transport of Government stores to Gibraltar, the name of the shipping company employed, the freight charged, whether tenders are invited from various shipping companies; and whether, in view of the amount of consignment of stores to Gibraltar and Malta, the Department contemplates employing special Government vessels for this purpose.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) The contract for the conveyance of Army and Navy stores to Gibraltar is in the hands of Messrs. J. Hall, Junior, and Company. It is terminable at a month's notice, and the Government reserve the right to convey stores also in His Majesty's ships, hired transports, mail packets, or vessels wholly chartered for the purpose. Competitive tenders were last obtained in 1894, when Messrs. Hall again secured the contract, the terms of which have, however, been revised from time to time to meet Government requirements. It is not usual to publish the rates paid under Government contracts unless special reasons exist for doing so. It is not considered desirable to employ special Government vessels for conveying stores to Gibraltar, as such a course would involve the collection of full cargoes, and would thus cause great practical difficulties. It would, moreover, be a very expensive course to adopt, as, owing to the small amounts of stores consigned home, the vessels would return practically empty.

Condition of Malta.

MR. BOLAND (Kerry, S.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he will lay upon the Table the Papers relative to the condition of Malta which have been received since the issue of the last Blue-book.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) No Papers of importance have been received since the issue of the Blue-book in July last, and it is not proposed to lay any further Papers at present.

Colonial Civil Servants and Political Demonstrations.

DR. SHIPMAN (Northampton): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, in view of the fact that under the civil service regulations of most colonies, officers of their Governments are forbidden to participate in any proceedings of a political character, he will consider the advisability of making representations to the Ministries of self-governing colonies as to the impropriety of their Agents-General actively participating in British politics, or becoming members of an avowedly political organisation in this country.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) As the Agents-General for the Colonies under responsible government are entirely under the control of the Colonial Ministers who appoint them, the matter is one for the Colonial Governments to consider, and I should not be disposed to interfere.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

The Aalesund Disaster.

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether, in view of the fact that a shipment of about 500 tons of clothing and food, &c., were prepared for despatch from the Deptford Victualling Yard to the inhabitants of the town of Aalesund on the 25th of last month; and that H.M.S. "Hearty" has been lying idle outside the yard since that date, he will state the cause of the delay.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): The fact of the Aalesund disaster became known at the Admiralty on Monday morning, January 25th, and a telegraphic inquiry was at once sent to the Norwegian Government, through His Majesty's Minister at Stockholm, asking whether it would be of use to send one of His Majesty's ships with blankets and provisions. His Britannic Majesty's Consul-General at Christiania telegraphed on the 26th to say that the Norwegian Government was making inquiries as to whether help was required, and later on the same day again telegraphed requesting on behalf of the Norwegian Government that acceptance of the offer mighr be postponed till it could be seen whethet the local authorities could cope with the situation with the assistance already supplied. In the meantime orders had been given for stores to be held in readiness at His Majesty's Victualling Yard, Deptford, and a vessel of war was detailed to embark them. She arrived off Deptford on the 27th, and is still there awaiting the decision of the Norwegian Government.

Officers' War Gratuities.

CAPTAIN NORTON: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he can state why the gratuities to officers specially taken into employment during the South African War, as laid down in the Royal Pay Warrant, paragraph 601B, have not yet been paid, and when they are likely to be paid.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): I am afraid that the hon. and gallant Member is under some misapprehension. These gratuities have been paid as they became due. In some cases, however, they have been altogether withheld owing to the unsatisfactory nature of the service of the officers concerned; and in a few cases they have been held back where the officers' accounts were not satisfactorily rendered.

CAPTAIN NORTON: If I give the big cases in which they have not been paid will he inquire into them.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Yes.

Officers' Saddlery.

SIR CARNE RASCH (Essex, Chelmsford): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether his intention has been called to paragraph (c), page 6, Report on the Officers' Expenses, recommending that military saddlery shall be issued to all officers of mounted corps; and, if so, whether he will explain why the Department has declined to carry out this recommendation, in view of the time that has elapsed since the Committee reported.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The issue of saddlery to mounted officers was authorised by Army Order 4 of January, 1904. It was not considered expedient to publish any decision to this effect until sufficient stock had been obtained to enable an issue to be made.

SIR CARNE RASCH: Does the Order not apply to the Indian Government, which has refused to supply saddlery to officers?

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: It does not apply.

The 2nd Essex Regiment.

SIR CARNE RASCH: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether, seeing that the 2nd Essex is under orders for the Mediterranean, that they came home in 1902 after twenty years continuous foreign service, and have only had sixteen months at home, he will arrange that battalions which have had ten years home service previous to the South African War shall go out before the Essex.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Owing to the present exigencies of the service more than half of the battalions of the line are required abroad, and it has accordingly been found necessary to curtail the period of home service. The claims of the various battalions who have been selected to proceed abroad have been most carefully weighed, and I am afraid that it is impossible to amend the selection without unfairness to others.

British Made Pom-Poms Sold to the Boers.

MR. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk, Mid): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he can state the number of pom-poms supplied to the Boers by English manufacturers, and the dates prior to the war at which these guns were supplied.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The number of pom-poms of British manufacture supplied to the Boers before the war was twenty-two. I am not in a position to state the exact dates at which these guns were supplied.

Quick-Firing Guns for the Army.

MR. FREDERICK WILSON: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he can state the number of quick-firing guns which have been purchased by the War Department in Germany, and whether any pattern of quick-firing gun has yet been decided on at our Government factories.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The number of quick-firing guns purchased in Germany was 108. As regards the new quick-firing gun no pattern has as yet been approved. It is hoped that a large number of the new pattern quick-firing guns will be manufactured during the next financial year.

Aldershot Sham Fight—Use of Ball Cartridge.

MR. FYLER (Surrey, Chertsey): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been called to a sham fight in the vicinity of Aldershot, on 18th December last, in which a private soldier was injured by one of several ball cartridges that were fired, and during which continued firing took place on the public roads at Camberley; and, if so, will he say whether this was in acccordance with War Office regulations; whether an inquiry has been held into the occurrence; and whether steps can be taken to prevent the recurrence of this inconvenience to residents in the district.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: My attention has been drawn to this case. The matter was referred to the general officer commanding, who stated that the circumstances as reported were greatly exaggerated, that he had already dealt with the case and had taken such steps as were possible to prevent any recurrence. The regulations in regard to firing on public roads are as follow:—"Firing on a public road will not, as a rule, be permitted; but when a road is unoccupied by the public, with no horses or carriages near, a single shot may be fired to mark the position."

India—Official Secrets Bill.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether he has received from India a reply to the memorial against the Official Secrets Bill presented to the Secretary of State on the 12th of November last; and whether, in view of the objection taken to the Bill by Indians and Anglo-Indians, he is in a position to state that its provisions will be confined to the case of Naval and Military secrets.

*The SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford): I forwarded to the Government of India the memorial to which the hon. Member refers, but I have not received a reply. The Bill is now under consideration by a Select Committee, and if it is passed by the Legislative Council will be reported to me in due course with all the debates and discussions. I can meantime give no pledge that its provisions will be confined to Naval and Military secrets.

The Mission to Thibet.

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTS: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether he will make a statement setting forth the objects and reasons for the present expedition to Thibet; whether he can give an assurance to the House that there is no intention of annexing any portion of Thibetan territory; whether he will state the strength of the military force employed, and the estimated cost of the expedition; whether the whole of the expense will be borne by the Imperial Treasury; and whether he will lay Papers upon the Table of the House.

*Mr. BRODRICK: A full statement of the reasons for and objects of the political mission to Thibet is contained in the Blue-book which will shortly be in the hands of hon. Members. The object of the mission is not to annex any portion of Thibetan territory, but to prevent a recurrence of the difficulties arising from the attitude of the Thibetan Government in respect of the Convention of 1890. The force employed, as I stated in my reply to the hon. Member for King's Lynn yesterday, is some 3,000 men. A preliminary estimate of the expenditure for four months from the 1st November is £108,400, but owing to difficulties of transport this will probably be exceeded. The charge will be borne by Indian revenues.

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTS: Arising out of that, may I ask whether it is likely that the Blue-book will be issued before the debate on the Amendment to the Address dealing with the mission.

*Mr. BRODRICK: I hope the Blue-book will be ready by Monday or Tuesday. I am doing all in my power to expedite its issue.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India what is the nature of the expedition sent from India to, and now in, Thibet; what is the total number of men composing it; has the Government of Thibet given permission for the expedition to enter the country; have any military operations been undertaken by this expedition; why was the expedition ordered and what end is it intended to attain; and will Papers be laid showing the causes which led to the despatch of the expedition.

*Mr. BRODRICK: A political mission has been sent to Thibet with an escort to provide for its safety. The escort consists of 400 men, with a seven-pounder gun and a machine gun, and a supporting force has been placed at various points to preserve the communications of the mission. The total of the troops employed on the escort and on the communications, according to my present information, is about 3,000 men. The mission has been sent in consequence of the failure of the Thibetan Government to carry out its obligations under the Treaty of 1890, and the neglect of the Thibetan Government to meet the British representatives as arranged by the Chinese Government, who are the Suzerain Power. No military operations have been undertaken. Papers will shortly be laid showing the circumstances which have made the despatch of a mission necessary.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: That is no answer to my Question whether the Thibetan Government have given permission for this expedition to enter their territory.

*Mr. BRODRICK: The Chinese Government, who entered into these negotiations in the first instance, arranged for a meeting of the representatives of the Thibetan, Chinese, and Indian Governments in Thibetan territory. The Government of Thibet have hitherto failed to comply with the arrangement made by the Chinese Government, and therefore they have not given permission to the mission to enter their territory.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): Can the right hon. Gentleman say exactly where the mission now is, and whether the members are suffering from the inclement weather?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! Notice must be given of that Question.

Tibetan Expedition.

MR. NORMAN (Wolverhampton, S.): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether communications passed between His Majesty's Government and the Russian Government regarding the expedition to Thibet before it was despatched, if so, will he state their purport; and can he lay the correspondence upon the Table.

*THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (EARL PERCY, Kensington, S.): The answer to the first Question is in the affirmative, the Papers are included in the correspondence which will shortly be laid.

Chinese Labour in the Transvaal Mines.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies when he will be in a position to lay upon the Table of the House a copy of the Labour (Importation of Asiatics) Ordinance (or any Paper relating thereto) recently passed through the Transvaal Legislative Council; and whether he will undertake that the Government will not finally decide the question of the allowance or disallowance of the Ordinance until after the House has had an opportunity of discussing and deciding the question on its merits. May I point out that the Government have already promised to give an opportunity for a full discussion of this question.

MR. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): At the same time may I ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, before arriving at any decision upon the Ordinance permitting the importation of Chinese into South Africa, which is now being considered by the Legislative Council at Pretoria, he will, in case that Ordinance should be passed in the Council, cause the text of the Ordinance to be laid before this House, and arrange that this House shall have an opportunity of fully discussing it. I also wish to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he will cause to be presented to Parliament the evidence taken before the Commission which recently sat in the Transvaal to examine into the question of labour for the mines. It is of extreme importance that we should have this.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): The Papers which were published yesterday contain a draft of the Asiatic Labour Ordinance as introduced in the Legislative Council of the Transvaal, and a telegraphic report of the Amendments made in Committee. These Papers will afford the hon. Member the means of examining the details of the proposed legislation; and I am taking steps to obtain, at the earliest possible moment, the official text of the Ordinance as actually passed, which will be published as soon as it is received. In reply to the second part of the hon. Member's Question, I have announced, in answer to an inquiry addressed to me, that His Majesty's Government will defer giving their final sanction to the Ordinance for the introduction of Asiatic labour into the Transvaal until Parliament has had an opportunity for full discussion of the subject. This announcement, which was made with the concurrence and approval of the Prime Minister, was in consequence of, and was designed to meet, a request of the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that, inasmuch as debate was sure to take place on this subject on the Address, this legislation should not be an accomplished fact before the meeting of Parliament. In order to carry out the pledge which was thus given, I have instructed Lord Milner to introduce into the Ordinance a clause suspending the operation of the Ordinance pending further instructions. I have to point out, however, that, as is evident from the Blue-book, the question is one of great urgency, and His Majesty's Government cannot undertake to postpone their decision longer than the termination of the debate on the Address. A Question has been asked me with reference to the publication of the evidence. I have to say that the evidence is now in the printer's hands and will be laid on the Table of the House. I anticipate that we shall be able to place advance copies of the evidence in the library either on Saturday or Monday next.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): When will the House see the actual words of the Ordinance as finally passed.

MR. LYTTELTON: I cannot definitely say as to a day. Hon. Members have already in the Blue-book the amended Ordinance, and they have further Amendments which have been introduced and which will be placed in the Blue-book. Hon. Members have, therefore, the opportunity of consulting the full Ordinance as we believe it has passed; but by Saturday or Monday my hon. friend will certainly have the official text of the document.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): I thank the right hon. Gentleman for his evident desire to meet the wishes of the House; but those who are interested in this subject are anxious, before the House proceeds to discuss, consider, and pronounce an opinion on this matter, that they shall be in possession of the whole of the materials. It is quite obvious that the actual evidence given before the Commissioners is an essential part of the case. I think perhaps the most convenient way will be to hang the matter up until we get the evidence and the other documents required. I think the right hon. Gentleman will also see that, after we have these materials actually placed in our hands, hon. Members must have a little time to master and understand the situation before them.

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, in view of the promises on behalf of the Government that Chinese labour should not be introduced into the Transvaal against the wishes of the population, he can see his way, either by means of the referendum or some other plan, to obtain the opinion of the people before giving his sanction to the Ordinance which the Transvaal Government have approved.

MR. LYTTELTON: In view of the vote and debate in the Legislative Council and of the other evidence contained in the Blue-book, on which Lord Milner's advice to His Majesty's Government has been based, His Majesty's Government are of opinion that the introduction of Asiatic labour is in conformity with the wishes of the people of the Transvaal. They are not able to agree that the expedient of a referendum should be adopted.

The Transvaal Loan.

MR. LABOUCHERE (Northampton): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether there are any official documents explaining the arrangement which was entered into between the late Secretary of State for the Colonies and certain capitalists regarding the pledge of the latter to subscribe £10,000,000 sterling of the issue of a Transvaal loan of £30,000,000, one third of which was to be issued during the present month; and, if so, whether he will lay them upon the Table.

MR. LYTTELTON: I have to refer the hon. Member to the Blue-book published yesterday.

Native Labour in the Transvaal Mines.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the attention of the Foreign Office has been drawn to the statement, quoted in paragraph 66 of the Majority Report of the Transvaal Labour Commission, to the effect that the natives of the British Central Protectorate, imported into the Transvaal to work in the mines, have proved very unsatisfactory as labourers, and have been dying of pneumonia at a rate which is equal to a rate of 28 per cent. per annum; whether this mortality still continues; and whether the Foreign Secretary will prohibit the recruitment of other labourers in British Central Africa, and will arrange for the repatriation of the survivors.

*Earl PERCY: We are aware of the statement alluded to. The Question has formed the subject of personal investigation by Lord Milner since his return to South Africa. His report shows that of the deaths which had occurred up to December 31st amongst the British Central African natives in the mines, a large proportion was due to an epidemic of influenza which broke out at the time of their arrival. The tenor of his report and of others previously received is not such as in the opinion of the Secretary of State would justify him in altogether prohibiting further recruiting under adequate safeguards, and this opinion has been confirmed by the evidence of the Protectorate Officer who accompanied the last recruits. Some of the earlier emigrants have already returned to the Protectorate. The rest will return at the expiration of their year's contract.

Sir JOHN GORST (Cambridge University): Will papers on this subject be laid on the Table of the House immediately?

Earl PERCY'S answer was inaudible.

Congo Free State Administration.

Mr. HERBERT SAMUEL: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs when Mr. Casement's Report on the Administration of the Congo Free State will be presented to Parliament, and whether the correspondence between His Majesty's Government and the Governments of other Powers relative to the Congo Free State will be published at an early date.

*Earl PERCY: Mr. Casement's Report on the Administration of the Congo State will be presented to Parliament at an early date, together with certain other correspondence on the same subject.

Macedonia.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs has any information been received by the Government as to the intention of the Governments of Servia and Bulgaria shortly to join with the Macedonian insurgents in hostilities against Turkey, and have His Majesty's Government taken any steps to secure the execution of the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin by the creation of autonomous provinces in the Balkans under the suzerainty of the Sultan, or in any other manner to secure the maintenance of peace in European Turkey.

*Earl PERCY: His Majesty's Government have received no information of the nature indicated in the first paragraph of the Question. The steps taken by His Majesty's Government with a view of securing the maintenance of peace in European Turkey are fully described in the Papers which have just been presented to the House. They have devoted their efforts to supporting and strengthening the schemes of reform advanced by the Austro-Hungarian and Russian Governments, and urging that those reforms should be promptly put into execution.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: Have the Government considered the propriety of calling a conference of European Powers on the subject?

*Earl PERCY: I must ask for notice of that Question.

The Far East—Russia and Manchuria.

Mr. JOSEPH WALTON (Yorkshire, W.R., Barnsley): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can make any statement to the House in regard to the situation in the Far East; and whether, with the view of averting war between our Japanese allies and Russia, any joint or separate representations have been made by His Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States of America to the Russian Government pressing for the prompt evacuation of Manchuria, in accordance with their repeated assurances.

*Earl PERCY: Having regard to the present state of the negotiations between Russia and Japan it would obviously be improper that I should offer any observations to the House upon this subject. Frequent representations have been made to the Russian Government by His Majesty's Government with regard to the delay in the evacuation of Manchuria.

Niu-chwang Customs Staff.

Mr. JOSEPH WALTON: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the native customs at Niu-chwang, which under the protocol to which Russia was a signatory are to be administered by the Maritime Customs, have been removed by Admiral Alexieff from the control of Sir Robert Hart by the dismissal of the Russian in charge who was appointed by Sir Robert Hart, and the appointment instead of a Russian Government official from Dalny; and, if so, what steps His Majesty's Government are taking with a view of securing the due observance of the provisions of the protocol.

*Earl PERCY: We have heard that the Russians have removed the member of the Maritime Customs staff from the administration of the native customs at Niu-chwang and replaced him by a nominee of their own. Representations have been made to the Russian Government.

Chinese Labour in the Chincha Islands.

Mr. LABOUCHERE: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, seeing that an agreement was entered into some years ago between the Chinese Government, or certain Chinese agents with the permission of that Government, and the Government of Peru, or certain persons connected with the guano deposits in the Chincha Islands, to export to these islands Chinese indentured labourers to work on the guano deposits, and that this trade was eventually forbidden by the Chinese Government owing to representations made by Her Majesty's Government, he will lay upon the Table of the House all documents in connection with this matter, together with any Reports of His Majesty's representatives in Peru in regard to the fate of the indentured Chinese labourers who reached the Chincha Islands.

*Earl PERCY: Full particulars of the matter referred to will be found in the "Correspondence upon the subject of Emigration from China" presented to the House of Commons in pursuance of their address of April 30th, 1855.

Extinction of Debt.

Mr. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he proposes to take for the paying off of debt during the current year, in view of the fact that the £10,000,000 due from the Transvaal under guarantee has not been paid.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I do not propose to take any steps which will interfere with the Sinking Fund arrangements made last session.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Are we to understand that no attempt will be made by the Government to make a special effort to reduce the Debt during the current year?

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The hon. Gentleman is to understand that the arrangements made by my predecessors last year and the year before are to remain in force. I must decline to make any further statement on the subject until the time comes for dealing with the Budget for the coming year.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Did not the right hon. Gentleman's predecessors state that the particular way in which they intended to reduce the war debt was by the employment of this sum of £10,000,000 from the Transvaal?

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: No, Sir; that is not an accurate recollection of the statements of my predecessors. They did intend to employ the money which they expected to recover in this way in further reduction of the Debt; but they restored the Sinking Fund and increased it quite apart from this contribution from the Transvaal.

Sir JOHN GORST: Can the right hon. Gentleman say whether his predecessor did not inform the House that this £10,000,000 would be repaid within the financial year?

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I have not the words of my predecessor before me. But he did anticipate that the loan would be raised in the early part of this year. This is no longer possible.

Income Tax.

*Mr. M'CRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware that notices for recovery of income tax within ten days have been issued in Scotland; whether this is in accordance with recent Treasury instructions; and whether similar notices have been issued in England.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The issue of the notices in question commenced, both in Scotland and England, on 22nd January, this date being in accordance with the instructions to which the hon. Member refers.

*Mr. M'CRAE: Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether ten day notices have been sent out in England?

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I have said they commenced sending them out at the same date in both countries.

British Trade Statistics.

Mr. HENRY HOBHOUSE (Somersetshire, E.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he proposes to take to supplement and complete the Memoranda on British Trade [Cd. 1761], which are stated in the prefatory note to be incomplete, fragmentary, and hastily prepared.

*The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): Inquiries are continually in progress by the Commercial, Labour, and Statistical Departments of the Board of Trade with a view to supplement and complete the information contained in the Blue-book referred to. The question of publication of some of the material thus collected in a suitable form will be considered at a later stage.

Mr. HENRY HOBHOUSE: Can the right hon. Gentleman say about when the information will be published?

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I am not prepared to say.

Mr. JOSEPH WALTON: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether His Majesty's Government will lay upon the Table the questions and inquiries addressed to the Board of Trade, in response to which the Memoranda, Statistical Tables, and Charts [Cd. 1761] 1903, were prepared with reference to various matters bearing on British and foreign trade and industrial conditions.

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir. These questions and inquiries were confidential, and I am not prepared to lay them on the Table.

Merchandise Marks Act—Pearson's Christmas Extra.

Mr. LABOUCHERE: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that a publication called Pearson's Christmas Extra, issued at the close of last year, was partially printed in Holland, and that no intimation of this fact was printed thereon as required by the Merchandise Marks Act; and whether he proposes to take any action against the publishers, as provided for under such circumstances by the said Act.

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The attention of the Board of Trade has been informally drawn to this case, and the informant has been told that the procedure of the Board of Trade in such matters is governed by the regulations made under Section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1891. Any complaint made to the Board in accordance with these regulations will, of course, receive their careful consideration.

Mr. LABOUCHERE: If I call attention to it in my individual capacity as a humble taxpayer——

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: It must be done in the proper form.

Mr. LABOUCHERE: Will the Board of Trade prosecute?

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: It is impossible to answer that until the application is considered.

Mr. LABOUCHERE: How can I lay it before the Board of Trade?

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I shall be happy to forward a copy of the regulations to the hon. Gentleman.

Historical Manuscripts Commission.

Sir THOMAS ESMONDE (Wexford, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury if he will state what steps are being taken by the Historical Manuscripts Commission with a view to the publication of the manuscripts of the Irish Franciscans.

The FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.): I regret to learn from the Historical Manuscripts Commissioners that the gentleman engaged by them to transcribe the manuscripts has, owing to ill-health and other causes, not made very rapid progress. He has now been relieved of his duties; and a new Inspector will proceed to Dublin next week to press the work to completion.

Island of Lewis.

Mr. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Secretary for Scotland if he will state when he proposes to deal with the recommendations contained in the Report on the Social Condition of the Island of Lewis.

*The SECRETARY for SCOTLAND (Mr. A. Graham Murray, Buteshire): The Report to which the hon. Member refers contains many recommendations of value, to which I am giving careful consideration. I have consulted the several Boards through whom action must be taken, and I am in correspondence with the convener of the Committee. I should like to add that many of the more important recommendations cannot be accepted unless the Bill which I am about to introduce to amend the Congested Districts Act of 1897 should receive the sanction of Parliament.

Scottish Board of Manufactures.

Sir J. STIRLING-MAXWELL (Glasgow College): I beg to ask the Secretary for Scotland whether he will state what action he proposes to take during the present session on the Report of the Committee on the Board of Manufactures.

*Mr. A. GRAHAM MURRAY: I am glad to be able to inform the hon. Member that the Treasury are able to give immediate effect to part of the recommendations in the Report, as will be seen in the Estimates. There are, however, questions of great complexity and magnitude raised by the Report to which I am giving my careful consideration, but on which it would be obviously premature to attempt to give any statement as to the course of action to be followed.

Sir J. STIRLING-MAXWELL: Has my right hon. friend anything to say with regard to the constitution of the Board itself?

*Mr. A. GRAHAM MURRAY: No, Sir, and I think that is obviously a Question which I ought not to be asked to answer at present.

Irish Labourers Acts—Mullingar Rural District Council.

Mr. HAYDEN (Roscommon, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Mullingar Rural District Council have passed a resolution protesting against the award of the arbitrator appointed under the Labourers Acts in the Mullingar rural district; and that the amounts allowed landlords for their interest in the plots of land proposed to be taken under the scheme now in course of promotion, are greatly in excess of those hitherto allowed; and, if so, whether he can state the reason for the increase; and whether, seeing that the arbitrator is a professional land agent, he will say whether it is usual to appoint land agents to such a position involving the fixing of the amount to be paid for the interest of a landlord in land; and whether he will state the average number of years purchase awarded in the last award in this rural district and similar averages in the previous awards in the same district, also the number of arbitrations of this class in which this gentleman had been previously engaged.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): The arbitrator who made the award of which the District Council complains is the Official Land Commission Valuer for County Leitrim. The Local Government Board has every confidence in his impartiality. The Board does not consider that the holding of a land agency should of itself disqualify a person from appointment as arbitrator when the Board is otherwise satisfied as to his qualifications and impartiality. In the present award the compensation averages £23 an acre. In the previous award it represented £20 an acre. The present arbitrator was employed in one previous case in Longford, when no complaint was made.

MR. HAYDEN: Can the right hon. Gentleman say the number of years purchase.

MR. WYNDHAM: I have not that.

Irish Landowners' Convention and the Land Purchase Act.

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been directed to a statement at a meeting of the Cork branch of the Irish Landowners' Convention, held in Cork on Saturday last, by the chairman, to the effect that the provisions of The Land Purchase (Ireland) Act, 1903, did not permit trustees to invest in 4 per cent. securities; and, if so, whether he will consider the advisability of introducing, if necessary, legislation to make clear the provisions of the Act relating to the investment of trust funds.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Under the provisions of Section 51 of the Act of 1903, trustees are empowered to invest in a large number of securities yielding 4 per cent. at par. Many of these are at a premium, and consequently do not yield that rate of interest, but there are a number which can be purchased to pay 4 per cent.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: May I ask if I am to understand the right hon. Gentleman to mean that the statement in the Question is inaccurate?

*MR. WYNDHAM: Yes, Sir, that would be so.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: Then will the right hon. Gentleman consider the desirability of furnishing the Irish Landowners' Convention with a copy of the Act, to enable them to study it?

[No answer was returned.]

Wicklow Magistracy.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR (Wicklow, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will state the number of Protestants who have been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Wicklow since the 1st July, 1895, and the number of Roman Catholics who have been appointed magistrates for the same county and during the same period; and, also, the total number of Protestants and Roman Catholics who at the present time hold the Commission of the Peace for the said county of Wicklow.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The numbers referred to in the first paragraph are 36 and 3; and in the second paragraph 106 and 22.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR: Does the right hon. Gentleman consider that an equal division?

[No answer was returned.]

Evicted Tenants.

MR. J .P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland how many applications from evicted tenants for restoration to their holdings have been received under the Land Purchase Act of 1903 by the Estate Commissioners; and whether the Commissioners, with a view to restore these tenants to their own or equivalent holdings, have yet made any overtures or inquiries as to the purchase of untenanted lands in county Longford.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Fifty-one such applications have been received from the county Longford. No untenanted lands in the county have yet been offered for sale to the Commissioners.

Granard Union—Workhouse Master.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the removal for neglect of duty of Mr. Leamy from the office of master of Granard Union Workhouse, to which position he had been appointed by the Local Government Board against the wishes of the local guardians, who favoured and requested the old master, Mr. O'Beirne, to be retained in the office; and whether he will, in order to restore peace in Granard Union, now direct the reappointment of Mr. O'Beirne to the office from which he was removed.

* Mr. WYNDHAM: Mr. Leamy has been required to resign on account of his failure to report a serious breach of discipline in the Workhouse. The former master is not eligible for re-election. The guardians propose to give him a superannuation allowance on the ground that he is permanently incapacitated by ill-health from the discharge of the duties of master.

In reply to a further question,

* Mr. WYNDHAM said he understood that this very regrettable dispute was approaching a satisfactory termination.

Coolegreaney Estate.

Sir THOMAS ESMONDE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he can give the House any information regarding the settlement of the Coolegreaney Estate in county Wexford.

* Mr. WYNDHAM: Negotiations for the sale of this estate have not yet been closed; they will, it is expected, be very shortly completed. When this desirable end is reached the Estates Commissioners will be in a position to restore immediately some twenty evicted tenants to their former holdings. For others of this class land will be sought elsewhere. The landlord himself restored twenty-five evicted tenants before negotiating with the Commissioners.

Forestry in Ireland.

Sir THOMAS ESMONDE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if the Government propose to take any steps towards the development of forestry in Ireland.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The Department of Agriculture has had under consideration for some time the question of assisting the development of forestry in Ireland. Investigations are still in progress, and the Department is not at present in a position to say definitely what measures it may recommend should be adopted.

*Mr. FLYNN (Cork, N.): Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that a large number of county councils in Ireland are most anxious to co-operate in this direction?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I am very glad to hear it.

The Wreck of the "Albert."

Sir THOMAS ESMONDE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will communicate with the proper authorities with a view to the removal of the wreck of the "Albert," off Curracloe, county Wexford, which is an impediment to the fishing industry in the locality.

Mr. WYNDHAM: My attention has not previously been drawn to this matter. I am making inquiry and will communicate the result to the hon. Baronet.

Seed Potatoes for Small Occupiers in Ireland.

Mr. HAYDEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to resolutions passed by the Castlerea Rural District Council pointing out the necessity of supplying seed potatoes to the occupiers of small agricultural holdings in the district, owing to the almost total failure of the crop in the last season, the bad quality of the available seed, and the advisability of a change of seed; and whether he is in a position to make any statement as to the intention of the Irish Government on this subject.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The resolutions have been received. In respect to the second part of the Question I would refer to my † reply to the similar Question addressed to me yesterday by the hon. Member for North Roscommon.

---

† See page 192.

Drogheda Disturbances.

Mr. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to an attack made upon the private residence of a Mr. Pearson, Palace Street, Drogheda, on the 22nd and 24th of January last, and to the fact that stones were thrown at the house and doors smashed; and, if so, if he can say what action has been taken in the matter.

Mr. WYNDHAM: No attack was made on this gentleman's house on the dates mentioned. But on the 14th January some stones are alleged to have been thrown at the house. The police are pursuing their investigations in the matter.

Mr. SLOAN: Is Mr. Pearson under police protection?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I must ask for notice of that.

Labourers' Cottages in Ireland.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY (Limerick, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will grant the Return standing on to-day's Notice Paper relating to labourers' cottages in Ireland.

Mr. WYNDHAM: I have communicated with the hon. Member on the subject of the proposed Return.

The Return is as follows:—

Return showing the number of Cottages applied for in every Poor Law Union in Ireland under the latest completed scheme in connection with the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, together with the number of applications for extra half acres to cottages already built under the Acts under said scheme; how many of these applications for cottages and extra half acres were sanctioned; the amount of expenses connected with such scheme; and in what way applied.

Irish Town Tenants.

Mr. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Government will consider the advisability of introducing a Bill to safeguard the town tenants of Ireland in their holdings at reasonable rents, and to prevent the loss of their improvements under the terminable leasehold system.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The Government cannot hold out any hope of introducing legislation in the direction suggested in the Question.

Longford Post Office.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether any steps have yet been taken to fulfil the promise of his predecessor to supply horse haulage for mails and parcels between Longford Post Office and the railway station; and, if not, can he state the reason why the promise of his predecessor has not been given effect to.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton): As stated to the hon. Member in a letter from the Post Office dated the 8th October last, I have sanctioned the employment of a horse and cart on the service in question. I am not aware that any difficulty has since arisen in the matter, but I am making inquiry and will communicate the result to the hon. Member.

Corry Postal Arrangements.

Mr. HAYDEN: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he is aware that the inhabitants of Corry, in the county of Westmeath, have memorialised the postal authorities requesting the establishment of a post office in that place; and whether, in view of the inconvenience caused by the absence of such an office and of the fact that letters reaching the nearest office for the district on Saturdays are detained till Monday morning, he will meet the wishes of the inhabitants by complying with their request.

Lord STANLEY: I have not as yet received any memorial asking for the establishment of a post office at Corry, but the question shall be considered and an answer sent to the hon. Member.

West Limerick Mail Service.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General if he can state what is the reason for the dislocation of the mail service in West Limerick, seeing that, owing to the mail cart system, the mails have been frequently late in parts of the district to the inconvenience of the public.

LORD STANLEY: I regret that there has recently been irregularity in the mail service in West Limerick. Part of the delay has occurred on the railway to Limerick, and representations on the subject have been addressed to the company; but the principal cause of the irregularity has been loss of time by the mail cart contractor. I have accordingly found it necessary to terminate his contract, and I hope that a better service will be afforded in future.

In reply to a further Question,

LORD STANLEY said a motor-car service had been tried, but had not proved a success.

Irish Post Office Audit.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he intends, with a view to promoting economy and efficiency, to arrange that in future the audit, clerical, and printing work arising out of postal business in Ireland shall be done in that country.

LORD STANLEY: The work of auditing the accounts of Irish post offices, so far as the audit is conducted by the post office, is done in Ireland, except as regards certain branches of business where centralisation is expedient. The arrangements for the audit conducted by the Auditor-General are entirely under his control. Clerical and printing work arising out of postal business in Ireland is done in that country so far as is consistent with economy and efficiency.

Irish Manufacturers and Army Tenders.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he will consider the advisability of arranging that the receiving depôt already established in Dublin shall in future be utilised for the reception of tenders and samples of Irish manufacturers desirous to tender for Army supplies; whether he will arrange that civilian tradesmen will be more largely employed in the construction and repairs of all work in connection with cavalry outfits.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. BROMLEY DAVENPORT, Cheshire, Macclesfield): The general questions involved have been the subject of considerable discussion in the past. It is believed that the expense and other disadvantages of the system proposed would outweigh any advantages it might present. The matter, however, shall receive further consideration.

Contracts for Imaal Military Camp.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR: I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office if he can state whether all or any of the contracts for provisions and forage supplied to the camp at Imaal, county Wicklow, are in the hands of local traders; and whether any of the contracts are in the hands of firms situated outside Ireland; and, if so, what provisions or forage are supplied by such firms.

MR. BROMLEY DAVENPORT: The camp at Glen Imaal exists during the summer only. At the last camp the contracts for provisions and forage were held by Irish firms, and none were held by firms situated outside Ireland. As regards local traders, it must be remembered that Glen Imaal is in the depths of the Wicklow Mountains, and that there are no local traders capable of carrying out large contracts.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR: Are there no traders in Dublin capable of carrying out such large contracts?

MR. BROMLEY DAVENPORT: The policy of the Department is to give the contracts to local traders.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR: Then why are they sent out of Ireland?

Fiscal Debate.

SIR M. HICKS BEACH (Bristol, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether His Majesty's Government will afford facilities for an adequate discussion of the fiscal question on a substantive

Motion, if, in the absence of the First Lord of the Treasury, Amendments to the Address on that subject are withdrawn. I may say in explanation that from what I hear I fear it is not at all probable that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will be in his place on Monday, for which day notice has been given of an Amendment to the Address by the right. hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose. I think that, under the circumstances, the House will generally feel that a discussion on that subject would be quite unsatisfactory. [Opposition cries of "No."]

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): The request of my right hon. friend is somewhat of an unusual character, but I frankly recognise that the absence of the Prime Minister creates a situation of temporary embarrassment in connection with the particular debate in which the House is anxious to take part. On the whole I am disposed to think that the suggestion of my right hon. friend is a reasonable one—[Opposition cries of "No."]—and therefore if it meets with the general agreement of the House to transfer the debate on the fiscal question from the Address to some subsequent date, I will endeavour to find time for such discussion when, as we all hope, the Prime Minister will be able to be in his place. At the same time, if right hon. Gentlemen opposite insist, as they have an undoubted right to insist, upon their title to discuss this matter upon the Address, then I must be released from my offer to give special facilities for a debate upon the same subject.

SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I do not know whether I will be in order, but I should like to ask the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose whether, in the circumstances, he will accept the offer and withdraw his Amendment?

LORD HUGH CECIL (Greenwich): May I ask the Home Secretary whether, if the course suggested were taken, it would be understood that no Amendment would be made to the Resolution expressing disagreement with the policy of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, but that a fair issue should be allowed without any interference from the Government one way or another so that the House might pronounce its opinion freely, without pressure?

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: Of course I cannot bind the House in any question of this sort. It is entirely in the discretion of any Member to move any substantive Motion or Amendment thereto.

MR. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): In answer to the appeal of the right hon. Baronet, I am, of course, aware of the considerations which were probably present to his mind, but looking at all the circumstances, of last year for example, and the difficulties that seemed then to be interposed—I do not now examine how they arose—considering the great eagerness and expectancy in every quarter of this House, and certainly in the mind of the country, and considering further that, though the Prime Minister may be absent on Monday or Tuesday next, still there are present on the Front Bench opposite six or eight members of the Cabinet, who must be taken to possess a thorough grasp of all the arguments at the back of what is called the policy of the present Government, I regret very much to disappoint the right hon. Baronet, but I think I should be disappointing a much larger number of Gentlemen in the House, and certainly a larger body outside, if I were to comply with his request. Therefore, on whatever may be the most convenient day, I shall be bound to move my Motion.

Government Tariff Policy.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, when do His Majesty's Government propose to make a statement of their intentions with regard to their tariff policy; and do His Majesty's Government intend to exclude taxation on food from their programme.

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS (for Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) said: Any statement on the subject of the Government policy had better be deferred, I think, until the return of the Prime Minister.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Will the right hon. Gentleman state that he is neither empowered on behalf of the Prime Minister to make a statement nor is he himself aware of the policy of the Government?

MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: I am perfectly aware of the policy of the Government, but, as I have said, I think it would be more satisfactory to have a statement made by the Prime Minister.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

[THIRD DAY.]

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Question (2nd February), "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Question again proposed.

MR. HUGH LAW (Donegal, W.) continued the speech interrupted at midnight yesterday. He said that in the course of a journey he made in that part of Europe he found that not only had a great number of villages been burnt down, but the population of others had been forced to fly over the Bulgarian frontier. He could not understand the reason of their exclusion from the Austro-Russian scheme of reform. Was it due to their proximity to Constantinople, or to the fact that no insurrection had broken out in that part? It was a matter of great regret that up to the present not a single word seemed to have been said as to the propriety of including the Adrianople vilayet in any further proposals for reform in European Turkey. There seemed to be a want of machinery for putting the reform scheme into operation. He did not wish to labour the discussion on that point, but events had already shown that so long as there was a Turkish governor, whether Christian or Mohammedan, at one end of the telegraph wire and the Sultan at the other, so long would there be delay and obstruction, and so long would the reforms be unable to penetrate down to the people to whom they ought to apply. He believed that the Government realised, but he was anxious that the House should realise, how serious and urgent the question was. In eight or nine weeks from now they might expect something to happen. He believed that—things had so long drifted—unless some very active steps were taken it would be absolutely impossible to prevent a fresh insurrection. There was no doubt whatever that the leaders were ready for a fresh insurrection. His own opinion—possibly it did not coincide with that of the noble Lord opposite—was that they had to face the fact that in a few weeks time that part of the Peninsula would again be ablaze. The losses of the insurgents had been insignificant, inasmuch as the Turkish Troops had followed the dangerous policy of chasing the bandits into the mountains and of burning and exterminating their villages. He was informed on very good authority that their losses would not be more than 5 per cent. These losses would be much more than made up by recruits from the tens of thousands of refugees—the men who had lost everything close to the Bulgarian frontier, and who were only too ready to start upon a course which promised the recovery of their property.

Apart from the danger of an insurrection, there was the still greater danger of a Turco-Bulgarian war. His own belief was that it would be difficult to avert a Turco-Bulgarian war. It was very easy to blame the Bulgarians for what was called their provocative attitude, but he very much questioned whether any other nation in the world would have stood quiet so long. For many years past, owing to the uncertainty of life and property in European Turkey, a crowd of people had emigrated every year from Macedonia into Bulgaria. At the present moment they were supported by Government contributions and private subscriptions, the refugees were estimated by The Times correspondent at Philippopolis as early as September at 30,000. The Bulgarians desired to avoid war, because they knew they had a good deal to lose, but he did not believe that if there were fresh massacres it would be possible for the Government of that country to avoid war. What was the British Government going to to? A report from one of our Vice-Consuls stated that the Turks were ready for massacre, and that it was commonly reported in every Turkish barracks that, in the event of an insurrection and a Turco-Bulgarian war, they would burn and destroy every village on their march so as to leave no enemies behind them. The House was entitled to ask, in view of these facts, what His Majesty's Government proposed to do to prevent those horrors which otherwise must certainly ensue. His firm conviction was that nothing would really be effective short of occupation by all the Powers, such as was successful in Crete. A mere interchange of papers between the different Embassies, with their gendarmerie scheme, however well intentioned, and with the appointment of assessors, however able, could not possibly prevent an insurrection or attain the end which Lord Lansdowne laid down as the end to be sought, namely, that the people themselves should no longer join or sympathise with the operations of insurgent bands. He believed that no reform could be made effective, in that sense, short of actual occupation of that country by the great Powers. But if His Majesty's Government were not prepared for that, he thought the House had a right to ask, in view of the gravity of the situation, that they should distinctly formulate their policy.

*THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.): I understand it is the general wish of the House to proceed before long to the discussion of another subject, and perhaps it will be for the general convenience that I should reply to the speeches delivered on the very important question of the situation in Macedonia. In the first place I should like to pay a tribute to the spirit in which all the speakers who have taken part in the debate up to this point have addressed themselves to the subject, and to their recognition of the efforts which have been made by His Majesty's Government. It is, of course, very easy to point out defects in the present reform scheme. The hon. Member who has just sat down alluded to one of them when he said that it did not include the Adrianople vilayet in which a great deal of disturbance has recently occurred. The Sultan volunteered his own intention some months ago of expanding the present scheme so as to include the Adrianople vilayet, and we may trust that the result of the application of these reforms to other provinces will strengthen the Sultan in his laudable decision. There are a great many defects which can be pointed out in the present scheme, but I think it should be remembered that that scheme is not ours, and that although we have from time to time suggested amendments and alterations, all of which have been in the nature of improvements, and most of which have been ultimately, if somewhat tardily, accepted, yet we have no desire whatever to claim credit for the authorship of that scheme. In the preparation of that scheme we were not ourselves consulted, and the credit as well as the responsibility for that scheme rests in the first instance upon the two Powers who have assumed the initiative with the full approval and concurrence of all the Powers signatories to the Treaty of Berlin. I think that some hon. Members who have spoken in this debate have expressed regret, which is, I think, also felt by the leaders of the revolutionary movement, that the authority of Europe should, so to speak, have been put into commission in this way, and that we should have delegated a kind of Power of Attorney to Austria and Russia to deal with a situation which arose out of a settlement originally international in its character. Well, whatever may be said in favour of that view, I think it is a view which cannot with propriety be urged by those who on so many occasions have poured contempt and ridicule upon the delays—on the interminable delays—which are associated with the machinery of collective intervention by all the European Powers. But however that may be, it has been throughout our policy to act in conjunction with Austria and Russia. We have frequently stated the reasons that determined us to act in that manner, and I think they are reasons which, on the whole, have commended themselves to the common sense of the country. In the first place it is our duty to put British interests in the foreground, and it is not our opinion that British interests are so vitally concerned as to demand our taking the initiative ourselves. In the second place we think the objects we have at heart are objects which can probably be better fulfilled by the action of Austria and Russia than by any other method.

What are those objects? In the first place we desire to avert a violent disturbance of the existing condition of things which must awaken many difficult questions, open a great many vexed international controversies, and possibly arouse a wide-spread conflagration. That view was nowhere more strongly or emphatically expressed than in the aide-memoire which was presented by the two Powers to the Porte on the occasion of the formulation of the second reform scheme. In that aide-memoire they were very careful to emphasise the fact that they had spared no effort to meet the susceptibilities of the Porte by confining the period of their intervention in the reform scheme to two years, and by maintaining at the head of the administration a Turkish official. But the object of His Majesty's Government is not confined to the maintenance of the status quo. We desire, as every humane man must desire, to obtain a real and, if possible, a permanent amelioration of the condition of the population of the European provinces of Turkey. That amelioration can only be produced under two conditions. Turkey must recognise that, however excellent her laws may be in theory, the actual practice of her administration is one which her best friends cannot defend, which constitutes a glaring violation of her solemn treaty engagements, and which is at once a menace to the security of her own rule and to the peace and tranquility of the neighbouring provinces. But there is another condition, and that is that the European Powers should be able to convince the law-abiding element of the population—which comprises, I believe, the large majority, if not all, of the non-Bulgarian element, and which I would fain believe comprises a large proportion of the Bulgarian population also—of the determination and ability of Europe not only to procure for them securities against misgovernment in the future, but also to protect them against that kind of tyranny and terrorism by which political agitators for months past have sought to prolong the disturbances and to make the introduction of any real reforms in the provinces impossible. These being the objects of the Government, I think it is manifest that they can best be secured by the two Powers Austria and Russia. They are the two Powers who have most to fear from a reopening of the Eastern question; they are nearest to the scene of action, and, therefore, in the best position to bring material pressure to bear; and, owing to racial and religious affinity, they have the best cause to sympathise with, and the best means of understanding, the sufferings and requirements of the population on whose behalf intervention is sought.

So much for the policy of resigning the initiative to the Austrian and Russian Governments. But His Majesty's Government have always insisted at the same time, and their claims have been frankly met by both of these Governments, on their right to suggest amendments and alterations. These have been directed hitherto to improvement of the details of the scheme, and not to vital changes in its principle. The principle of the scheme we have accepted, and in the opinion of persons best qualified to judge, that principle is well adapted to meet the requirements of the situation. That, at all events, is the opinion of Sir Nicholas O'Conor, our Ambassador at Constantinople; and I understand from a document published by the Balkan Committee at home in The Times only two months ago that they do not themselves dissent from that view. Of course, if these hopes and expectations should unfortunately be falsified it will be the duty of the Government and of all the European Powers to reconsider their position; but I do not think that we should be justified in allowing our hands to be forced, or in assuming as a sufficient proof of the failure of the reform scheme the mere fact of the continued hostility of political irreconcilables who, it appears, if they are to be judged by their actions, would regard the success of the reform scheme as the main obstacle to the realisation of their political ambitions.

That that is so I am afraid we have had only too much evidence already. The fact that under the first reform scheme those who profited by the amnesty took the first opportunity of rejoining the insurgents; the fact that, as in the case of the Armenian reform scheme, the Bulgarian element almost entirely stood aloof from the reorganisation of the gendarmerie, and that, at all events in one instance, and I am afraid it will be found in more than one, those Bulgarians who have already enlisted have paid the penalty of their temerity with their lives—these facts show to my mind only too clearly the motive of the political pressure which has been brought to bear.

So far as the action of His Majesty's Government is concerned, I think we may make two claims. We may claim that if there has been any delay in the execution of these reforms—and there certainly has been a very regrettable delay—the responsibility for that delay does not attach to us. We have throughout insisted that in our opinion it is far more important that an imperfect reform scheme should be applied promptly and at once, than that we should waste precious time before applying any reform scheme at all. I think we may claim, in the second place, that we have anticipated by our advice many of the best features in the reform scheme as it now stands, and that some of our suggestions might with very great advantage have been adopted at an earlier period. I refer more especially to our proposal that European officers should be allowed and invited to accompany the Turkish troops during active operations. If that proposal had been accepted at once it might have had the effect of very largely checking the excesses and irregularities on the part of the Turkish soldiers, and it would certainly have had the effect, which the Turks themselves ought to welcome, of furnishing Europe with authentic information gathered on the spot, and not with garbled and exaggerated versions of massacre and outrage. That proposal was first made by Sir Nicholas O'Conor at the very beginning of August. On the 28th of that month he was still able to report that, although there were as many as 200,000 Turkish troops in the field, on the whole discipline had been very fairly maintained. In that connection I cannot pass over without mention a remark made last night by my hon. friend who raised this subject. Without in the least seeking to palliate or excuse any of the outrages or excesses committed by the Turkish troops—for they admit of no excuse or palliation—and without seeking to estimate the relative guilt of outrages perpetrated by men who are suffering under a sense of great grievances and outrages inflicted by an army which is in a state of great exasperation and has suffered long and deliberate provocation, yet at the same time I do not think that the hon. Member was justified in saying that, whatever might have been the action of the committees, they had not been guilty of the appalling outrages on women and children which had been committed by the Turkish troops, regular and irregular. I do not deny that that has been the case as regards the Turkish irregular troops, but anyone who reads candidly and carefully the last Blue-book but one will see perfectly clearly that the nature and character—I do not say the extent—of the outrages committed by the revolutionary troops have been exactly on all fours with the nature of the outrages committed by the Turkish troops. Up to the last week in August discipline had been fairly maintained. The greater part of the excesses of the Turkish troops dated from the beginning of September, when the irregulars were called out to cope with the invasion of the vilayets of Kossovo and Salonica. When His Majesty's Government made this proposal with regard to the officers it was rejected by the Russian Government as somewhat premature. It was renewed on two subsequent occasions, when we had the support of the Italian Government. On the 29th September we were informed that the principle was to be embodied in the new reform scheme, and we at once took steps to warn the officers whom we ourselves intended to employ.

Earl Percy.

Our action has been the same in regard to the gendarmerie reorganisation and the employment of European advisers in the chief administrative and judicial departments. Both proposals were pressed upon the Sultan by Sir Nicholas O'Conor as far back as the close of 1902, before any reform scheme had been formulated by the European Powers, and when the Sultan had himself taken the initiative by appointing an inspector-general with a committee to sift evidence, and by laying down rules for the admission of a Christian element into the gendarmerie. It has always been the opinion of the Government that what is required in the Turkish provinces is not political change so much as thorough administrative re-organisation. Turkey does not possess the class of men who have the requisite expert knowledge and experience to carry out such a task as that, and for her to come to Europe for trained assistance involves no more derogation of her sovereign rights than is already involved in the admission of European management in the case of the Ottoman Bank and the control of the Ottoman Debt, or in the reorganisation by Europeans of the Turkish army. The necessity and importance of financial reform was explicitly recognised by Austria and Russia in their first reform scheme, in which they laid down that a budget was to be drawn up for each of the Macedonian provinces, that the revenues of those provinces were to be checked by the Imperial Ottoman Bank, and that the expenses of administration were to form a first charge on the provincial revenues. It is a source of great regret to His Majesty's Government that the opportunity was not taken at the time of the elaboration of the second reform scheme to work out those provisions in detail, but we have been assured that their importance has not been lost sight of. At this moment I believe that the inspector-general, in company with the two European assessors, is sitting at Salonica in order to draw up a detailed scheme of financial and administrative reorganisation. Financial reform lies at the root of real administrative improvement, and it will become more and more imperative every day with the great additional expenditure which will be cast upon Turkey by the adoption of reforms, as, I think, we have sufficient evidence already in the large extra taxation, amounting to £2,000,000, which has been recently imposed. The Government trust that the Sultan will himself recognise before it is too late that it is the absence of financial reform which makes judicial and administrative corruption inevitable, which has already reduced the Turkish Empire to the verge of penury, and which, if allowed to continue, will certainly bring it to ruin.

I do not know that I can give any further information beyond stating the position in which the reform scheme stands. The inspector-general has occupied his post for some months, and, according to information which has already been published in the Blue-book, has not laid himself open to the kind of censure which seems to be implied in the speech of the hon. Member for West Donegal. On the contrary, he has shown very conspicuous energy and a praiseworthy determination to do whatever he can to make the reforms a reality. Two assessors—both of them possessing a large experience of Eastern affairs—have been appointed, and have taken up their work. As regards the scheme for the reorganisation of the gendarmerie, the Italians have already selected a general who is to take command. All the Powers have appointed their staff officers, and I believe that, with the possible exception of the German staff officer, they have arrived at Constantinople and will immediately enter upon their duties. Colonel Fairholme, the officer whom His Majesty's Government has appointed, is military attaché at Vienna. These staff officers will consider the details of the scheme of reorganisation which has been drawn up in consultation by the two military attachés of Russia and Austria. As regards the non-commissioned officers, a certain number of European officers, belonging chiefly to the minor European States, were enrolled in the Turkish service some months ago. Four Belgian officers were employed in Macedonia, and since then additional Swedish and Norwegian officers have been engaged. It will be necessary that each of the Powers should depute probably a fairly large number of non-commissioned officers to assist their respective staff officers in the actual work of reorganisation. His Majesty's Government are awaiting the report of their delegates on the scheme of reorganisation before sending out the officers whom they intend to depute. I can only say, in conclusion, that it is the determination of His Majesty's Government to use their most earnest, constant, and uninterrupted endeavours to press forward the execution of the provisions of the reform scheme in their entirety. If we do not at the present juncture discuss the question of an alternative policy it is because we desire to emphasise the solidarity of the European Powers, because we are reluctant to admit the failure of a scheme which, if failure there be, must entail untold misery and suffering, whatever the ultimate result, upon the whole Christian population of Macedonia, and because, in the last place, we certainly do not desire to offer any pretext to the Turkish Government to allege as an excuse for reluctance to apply the reform scheme at once, the idea that any concession made to the Powers will only be the prelude for further demands.

MR. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): The Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs has admitted that this Macedonian question has never been made in this House the means of any Party attack whatever. The discussions in the country which have occupied the minds of the people to a large extent were conducted without any reference to Party. Therefore we are now in a favourable position for discussing the matter. The troubles in Macedonia have arisen from long continued misgovernment of the Turkish Empire. It has been nothing but the existence of abominable oppression and tyranny that has given other Powers an opportunity to come into the field at all. The Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs appears to have very greatly minimised the horrible atrocities committed by the Turkish troops, and he has compared them with what has been done by the insurgents, and compares them favourably. He seems to ignore altogether the fact that the Turkish atrocities have been committed upon innocent subjects. In one case given in Sir Nicholas O'Conor's report, it is shown that a village was surrounded by regular Turkish troops, and the people were set upon by a number of Bashi-Bazouks, who slaughtered everybody with the exception of about two men. I do not think all the acts of cruelty perpetrated by the insurgents can parallel that one case.

Earl Percy.

*EARL PERCY: The right hon. Gentleman must remember that I did not compare the scale on which these atrocities had been committed. What I said was that the attacks upon women and children had been made by the insurgents in exactly the same way as by the Turkish troops.

MR. BRYCE: I submit that they cannot be considered as acting in the same way as the regular Turkish troops. As regards provocation the case is entirely different, for in the cases of cruelty by Turkish troops there was no provocation at all, and many of the outrages perpetrated by those troops have been accompanied by horrors which it would not be right to mention in this House. They consisted of outrages upon women, and acts of savage and incredible cruelty for which there is no parallel in the conduct of the insurgents. Apart from these points I have no criticism to make. Let me now state what I believe to be the broad outlines of the position. In the first place, no one can have followed this story and read these Blue-books without seeing from the first that Austria and Russia have been entirely half-hearted in this matter. What the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs has said about the special interest of Austria and Russia is perfectly true, and it might have been the case before 1902, but the experience of the last two years has shown that they have no desire to remove discontent in those parts. The inhabitants there have lost confidence in the promises of Austria and Russia, and are endeavouring now to seek safety in some other quarter. In the next place, the Turks are absolutely incorrigible. They have gone on in their old way, repeating the same kind of conduct and the same cruelty which shocked Europe in 1876. There is nothing to choose between their conduct now and their conduct in 1876, and the most complete proof of this is that these things are being done with the approval and connivance of the Sultan, because nobody has ever been punished for these outrages except in the case of the murder of the Russian Consul. There have been many cases of the grossest possible outrage where the perpetrators have not been punished; all the evils which went on last summer are still going on. The burnt villages have not been rebuilt and taxes are being levied upon the inhabitants of some of these burnt villages. According to the report of the Consul of Monastir there are 14,000 refugees homeless there at the present moment. The first scheme was confessedly useless, and was accepted by the Sultan because the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs said he knew it would be so. There was no intention of applying the present scheme in the vilayet of Adrianople. In the fourth place, the danger at this moment is very great. We know that the insurgent bands are still in the mountains, that there is great excitement in Bulgaria, that the present Bulgarian Government has got a large majority in favour of war, and we know that it will be extremely difficult for them to restrain these bands or their own people unless there is some substantial improvement within the course of the next six weeks. I suppose the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs admits that to be the fact. Therefore there is a very serious danger that the insurrection will begin afresh, and be accompanied by the outbreak of a war between Turkey and Bulgaria.

But there is a new feature in the situation which very greatly aggravates it. I am sure everybody in this House must hope that there will be no war in the Far East between the two Powers which are now watching one another with so much suspicion. We must, however, contemplate the eventuality of the outbreak of a war between Russia and Japan as being possible. What will the result of that be in the Balkan Peninsula? It is desired both by Turkey and Bulgaria because they believe if Russia were occupied elsewhere she could not put that restraint upon their action which she now can, and the Turks think they could finish off the Macedonians and reduce Bulgaria to her old rule. I think those who have followed the reports of Continental nations will agree that it is generally believed over Europe that the danger of war in the Near East would be greatly aggravated if war was to break out in the Far East. In these circumstances surely this is an exceedingly difficult position before this country. We must all agree with the aim which the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs has set before us. Everybody desires, I am sure, that peace should be preserved, that the reforms should be proceeded with, and the danger of a European war averted. But have the Powers taken the best means to secure that end? I do not complain of what has been done by Lord Lansdowne, for he has shown an earnest desire to improve and strengthen these reform schemes as much as possible. Where his suggestions have not been accepted it would have been a good thing if they had been, and if he had taken even a stronger line than he has taken, and insisted upon the necessity of improving the scheme, I think we should have been in a better position to-day. We do not know from the Blue-books whether he has communicated with the Governments of France and Italy in reference to what will be done in case this scheme should fail. I am sure the House will feel that the Government ought to have considered those eventualities, that they ought to feel that if this scheme fails owing to the difficulties being thrown in its way, an excessively dangerous crisis will arise, and it will be necessary for the Government to consider, along with the Governments of France and Italy, what should be done. Any improvements of the scheme should include the supersession of direct Turkish rule in Bulgaria. Therefore, I would urge the Government to consider the advisability of arriving at some arrangement with the other European Powers which will provide for the case of the failure of this scheme, and which will enable them when there is a danger of war breaking out, say in the month of April, to arrest it by announcing the scheme which will stop the insurrection and keep Bulgaria quiet. That would be a far better course than the continual wrangling of the Turks over this scheme. While acknowledging what Lord Lansdowne has done, I believe if he takes a still firmer tone he will have, as was shown by the meetings which went on during the autumn, and by everyone who has spoken in this House, the general and hearty support of the people in adopting a decided line in this matter. It will be to the honour of England if we are able at this moment to save Eastern Europe from a perpetuation of her present troubles and from the danger of a Continental war.

SIR MARK STEWART (Kirkcudbrightshire), who was indistinctly heard, said there were one or two points which he should like to refer to with regard to this very serious question. They could treat this matter from a non-Party view because in every quarter of the House there was nothing but horror and detestation for the cruelties which the Turks had committed. But those who had investigated these matters, and had seen with their own eyes what had happened, declared that things were far worse than had been described in the Blue-books. Whilst thanking the Government for what they had done, he still thought they might have done a little more. He was quite of opinion that unless they acted in a stronger way than they had hitherto done war would break out again in that quarter. The people there had made up their minds to fight; there were plenty of men and rifles; their houses had been burnt down and their property taken from them. Consequently they had nothing to lose, and were determined to wreak their revenge in a bloody war and do everything they could against their enemies. That was the state of things, and whilst Russia was indifferent to these reforms, Turkey was quite indisposed to entertain anything whatever of the kind. If they looked at these matters from that point of view the position was very serious. Russia was entirely indifferent and apathetic in regard to moving in this matter of reform in order to prevent suffering and further war. He was quite sure that Lord Lansdowne and the Foreign Office would do their best; he agreed that they had a very difficult part to play, and they had an alternative policy at their hand. He trusted that His Majesty's Government might see their way very shortly to produce this alternative scheme if the present scheme was not carried out.

*MR. ROBSON (South Shields): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move the Amendment standing in my name. That Amendment charges Ministers who were in office at the period of the war with negligence in relation to preparations for the war and its subsequent conduct. That is a serious charge and a personal charge; and I am sorry, and the entire House will be sorry, that I have to make it under Parliamentary exigencies which I cannot control, in the absence of the Prime Minister, who undoubtedly would have been here to meet it had he been able. I shall certainly say nothing against the Prime Minister that may not be dealt with by his colleagues. The charge I make is a failure on the part of Ministers to perform the first duty incumbent on a Government—namely, to provide for the safety of its territories in view of threatening attack. This is not merely a complaint of general unpreparedness for some unexpected contingency. It is a more serious and specific matter than that. It is alleged against the Government that it failed to take precautions and to exercise ordinary foresight and care in spite of ample, distinct, and repeated warnings. Before I deal with the details and instances of the negligence which I allege against the Government, let us first of all endeavour to clear our minds as to the precise scope of the duties in regard to which negligence is alleged. The Prime Minister himself has helped us very materially in this task. In his speech at the Hotel Cecil he pointed out the nature of the problem which faces an English Government in the matter of Imperial and National defence; and when we understand what he regards as the great difficulty we are helped to some definition of the duty thrown on the Government. The Prime Minister says that whereas French and German Ministers are quite familiar with every possible theatre of warlike operations to which they might be required to send troops, and while they also know the number and quality of the troops against which they may be called upon to operate, to an English Minister the problem is indeterminate. The Prime Minister pointed out that we cannot know from day to day and from time to time when we may be required to send our troops or in what climate they may be required to work, nor do we know far in advance the precise quality of the foe we may be called upon to meet; and further that even with our own material for war there is some uncertainty, because it is a vountary army and we cannot quite predict its quantity or cost. No one could phrase the general proposition better than the Prime Minister has done. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham has, I think, put it a little less pleasantly, and I hope also a little less accurately. He says we are always unprepared. I should be sorry to accept that as being true in its fullest extent; but no doubt there is a certain sense in which that phrase is entirely true. If we are always unprepared it is well, however, to remember that a statesman who intervenes in an international dispute which might lead to war would require apparently a double dose of caution and of courtesy in dealing with such situations, because if we are always unprepared obviously one aim of our diplomacy must be to give our soldiers time for preparation. One can scarcely imagine under such circumstances anything more perilous or more dangerous than what used to be called the new diplomacy, a mode of diplomacy which insisted on the instant publication of highly controversial despatches which inflamed public feeling in such a way as to make it almost impossible to secure a lengthy diplomatic pause if our soldiers happened to require it. I think we shall see as the story develops with what deadly effect that method of diplomacy operated to quicken the pace and precipitate the catastrophy against which our soldiers were warning us.

The first duty, therefore, which appears to lie on a British s atesman may be gathered from the utterances of the First Lord of the Treasury and the late Colonial Secretary. It is undoubtedly this. As soon as any Government is warned of a definite urgent and imminent danger it ought at once to set its soldiers to consider in a thorough and systematic way the military necessities of the situation. I do not say that with a vast Empire like ours the British Government should be always scenting war. On the contrary, I think it would be a very dangerous temperament for any Minister to possess. I do not suggest, although many do with a fair show of justice, that we should have plans of campaign for all conceivable conflicts. But where a Minister has been amply and repeatedly warned that some other country is preparing for a conflict with us, then he should at least have a plan of campaign for that contingency. That seems to me to be a very modest standard of a Minister's duty. That duty I hope to show, and show as briefly as I may, was neglected, and gravely neglected. I am not sure that even the word "neglect" adequately describes the omission, because when one speaks of neglecting a duty, it rather implies that, although undertaken, the duty was badly done. But this duty was never, in any substantial sense, undertaken—it was omitted. That is the point, and it is a very serious point. It is almost impossible to imagine one more grave. That is the foundation of the charge brought against the Government by their own Commission. During all these years of hostile negotiations, though warning after warning was given, there never was, from first to last, any plan of campaign in operation in South Africa. That, then, is the first duty by which I propose to test the conduct of the Ministry. The second can scarcely be mentioned without some appearance of irony. It is that an English Government warned of an impending conflict should take the trouble to consider, and should even go so far as to decide, what its attitude should be with regard to other Powers, and whether it would have to fight one Power or two or more Powers, because until the Government had done that, the soldiers could not prepare a plan of campaign. I ask the House to keep that fact in mind. An effort has been made to cast the responsibility for our mistakes and mischances upon the Army. Let us then remember the dominant fact that a plan of campaign had of course, in the first instance, to be ordered by the Civil Government; and that it cannot be laid down at all until you know where you are going to fight and who you are going to fight. Up till the last moment, indeed until it was too late, the Government omitted to tell the soldiers what enemies they had to prepare a plan of campaign against, and until that was done the soldiers had to wait for the decision of what was indeed a purely political question. The third duty which I venture to submit is incumbent on every Minister lies in the fact that, having regard to what the Colonial Secretary describes as our perennial unpreparedness, he should keep diplomacy and military preparations in something like accord. He should take care that military preparations did not unduly lag behind diplomacy; but, above all, he should take care that diplomacy did not outrun a necessary state of preparedness.

In any test, then, as to the performance of these duties let us bear in mind the speech of the First Lord of the Treasury at the Hotel Cecil, to which I have already referred. He there sought to create in the minds of his audience the impression that this was only another instance of the general unpreparedness with which the English nation was prepared to be content; and that Ministers could not be expected to know the theatre of operations or the precise kind of enemy our soldiers would be called upon to meet. Nothing could be more inaccurate. In this case all uncertainty was absolutely removed. The Government knew, none could know better, exactly where the theatre of operations would be, and the character of the war. It has been assiduously sought to create in the mind of the British public that Ministers were unprepared through no fault of their own. That impression has now no right to be held in the public mind after the publication of this Report; and I am very glad that the time has come at last when public justice may be done to the work of the Intelligence Division. That great and admirable division of the War Office and its work has been alternately neglected and maligned, and something like justice has been done it by the Report of the Commission. But I do not think that even the Commission has done adequate justice to the extraordinary excellence of the work of the Intelligence Department. I venture to say that, although in this war one had a great deal to lament and to criticise, the work of the Intelligence Department seems to be almost above criticism. When one looks at the warnings it gave and the information it supplied one is disposed almost, even now, to ask, looking back on the war and all we have to regret and to learn, was there anything which the Government needed which the Intelligence Department did not tell them? Certainly so far as facts were concerned, almost nothing. The only criticism that could be made against the Department was that in one or two particulars it did not seem to express a right opinion; but as regards the supply of material facts there is no criticism to be made. Take, for instance, the Report of the Intelligence Department immediately after the Jameson Raid. The Department seem to have appreciated the significance of that raid. They exercised to a certain degree an intelligent anticipation as to the consequences that might ensue, and they therefore began at once to warn the Government. Major Altham pointed out what the result of the raid had been on the relations between the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, and there were no less than a series of twelve other full and admirable reports from the Intelligence Department in 1896 to 1899. They are brought up to date in June, 1899, and that is the report I have in my hand. This is by no means the last, but I take this as being one which is teeming with warnings and information. It begins by giving an elaborate account of all the physical difficulties of the Dutch Republics for military operations, and then it goes on to speak of their armament. We remember, when the war broke out, one of our Ministers expressed pained surprise at the excellent arms and guns these Boer peasants possessed. That with most people conveyed the impression that the Government were really surprised, but the Intelligence Department, year by year, ever since 1892, gave statistics of every gun the Boers possessed, and the only error which they committed was to make the warning they gave rather stronger than it need have been. The Intelligence Division warned the Government that the Boers had 107 guns. There was therefore no uncertainty; the problem was not indeterminate. With regard to men, the whole military organisation of the Transvaal is described with a lucidity that is simply marvellous. Great stress is laid on their mobility. Another Minister expressed surprise that not only had the Boers guns but that they were mounted. Yet that was one of the matters upon which the Intelligence Division was most precise. I would ask the House to listen to one sentence that might have been written after instead of before the war—

"As regards mobility it must be recollected that the force which was defeated at Laings Nek and Ingogo was operating on foot, and with practically no mounted troops, against men whose hunting experience had taught them to get the utmost use out of their horses in approaching, surprising, and surrounding large herds of wild antelopes. Moreover, South Africa is of all countries perhaps the most dangerous in the world for infantry to > operate in without a screen of mounted troops in the near front and on their flanks."

And then it goes on to describe their tactics—tactics which we all became painfully aware of during the course of the war—

> "The tactics employed by the Boers were in fact such as they had learnt by hunting experiences on the veldt. Alike in attack and defence they acted on the same principle, containing the enemy's front, with a thin but well posted body of skirmishers they utilised every fold of ground to gallop unseen round his flanks, and then leaving their horses, which are trained to stand without holders under cover, gradually concentrated a ring of overwhelming fire on their objective."

There is the origin of a good many of those painful surrenders which it pains us even now to remember or mention. That was a very precise warning as to the mode in which these surrenders were likely to be brought about. The Report goes on to explain the skill with which they take advantage of cover and concentrate this overwhelming fire on their opponents without practically the loss of a single life. Turning over the page, one scarcely knows what extracts to take from it, I find this—

> "At the outset of war they would, no doubt, boldly take the offensive against Cape Town or Kimberley, a serious engagement would necessarily ensue before our columns had penetrated far into the Republican territory. Defeat in such an engagement would, as has been already said, involve such disintegration of the Boer forces as to terminate the war."

Then there is this piece of information, and I wonder what we should have thought if we had known that the Government knew this before the war—

> "General Joubert said in conversation in March, 1898, that a scheme for such offensive action had been drawn up by a German officer, but was not yet approved. A report from a reliable source dated June, 1899, states that the present Boer plan of campaign contemplates a concentration with the Free State forces west of the Drakensberg and an advance on Ladysmith through Van Reenans Pass."

So that before the war broke out we had the Intelligence Division foretelling the advance against Ladysmith; foretelling its method and the danger of such an advance to this country. So much for means and methods, though I might go further and point to the amount of ammunition they had accumulated almost to a round, and the sites where that ammunition was stored. I counted myself something like twenty-three places, which would have indicated to anybody except the Ministers on that Bench that a guerilla warfare was contemplated.

I now desire to draw attention to the Report in one particular respect, which, I think, outweighs all other considerations. The most material thing to be considered by the Government, both in directing operations or in moulding their diplomacy, was the attitude of the Orange Free State. That is the matter on which their ignorance seems now to be most complete and profound. They knew nothing of the organisation or the military armaments or men of the Transvaal, but their ignorance of the Orange Free State is most black. Just let me tell the House how matters stood in the Orange Free State—that is a very important fact—after the peace in 1881. In 1881 there was a treaty, offensive and defensive, between the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, by which the Orange Free State bound itself to assist the Transvaal if it thought the cause of the Transvaal was just. After the Jameson Raid that treaty was revised; it was made again in a somewhat different and a slightly stronger phraseology. In 1897 there were the same conditions, entirely, except that the Orange Free State was to be at liberty to withdraw from offensive and defensive operations with the Transvaal if they thought the cause was unjust. That is to say, in 1897 the Orange Free State bound itself to act with the Transvaal unless it could show or prove the quarrel was unjust. That was the only condition on which the Orange Free State could avoid the obligations cast on it by this treaty. That was in 1897. Afterwards came a long period of hostile negotiations, right down to 1899, and in June, 1899, a very important event took place which had the greatest bearing on the matter. In June, 1899, there was the Bloemfontein Conference. The proposal made at that Conference came to be considered in the Free State Raad. Then was the time for the Orange Free State to make its treaty absolute or let it go altogether. If the Orange Free State had said, We think Mr. Kruger's cause is unjust, then the treaty goes. But after the Bloemfontein Conference the Orange Free State Raad passed a resolution affirming its agreement with Mr. Kruger on his proposal. Nobody could doubt for a moment then that Mr. Kruger's view was also the view of the Orange Free State. That was the state of circumstances in June, 1899, and, as all of us know, the war broke out in October of that year. That only states in a short way that which is stated over and over again in the course of these reports, that the Orange Free State intended to throw in their lot with the sister Republic, and Sir John Ardagh said that this agreement was no dead letter. Ample provision was made for joint operations, and Sir John Ardagh goes on to say that apart altogether from these treaties there was already ample provision made for joint operations, and that in fact the Orange Free State was being armed at the cost of the Transvaal with armaments and ammunition. They had worked out their scheme completely. Sir John Ardagh sent a copy of a resolution, passed apparently in secret session of the Transvaal Raad, that they must arm others besides themselves. There was no question, therefore, in June, 1899, as to the attitude of the Orange Free State. These two States were in a condition of absolute solidarity. What then did the soldiers ask His Majesty's Government for? They wanted to know what the route was to be in order to approach the Transvaal, and that question was not settled until too late. On 28th November, 1899, the First Lord of the Treasury made a speech at Dewsbury in which he explained what he understood to be the state of things with regard to the Orange Free State. The right hon. Gentleman said—

> "If I had been asked two months ago whether it was likely we should be at war with the Orange Free State, I should have said that you might as well expect us to be at war with Switzerland. They were local friends from whom we had nothing to fear, and who had nothing to fear from us."

This was said of a State that had made an offensive and defensive alliance for combined offensive operations against us, and had intimated that they made their own the casus belli of their neighbour. In January, 1900, the First Lord of the Treasury repeated the same statement. Some colleague, perhaps some colleague connected with the Colonial Office, might surely have warned the right hon. Gentleman that he was wrong. The right hon. Gentleman, addressing his constituents at Manchester, referred to the intention of the Boers to precipitate a struggle from which they hoped to gain some national advantage, and then he goes on and observes—

> "This was not a question on which the Government had, could have, or ever pretended to have, special means of information. There have been, and there may be, European questions on which the public cannot be taken into the confidence of the Government of the day. The Government of the day may know perfectly, and secretly, facts about the intents of this or that foreign Government which impose on them a certain policy which they cannot communicate in any fulness of detail to their fellow countrymen. But in this case there were no secrets, everybody was on an equality. The man in the street knew as much as the man in the Cabinet. If I held the view that peace was a possibility, I held it with the great mass of public opinion."

Just imagine a statement like that with these twelve reports lying apparently undusted upon the shelves of some Government Department. There is no parallel in English history to this case of a Government receiving warnings like these year after year, month after month, touching Imperial peace, and neglecting them, so as to show in the end a state of hopeless and helpless ignorance such as the First Lord of the Treasury showed at the end of 1900. He was not the only member of the Cabinet who did not appreciate the situation. I do not wish to trouble the House with extracts, but you remember a speech of the late Prime Minister on this matter. I think the Duke of Devonshire also intimated that so far as he was concerned he had not been made acquainted with the imminence of the danger arising from the Orange Free State. Here we have got the First Lord of the Treasury, who was a member of the Cabinet Committee of Defence, and it would appear that these reports were not laid before that august body. I daresay, like other bodies which are to be constituted under the new reform scheme, that body became too august to be active. Neither were the reports asked for by the First Lord of the Treasury. Of course they would have been produced, but the right hon. Gentleman seems to have forgotten the existence of the Intelligence Department altogether. It was no momentary lapse of memory such as might occur with anyone engaged in the absorbing duties of First Lord of the Treasury and Leader of this House; it was a forgetfulness that continued for three and a half years of anxious and perilous crises; it was not only forgetfulness, it was a feat of forgetfulness. He may have asked for them and been told that there were none. I do not think that is likely. It would have been a grave mistake if such a thing happened in this case, and one would have nothing more to say about the First Lord of the Treasury. He might in that case have been expected to ask why there were none, but further than that I could not push my criticism. There is a third alternative which I mention only to exclude, that the Prime Minister might have read these reports and have failed to appreciate their importance. That certainly would be an admission of incompetence greater than any charge I have dared to make. We have further to ask how it came that these reports were unknown to Ministers of such importance as the Prime Minister and others? They were sent, in the first instance, to the Colonial Office, and then to the War Office, with covering letters drawing attention to their contents and enforcing the gravity of the situation.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.): I do not know whether it is of importance to the hon. Member's argument, but he must be entirely mistaken. There may be some particular report which came to the Colonial Office first, but reports of the Intelligence Officers go to the War Office.

*MR. ROBSON: I have no doubt whatever that the right hon. Gentleman is correct as to the first step, but that does not touch my argument at all, I only mention the subject for the purpose of saying that the letters accompanying the documents showed that the Colonial Office appreciated the gravity of the reports. The Colonial Secretary, however, might have consulted the First Lord of the Treasury or the Duke of Devonshire. Was that done at all? One cannot understand how, if there was anything like specific or explicit consultation between the Colonial Secretary and the First Lord of the Treasury, the First Lord of the Treasury should have remained as ignorant as he did of the information contained in the reports. But the ignorance—I do not use the word offensively, but I cannot think of another adequate to the occasion—of the First Lord of the Treasury with regard to the intentions of the Orange Free State was symptomatic, because we will see that the soldiers were kept waiting for the Government policy with regard to that Republic. The question of the Orange Free State never seems to have been put forward in any form so as to invite the collective consideration and action of the Cabinet. There seems to have been a remarkable silence and reserve between the Departments concerned with regard to this vital matter. How comes it that it was not more fully discussed between the Colonial Secretary and the First Lord of the Treasury? It might be said that the Colonial Secretary did not in those days habitually consult his colleagues. That is his way. That may be so. I am not going to criticise his action on any matter of that sort. That is a matter which affects the self-respect of his colleagues. But there is another point of view—the point of view of the colonies and this country. Remember that the Colonial Secretary was responsible for colonial defence. The Colonial Secretary, therefore, with the War Office, ought to have insisted on having adequate supplies of money in order to provide that that defence was not neglected. He could not possibly expect the Treasury to make adequate grants of money unless he did his best to make them realise exactly the state of affairs. No criticism except of a favourable character can be passed on the letters which the Colonial Secretary passed to the War Office. He points out that the colonies are not prepared to meet attack, and that if an attack was made there will be great humiliation and expense to the Empire. He was warned that there would be great loss of prestige to the Empire unless these warnings were heeded in due time. He knew the danger. Did that exhaust his duty or end his duty? I venture to submit it was only the beginning. The danger was pointed out in 1897 and again in 1898; they could not escape knowledge of it. These reports were made—whether to the Colonial Office in the first instance or not, certainly they were brought to the knowledge of the Department. Therefore he knew the danger. I ask the House to consider whether, in the events that followed, he did his duty in making his colleagues realise the danger as it was communicated to him? Collective responsibility should have been invoked, for this question lay near the root of all other delay. Let me follow to a finish this story about the Orange Free State. We see at a very much later stage—in 1899—General Buller begins to grumble about the delay of the Government in making up their minds. He was informally appointed in June, 1899, when he was at Aldershot, a busy man and engaged in his duties as Commander there. His formal appointment was not made till 9th October—two days before the outbreak of the war. This is what he said in that interval—

> "I thought the question of the Orange Free State should be settled, and that until we could make a plan of campaign we could not get on. I was always grumbling to Wolseley about it. I was always told to leave the Orange Free State out of account."

Lord Lansdowne says that he did not tell him that, and I am quite sure that we accept Lord Lansdowne's word as to the best of his knowledge and as likely to be correct. But he never told General Buller to take the Orange Free State into account. And remember, almost contemporaneous with General Buller's informal appointment was the resolution of the Orange Free State Raad, which made it perfectly clear that we would have to fight the Orange Free State if we entered into hostilities with the Transvaal. Therefore he was not told the plans of the Government. What are the concluding dates on this point? There was a report in June, 1899, and on the 8th August a fresh memorandum from the Intelligence Department by Major Altham, pointing out—I need not read it; it was the same in substance—the danger that lay in our path in regard to the Orange Free State, and the urgent importance of deciding at once what the English policy in regard to the Orange Free State should be. No action is taken until at last we get to the 23rd September. On that day General Buller says he was "suddenly told he might put forward his views as to the route" to be taken. War broke out on 11th October; and on 25th September there appears, so far as the evidence is concerned, the first glimpse of a Cabinet consultation on this subject. A Minute is laid before the Cabinet by Lord Lansdowne, in which he says—

> "The question of the Orange Free State ought, I think, now to be faced without further delay."

So that after three years of inexplicable and inexcusable delay we get at last this decision; and even then war had been thought inevitable for at least three weeks. In another part of the evidence Lord Lansdowne was asked when he thought war inevitable, and he said 5th September. Now we turn from this statement of facts which may be excused—we may be overwhelmed with rhetoric, but these facts cannot be denied. We turn from that to the Ministerial defence. That Ministerial defence appears to be put forward by the Prime Minister in the Hotel Cecil in November last. I venture to say that rarely—never in the history of this country—has any Ministerial speech excited such deep, universal, and bitter resentment among all ranks of the English Army as that speech. The Prime Minister began by saying that—

> "The root of every complaint was that we under-rated the military task before us."

What he means by "we" will be seen in a succeeding extract. He continues—

> "All the so-called failures of the war arose out of that miscalculation."

and—

> "The impression left on many gentlemen after reading the Report is that the War Office authorities had not taken advantage of the information given by the Intelligence Department, and that if they had thought a little more about their plan of campaign that miscalculation might have been avoided. Personally" (says the First Lord of the Treasury), "I differ from that."

One does not wonder that he should differ from that. Mark what the right hon. Gentleman says. Here is a charge made against the Government of not having made up their minds on a political question in order that the soldiers might set to work to study the military question—

> "Observe," (he says), "that in so saying I am offering a defence not for the Government but for their military advisers."

and—

> "We thought the soldiers were better judges than ourselves."

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Hear, hear!

*MR. ROBSON: The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham says "Hear, hear." Well, if he says that he thought the soldiers were better judges than himself he should have followed their advice. I do not think the right hon. Gentleman thought the soldiers were better judges than himself. The First Lord of the Treasury continued—

> "I mean to do my best to defend them."

Then this very remarkable defender goes on to speak of "the error the soldiers made." He says—

> "That they made the error common to all regular forces 'of undervaluing men not organised as a regular army. The mistake is in the first place one of which the whole British military profession were alike guilty, if guilty be the word.'"

I think "guilty" is the word; but not as applied to the British Army. Let us consider the Prime Minister's action in saying that he has defended the Army. He is directly charged with making a serious blunder, and he turns to his military advisers and says—"I will not go into the dock, but if you go in I will defend you." That is a very ingenious method of defence, and one which this House should very carefully consider. Of course we know that in effect all Ministers are responsible for their advisers; and we know that that responsibility is disregarded by the House and the country if it can be shown that Ministers have been misled by their advisers. Now can that be shown here? Let me take the advice they got. First of all we have the Intelligence Department. In the beginning of 1897, as the result of the Jameson Raid, Sir J. Ardagh said that they ought to increase the South African garrison by 20,000 men. That advice was not taken. Then the Intelligence Department goes on to warn them in 1897 and 1898 and tells them precisely the forces that ought to be sent out. In April, 1897, the Intelligence Department advised the Colonial Office that there ought to be at least three regiments of cavalry and two batteries of artillery. The Colonial Office communicates that advice to the War Office. That advice is considered by the Colonial Secretary and by his colleagues, and Lord Lansdowne points out that it would cost half a million of money, and he says—

> "The matter was discussed by Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Lansdowne with colleagues and the expense was thought greater than was justified by the circumstances."

So only £200,000 was given, including a sum of £36,000 already spent. But he adds—

> "This would not be a mobile force and it could make no pretence of anticipating the Boers at the numerous points indicated by Sir John Ardagh."

So that you have the Intelligence Department and the soldiers warning the Government at the earliest possible date and indicating the necessity of what no doubt was a serious force. I am not going to argue here how the serious political situation had been brought about; but here you have the Government saying—"No, the expense is too great, and instead of £500,000 we cut it down to £200,000, and even that is to include £36,000 you have already spent." That was in 1897. The garrison was substantially increased in 1897 and slightly diminished in 1898. In the latter year the warnings began again to the Colonial Office and the War Office, and there was some small provision of regimental transport, but nothing further was done.

We now take the soldiers. Lord Wolseley began in June, 1898, to warn them and suggested that the Government should set about unobtrusive preparations and that they should send out certain transport which would be unnoticed. Lord Wolseley also recommended the immediate mobilisation of an army corps and a cavalry division of 35,000 men on Salisbury Plain. Of course that was a very serious step, but he suggested that colour might be given to it as being a part of our ordinary military operations. It had long been thought desirable that we should have an experimental mobilisation of an army corps, and he thought that even if such an excuse were not believed, why then at least the mobilisation would have a wholesome moral effect on the Boers. I only call attention to these facts to point out what the soldiers thought of the situation. That was in June. On the 7th July, Lord Wolseley returned to the fray. In the recommendations which he made in his June Memorandum was one that contingents should be invited to co-operate with us from Australia, Canada, and New Zealand. I think he is entitled to the credit of that. In July he gets urgent, and says that he would recommend at a very early date the despatch of 10,000 men. He also recommended the Government to commence the purchase of ponies. That was a very practical recommendation. How much was lost by its having been neglected? He also said it would be advisable to get a transport corps ready, and that if there were mobilisation it would greatly increase the effectiveness of our force in the field. He followed these recommendations up with subsequent recommendations about buying ponies, carts, mules, and wagons. Anyone can see that in June and July of 1899 the military advisers of the Government did not under-rate the task before them. So far from under-rating it, they put it as being one of such magnitude that it was thought by the Government to be out of all reason. They were afraid because of political considerations to follow the advice of the soldiers; and these are the very Ministers who are now seeking to throw unmerited blame for the disasters of the war on the soldiers.

What happened in July? By way of showing how urgent the situation was, the Boers sent 100 cases of ammunition into the Orange Free State, and rifles and ammunition were landed at Port Elizabeth for the Orange Free State and sent on by Mr. Schreiner. These were public facts; and why in face of them were not Lord Wolseley's recommendations adopted? What excuse can the Government give? It might be said—and it is an excuse to which I would listen with the greatest deference—that it was very desirable not to make provocative preparations. That is in general circumstances a sound excuse. It would never do to interfere with the course of peaceful diplomacy by sending out an armed force if it was desired to have any fruitful results from that diplomacy. But remember in adopting that line and leaving your frontiers unprotected in order not to be provocative you must keep your diplomacy in accord. But so far from this being anything like a valid excuse, the Government as a fact did send out more men in August. After all these warnings they got as far as to send out 1,744 men to defend our borders against attack. Everybody knew that such a force was ludicrously inadequate; but it was sent out, according to the admission of the Government, in order to strengthen their diplomacy. That is an end of all the talk of keeping back reinforcements lest it might seem provocative. You sent out 1,700 men; but Lord Wolseley and the War Office were making great efforts to get more. I think Lord Lansdowne offered a battalion for Natal, and then he said they could only have half a battalion, and all this time our borders were lying absolutely undefended. There was some arrangement made in July, not involving any substantial expenditure, for supplying transport duties, but the 10,000 men Lord Wolseley asked for, and asked for at once, were not even ordered until the 8th of September. On the 18th August—I am following the dates, as that may be better than arguing in general terms—Lord Wolseley wrote again urging the despatch of 10,000 men, and saying that it would cost £500,000 but that it was well worth it. He pointed out that the Transvaal continued to make preparations for war. In August it is only fair to mention that there were certain hopeful intervals in the negotiations, but these intervals were very short, and were practically closed on the 21st when the terms which Mr. Kruger attached to his proposals became known to the Government, because they were regarded by the Government as wholly inadmissible. On the 24th August Lord Wolseley wrote a Memorandum to which I invite the attention of the House. He said—

> "At this moment we are not locally prepared for war, so if it comes under present circumstances we shall surrender the initiative to Kruger, and in no recent case would that initiative be more likely to injure our national prestige."

That was sent to the Colonial Office, and on the 26th August we had from the then Colonial Secretary a speech which I am sure the House will not forget. He used in it the metaphor about the squeezed sponge. Remember what the situation was at the time that speech was made by the Minister responsible for colonial defence, who had been told that our colonies were unprepared to meet an attack, and moreover, that if any such attack were made it would be disastrous, not merely to our soldiers but also to our Imperial prestige. He was told also that our enemy was well armed, well mounted, and resolute to defend his national existence by force of arms, yet on the 26th August we have the then Colonial Secretary making a speech in the highest degree provocative and almost certain to precipitate a situation full of peril to ourselves. We have him flouting the commonsense advice of the soldiers, and remember it was the soldiers who were the men of business of the situation. They knew the burden of responsibility that would fall upon them, and not only that, but their very lives were at stake, as well as the honour of the Army, and consequently they were entitled to be considered, and we had a right to expect that a Minister would not precipitate and provoke war by a speech of that character. Soldiers by no means object to a firm front, but they want a front made firm by preparation, not a paper front consisting of provocative speeches. The public were eager for war—they thought that speech was the speech of a man of action, but they did not know that behind all this platform energy there were the greatest administrative omissions, and they did not know that the colleagues of the then Colonial Secretary had actually been left for years in blank ignorance of the elementary dangers of the situation. They did not know that by this very speech, and speeches like it, the soldiers were being prevented from getting time for which they were vainly asking. What right had the Colonial Secretary or any other Minister, in view of the warnings from the soldiers, to precipitate the situation against them and to force the pace at a time when they were asking of diplomacy that it should be carefully moderate?

See what followed. One cannot help wishing that instead of hectoring the Boers the right hon. Gentleman had hectored his colleagues, or that even without hectoring them he had given them a little more information. On the 5th September a very important minute was received from Sir Redvers Buller in which he said—

> "There must be some period at which the military and diplomatic forces are brought into line."

There was a diplomatic force at work here which it was very difficult to bring into line.

> "Before diplomacy," he added, "proceeds to an ultimatum the military should be in a position to enforce it."

What an astounding statement to make to this Government. It had never occurred to them. The War Office did not know how fast diplomacy was moving. Then General Buller added—

> "We must know the line on which we are to advance,"

And he said that if they were to take the Natal route 50,000 men would be required, leaving the Orange Free State out of account. That was before our disasters, which greatly increased the magnitude of our task. No soldier contemplated such a delay in the preparations as would allow the enemy to take the initiative against which Lord Wolseley warned us, nor were the military authorities made aware that a force would be required not only for the defeat but the annexation of the Transvaal, and on these differences as to the amount of men, you have General Buller's message which he sends direct to the Prime Minister. On the same day he sends one to Lord Wolseley, and there he seems to speak of the order that is to be adopted. He says—

> "Early in July I suggested to Lord Lansdowne that the officers commanding in South Africa should be invited to say what troops they required to enable them to protect our Colonies from invasion by the Orange Free State or the Transvaal. So far as I know this has not been done."

Who was the officer Commanding-in-Chief during the time? It was General Butler. What is the first thing that would suggest itself, not to a Cabinet Minister but to the man in the street, who is the final judge of appeal? That, at least, if you wanted to know the magnitude of your task you should write to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa. He was not consulted at all, although I suppose he has fallen under the ban of the Prime Minister like the whole of the military service for whose miscalculation he suggests we are now suffering. Lord Wolseley's minute of the same day is—

> "First intimation that our negotiations have reached an acute stage from Buller."

Was this treating the soldiers fairly? Lord Wolseley then says—

> "Cannot we stave off hostilities for five or six weeks?"

That was on the 5th September. Any Parliamentarian would have told him that you cannot stave off hostilities, that there are other forces pushing the pace. And then he goes on to say—

> "We have committed one of the very greatest blunders in war, we have given our enemy the initiative."

Whose was the blunder which brought about our initial losses? Were the soldiers responsible? Is there a single Member of this House who does not recognise the sense of fairness in Lord Wolseley's minute about the initiative? That blunder and the failure to follow up that warning which was the root of our failure was a politician's blunder. It was the Cabinet's failure. What followed after this request for five or six weeks delay. There followed on the 8th of September a most important despatch which set out our proposals in their final form, with a minor indication that if they were not accepted there would be further steps taken which were not very obscurely veiled. One might call that despatch very nearly an ultimatum. That was three days after Lord Wolseley's request for five or six weeks more time. So that within three days of Lord Wolseley's request war was deliberately brought nearer. Lord Lansdowne said then he thought it was inevitable, and on that date 10,000 troops were ordered out. Lord Wolseley thought first of all 10,000 would be sufficient with one army corps. But, in advising only 10,000 men, he had in view the rapid mobilisation of an army corps. Ten thousand men with the rapid mobilisation and despatch of an army corps is a very different thing to 10,000 men sent unsupported. Lord Lansdowne says Lord Wolseley pledged his word that the borders of the colonies were now safe until the arrival of reinforcements, but Lord Wolseley was never asked as to this by the Commissioners, and although I do not doubt Lord Lansdowne's word, I think too much has been made of that. But did the 10,000 get out there before the outbreak of war? Not completely.

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON (Middlesex, Ealing): Yes, they were, the hon. Gentleman is confusing the Indian troops with the 10,000. The Indian troops were there before the outbreak of the war.

*MR. ROBSON: I am not confusing anything. There were out of the 10,000, 5,600 who came from India. The rest came from the Mediterranean and home ports. The date of the arrival of the troops which came from India were between the 5th and the 13th October, and the troops from the Mediterranean and home ports between the 17th and 30th. The battle of Elandslaagte was fought on the 21st, and the war broke out on the 11th. But even supposing they were there before, they were not at the front, but at Durban. So that the arrivals go on right up to the 30th October, after some of the most vital battles had been fought. To what extent the troops were delayed after arrival in getting to the front I am not expert enough to say but Durban is a long way from the front. They ought to have been sent out when the general at the front could make good dispositions of them, but you have them arriving after the date when one of our most successful generals tells you 5,000 men might have changed the whole aspect of the war. I am quite indifferent, if it can be shown that these men were in South Africa on such a date, if it cannot be shown that they were at the front fit for service.

Now I take the question of the army corps. Very few facts indeed will be enough to show how the matter stands. It was asked for in June, and passed over through July, August, and September. It was never ordered until the 7th October. It took four months to prepare, and its arrival in South Africa was not completed till after our worst defeats. It might have been prepared in three months with the expenditure of one million of money, but the money required for the army corps was not obtained until 22nd September, nineteen days before the war broke out, and even when the money was provided it was not the whole amount but £600,000. The whole of the money was not sanctioned until the 29th. Is that fair to Lord Wolseley? It is not fair when you consider the burden of responsibility cast upon him. I do not blame the Treasury. I think anyone who goes through this evidence will rise from it with an increased feeling of respect for that Department. The Treasury are the properly constituted guardians of the public purse, and there is no case throughout all the evidence of the Treasury being responsible for any niggard treatment when they had been made acquainted with the danger of the situation. But the Treasury did not know much about the danger. That has been my complaint against the then Colonial Secretary, that he did not invite or compel the collective action of his colleagues so that they would have put before the Treasury representations which would have secured more prompt and generous expenditure. That finishes all I have to say with regard to Lord Wolseley, and I have only a word to add in reference to two other soldiers, who, I think, ought to have something said for them. The first is General Buller. General Buller made one recommendation after another. On 5th July he said—

> "You should strengthen the garrisons to the extent that the local authority there think sufficient."

That was not done. The local authority—General Butler—was not consulted, General Penn-Symons is said to have been consulted and to have recommended some small addition, but he was killed, and therefore we have not heard his evidence on the point. The next recommendation made by General Buller is, "Make up your mind as to the route." The third was, "Commence mobilisation." Not one of those three heads of advice was carried out by the Government so far as General Buller was concerned.

Then as to General Butler. A more remarkable circumstance than that connected with the name of General Butler is hard to imagine. He was the officer commanding-in-chief there; he knew the theatre of operations; he had been requested in December, 1898, to draw up a local scheme of defence, and he had done it. It was not a scheme of defence adequate to meet invasion. No request of that sort was ever made to General Butler or anybody else in South Africa, he was simply asked to formulate a scheme of defence upon existing conditions and with the materials then in South Africa. That is the ordinary method. Colonial governors and generals are not allowed to frame schemes of defence as if they had an unlimited command of troops; they have to frame their schemes according to the troops at their command—to cut their coat according to their cloth. He was never asked to make a considered estimate as to what force would be required in view of the contingencies of war and annexation which were then appearing on the horizon. Why he was not asked I do not inquire. He told the Commission that in conversation with his staff he had often expressed the opinion that 50,000 or 100,000 men would be required to deal adequately with the South African situation. It is a thousand pities the Government did not ascertain his opinion and the grounds for it.

These are the facts. I need not add to them by rhetoric; they speak for themselves. But I would add this word of warning. Are these Ministers fit to be chosen as the Ministers by whom even our commerce, and trade, and industry are to be turned into sub-departments of the War Office—because that is what we have got to expect. I hope the incompetence and neglect which is now made clear will not be allowed to pass without the English people and this House profiting by it. It is perfectly idle for us to listen to such a story as the Commissioners have unfolded and say, "Oh, let bygones be bygones." That will not do. We see already from the new proposals for the reconstruction of the War Office that you cannot let bygones of this sort be bygones. The Prime Minister who knew nothing about the Orange Free State is now to be almost Commander-in-Chief, and the Ministers who have proved themselves so negligent and reckless in dealing with Imperial peace are now to be invited to deal on War Office principles and methods with the industry and subsistence of the English people. Let us take care that the negligence which has been disclosed in one Department is not allowed a free hand to operate in all Departments. I beg to move.

*Dr. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.): I should have been glad if I could have seconded this Amendment from the Government Benches, because then I should have escaped any charge of partisanship. But I can honestly disclaim any Party motive, as the matter involves the gravest national and patriotic issues, and I feel with my hon. and learned friend that if we pass over the defects which have been disclosed our future as a nation is sealed. We cannot afford to let bygones be bygones. The Secretary of State for War, speaking at Liverpool on 21st January last, said—

> "Some people may interest themselves in assigning the particular responsibility for what is good or for what is evil under the circumstances which are commented upon in that Report. I do not myself take a very lively interest in that task of distributing the responsibility. In the first place, I do not think really that the public at large very much care. They are very sorry it happened, but I think the thing they care about least is to go back now to the question of responsibility."

I think the right hon. Gentleman is entirely wrong. The public do care about fixing the responsibility. The Prime Minister much more accurately summed up the situation when he said on November 27th last—

> "What is the view at the present moment of the man in the street. . . . I think his view is that the recent war and the Commission which has sat upon the war have shown, at all events, if they have nothing else, that before the war there was culpable negligence, and that during the war there was a deplorable breakdown."

That is exactly what the man in the street does say, and with great justice. He canno tfail to remember that 25,000 of his sons and brothers were either killed in action or died of wounds or disease; that another 25,000 have come home broken in health and constitution to be a burden to themselves and their relatives for all time; and that of those 50,000 a very large number were time-expired reservists, who before the war broke out had left the colours, entered into civil occupations, and had wives and families dependent upon them for support. Moreover, he thoroughly agrees with the finding of the Commission on page 57 where it says—

> "It certainly appears now that with a greater amount of forethought in arrangements generally, in the provision of stores and equipment, and with the addition of perhaps another Brigade, the situation in Natal might have been so strengthened that the whole course of the war must have been altered."

I ask Members of the House to carry their memories back to the dark opening days of January, 1900. The war had been raging for three months; 6,000 British troops lay dead on the fields of Glencoe, Belmont, Graspan, Modder River, Stormberg, Magersfontein, and Colenso; Mafeking, Ladysmith and Kimberley were invested, and the people in this country were filled with surprise, disappointment, and despondency. They were asking one another how it was that we did not know the enormous character of the Boer preparations; and, above all, with regard to the investment of Ladysmith, they were asking one another, "How is it the Government was not advised of the possession by the Boers of the Long Tom guns which outclassed our guns every time?" The Prime Minister at the close of that dark week addressed his constituents, and his first answer to the criticisms was that he did not think the Boers would fight. His words were—

> "If we were wrong in thinking war improbable, we erred with the great mass of opinion instructed on South African affairs."

The same position was taken up by the late Colonial Secretary. Let us see if we comprehend how the matter stands. My hon. and learned friend might with advantage have gone into greater detail with regard to the remarkable statement of the Intelligence Division. Lieut.-General Sir W. G. Nicholson handed in this statement—

> "The Intelligence Division prepared and submitted during years 1896–99 reports concerning—
>
> (a) The military preparations of the Boers, including their armaments and forts.
>
> (b) The number of fighting men the Boers would place in the field at the commencement of hostilities.
>
> (c) The political and military relations existing between the South African Republic and the Free State.
>
> (d) The offensive plans of the Boers and the probability that Natal and Kimberley would form their objectives.
>
> The Intelligence Division urged repeatedly, from a military point of view, the expediency of defensive preparations in South Africa."

Then I read later on—

> "A memorandum written by Sir John Ardagh in October, 1896, entitled 'The Transvaal Boers from a military point of view' examined the existing situation in South Africa. It pointed out that the South African Republic was spending that year

£2,350,000 on military preparations, including the provision of artillery, rifles, ammunition, and fortifications, 'that this large expenditure can have no other explanation than an anticipation of war or an intention of aggressions against this country and its supremacy in South Africa.'"

That was in 1896. During the whole of 1896–97–98–99, practically weekly, despatches giving the most precise descriptions of the Boer forces, were coming home from South Africa. I am sorry the late Colonial Secretary is not in his place, because he challenged the statement that they were sent direct to the Colonial Office. I think he must have been in error there, because the great bulk of them are headed: "Sir A. Milner to Mr. Chamberlain." They are too voluminous to go into in detail, but one of them before me is worth reading.

Here is the substance of what Mr. Greene said on 7th February, 1898—

"I am told that there are now 105,000 rifles in the magazine at Pretoria, independent of stock in district magazines, and it is therefore difficult to understand how any further supplies can possibly be necessary. It is, however, clear that the Government do not share this view, for they recently dispatched an order to Messrs. Kynoch for 8,000 rifles, as reported in my secret dispatch of the 16th ult., and I am told that they now propose to place another order for arms with Messrs. Webley of Birmingham, a member of that firm to be invited to come out here and enter into a contract. Moreover, the Government are, I hear, prepared to give orders for the latest improvements in field artillery, and quick-firing guns—the orders for artillery to go to Germany, and those for small arms to Birmingham."

That is a characteristic despatch, and the despatches in 1896, 1897, 1898, and 1899 are full of statements of that nature. I am taking no evidence that has been challenged or contradicted, or that has in any way been impugned in the course of this Commission. Take the evidence of Sir William Butler. In question 13617 Viscount Esher asks Sir William Butler—

"What was the essence, in one sentence, of the whole of your advice to the Government?"

And his reply was—

"Following the close of the Bloemfontein Conference, I sent a series of telegrams and despatches to the War Office, in which I extended to the utmost limits of official language my warnings of what war with the Dutch Republics and the Dutch race generally in South Africa would mean. I think I am within the meaning of those communications when I aver that the gravity of the warnings therein given could not easily have been greater."

I turn now to Vice-Admiral Harris, who was in command at the Cape in 1889–90 He was asked by the Chairman the following questions and gives the following answers—

"In 1899, were any preparations made for the war on its outbreak?—From a naval point of view, yes.

"18959. At what date were those preparations made?—About August I began to assemble the ships in my squadron and put them all through a thorough course of docking and repair in readiness for any emergency.

"18960. Was that on instructions from home?—No, I did it on my own initiative, on what I imagined was coming. Of course, I was in consultation with Lord Milner as well.

"18961. But there were no instructions from home?—There were no instructions from home until immediately before the outbreak of the war.

"18962. What preliminary knowledge then had you of the matter?—It was a matter of very common conversation in Cape Town that the Boers were preparing for war. That was in June; and on July I was shooting near Port Elizabeth and met several English farmers of that district who told me that they were absolutely certain from what they knew of their Dutch colleagues that they were preparing for war. Following that up again I went up the River Maputa, on a shooting expedition nominally, but for another purpose really, and there I came across a Dutch farmer named Kotse, who travelled constantly in the Orange River State and the Transvaal, and he asked to speak to me privately. He said to me, 'Well, Admiral, I may tell you this in confidence. The Boers are certain to make war directly the grass comes in October.' I said, 'What is your reason?' And he said, 'I travel about from farmhouse to farmhouse, and they all tell me war is coming.' I naturally made a note of that and telegraphed it to Lord Milner."

I turn from Vice-Admiral Harris to Sir Andrew Noble, the Chairman of Sir William Armstrong, Whitworth and Co. On page 484 of the same volume of evidence he says—

"Naturally, I heard a good deal from Continental makers of artillery and from other sources of what was going on in the Transvaal; but I believe that information was open to almost everyone who cared to take an interest in the subject. Having, moreover, served in South Africa myself, I knew something of the country and I saw the authorities at the War Office, and pointed out that the guns that were being imported into the Transvaal could be intended to be used against no country except this country."

And later on he says—

> "I had known, certainly for three years, of the preparations going on, and I had supposed, perhaps ignorantly, that the same information was at the disposal of the Cabinet."

And then Sir George Goldie says to him—

> "If that information was at the disposal of the Cabinet, do you think they ought to have made some further preparations earlier than at the time at which you spoke? Sir Andrew Noble replied: That was what I pressed."

Then the Chairman said to Sir John Ardagh on page 213 —

> "I think we had it in the statement from the Intelligence Division that the Secretary of State for the Colonies, having had reports communicated to him, expressed his acknowledgments of their value on two occasions in 1897?—Yes, the Intelligence Department was in very constant communication with the Colonial Office, in fact, it always is, but at that time more so than usual.
>
> 5047. So that the Government, so far as your responsibility were fully informed of the view is concerned, that you took of the position in South Africa?—I think I may say that they were quite fully informed."

Now let me take one extract from Lord Lansdowne. The Chairman asked him the following question—

> "21101. So that the Cabinet were aware, as is brought out in these papers, that the Boers were making warlike preparations which could only be intended for war with this country as early as 1898 at any rate?—Lord Lansdowne's reply is: Certainly."

In the Report itself, paragraph 56, page 30, it is recorded—

> "The consideration of the official records and the relative evidence sufficiently establishes the main fact that for at least three years before the outbreak of the war the Intelligence Department of the War Office had been fully aware of the warlike preparations in the Republics, and had recognised that the only object of these preparations could be to provide for hostilities with the British Government. If then the outbreak of war found us unprepared, it is necessary to discriminate between the causes which contributed to unpreparedness."

What I cannot understand is how, with the information at their disposal, the Prime Minister and the late Colonial Secretary clung to the last moment to the belief that the Boers did not mean business, and did not mean to fight.

Let me go back now to the Prime Minister's speech of 8th January, 1900. The first statement he made was that he did not think the Boers would fight, and his second assertion was, that if they did fight preparations had been made on a scale sufficient to meet any forces that were likely to be arrayed against us in the field, according to our military advisers. The Prime Minister said—

> "Looking back impartially, I say that the steps we took were, in the state of our knowledge, sufficient steps."

That justifies me in saying that the Prime Minister's view was that if the Boers were to fight the preparations were on a scale consistent with the description of the forces given by the military advisers. At the Hotel Cecil last November the Prime Minister said—

> "It was in the fact that the task before us was proved to be far greater than any critic, military or civilian, had ever suggested that what are now called the deplorable War Office blunders really have their origin. I am not going to make the smallest apology, or attempt the smallest excuse, for anything that went wrong in the war."

That was the second defence. At the outbreak of the war everybody war astonished at the nature of the was preparations, and particularly at the range and capacity of the Boer big guns. The late Lord Salisbury was asked in January, 1900, in the House of Lords, how it was he did not know that the Boers had these quick-firing and big guns, and he replied—

> "The guns were generally introduced in boilers and locomotives, and the munitions of war were introduced in piano cases and tubs. We had no power of search, we had no power of knowing what munitions of war were sent in. We know it now; we have the best reasons for knowing it. But that we knew it to the extent to which it existed in June last I entirely deny."

Lord Salisbury's "June last" is the month of June, 1899; and this is the date of the compilation of that marvellous handbook by Sir John Ardagh, which has already been referred to and which tabulated in the most specific and detailed way, and with extraordinary exactitude, the whole of the Boer armaments and the number of men they would be likely to put in the field. Take the big guns. With the accuracy of a trade prospectus there is a description given of the Long Toms, the Krupps, the Howitzers, the Nordenfeldts and the Hotchkisses. That hand-book states that the Boers had 107 big guns, and all of them are described most accurately. It appears from the papers captured from the Boers after the war, that in September, 1899, they really had 99 big guns, and the hand-book described them as having 107. The same work placed the Boers' machine guns at 34, and their papers show that they possessed 27. It placed small arms at 87,264, and the papers at the close of the war showed the total to be 96,661, and 12,000 of these were obsolete. Small arms ammunition was estimated in this hand-book at 33,000,000 rounds, while the papers captured showed that in September, 1899, the total was 33,050,000 rounds. I have never read of any case where the description has been so minutely accurate, and this hand-book was placed in the hands of the Government four months before war broke out. This hand-book said that the Boers could place in the field 47,600 men, and The Times "History of the War" estimates the highest number of Boers ever in the field at one time at 45,000 men. The Report says nothing more than it should say when it states—

> "It will be seen from the above epitome of the "Military Notes" that the information given therein has been proved by after events to have been generally accurate, and that it sufficed to give a correct impression of the numerical strength, armament, and plans of the Boers."

I ask why did not the Ministers of the Cabinet make themselves more acquainted with the facts? Lord Lansdowne does not appear to have been very well acquainted with them. I see from Sir Ralph Knox's evidence that it was not mentioned at the debates of the War Office Council. The Prime Minister said—

> "We took such steps as in the state of our knowledge were sufficient."

I think that the state of the Government's knowledge might have been very much more complete. Again, in a speech on 8th January, 1900, the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "I do not believe it will ever be maintained that the army we have sent into the field is inadequately equipped with any of the modern requirements or any requirement which the progress of invention has shown to be necessary in the case of a modern army."

Now there are literally hundreds of expert contradictions of that statement. I take Lord Roberts. He says—

> "In the way of artillery we were considerably behind other European nations at the commencement of the war. It was not until German guns were placed in the hands of our artillery officers that they recognised how far the Germans were in advance of ourselves as to quick-firing guns."

I take Sir Henry Brackenbury who says—

> "We had no quick-firing guns in South Africa until we sent out some 4·7 guns, and the Navy sent up their 4·7 quick-firing guns also and 12-pounder quick-firing guns."

I take Sir Ralph Knox—

> "I do not think we sometimes take the trouble to find what the improvements are, otherwise we would never have gone to South Africa with the guns we had."

I take General Plumer—

> "The guns I had up to the relief of Mafeking were of various and mostly of old patterns, and were ineffective. We had seven guns and twelve machine guns; out of seven guns three only were efficient."

I take one point that has come up in the debate this afternoon. The Prime Minister said at the Hotel Cecil that the Government thought soldiers were the best advisers. Therefore, the argument was that if things went wrong, the military advisers of the Government should be blamed. Well, I quote only one of the Government's military advisers—Sir William Butler—a man who, I think, has been very badly treated. After the Bloemfontein Conference he said—

> "The Boers will fight to the last man if you menace their independence."

That has turned out to be very true. In another part of his evidence he says that he warned the Government that the Boer women and children would help. That also turned out to be pretty true. How was he treated? He was recalled. He says he was ridiculed and vilified. That was treating the soldier as the best adviser in regard to these matters. I need not go into Lord Wolseley's statement that reinforcements were necessary, and the Colonial Secretary's statement that no reinforcements were required at that time. That is another example, I suppose, of treating the soldiers as the better judges.

I ask the House now to remember the circumstances of 21st June, 1895. The Liberal Administration had on the specific advice of the military experts allowed the supply of cordite to run very low, and hon. Gentlemen opposite came down to the House in a state of high indignation that we should have been left short of cordite. I make no complaint of that. I state the fact. That was at a time of profound peace. There was happily no war cloud on the horizon. The present Secretary for Ireland was Under-Secretary for War in 1898–1900. He gave vent to an entirely unexceptionable statement on the shortage of cordite. He said—

> "If we were overwhelmed by some national disaster, and it was due to any extent to neglect in the supply of ammunition, the Adjutant-General might not be shot, but the Minister of War would be held responsible for betraying the country."

That is a statement with which I associate myself. The Liberal Administration was put out on the shortage of cordite at a time of profound peace. A Conservative Government came in pledged to strengthen the national defences, and to perfect a great Department of State. I see from a statement made by the Prime Minister in 1895, after the Government was reconstituted that—

> "No abler body of men were ever at the head of the Imperial Departments of the State than those who have recently been appointed."

I should think that he must have got rid of most of them recently. The Conservative Government came to power highly indignant that there should have been a shortage of cordite. Where do we find ourselves at the outbreak of the great Boer War, about the nature of which the Government had been warned for three years?

Sir Henry Brackenbury says—

> "On taking up the appointment of Director-General of Ordnance in February last, I commenced an inquiry into the condition of our armaments and reserve of guns, ammunition, stores, and clothing; and I should have been able to report fully before this, had not the whole energies of my Department been absorbed by the war in South Africa. That war has now disclosed a situation as regards armaments, and reserves of guns, ammunition, stores and clothing, and as regards the power of output of material of war in emergency, which is, in my opinion, full of peril to the Empire. That is after seven years of the Government which came into power pledged to put these things straight."

Sir Henry Brackenbury in his evidence says—

> "We had in reserve the material of only one horse-artillery battery. . . . We had only material for eleven 15-pounder batteries."

This is a statement of affairs in December, 1899, but at a later date we got into a worse condition. Sir Henry Brackenbury says—

> "Then of gun ammunition we had only a reserve of 200 rounds per gun for each horse and field and mountain gun and howitzer, in addition to the 300 rounds which were with the batteries; and the whole of this reserve was absorbed by South Africa long before 15th December. . . . Naval orders for ammunition had to be held in abeyance from the beginning of October. . . . We borrowed ammunition from the Navy, and we borrowed ammunition from the Government of India, and yet I was unable to meet Sir Redvers Buller's demands for 5-inch howitzer ammunition and 7-pounder ammunition until a fortnight after they should have been complied with."

I take one point from the evidence of Major Sir Henry Colville. He says—

> "On the second day at Magersfontein, G Battery, R.H.A., had only six rounds per gun left, and the Field Battery about twelve. I believe that at that date there was not another round left in Cape Colony."

Sir Henry Brackenbury further says—

> "It caused me the deepest anxiety as to what would take place in the event of a war in which both Navy and Army were engaged, for if in this war, in which only the land forces were engaged, we had, in order to keep up supplies, to borrow ammunition from the Navy, what would happen if the Army and Navy were both to be engaged? It would be impossible to meet the demands for ammunition under the conditions then existing."

Then there is the pitiable story of the small arms ammunition, 66,000,000 rounds. When a shot was fired with that ammunition, the bullet stripped and a coating of nickel and lead was left in the grooving, so that, as Sir Henry Brackenbury says—

> "If there was a second load, you were apt to get an accident—a blow back in the breech."

He advised the Secretary for War to withdraw the whole of the 66,000,000 rounds as being ineffective for the purposes of war. He says—

> "We were driven to great straits at one time because we had actually got reduced in this country to two or three boxes of Mark II ammunition, so that if we had had to go to war with a European Power we should have had to fight them with expanding bullets."

Take it any way you like it is the same terrible story of breakdown.

I shall only mention one other point. Take the case of the 25,000 Lee-Enfields which were supplied to the reservists, the men of whom we were so proud. They were men who had left the colours and gone back into civil life. At the call of duty they left wives and families and sprang to arms to a man. Each man was armed with a new pattern Lee-Enfield. These Lee-Enfields were so sighted that the best and truest shot was bound at 1,000 yards to place his shot wide of the mark. The whole matter is very well summed up by Viscount Esher— —

> "The condition in 1899, as disclosed in Sir H. Brackenbury's memorandum, of our armaments, of our fortresses, of the Clothing Department, of the transport, of the Army Medical Corps, of the system of remounts, shows that either the Secretary of State was culpable of neglect, or that he was in ignorance of the facts."

If the Secretary of State was ignorant of the facts, his ignorance was culpable. I confess that I feel very strongly about all this. It was my privilege to be born and brought up in the barracks of a British regiment. I am proud to be able to speak of myself as the son of a man who fought at Crimea as a private soldier. The earliest lessons I learned were the bitterest lessons I shall ever learn. They referred to the sufferings and hardships which were inflicted on the men who fought in the Crimean War, owing in too many cases to what Lord Esher calls culpable negligence. It was said that this sort of thing could never occur again after Russell's letters to The Times, and the inquiries ordered by the House of Commons. I do not claim that the soldiers suffered as severely in South Africa as in the Crimea. It could not be so. There have been fifty years of advance in the means of communication, and fifty years of newspaper progress and the Press is read in every cottage home. But I say that if there had been no such improvement in communications and in the Press, things would have been just as bad in South Africa as in the Crimea. I do not say things were so bad from the point of view of the soldier. Here is the final Report of the Select Committee of this House on the condition of the British Army in the Crimea, of which Mr. Roebuck was chairman—

> "The Cabinet appear to have been confident of success."

That is the first comment.

> "At the date of the expedition to the East no reserve was provided at home adequate to the undertaking."

That is the second comment. The Secretary for War, the Duke of Newcastle, found himself—

> "imperfectly acquainted with the best mode of exercising his authority over the subordinate Departments, and these Departments were not officially informed of their relative position, or of their new duties towards the Minister for War."

Take another extract—

> "The Cabinet, according to the statement of Ministers, was in darkness."

Take another statement—

> "Your Committee must express their dissatisfaction with the administration of the contract system under the Ordnance Department."

And take the final paragraph from the Report, which shows that the South African Report is a hideous plagiarism of the Crimean Report—

> "The administration which ordered that expedition hoped and expected that it would be immediately successful, and as they did not foresee the probability of a protracted struggle they made no provision for a winter campaign; what was planned and undertaken without sufficient information was conducted without sufficient care or forethought. This conduct on the part of the Administration was the first and chief cause of the calamities which befel our Army."

Now, here we are again, fifty years after, in the same position. The Report of to-day is merely a hideous plagiarism on the Report of fifty years ago. When the Government came down to the House on 20th October, 1899, they asked that supplies should be voted for the South African War. The Chancellor of the Exchequer gave a promise that the Estimates had been prepared with the "utmost possible accuracy and care." First of all, the House was asked to make provision for 35,000 men, and the Under-Secretary for War stated that that would be the—

> "Superior limit to the margin for which we might be called upon to draw."

Then on 21st October the Chancellor of the Exchequer asked for £10,000,000 for the war which was to be over in four months. It was to be all over by 31st M rch, 1900. [Cries of "Oh, oh" from the GOVERNMENT Benches]. Oh, excuse me. The Chancellor of the Exchequer asked for a Vote up to 31st March, late in October, and he said they had every reason to expect that the war would be over within the limit of time that the money was asked for. I call that four months. There is a good deal of new arithmetic about nowadays. Now, the four months became thirty-three months and the £10,000,000 became £222,974,000, and the 35,000 men became 448,435. I cannot help feeling that a great deal of the cost, duration, and magnitude of the war was the result of negligence and mismanagement; and that many a gallant lad's bones lie whitening on the South African veldt, and many a gallant lass is committed to a life of penury and toil to keep her children out of the workhouse, because of that negligence and mismanagement. It is because feeling that as I do I am bound by my conscience to second this Motion.

Amendment proposed—

> "At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in regard to the preparations for and conduct of the recent war in South Africa, and particularly the evidence taken by Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into those matters and their Report thereon, disclose grave negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, whereby the duration, magnitude, and cost of the war were greatly increased.'"—(Mr. Robson.)

Question proposed, "That these words be there added."

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): The hon. Gentleman who has just sat down, towards the conclusion of his remarks drew a parallel between the state of affairs in the Crimea and the state of affairs in the first months of the South African War. It is true he added some words of mitigation, but in substance he believes himself, and would have this House believe, that there was some parallel to be drawn. There was none. When I come to that part of my argument I shall be able to show from the Report of the Commission that, so far as the finding of the Army is concerned, those who were responsible for that expedition stand acquitted, or justified in asking for acquittal, at the hands of this House. But in order not to leave that without giving some immediate reply, I will take an authority who may be accepted, I think, even by the hon. Member, as justification—I mean, Lord Wolseley. Lord Wolseley served in the Crimea, and he was competent to advise on matters of that kind. Lord Lansdowne in his evidence cites Lord Wolseley, and says—

> "I am inclined to believe that Lord Wolseley was not far off the mark when he said in that minute of January, 1900, that the army which we sent to South Africa was a better found and a better equipped army than had ever been sent from these shores before."

I take another particular instance which the hon. Member suggests. Perhaps I may lead up to his remarks on guns and armaments by reminding the House of a very sound constitutional dictum I laid down on 21st June, 1895—namely, that the Government are responsible in these matters. I say so. I would call to mind something else I once said in this House. The hon. Member has laboured at great length his point regarding the information supplied by the Intelligence Department, and more particularly in respect of the guns. I made that point myself exactly four years ago in this House. Speaking on 1st February, 1900, I paid a compliment and just tribute to the exactness of the information which had been supplied by the Intelligence Department. Very well, the hon. Member asks us how it comes that Cabinet Ministers used words which seemed to mean that the Boers had armaments far in excess of those described. Well, the country believed that at the time. We had newspaper reports that went to prove that our guns were actually inferior to the guns of the Boers, that our guns were bad, that the guns of the Boers were much better, and that they were relatively more numerous. The hon. Member quoted Lord Roberts; the Commission quoted Lord Roberts. [HON. MEMBERS: Read it.] I will read it if you like. Lord Roberts says—

> "Our experiences in South Africa have shown us that in the way of military matériel we were considerably behind other European nations at the commencement of the late war. Our field-gun, though a good serviceable weapon, was wanting both in range and rapidity of fire, whilst the fact of the enemy employing heavy field artillery against us at > the commencement of hostilities placed us in a difficulty which we could not have avoided without calling on the sister service for the assistance of naval guns."

What is the next line of that Report—

> "Notwithstanding this opinion, it would, we think, be unjust to say that the field armament prepared by the Ordnance Department was inferior to that which was in use by other great nations, or that there was a deficiency in the number of guns, though there was undoubtedly a deficiency in the reserve."

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): Does the right hon. Gentleman himself agree with the first line of that sentence ?

MR. WYNDHAM: Notwithstanding this statement ? No. [Laughter from the OPPOSITION Benches.] I do not disagree, and I do not agree; and I can tell the hon. Members who laughed why. Because I do not intend to copy them and to constitute myself another Commission in place of the one which has sat, and to select everything which suits my case, just as they have selected out of those volumes of evidence everything which suits theirs. I say you appeal to Cæsar and to Cæsar you shall go. There is the Report. By that we are ready to stand or fall. I think the line which the speakers have taken, and the interruptions with which they marked my very modest quotation from the finding, and not from the evidence, accounts for the phrase which I admit caught my eye in the Amendment proposed by the hon. and learned Member—

> "Humbly to represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in regard to the preparations for and conduct of the recent war in South Africa, and particularly the evidence taken."

It is particularly in the evidence that they revel during these proceedings—in a selection from the evidence. [DR. MACNAMARA: What about the sighting of the rifles ?] In order to conclude in the time allotted to me, I refer the hon. Member for a reply on the sighting of these rifles to a speech I made four years ago in this House. I approach the task of replying to the forcible and able speech of the hon. and learned Member with a feeling of distaste which almost amounts to repugnance. I share as fully as it can be shared in many quarters which support the Government, and which earnestly desire to see Army reform, a feeling of annoyance at any attempt of justification, even on my part, when I am dealing with errors, some of which were committed long, long ago, and I share the feelings of annoyance at anything which could be twisted into recrimination upon our part against the great and distinguished soldiers who have rendered such important services. I do not think the soldiers will thank the hon. Gentleman opposite for the line of defence he has taken to-night. Who has stated more frankly than Lord Wolseley that he and all of them had a great deal to learn from this war, and that every war has lessons to teach that could not be anticipated. But, supposing we wilfully neglected the advice of our advisers, what the House has been asked to do to-night is to pass a vote of want of confidence in this Government. The hon. Members opposite who moved and seconded the Amendment were quite frank on that point. They have painted the Government which was in office at the beginning of the war as black as they could. They painted it so black that they want the House now not to act on the maxim that "a devil you know is better than a devil you do not know." Now, if the House will bear with me, I think I can take up, point by point, this accusation and show that we have a pretty good case. I will be quite candid and I shall leave the decision to the impartial consideration of the House. I do not know why the hon. Members opposite did not go to the Report instead of to the evidence.

*DR. MACNAMARA: We did. Paragraphs 56 and 57 were read.

MR. WYNDHAM: I think they were the more bound to go to the Report, because the Commissioners themselves take account of the evidence in two ways. For one thing they discount—I use the word in no offensive sense—the value of some of the evidence on the ground that it was conflicting, and they refer to the evidence given by great soldiers on strategic problems, and say that the questions could not be determined unless you had a number of eye-witnesses on the spot. They also treat the evidence in another way. They cite in extenso a considerable section of Lord Lansdowne's evidence. I have hardly heard the mover or the seconder quote Lord Lansdowne during the course of their speeches, and yet his evidence is very pertinent. The length of that evidence, over 500 answers to questions, is no bar to the study of its purport, because it was very accurately and fairly summarised in a précis which appeared in The Times newspaper. I have yet to learn that The Times has been a very indulgent critic of Lord Lansdowne, and if you will not have the Report of the Commission because you do not think it sufficiently vindictive, perhaps you will take the views expressed in The Times on the evidence as given by Lord Lansdowne. But I appeal to the Report. Now, in considering this Report, I think we ought in all fairness to take note of two things. In the first place, the Commissioners pronounce themselves, I will not say incompetent, but not called upon, to declare judgment upon the diplomacy which preceded the war. They leave that out of account. In the next place, I would ask the House to consider that the terms of reference confined the investigation to the period ending with the fall of Pretoria, and therefore, when they complain that no more had been done in this or that direction, they omit a great many things which have been done since the fall of Pretoria. What we have to deal with now are things which ought to have been done before the war and which were not done. Take the point of diplomacy. The hon. Member for South Shields stated as one of his most formidable facts that Lord Wolseley had asked for the mobilisation of an army corps on Salisbury Plain in the month of June. That would have been a political act and not an act of military preparation. Surely it would have been a political act and not an act of military preparation. The hon. Member endeavoured to avoid that difficulty by stating that the Government had authorised the strengthening of the garrisons in South Africa in order to strengthen their diplomacy. Is there no distinction to be made between sending the number of troops stated by your advisers to be necessary to protect your frontiers against invasion and taking steps which could only be taken as contemplating invasion on a colossal scale? The diplomatic argument turns on the minute written by Lord Lansdowne on 12th August, 1899. In that minute he stated all the steps which must be taken in order to place a force in a condition to march in South Africa, and the step which would take the longest time—namely, three months—was the collection in South Africa of land transport. Will anybody say now that such a step ought to have been taken between the Bloemfontein Conference at the end of May and the rupture or cessation of diplomatic efforts towards the beginning of September? Such an act would have made it plain to the Boers and the whole world that we intended to invade them.

The hon. Member made another point, by the way. He asked, "Did you tell your soldiers you meant to annex the Transvaal?" What is the meaning of that remark? That you should conclude the war on terms? On what terms? The only terms offered were that we should evacuate the country and acknowledge what we had always denied—namely, to treat the Transvaal as a Sovereign and independent State. When a great country such as Great Britain has been provoked to war by the invasion of her own territory, you cannot suspend the war by making terms of the only character which would have brought that war to a conclusion. If we go through the Report in that spirit—am I claiming too much of the House of Commons when I invite the august Assembly which appointed this tribunal to take some heed of its conclusions? I have made one point, which I will not make again—namely, that, though the Commissioners took notice of the advice given and the views held by many great soldiers on strategic problems, they found there was conflict of opinion among these distinguished officers, and they declined to pronounce any judgment on their views separately. There was a divergence of opinion as to the proper strategic route of advance. The great fundamental strategic problems of the war were decided in various ways by some of the greatest strategists of the day, and the Commissioners found that it was quite impossible to subject those opinions to any reliable test, and that the only course that was fair to all was to leave them on the same footing, to record them, and to leave them to the judgment of the reader. I am not here to prove that with a better organisation at the War Office you could not have had a plan of campaign which would have been a better plan. On the contrary, the Government are now suggesting that that course should be taken and have adopted it by their own executive act. What I do say is that, acting with the machinery of those days, and with the guidance given us—and I pass no reflection on that given by our distinguished soldiers—we do not stand condemned.

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): What were the Committee of Defence doing?

MR. WYNDHAM: What is the relevance of that remark?

CAPTAIN NORTON: The Committee of Defence were the existing body at that time for dealing with questions of this nature.

MR. WYNDHAM: The Prime Minister put the Committee of Defence upon a basis which, as far as it goes, has earned the encomium of Lord Esher's Committee; but it was not within the duty of the Committee of Defence to decide on the strategical advance to be followed in the war. That was discussed as between Lord Lansdowne, the Secretary for War, Lord Wolseley, and Sir Redvers Buller, and you will find a triple minute, one by each, was written on 25th September, and yet the hon. and learned Member says that Sir Redvers Buller was complaining in October that proper attention was not paid to his views.

MR. ROBSON: Yes, on 25th September; but I pointed out that it was only on 23rd September Lord Lansdowne communicated to General Buller that he might put forward his views with regard to the route.

MR. WYNDHAM: I understood the hon. Member to say that Sir Redvers Buller took exception to the lateness of the date.

MR. ROBSON: So he did.

MR. WYNDHAM: My reply to that is that the principal adviser of Lord Lansdowne was Lord Wolseley, and if the hon. Member will turn to page 514, answer 21,234, in the evidence of Lord Lansdowne, he will find these words—

> "You will see in Lord Wolseley's minute of 8th June that he says:—'The general plan of campaign to be adopted is one that must thoroughly meet with the views of the general officer selected for the supreme command. There are, practically, only two lines of advance for an army into the Transvaal'; and in his later minute of 7th July, again, after considering the two lines of advance, he says that, 'should the Free State help the Transvaal against us, he presumes Sir Redvers Buller would not shrink from using the Free State as the line of advance upon Pretoria.'"

There is no substance or foundation in the charge that the soldiers were hampered by not being free to adopt either of those lines of advance, and again I would ask the House to accept the Report of the Commission. They say that the line of advance through the Orange Free State was considered to be the best. Well, it may or may not have been an over-refinement of political diplomacy on the part of the Government not to shake their fist at the Orange Free State before that was necessary. The hon. and learned Member has spun a long tissue of ingenious arguments, but what does it amount to? We knew there was a defensive alliance between the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, although the hon. and learned Member put it in words not familiar to me—he talked about the quarrel being just. It might have been an offensive and not a defensive alliance, but we should have been acting unwisely and wrongly if we had presumed that the Orange Free State would have backed up an unprovoked invasion of our territory. We may have believed they would, but the question was ought we to have acted as if we thought they would; and that question becomes very pertinent when upon the larger political problem—namely, the time it would take to get an efficient force in South Africa—we knew that three months must elapse, and that the first step to be taken—namely, the collection of transports—would proclaim to the whole world that we intended the invasion of South Africa. They may have been wrong, the Cabinet of that day—I was not a member of it, but I am here to defend Lord Lansdowne—but I think they were perfectly right. I think they would have offended the feelings of the civilised world if in June and July, when despatches were going from ourselves to the Transvaal Republic and back again, they had taken steps which could have only meant one thing, the intention on our part to crush that Republic. If it is argued that we are to be found guilty for having delayed preparations, I reply that I do not call that a delay of preparations. I call it the avoidance of a political act which would have put our country in the wrong, and would not, as a matter of fact, have really put us in a better position at an earlier date in South Africa.

Now take another finding of the Commission. The Commission point out on preparations that—

> "A distinction must be made between the preparedness of this country for any war in the year 1899 and the definite preparation made for the event of a war against one or both of the Dutch Republics in South Africa."

The hon. and learned Member said—

> "You must have known that these people were preparing for war, and obviously for war against no one but yourselves."

And he thinks that statement of fact disposes of the Prime Minister's speech in which he pointed out that we had in this country to be prepared for a varied number of emergencies. Suppose you had prepared for that war and had found yourselves on the eve of war, or of national disgrace—you can always avoid it by accepting that—with some other Power; not with a small Republic, but a great European Power. I do not wish to revive unhappy memories, but if anybody will cast his eye carefully back over some of the anxious months of 1898 he will see that the Government of the day would have been guilty of the greatest folly and crime if they had specialised their preparations for one contingency in South Africa instead of dealing with Imperial defence as a whole. I will tell hon. Gentlemen opposite that in the matter of general preparations we have a record of which we need not be ashamed. We ought not to glory in it, to take pride in it; we have made mistakes; we have not had the best system for the Army, nor a close enough correlation between the Army and Navy in Imperial defence; and until the present Prime Minister, whom we are asked by this Amendment to turn out of office, took the reins of the Defence Committee it was not as good an instrument as it is now. But with the opportunities at our disposal we have a record which I am not ashamed of comparing with the record of hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite, and I do not think, after the two speeches we have heard from the mover and seconder of the vote of non-confidence in the Government, that I shall be accused of adopting an unduly partisan tone when I say that on general preparations our record will stand examination and that theirs will not. When Mr. Stanhope was in power there was general preparation. During the Government of 1886 £21,500,000 was spent on the Navy—not wasted, but spent. I am not going to take up the small point about cordite; it is not a very important accusation, and there is a larger one; I say that during the years 1892–5, in the first place, the construction programme of the Navy was delayed, and, in the second place, nothing was added to the artillery of the Army.

*Sir CHARLES DILKE: You mentioned Mr. Stanhope; Mr. Stanhope reduced the artillery.

MR. WYNDHAM: It is not denied that when we came into office in 1895 240 guns had been added to the field artillery arm; that was general preparation; but 364 guns were sent out during the first few months of the war, and if the war had occurred in 1895 instead of 1899 you would have had that inferiority in the numbers of your artillery which is unjustly charged now. But I may be asked, Why had not further progress been made? Because, when the Government came into office it put the Navy first, rightly, as we think, in the scheme of general preparation; and, apart from keeping up the Navy to the two-Power standard then adopted, it appointed a Commission to report on the armament of all the naval stations, and the first work of the Government was to re-arm all our naval stations in the world with breechloaders instead of muzzleloaders. Observe, these armaments are not pertinent, are not relative. You ought to have been preparing particularly for the war in South Africa. Would hon. Members opposite have supported the Government if we had said we must re-arm all the naval stations of the world at a cost of £7,000,000, and we must also prepare for war which may or may not happen in South Africa in four, five, or six years time, at an annual cost of an additional £2,000,000 a year? It is absurd to put forward that proposition. General preparation had been pushed, not as far as it could be and not under the best system for obtaining the best advice, but honestly and truly pushed to a standard which enabled us to conduct the war to a successful conclusion in spite of the miscalculation, for which we accept, responsibility—namely, that 75,000 men were enough. That was the miscalculation. I ask any one to read this Report impartially and to judge whether that is a miscalculation which would justify this Government in being turned out of office. I do not wish to indulge in recrimination, but I say they acted on the advice that was given them.

I take the other point, of which much may be made—namely, that the garrisons in South Africa prior to the landing of the field forces were insufficient for the defence of our Colonies against invasion. What is the finding of the Commission on that point? They quote the statement of Lord Lansdowne, which is as follows—

> "That the Government had received the assurance of their military advisers that the reinforcements sent to South Africa, together with those which could be added before a field force was despatched, would ensure the defence of the colonies from serious invasion by the Boers."

They then quote more than a page and a half of Lord Lansdowne's evidence, and refer to Lord Wolseley's evidence also, and state that—

> "Taken, as a whole, the evidence appears to support the position of the Government on this point—namely, that the steps taken to reinforce the troops in South Africa for defensive purposes, pending the arrival of the field force, were in accordance with the advice and requirements of their military advisers."

We stand or fall on this—namely, that politically we were right not to take a step three months before the first act of war in order, if possible, to win a diplomatic victory—in order, if possible, to avoid war. And we confess that we were responsible for believing that 75,000 men was the total necessary, and that the forces in South Africa prior to the advent of the field force could hold the passes until the field force arrived. If that shows such a lack of foresight and judgment, such a reckless want of consideration for the advice which reached us, then in heaven's name turn out the Government, and put in a Government which will do better. If not, let the acquittal, for it amounts to that, of the Commission stand. But when the Government is charged with not having made preparations for war, words are used which lead the people of this country to suppose that the supplies were inadequate in quantity and bad in quality. I believe that a noble Lord in another place, or elsewhere, made himself responsible for talking about paper boots or boots with paper soles. I will quote Lord Wolseley's dictum again, that no army was ever better equipped or better found, and I think there is a confusion in the minds of many as to the meaning of the words equipment and reserves. When we are told that there was a deficiency of reserves, that is perfectly true—there had been no policy in this country of accumulating large reserves; it was the settled policy of Government and Government, acting on the advice of those who were competent to advise them, that it was unwise to lock up a great deal of money in accumulated reserves, and it was believed that the manufacturers of this country could respond to any sudden stress. Well, as it turns out, that was an unfounded and bad policy, and when the first grave operation of the Government—namely, the re-armament of the coaling stations—was over, General Brackenbury was appointed by Lord Lansdowne for the specific purpose of going into this question of reserves. A Departmental Committee sat upon it, and the Treasury and the Government of the day allotted £10,500,000, in addition to the £7,000,000 for naval stations' armaments. So much for the reserves, and I say the first force, which was to be a force of 75,000 men, was properly equipped. So I run through the findings of the Commission. There is the finding on guns. Take rifles—

> "The supply of rifles during the war appears to have been adequate and satisfactory."

Take clothing—

> "The supply of clothing and boots in South Africa appears to have been satisfactory."

Saddlery and harness -

> "Was of good material and workmanship," better than the colonial. The Commission refer to the scandals about the remounts, and say they were very much exaggerated. I said I should be perfectly candid, and I will give the words of the Commissioners. They say—

> "The Commission, having considered the mass of evidence taken by the Court of Inquiry and in other investigations with regard to the proceedings of the Remounts Department and the Yeomanry Committee in the purchase of horses, were convinced that it would be a waste of time to investigate afresh the individual transactions and questions of personal conduct to which most of the attack is directed. The former inquiries have shown that there was much exaggeration in the allegations of scandal, and more especially so far as the Government Remount Department was concerned, and the Commission sees no reason to dissent from the judgment delivered by the Court of Inquiry acquitting General Truman from personal blame."

MR. PIRIE (Aberdeenshire, N.) rose, but Mr. WYNDHAM declined to give way.

MR. WYNDHAM: And yet it was made the occasion of an attack upon this gentleman that there had been corruption leading to improper horses being purchased in large numbers.

MR. PIRIE again rose, but Mr. WYNDHAM again declined to give way.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member must not persist in interrupting unless the right hon. Gentleman gives way.

MR. WYNDHAM: I have very little time. I do not deny for one moment that our arrangements for the Remount Department were totally inadequate, and my right hon. friend the late Secretary for War took steps during his period of office to carry out some much-needed, and, I believe, effective reforms. So it is also with regard to the supply of food and forage—

> "The evidence shows (the Commissioners say), that both in method of distribution and in quality the supply of food was one of the successful features of the South African War."

So it is of sea transport, and so it is on almost every head. Now, you may say these are all small points, but it is an acquittal against the charge which has been preferred. It is an acquittal against the charges that used to be made against the Government during the early months of the war, charges preferred even by the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition. Certain salient features emerge from this Report. In the first place, the Government made themselves responsible for the belief that 75,000 men was an adequate force. There is on that a finding against the Government, and we accept responsibility. But we ask impartial critics to read the Report and find in that acceptance of responsibility any justification for such an Amendment as has been moved. We say, in the second place, that for political considerations, which may have been valid or invalid— we all believe them still to be valid—we declined to take steps which would have advertised three months beforehand our intentions of going to war. We declined to take those steps when diplomatic negotiations were still in process, and when we trusted and believed that the Republics would not be guilty of an invasion of our territories. The third salient fact is that the interim defence provided for our own colonies was, in the opinion of our military advisers, adequate until the arrival of the field force. And the fourth salient feature is that, in the choice of a strategic line of advance, although there was no elaborate plan of campaign as there might be now when we have re-organised the War Office, we acted on the advice of the most distinguished military authorities. They all agreed in that advice, and there is not the slightest reason to believe that if they had been sitting together on the remodelled Army Council they would have given any other advice than that which, as a matter of fact, Lord Lansdowne followed. Then there is the quantity and quality of the provision of munitions of war. I feel that we need plead guilty only to having believed that 75,000 men were enough. We plead not guilty to the charge that these 75,000 men were not available or that they were not properly and adequately equipped.

We are arraigned by critics who think that they can impale us on the horns of a dilemma when they say that you ought either to prepare for war or to avoid war. Are you to prepare at all costs for every conceivable expedition? That is the view of one set of extremists. Are you to avoid war at all costs? That is the view of extremists at the opposite pole. We say that it is the duty of a reponsible Government to seek for some mean between those opposite views. We declare that, according to such guidance and with such facilities as were then available, that purpose was sought by the Government of the day and by their predecessors when Mr. Stanhope was Secretary for War. We say we have always sought to find the exact mean between the two—between war and diplomacy. But who are those who bring this charge against us? What was their diplomacy in South Africa, and what were their particular preparations in South Africa? Having receded from the Transvaal in 1881 and given a large measure of independence, what did they do in the year 1882? They contracted a treaty with Portugal to admit of the free transit of arms and munitions of war into the Transvaal Republic. And then, when you come to 1895, you get a beautiful balance of diplomacy and preparation for war. A despatch was written in the Colonial Office urging upon President Kruger for his acceptance a five years franchise, the very terms which were offered by Sir Alfred Milner, as he then was, at the Bloemfontein Conference in May, 1899, and what was the preparation for war? The garrison of South Africa consisted of two battalions! I know the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition thinks that that was an adequate garrison at the time. [OPPOSITION cries of "So it was" and "That was before the Jameson Raid."] Then why did you keep the despatch back? The right hon. Gentleman has made himself responsible for saying that they had an overwhelming superiority with these two battalions at Cape Town, but the despatch did not go. He has made it a charge against us that, without sufficient preparation, we allowed the quarrel to develop. They did not allow the quarrel to develop. They kept the despatch back, and it is very easy to adjust the balance between your diplomacy and your preparation for war if you put nothing, or next to nothing, in either scale. It is not easy to keep an exact balance. It is very difficult to adjust that balance if you have, as you ought to have, a regard for your world-wide responsibilities, and, in particular, a regard for your responsibilities to your colonial brethren, and if at the same time you have, as you ought to have, a regard for the taxpayers and the credit of this country. To say that with all our efforts towards general preparation, and with all these diplomatic reasons for not pushing on special preparations too far, we are to be condemned upon such an issue, is to prefer a charge which this House will cast to the winds. What is the question? Is the Prime Minister, who received a special encomium from Lord Esher's Committee, to continue his work of Army reform, or is he to be succeeded by the distinguished statesman whom hon. and right hon. Members opposite have unanimously agreed upon as more fitting to direct the organisation of the War Office?

SIR A. HAYTER (Walsall) said the right hon. Gentleman had appealed to the evidence of Lord Lansdowne. That being so, might he refer him to page 518 of the Blue-book, where the following passage would be found—

> "It is abundantly clear from Sir H. Brackenbury's report that we were not sufficiently prepared even for the equipment of the comparatively small force which we had always contemplated might be employed beyond the limits of this country. For the much larger force which we have found it necessary to employ our resources were absolutely and miserably inadequate. We had at the outset of the campaign to send troops abroad insufficiently supplied with clothes and equipments. If other complications supervened a catastrophe would have been inevitable."

The right hon. Gentlemen had appealed to Cæsar; to Cæsar, then, he should go. By that evidence Lord Lansdowne gave a complete contradiction to a great deal that the Chief

Secretary had been urging. Surely the right hon. Gentleman would also remember that according to the advice of the military authorities it then required an expenditure of £640,000 to complete the equipment of the First Army Corps. And were they to be told that soldiers, into whose hands were placed rifles which carried six inches to the right at 500 yards, were properly armed? or that cavalry with a reserve of eighty swords, and those of a kind perfectly useless for cavalry purposes, were efficiently equipped? It was impossible for Lord Wolseley to have taken these facts into consideration; the evidence of Lord Lansdowne was much more to be relied upon. The House owed a deep debt of gratitude to the hon. and learned Member for South Shields for the able and lucid speech in which he had brought this complicated question before them. He had been inclined to fear that the question had receded somewhat in public interest owing to the length of time which had elapsed since the events took place, to the time it had taken to compile the evidence, and to the appearance on the political horizon of a very large question which, like Aaron's rod, appeared to have swallowed up all others. Moreover, there had been the promise of reform in the War Office, and they had in that Department a Secretary of State enlisted on the side of Army reform. His hon. and learned friend had wisely made it his first object to place the saddle on the right horse, being not only anxious to exonerate the soldiers, but to allot the blame in the proper quarters. One quotation would show the opinion of the Royal Commission on this point—

> "It appears now that with a greater amount of forethought in arrangements generally, in the provision of stores and equipment, and with the addition perhaps of one brigade, the situation in Natal might have been so strengthened that the whole course of the war must have been altered." (Page 30.)

And again on page 28—

> "There can be no doubt now that the position in South Africa was dangerously weak."

In the judgment of Sir J. French, the addition to the force in Natal of a brigade of 5,000 men, would have turned the scale in the operations after Elandslaagte. It was difficult to form any conception of the difference in the whole course of the war which might have been the result. What was the situation in June, 1899? According to page 25 of the Report—

> "In June, 1899, it has been shown that an Army Corps and a Cavalry Division was designated as the force which would be required in the event of hostilities. The equipment of that force required, in the opinion of the Army Board, an outlay of £640,000. The minutes of the Army Board up to 22nd September, 1899, make it clear that in their opinion the main difficulty was the refusal of sanction for the expenditure of the money involved. It is, however, equally manifest from his minute of the 12th of August, that Lord Lansdowne, as Secretary of State, fully appreciated the extent of the deficiency, and the consequence of any delay in the grant of money, and that he brought the whole circumstances before his colleagues. The decision not to sanction expenditure was, therefore, taken by the Cabinet, though Lord Lansdowne, of course, does not dissociate himself from it."

Therefore the very thing which prevented the Army Corps going out was the refusal of the Cabinet to sanction the necessary expenditure. Nothing could be more clear than that it was not the fault of the soldiers. Sir H. Brackenbury had shown that nothing was done by the Secretary of State to remedy the state of affairs. From his evidence it appeared that—

> "The proceedings of the Army Board were full of instances of our asking at that time to be allowed to spend money in making preparations and of our being told we could not do it. It was perfectly clear that it was the decision of the Government that they would not spend money at that time in preparation for the despatch of an army corps."

And again—

> "We were equally refused money by the Secretary of State in the early stage to make any preparation for providing clothing for the First Army Corps, and nothing was done until the 22nd of September."

He could not conceive how that decision had been arrived at. The Cabinet must have known of the immense importations of arms and ammunition into the Transvaal; they must have known at the time of the Raid that we were very weak; they had the excellent reports of the Intelligence Division; and they knew that war was impending, because they sent to Sir Redvers Buller with the First Army Corps, and told him that when hostilities broke out he would be appointed to the command. It was, indeed, most melancholy to read of the want of preparation that obtained at that time. The question of the reserves in this country should not be lost sight of. The authorised reserve of cavalry swords was 6,000; the actual reserve, however, was 80, and they were described by Sir J. French as the worst that could possibly be used by any mounted troops, and by General Baden-Powell as a perfectly useless weapon. As to the rifles, the back-sight had been altered, and that was the cause of the divergence of the bullets, and it was a terrible blow at the commencement of the war that 200,000 rifles were useless. But who found that out? Not the War Office, but the unfortunate Yeomanry to whom they were served on the eve of going into the field. That, he contended, was a scandalous thing. Great use was made of machine guns, which were especially useful when acting with cavalry, but Sir H. Brackenbury stated that while the authorised number was 1,224, they had only 898, a deficiency of 326. And further—

> "We were driven to great straits for ammunition, because we had actually got reduced in this country to two or three boxes of Mark II. ammunition, so that if we had had to go to war with a European Power we should have had to fight them with expanding bullets."

He further stated—

> "Almost the whole of the supplies tell a similar tale. We had 500 sets of cavalry saddlery in reserve to meet the wear and tear of 16,000 sets with the troops, we had 10,000 sets of infantry accoutrements in reserve to meet the wear and tear of 364,000 sets, we had 1,700 sets of mule harness and we had to buy an equipment of 25,000 sets from the trade before 15th December."

Then Lord Lansdowne stated in evidence—

> "We had a quite insufficient reserve of horse and field artillery material, only one battery of horse artillery, and that converted to an experimental quick-firing system. The whole stock of field-gun ammunition was absorbed by demands from South Africa at an early stage. We borrowed from India and the Navy. We had only 500 sets of harness and 500 of Cavalry saddlery in reserve, we at once exhausted the reserve of infantry accoutrements, we had to borrow large guns from the Navy, machine guns from fortresses, boots and helmets from India, to buy 25,000 sets of mule harness, 17,000 tents and 900 marquees, we had no reserve of hospital equipment, the fiftieth of the picketing gear required, and a reserve of 80 swords."

That was from the evidence of Lord Lansdowne, a conclusive authority who cannot be mistaken.

With regard to the provision of men—

> "Colonel Lucas, who acted as Deputy-Adjutant General of the Imperial Yeomanry, stated that on several occasions, he urged upon the War Office, after the despatch of the first contingent that recruiting for the Imperial Yeomanry should not be stopped but the committee should be allowed to raise drafts to maintain the strength of the force. It was a mistake on the part of the War Office authorities to have declined to santion this. If the force first sent out had not been allowed to melt away the subsequent hurried and unsatisfactory raising of further contingents would not have been necessary."

The second contingent was raised by order in February, 1901. The privates were given 5s. a day, to the great disgust of their comrades in the first contingent, who were paid at cavalry rates, and had also to be raised to 5s. a day, like the Colonials. These men, when they arrived in South Africa, were absolutely untrained, and could neither shoot nor ride.

That was about the most extravagant expenditure in the war. Lord Methuen said of them—

> "It was not their fault, it was sending them out unprepared and not giving them a chance when they got to the country of getting into order, before they were in front of the enemy."

Sir B. Hamilton says of them—

> "The second lot of Yeomanry knew nothing at all, they did not know how to handle a rifle."

Sir C. Knox said of the same contingent—

> "They were very bad; I do not know where they were got, but they had no idea of riding, shooting, or anything else."

Colonel Crabbe said that—

> "They were absolutely ignorant of the rudiments of soldiering, and knew nothing about horses. Some of the officers were unfit and had to be sent home."

With regard to the officers he limited himself to the Militia. Lords Wolseley and Roberts and the Adjutant-General agreed that the Militia failed in the matter of an adequate number of well-trained officers. In the sixty-eight battalions warned for embarkation, there was a deficiency of 303 officers. One battalion was seventeen, another sixteen, and another fourteen officers short. The whole Militia force in 1899 was 624 officers short. The Inspector-General of the Auxiliary Forces between October, 1899, and April, 1900, gave away 407 Militia Commissions. He sent out young gentlemen with no training whatever, and knowing nothing. He took them straight from their families or from school and sent them out without even gazetting them. Naturally Lord Roberts found the greatest difference between Line and Militia on service, and could only employ the latter on lines of communication, and he referred to the great anxiety he felt in his communications being held by partially trained troops such as Militia and hastily raised Yeomanry. No doubt one of the great difficulties was the supply of trained officers. They could not pay a man for longer time than he served. Might they not utilise the Militia, increase largely the establishment, train an officer for three months and then one month yearly. They then would not need largely to increase the cadres of regiments, or pay men for twelve months while doing one month's duty, and yet they would get the Militia properly officered.

As to horses, there was less reason to speak of the terrible deficiencies of the remounts, as there had been more than one debate and more than one Committee upon it. But no one could pretend that an establishment to purchase only 2,500 horses a year was sufficient; nor could any excuse be found for not increasing the staff when they suddenly had to deal with an expenditure of £7,000,000 in a single year. All would agree with the finding of the Commission—

> "That the real complaint against the Remount Department does not so much relate to its purchase of horses during the war as to the fact that from first to last there was not the symptom of an idea in anyone who was responsible for its organisation that in time of war there would be necessity for its expansion."

In conclusion, he thought they were all indebted to his hon. and learned friend for the admirable manner in which he had brought the subject before the House.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

Sir A. Hayter.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [4th February] to Main Question [2nd February].

"That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

> "At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in regard to the preparations for and conduct of the recent war in South Africa, and particularly the evidence taken by Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into those matters and their Report thereon, disclose grave negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, whereby the duration, magnitude and cost of the war were greatly increased.'"—(Mr. Robson.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*Mr. DUKE (Plymouth) said if it were possible for the Amendment to be a declaration of public necessity for the removal of the Government in order to promote the efficiency of the defensive forces of the Crown, there would be found a majority sufficiently public-spirited to prefer the efficiency of the forces to the continued existence of His Majesty's Government. But the powerful speech of Mr. Wyndham must have satisfied Members on both sides of the House that the efficiency of the Imperial forces did not require the removal of the Government. The objects of the Commission were to discover any inefficiency or defects in the administration of the Army, as disclosed by the war in South Africa, and to indicate their causes where possible. The Commissioners faithfully carried out those objects, and devoted their ability and industry to discovering inefficiency and defects, which they disclosed in an impartial Report. Their work would redound to the benefit of the public service if it was not defeated by partisan interference. They faithfully traced to their origin those mistakes which indicated inefficiency, and by which so much public humiliation was caused in the early stages of the war, but they had also, and to an extent which close study of the Report made quite clear, exonerated the advisers of the Crown and the members of the Government from culpability. In view of the finding of the Commission the speech of the hon. Member opposite was like a reiteration of the case for the prosecution after the verdict of acquittal had been given. It was founded upon isolated passages in the evidence—scraps had been selected, instances of inefficiency had been pieced together, and with an admirable adroitness, of which the House had had one or two instances that day, the blame of the whole matter had been laid at the doors of His Majesty's Administrators. He maintained that no Government in this country within the past century had contributed so much to the strengthening of the forces of the Crown—to the making of them efficient, to the provision of armaments and to the establishment of an intelligent system at headquarters—as this Government had. The business of the Administration in regard to the matters which came into question that day was the business of policy, and he protested against the notion that it was the duty of a Prime Minister or Secretary for War to go round sighting rifles, examining saddles, counting tents, or even to undertake the preparation of plans of campaign, or lines of strategic advance. A Government was to be judged by its conduct of public policy; a War Minister was bound to see that the Government had a force available to support the honour and determination of the country in such emergencies as arose. Upon those broad grounds it was impossible to support the Amendment. If hon. Members brought home to the Government every mistake and folly that was committed they might succeed upon the Amendment, but if the question was one of policy he ventured to say that the policy of the Government with regard to every material stage in the progress of the acts under discussion, was a policy approved by the country and one which not infrequently had been approved by right hon. Gentlemen and hon. Gentlemen opposite.

A great deal had been said with regard to the conduct of the Government in not providing sufficient forces in South Africa when war was thought to be possible. He challenged any critic to show that the Government did not more than satisfy the demands that were made upon them. The advice given by Sir William Butler was that the war would be a costly and serious matter. The general thought, but apparently did not advise, that it would certainly require 50,000 or 60,000 men, and might require 80,000 or 100,000. And he predicted also that such a war would not be begun by the Boers. How completely that prediction had been falsified! Yet the Government was blamed because it was satisfied with the advice it had from the general at the Cape, the general in Natal, and its advisers in this country. His Majesty's Goverment may not have possessed a prophetic foresight. If they failed to send great forces to Africa in the summer of 1899 it was with a very excellent justification, for they were resolved that no act should be done on our part which should render war inevitable. Half the blame cast upon the Government was blame because in the summer of 1899 it did not mobilise an army corps. The justification for the position of this country at the outbreak of the war was that we had done nothing to provoke war. What would have been the attitude of hon. Gentlemen opposite if His Majesty's Government had in the summer of 1899 proposed to mobilise an army corps, or call out the Militia? On 28th July, 1899, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman said, in regard to preparations for the war, he saw nothing which established a case for armed intervention. What was censured at the time was not any slightness of preparation on the part of the Government, but their ostentation and excess. Before the Government was finally met by the hostility of the two Republics, the Government had been advised with regard to the force required. Various numbers were given; an expert said 40,000 men would be required, another 60,000. Now they were told in this House that the number of men the Government ought to have expected to send off was upwards of 400,000. They knew now, when the war was successfully ended, that the number of troops required for the task to be performed was about 250,000, but there was not a scintilla of evidence placed before the Commission to show that any responsible person before the commencement of the war suggested that anything approaching even 100,000 would be required. The force decided upon was larger than was advised by the experts. The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, when the subject was discussed, was able to express a confident opinion as to the sufficiency of the forces sent to South Africa, and it was an idle thing at this time to say that he spoke without the knowledge of the facts he had now. He had such knowledge of the facts that he could speak with confidence and applaud the decision at which His Majesty's Government had arrived. The House did not know and did not need to know the exact quantity of facts which was required to give the right hon. Gentleman confidence in his opinion. What the right hon. Gentleman said with regard to the matter was contained in volume 75 of "Hansard of 1899." On 17th October, 1899, the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "I am glad that the Government are at least not falling into the error which has not infrequently been made by our countrymen in past times, and they are sending out, after some delay it is true, an ample force for the purpose of effectually prosecuting and concluding this enterprise."

That responsible utterance at a time of the most serious crisis should outweigh some of the criticisms now offered in defiance of the findings of the Royal Commission. Not only was that the view of the Opposition, that view was endorsed by Lord Roberts, who said that what the Army was suffering from when he got out to South Africa was not a deficiency in the number of men, but defective strategy. In those days also it was not the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition that the Government had failed in their duty as regarded equipment, for on 20th October, 1899, he said that for us in our particular position to be paying a great deal of money in continually keeping up a great establishment of transports solely for European or home purposes would be preposterous, and that it was shown by the fact that in this particular case we had already had to alter our wagons in order to suit the nature of the country in South Africa where they were to be used. Was it fair or beneficial to the country that what was regarded as reasonable and prudent in the time of crisis should now be condemned?

As to the wrong sighting of certain rifles, Lord Roberts in his evidence said it was discovered at a time when it made no practical difference. Being asked (Question 10,575) whether it practically made any difference, Lord Roberts replied, "No, I do not think it did." The Government record with regard to Army administration was one showing that they had done something and risked something, and he commended it to the consideration of hon. Gentlemen opposite who were now such severe critics after, in office, setting a bad example. The Government had taken account of the main recommendations of the Commission, and had dealt even with the internal economy of the War Office in the manner called for by its Report. The Government provoked this Report. They appointed a Commission to investigate the errors which had been made, and he was heartily thankful that they had investigated them. He therefore ventured to suggest that the Government deserved encouragement in the prosecution of the task of military reform to which they had committed themselves, and to which he hoped they would be enabled to devote their energies for years to come.

* SIR CHARLES DILKE said the hon. and learned Gentleman concluded his speech by declaring that the Government had condemned the War Office. If that was true it was some justification for the Motion now before the House. If it was true that the War Office had not yet been replaced, it was a curious commentary on the Prime Minister's speeches in which he stated that he had made the War Office perfect, while according to the hon. and learned Gentleman we were at present provided with no War Office at all. The hon. and learned Gentleman stated that previous speakers did not stick to the Report of the Commission, and complained that they had gone outside of it and referred to the evidence. The doctrine that the evidence should not be referred to was one which they could not recognise on this side of the House. The hon. and learned Gentleman asked if judgment was going to be passed on the Government by the House, with regard to events which occurred years ago. Judgment had been passed on the Government by a Commission of which they themselves chose every member, and of which they prepared the reference, which was a matter of importance in the case of a Commission. It was a Commission so composed which had passed on the Government a verdict the hon. and learned Gentleman and the Chief Secretary for Ireland called a verdict of acquittal. He would endeavour to put before the House the reasons which made him think that the Report was such that it would be impossible for the House of Commons to pass it over in silence, and not to point the moral which the Report contained, for the sake of the Empire as a whole. He could not help feeling that the fact that there had been three Secretaries for War in so short a time in what the Prime Minister called the same Government was an eloquent comment on the disclosures which had been made. With regard to the claim that the Report of the Commission was an acquittal of the Government he did not think that was the opinion of the Prime Minister. Immediately after the Report was issued the right hon. Gentleman, addressing his constituents, said it had left a painful impression upon the public mind, and that in the opinion of what he called "my friend the man in the street," the Government had been tried and found utterly inefficient. Surely that was hardly a way to meet a verdict of acquittal. The Chief Secretary had waved the Party flag, and attempted to substitute for the real question before the country a purely Party issue. Upon this military question some of them had really tried to keep free from Party spirit and some of them had shown that. He felt from a perusal of the Report and of the evidence, from his knowledge of the circumstances which led up to it, from his recollection of the debates which took place after the unfortunate speeches of the Prime Minister, that it was incumbent upon all of them, for the sake of the nation, to support the judgment of the Royal Commission. If they passed over lightly such a Report as that dealing with facts, they should only deserve their fate if similar facts were to recur. It was a little ominous that some hon. Gentlemen were inclined to give a Party turn to the discussion. Perhaps that was natural and inevitable though unfortunate, and it seemed to him singularly unfair. It was a subject on which they had a collection of evidence by competent men admirably put before them, and it contained an enormous number of facts which it was essential to bear in mind for the future welfare of the country.

The Chief Secretary for Ireland began the Party portion of his speech by an allusion to the most considerable and most grave of all the findings of the Commission. It was on the subject of what he called the preparation for the war; and he asked—the question had already been asked in Party newspapers, and in the unfortunate speech of the Prime Minister in which he tried to defend the Cabinet on Party lines—would hon. Members opposite have supported war preparations? If the question meant would hon. Members who had consistently opposed the policy of Lord Milner have supported war measures to back up that policy of Lord Milner, of course they would not. That went without saying. But, was that Party taunt any answer whatever to the charges that had been made on the findings of the Royal Commission? Did it clear the Cabinet in any way? In protesting against the view that the Government ought to have sent larger reinforcements to South Africa, the right hon. Gentleman said that the civilised world would have condemned such a provocation. He doubted that. He thought the civilised world would have been more likely to condemn the making of inflammatory speeches which had been delivered when reinforcements were not sent. The provocation sending reinforcements and adequate transport would have been small indeed beside the provocation offered by the speeches to which he had referred. Another Party taunt which the Chief Secretary used was that in 1895 the right hon. Gentlemen who sat on these Benches had prepared a despatch on the franchise question which they had not sent to the Boer Government, and that at that time they had made no preparations for war, and that the garrison in South Africa was small. But he might point out that the Boer armaments had not been gathered at that time, and that their preparation for war, which had been so accurately described by the Intelligence Department, was caused by the Jameson Raid.

The Chief Secretary said that the Report of the Commission was a verdict of acquittal, and he should like therefore to ask the House to consider what exactly it was that the Commission had reported in regard, in the first place, to the main question of preparation and reinforcements. He was glad to see the right hon. Member for West Birmingham in his place, because it enabled him to quote a letter written by the then Secretary of State for War, Lord Lansdowne, in which he referred to a communication from the right hon. Gentleman which had not been published. On 20th August, Lord Lansdowne wrote from Ireland that the Colonial Secretary had written to him on 18th August, stating that "he saw no occasion for reinforcements." Now, it was on 22nd August that the Transvaal presented their five years franchise proposal, and the Secretary of State for War continued to see no necessity for reinforcements, because to that proposal the Government had "sent a reasoned reply" and "the negotiation was going on." But it was on the 26th August that the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was made about "the sands running down" and that "we shall have to find other ways;" and, according to the evidence of the Secretary of State for War on the very same day, the Cabinet—or at least the majority of the Cabinet—had come to a decision that they "ought not to send further reinforcements." On 5th September the Secretary of State for War, Lord Lansdowne, came to the view that war was certain, and the Commander-in-Chief, knowing the state of our unpreparedness, wrote that he wished the Government to stave off war by diplomatic measures as the enemy was "in a position to take the offensive, and by striking the first blow to ensure the great advantage of winning the first round." That prophecy came exactly true, and it was the ground on which the Commission reported that the earlier sending of reinforcements would have changed the whole future course of the war, would have prevented the prolongation of the war, and would have saved an enormous sacrifice of life and treasure. The Commander-in-Chief in that prophecy did not stand by any means alone. The Intelligence Department's advice was exactly the same, and so was that of Sir William Butler about "temporising," in which he used, without previous communication, almost exactly the same words as the Commander-in-Chief. Let the House consider for a moment what would have been the effect of earlier action at that time. During the fatal week of December the troops were arriving largely too late to take any part in the operations, and the delay was caused by the Government holding their hand from 5th September, when even the peace members of the Cabinet came to the conclusion that war was certain, up to the 22nd and even 27th, 28th, and 29th September. Now, what were the words of the Report on that subject? What was this verdict of acquittal of which they had heard that night? The Commission found in those words—

> "With a greater amount of forethought . . . and with the addition of perhaps another brigade, the situation might have been so strengthened that the whole course of the war must have been altered."

That statement seemed to him not to be a verdict of acquittal, but a verdict of guilty on the main point.

The second most important point referred to by the Commission concerned the deficiency of stores. The Chief Secretary for Ireland did not make, at the same length as the Prime Minister, but he did make that night the old pot-and-kettle charge, a Party charge on this question of stores and equipment. In the unfortunate speech which the Prime Minister made to his constituents in Manchester in defending the Government after the Report came out, he attacked the Party on this side for deliberately starving the Army. He used these words—

> "When they (the Liberal Government) went out in 1895 and this Government came in, we set to work at once to bring up the Army to the standard which had been laid down by our Conservatives predecessors, and which had been abandoned . . . and which we were resolved to restore."

And then he quoted Mr. Stanhope. The Chief Secretary again quoted Mr. Stanhope. Well, he (Sir Charles Dilke) had already deprecated Party recrimination on this question. He had claimed for himself detachment from Party, but he confessed that he was sickened by these Party charges in regard to this question which was specially referred to in the Commission, and on which they had plain evidence in the Report itself, and the verdict given was as complete a verdict of guilty as was the verdict on the other point. The Prime Minister said that—

> "The professors of efficiency left the Army in the deplorable position in which it was in 1895."

But they knew that when Mr. Gladstone was in office in 1893, Mr. Stanhope said that the Army was in a very fine condition of efficiency; there was no falling off at all, and that—

> "The Army had never been more efficient or more thoroughly suitable for war than it then was. Our Army was better equipped than at any previous period."

In 1895 a similar statement was made by the Prime Minister, though the right hon. Gentleman now explained that his remarks applied to the Navy, which was not at that time mentioned at all; and the Chief Secretary did not refer to the Navy in that connection. At all events, the Prime Minister was in the same condition of delusion on this subject, and in regard to the evidence and Report of the Commission, as he was in regard to the Orange Free State. The Prime Minister at Manchester put first in his list of "Unionist Army reforms" these stores which had returned to the standard set up by Mr. Stanhope, and which had been destroyed by the harm done by the wretched Liberal Party from 1892 to 1895; and then the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "We brought up the whole reserves of ammunition and equipment."

And the Chief Secretary brought cheers from the other side when he spoke of "our record" on this subject. What were the words of the Report of the Royal Commission? The Commission reported—

> "A serious deficiency of stores and material required on the mobilisation of an army corps."

And yet they had been told that the equipment of two, and later of three, army corps was complete in every respect. Now the Chief Secretary for Ireland asked the House to very carefully read on that subject the most valuable evidence of Lord Lansdowne. They had read it. Lord Lansdowne admitted the charge to the full. He spoke of the "melancholy extent of our deficiencies," which he said was "full of peril to the Empire." And that was after they had returned to the Conservative standard, and made up all the deficiencies and raised the Army to a state in which it had never been before! Lord Lansdowne was specifically asked—

> "And do you think that deficiency of stores has been of long standing?"

And he said—

> "Yes, I think so."

Well, the Commission were not content with the complete judgment which they passed on this point in the words I have read. The Chief Secretary wanted hon. Members to stick to the Report of the Commission. Well, the Commission went on to mention specially Mr. Stanhope, and they printed for the first time Mr. Stanhope's Memorandum. And they say—

> "The state of things in no way corresponded to . . . Mr. Stanhope's Memorandum."

They found that there had not been that completeness of preparation under Mr. Stanhope for which the Chief Secretary vouched, and that instead of there being an improvement, there must have been very serious deterioration. The Commission went on to say that—

> "Some branches were barely strong enough for the equipment of two army corps."

And they specifically mentioned several points as to which the Government complained most unjustly that the House of Commons were responsible. The House of Commons had never done anything but good on these points. The Commission specifically pointed out many matters which his hon. friend the Member for West Aberdeenshire had brought before the House. The medical equipment was, they said, never anything like the equipment even for a single army corps. Well, that was complete proof, surely, without going into any evidence at all, and without raising any of those questions which the Chief Secretary said ought not to be raised—that the Report showed that the verdict of the Commission on the Government was not one of acquittal upon the main points, but was a condemnation on the two chief points which it was the bounden duty of the House to take notice of on this occasion in order to prevent a similar misfortune happening in the future.

There were other matters of deep interest, but not of first-class importance, on which their opinion was as unfavourable and as clear. For years past the Army reformers in the House, on both sides, had perpetually urged upon the Government, in season and out of season, down to the conclusion of the war itself, the defective state of the Intelligence Department. On that point, too, the finding of the Commission was dead against the Government. They found that the Intelligence Department was undermanned, and was not sufficient to grapple with a great war. The present Secretary for India made a speech to his constituents in October last, defending the War Office, when he said that their attacks on the Government were most unfair, because, he contended, everyone "ignored that large additions have been made" to the Department, and he said how wrong it was to make these attacks when Sir William Nicholson "was satisfied." What were the facts? Sir William was rewarded by being driven from the War Office. At all events Lord Lansdowne was not satisfied; he was apparently impressed by the war having shown the importance of the Intelligence Department; and he used these singular words—

> "One of the good results of the war will be that the importance of the Intelligence branch will receive greater recognition."

It certainly was the result of the war that the Commission had condemned the undermanning of the Department, and that that which they had been urging for years had been complied with. The hon. Member for Plymouth complained that they had waited till after these events to make their criticism; but they had brought the question before the House as soon as it was reported upon by the Commission. The Secretary of State for India, defending the War Office, said that the Government ought not to be blamed, because they had given Sir William Nicholson all he wanted. They had the evidence of Sir William Nicholson quoted in the Report, and it was the basis of a judgment against the Government in which it was stated that the Department was "undermanned." Sir William Nicholson said that his moderate proposal of 1901 was negatived by the Government on the ground of expense; and when he was asked what the expense was he said £3,000 a year. So that this country, which spent infinitely more on its Army than any other country, had refused the moderate proposal of Sir William Nicholson while waste was going on in other Departments. Up to March, 1903, Sir William Nicholson had totally failed to obtain the augmentations for which he had asked for his Department, and he succeeded only by the evidence he gave before the Commission. The Secretary of State for India said that it was most unfair to blame the Government on this point—most unfair, he supposed, of the Royal Commission—Sir William Nicholson won only on his evidence; and now he was probably to be sent away from the War Office.

There occurred during the debate a little passage of arms between the Chief Secretary and the seconder of this Motion. The Chief Secretary quoted the evidence of Lord Roberts about quick-firing guns and some words from the Report, and seemed to suggest to the House that the Commissioners understood the question better than Lord Roberts. He ventured to interrupt the Chief Secretary and asked him if he agreed with Lord

Roberts' statement that in quick-firing guns this country was altogether inferior to other Powers. The Chief Secretary did not answer; but he should like to press the question, because it was one of the points on which the Prime Minister had been as consistently misinformed as he was with regard to the attitude of the Orange State. The Prime Minister, defending the Government in January, 1900, went out of his way to deny that our Artillery had a worse gun than the French, for example. That matter was put to the test, because the French took their quick-firing gun to China at that very time, and some demonstrations of its value were given. The Prime Minister spoke at the Manchester Conservative Club on the 10th of January. On that occasion he was advised by someone to say that our guns compared favourably with any guns then used by any great State, and he went on to attack the critics and said no one had ever stated before that our guns were bad. The Chief Secretary knew at that time all the latest information on the subject, he knew very well that the statement of the Prime Minister was not the case, and he knew very well that Lord Roberts' statement was true, and that our guns failed deplorably in South Africa in quickness of fire. The Prussian "Military Considerations of the War in South Africa," a most valuable view of the war and a most important Supplement to the Report of the Royal Commission, described these guns as "old and old-fashioned. The English had only one battery which was quick-firing and the Boer artillery had 126 quick-firing guns." One gun which the Army still possessed was the Liberal gun of 1885. It was converted in 1892 merely from an action on one side to an action on the other, and the spade attachment was added in 1899. The Member for South Birmingham defended that gun in debate, but it was admitted by the Government in 1899 that it was hopelessly out of date. He was able to state without doubt that the German gun of commerce—the Krupp gun of 1901—which anyone could buy, was seven times as good as our gun, as it could fire seven rounds for every one fired by the British gun, yet he had quoted the amazing statement of the Prime Minister which was supplied to him, he did not know by whom. It was not a fact that when the present Secretary of State for War came to this House next month for money he would propose the very first Vote that had ever been proposed for quick-firing guns? Such statements of the Prime Minister were surely worthy of the attention of the House. It was universally admitted that the position of the Prime Minister in co-ordinating and deciding what share of increased taxation was to be allotted to each Department gave him a great say in such matters, but surely the House of Commons, which had to trust the Prime Minister, had a right to expect from him that he should keep himself aware of what his own military advisers were thinking on these questions, and that he should at least read the documents sent to him. His hon. and learned friend had made a weighty attack on the Prime Minister, but it was a very deserved and necessary attack, one painful, he knew, for his friend to make in the Prime Minister's absence. His hon. and learned friend devoted a considerable portion of his speech to the case of the Orange Free State, and it was necessary to bring it forward because soldier after soldier had pointed out what would happen. His hon. friend quoted one passage, but it was the whole burthen of the speech of the Prime Minister, who also used the following passage, which was perhaps more appropriate to this occasion because it contained one of those needless reflections on the military advisers of the Crown which had produced such a painful impression on the country. He spoke of—

> "What we did not know at the time, that the Orange Free State would throw all their forces into line with the Transvaal Republic."

Now the Chief Secretary said that everyone knew that. Why did not the Prime Minister know it? The Intelligence Department reported it month after month in the critical period before the war, but the Prime Minister did not know it, and finally, when the matter was brought before the House, he made the lamest of lame explanations. It was suggested that the Government only thought that young men of the Orange Free State would leave the State and take part in the war, and that the Orange State would not throw in its lot with the Transvaal. But it had been proved conclusively that the War Office was aware that the Orange State was being armed at the cost of the Transvaal, and that they were actually interchanging small bodies of regular troops. Those facts were brought to the attention of the Government in June and July, and was it not amazing that the Prime Minister should go out of his way to make these statements with regard to the action of the Orange Free State?

There was a secondary matter which was reported on by the Committee, and that was the question of mounted men. The Committee reported on this subject on three points, in two of which the Government were condemned. The Prime Minister at Manchester stated as one of the reasons why the Government could not have been adequately prepared for war, and why they were bound to make the failures they did in the early stages of the war, that for the first time in military warfare, they had an enemy wholly mounted and that that fact had not been adequately realised. The Prime Minister went on again to attack the military authorities, and he said that they "might ask much of their officers and Ministers, but they could not ask omniscience." But the officers had reported this very fact, the Intelligence Department had reported that the Boers would put 54,000 mounted infantry into the field, and the Prime Minister must have been ignorant of the facts which were brought before the House during the war when the accuracy of the statement was already suspected, a suspicion which was now confirmed by the Report. The Committee reported that it was necessary to increase the number of mounted men, and he could not help remembering in this connection that it was Mr. Stanhope who reduced the number of horses at the time he reduced the artillery and that that reduction was not made up for an immense period. The Committee specifically censured the Government upon the subject of the Remount Department, although that could not have been gathered by what the Chief Secretary said that evening. The Commission whitewashed the Remount Department and General Truman, but reported regarding the Government that no one had ever foreseen the simple necessity for the expansion of the Department in time of war. On the question of mounted men the Commission also censured the Government. Some of the Yeomanry officers opposite would remember the report of Colonel Lucas in which he said that drafts ought to have been sent out, but it was established by the Royal Commission that the Government failed to keep up the Yeomanry to its full strength, and that the war was prolonged because the report of Colonel Lucas was not acted on and drafts were not sent out. The Chief Secretary asked them to stick to the Report of the Commission, and, with one divergence, in order to support the seconder of the Amendment, he had stuck closely to the actual findings of the Report. The Government thought that they had been acquitted by the Royal Commission, but the Prime Minister himself admitted the miscalculations of the Government, and threw the whole blame on their military advisers. The Commission condemned the Government not the military advisers. The attack on the soldiers was a mean attack. Certainly the soldiers were not responsible for the condition of the stores which they had frequently reported to the Government; they were not responsible for the state of the Intelligence Department, or for the miscalculation of the Prime Minister as to the Orange Free State. So far as he knew the sole justification which the Government had for trying to throw the blame off their own shoulders and on the shoulders of the soldiers related to the question of numbers and to that alone, and on that point what the soldiers said was that they did not understand that they were entering on a war of conquest, which was a very different thing from an ordinar war. When the Government proclaimed a policy of destroying a nationality they provoked an amount of resistance of a character and continuity which needed different forces to cope with it. The soldiers with one accord declared that they were never told a war of conquest was intended. That was an important answer, and one of which notice ought to be taken by the House. The soldier who made the clearest statement to the Commission was Sir T. Kelly

Kenny, who in 16,923 put that view forward, and the Commission appeared to have accepted it as there was no attempt to rebut it. And yet Sir T. Kelly Kenny was taken by the Government themselves as the best man they could find for a "thinking department" of the War Office. In the face of that they could hardly deny the authority of such a witness on such a subject. The country and the House might congratulate themselves that, in all the circumstances disclosed by the Report, we got through the war as well as we did. The evidence which had been placed before the Commission by men of the greatest weight as to what occurred at the time of the investment of Ladysmith, and as to what would have happened if the Boers had then reached that measure of efficiency which they undoubtedly did attain in the later stages of the war, showed what a danger we had escaped in spite of the admitted miscalculation and neglected preparation of the Government. The Government had appealed from the evidence to the Report; he had endeavoured to keep to the Report and to show from it that the Commission appointed by the Government themselves had confirmed the charge which had been made.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.): Mr. Speaker, I was going to apologise to the House for intervening at all in this debate, but I gather that the House considers, as I do, that the course which it has taken necessitates, at all events, a few words from me. I came down to the House under the impression that I was not personally—not exceptionally—concerned in the subject under discussion. But, nevertheless, I was induced to come down by certain prefatory, preliminary announcements which I had seen in the newspapers, rumours which I had heard, that the hon. Member for South Shields was intending a great deliverance, was going to bring to bear all his forensic eloquence, and, in a Motion to condemn the Government for military inefficiency, was going to demolish for ever the reputation of the ex-Colonial Secretary. And really I think there was some foundation for that, because although I do not think the observations of the hon. and learned Member were always relevant, yet I noticed throughout his lengthened speech a perpetual endeavour, an earnest desire, in all circumstances, at all times to lug in, somehow or other, King Charles's head, or the ex-Secretary of State's head, and to present it on a charger for the repudiation and derision of the House. That is a very bad precedent, and I ask the hon. and learned Gentleman to reconsider his action. Here for eight years the whole object of him and a great number of his colleagues has been to get rid of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Now they have got rid of him. Really, is it not rather hard that when, not forced by them, but voluntarily, I have yielded the office I once held with such pride and satisfaction, I should now be deprived of the immunities of a private Member? The whole object of the speech delivered by the hon. and learned Gentleman appeared to me, from first to last, in the most unnecessary, most unreasonable and illogical way, to lug me into matters in which, at all events, I was not principally concerned. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh!"] Oh, that was not the object. Well, what was it? I ask those who listened to the lengthened speech of an hour and a half which the hon. and learned Gentleman delivered, and in which he dealt with facts in an imaginative manner, from which he omitted, as it appeared to me, almost everything of importance—I ask hon. Gentlemen who listened to him, What was his object? Can it have been that the hon. and learned Gentleman was moved by strong patriotic feelings, and, recognising that a great war had come to an end and that it ought to convey lessons, had resolved to devote himself to the study of all the incidents of the campaign, and to try to point out for the benefit of his descendants, of his country, and of the Empire, what mistakes had been made and in what way we might on future occasions improve on past experience? Was that his patriotic intention? Will anybody believe for a moment who listened to him that he had that object in view? Does anybody believe that he cares one brass button [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh!"] about the lessons derived from the war? Not a bit of it!

Well, there was another object I thought he might have had. I can hardly believe it should have come from those Benches, but the whole course of his speech went to show that this war, which during the whole of the last five years the whole of the Opposition have been declaring was unnecessary, and might have been avoided, was an absolutely inevitable conflict. For my part I recognise most gratefully the result of his speech, but I do not believe that was his object. As I have said, the object appears to me to be to trump up a ridiculous indictment against my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, who is absent, fortunately for the hon. and learned Gentleman who attacked him, and against myself, who fortunately for myself am present. It is difficult to defend an absent man when he is attacked on the score of petty quotations picked out of I do not know how many speeches without their context—it is very difficult even for his nearest friend to defend him. Although I do not claim for myself that proud position, I claim that he has no truer friend. But in the course of the remarks of the hon. and learned Gentleman what was important was not what my right hon. friend has said, but the interpretation the hon. and learned Gentlemen chooses to put on it; and it is only my right hon. friend who could himself give the true and correct interpretation, although perhaps I might suggest something different from that which commended itself to his assailants.

For myself, so far as I was attacked in the matter, I do not shrink in the least from that corporate responsibility which belongs to every member of a Government; but I absolutely refuse to accept any special or exceptional responsibility beyond that general position. I was a member of the Government which prepared, or failed to prepare, for this war and the conduct of the war. [AN HON. MEMBER: Misconduct.] Well, at all events, we won the war, and no thanks to the hon. Gentlemen opposite. But, as I say, all those who were members of that Government accept that corporate responsibility, and some of us undoubtedly had a more special responsibility. Now what was my special responsibility other than that of any of my colleagues? In a sense, I was, on behalf of the Government, conducting negotiations, and it was my duty to keep my colleagues in full knowledge of all the negotiations that went on. I did so. The hon. and learned Gentleman invented Cabinet meetings, communications between colleagues, and declarations of colleagues, which did the greatest credit to his humorous imagination, but which had not the slightest foundation in fact. The communications between the members of the Government were complete, and the Government knew all that I knew in regard to these negotiations, and I will go a great deal further and say that there was nothing of substantial importance in connection with those negotiations which was not known also to the whole of this House and to the whole of the public. There were no secrets, the necessity did not arise, and, from day to day almost, in this House I was questioned, and I was glad enough to answer the questions addressed to me, as to the progress of the negotiations.

Now the Cabinet was aware of the progress of the negotiations, and it was the duty of the Cabinet to prepare for possibilities. There were two questions: What was the preparation to be and when was the preparation to be made, the amount of preparation and the time of preparation. Those are two very important things, and I am prepared to justify, to take the fullest responsibility both for the time and for the amount. What is the charge of the hon. and learned Gentleman? It is that we failed, that was how he began his speech, to provide for the defence of those of our colonies and possessions which we knew to be threatened. I could not help smiling when he came at last to his peroration. What was the conclusion, the moral, the thing he wished to impress on this House as the result of the crimes and iniquities he described as having been committed by the Government? I forget the exact words, the eloquent words, but the effect was that the Government which could have failed to provide for the defence of Natal and the Cape was unfitted to consider commercial questions. King Charles's head, Mr. Speaker! What a bathos! There was the object; it was to that conclusion that the whole of this great and eloquent oration tended. The Government were to be abused, and every possible fault was to be implied to them, in order that it might be proved to the satisfaction of the hon. and learned Gentleman, and the other hon. Gentlemen who cheered him, that we were unfit to deal with commercial questions!

The questions were—Did we make preparation in time, did we make preparation sufficient, in all human calculation, in amount? Perhaps it will surprise the hon. and learned Gentleman, though it cannot surprise any of those who were present at the debates at the time of the Bloemfontein Conference, both before and subsequently, that we earnestly strove, and that we actually believed almost to the end in the possibility of a peaceful solution. By that you must judge our policy. If the hon. and learned Gentleman is going to tell us that he saw better than we did, that he knew the Boer was not to be trusted, that there was no possibility of coming to terms with him, that the issue was inevitable, and that we ought from the first to have taken up an active, violent, and hostile position—very well, I will say perhaps he was right. But that was not our view; honestly we believed that peace was possible, honestly we strove for it, and to a certain extent, undoubtedly, I admit it, that hampered our action, that hampered our preparations—hampered them both in regard to time and to amount. We had to keep two things in view. We had to keep in view in the first place the desirability and the importance of maintaining peace if peace were possible; we had at the same time to consider that we might fail, and that we ought to be prepared against the worst results of such a failure — that if war did come, against our wish, against our hope, almost against our belief, at any rate we should have as considerable a preparation as was consistent with our desire for peace.

I should have been glad to treat this matter absolutely in connection with the facts, or, at all events, with our separate view of the facts, and without any recrimination; but I cannot do that in the presence of a bitter, I might say almost malignant, speech such as that we have listened to. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh!"] Oh, yes; I am perfectly in the recollection of the House; that speech was not a mere ordinary political speech, it was a bitter speech, and an unnecessarily bitter speech [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh!"], and in face of a speech of that kind I cannot refrain from the natural and necessary recrimination.

I say we strove for peace. I believed, I repeat, that peace was possible, and I believe peace was rendered impossible by two things. In the first place, I believed—and let me say that this belief of mine was confirmed by all I heard when I visited those countries and had conversations with Boer and Briton alike—I believed that President Kruger was influenced by his hope and belief that he would receive assistance from foreign countries. I do not think he ever had any real reason for that belief, although I do know as a fact that persons whom he thought to be influential gave him encouragement in that belief. And, in the second place, he believed that, as he said himself in public, he could rely on the Opposition. From first to last in our negotiations we were hampered by the fact that President Kruger did not believe that this country was in earnest, and he believed that this Government, which represented the country, was bluffing, that when it came to the point it would retire, and that the people would not support it. How could he believe otherwise? How could he believe we were in earnest, when even in June, 1899—a favourite date with the hon. and learned Member—and in July, 1899—another favourite and critical date, when the hon. and learned Member says we ought to have known that war was inevitable—when, even at that time, the Leader of the Opposition was saying——

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Hear, hear!

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Wait a minute—was saying that there was nothing to justify "either warlike action or even military preparation."

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: In what was there nothing to justify either war, or the prospect of war, or even military preparation? Let the right hon. Gentleman read the words. If his memory has failed him and he has not got the words, which probably he has not, because they would not suit his purpose [MINISTERIAL cries of "Oh!"], I will remind him that I said that in the whole story of the Government, in the whole of the case which they put before the country, so far as we knew it, there was nothing to justify war or even military preparation.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Yes, Sir, the right hon. Gentleman said all he now says. He has had a good deal to say with regard to this unfortunate expression of his. But he did not say what he says now in his first statement. His first statement was made at Ilford in June, 1899. He did not then say what he has now told us. He said it afterwards in explanation. I do not think the explanation made much difference; but in any case it came too late. I do not care, I do not know, what the right hon. Gentleman meant when he said that. It is not my business to interpret his mind. But I know what the effect of that was upon everybody who heard it, upon everybody who read it; what its effect was upon us, and what its effect was upon the Boers. When you say, two or three months before war is declared by the Boers, that there is no reason for military preparation—I do not care how you may explain it—the effect upon the Boers is that they think they may safely continue. I would like to hear the right hon. Gentleman say that he regretted that his words should have been misinterpreted by the Boers [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh!"], but, whether he says it or not, the fact remains the same, and I here say it to his face, as I have said it over and over again in the country. How, I say, do you expect that at this time, when we are told by the hon. and learned Member that war was inevitable, the Boers would meet our desire for a reasonable arrangement—and it was a reasonable arrangement, as the Opposition admitted at the time—how do you expect that, when they thought that, if they refused it, we should not make military preparations, or, if we did, we should be condemned by the Opposition, to the power and influence and importance of which they attached a great deal more importance than was necessary?

MR. ROBSON: I am sorry to interrupt the right hon. Gentleman, but I did not say that war was inevitable. What I said was that it was inevitable that, if you fought the Transvaal, you would also have to fight the Orange Free State. It was the inevitability of war with the Orange Free State that I referred to.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: As a matter of courtesy I will answer the hon. and learned Gentleman, though I see no relevancy whatever in the interruption. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh!"] The hon. and learned Gentleman says that war was inevitable if you fought the Orange River Colony as well as the Transvaal. [OPPOSITION cries of "No."] What has that to do with it? [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh!"] Have I not rightly understood the hon. Gentleman?

MR. ROBSON: What I said was that it was inevitable that if you fought the Transvaal you would also have to fight the Orange Free State. When I was reproaching the Government for want of preparation I was reproaching them for want of preparation in reference to that contingency.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I will only say in answer to that explanation that I will deal with the question of the two States directly. It does not come in at this moment.

Now, Sir, what I last said was that the views expressed by the Opposition seriously interfered, in my opinion, with the success of our diplomatic efforts. We never had any success, and I will ask you to find a single South African who will deny this statement—we never had or could have any success with the Boers so long as they did not believe that we were in earnest. Now I appeal to the fairness of hon. Gentlemen opposite to admit that during the whole course of the Bloemfontein discussion, and even for some time afterwards, the despatches that I addressed to President Kruger met with their entire approbation. There was not, so far as I know, an adverse criticism of those despatches either in the House—certainly not by any person of representative authority—or in any of the organs of the Press. They were admitted to be moderate despatches; no complaint whatever was made of them. Then came the speech —it is very ancient history—to which the hon. and learned Gentleman has referred again to-night—the speech which he described as a minatory speech, a provocative speech, and adjectives of that kind. Well, I never dispute adjectives. That is a matter of taste. What I wish to say is that I take the fullest responsibility for that speech; I made it deliberately, and, knowing all that I know now, if I had to go through exactly the same situation I should make a similar speech again. And I will say why. Owing to the circumstances to which I have referred, it became evident to me—I had sufficient evidence—that President Kruger did not believe we were in earnest, and I desired in the fewest words, with the least offence but at the same time with the utmost firmness, to point out to President Kruger that, as I believed, the British Government and the British nation were in earnest. Sir, I said the sands were running out. That was the expression which I used. Really if one's literature is to be examined with such careful criticism as has been applied to some of mine, who is there who can escape? But I took, I admit on the spur of the moment, an illustration which I did not mean to be offensive. What I did mean to say was that President Kruger was letting out drop by drop—that is to say, insignificant portions—reforms which were quite insufficient to meet the demands that were made upon him. I will not go back on, nor do I think it worth while to defend, that term. But the point that was of importance, that may be considered to have constituted a threat, was contained in the words "the sands are running out." Sir, they were running out. I do not care—it is not my expression—I am perfectly willing to accept the statement that I am the author of the new diplomacy. If so, the new diplomacy consists only in this, in endeavouring to make your opponents know and to make your friends know what you mean. I have never believed in the low cunning, as I think it to be, which characterised the diplomacy of centuries ago, in which the object was to deceive your opponent as to what it was you intended; and, above all, in our democratic times I for one will never be a party to deceiving our own people. When you come into power go back to the old diplomacy, the real Conservative diplomacy, if you please. But, whether you blame me for it or not, my idea of diplomacy is, as it is of every bargain of every kind in every sort of condition, that you should make perfectly clear what it is that you want, and try to get the clearest idea of what it is that your opponent wants, and then endeavour to come to an arrangement.

Now, Sir, it is only these few words—I attach some importance to them myself, I did at the time, and I do now—it is only these few words as to which you can possibly assert that the diplomacy of this country at that time was in the slightest degree minatory or calculated to interfere with the cause of peace. Our object was that President Kruger should not enter upon the course which he ultimately adopted without full knowledge of what our object was. Well, all during this time we hoped for peace. Under these circumstances we are told that we ought to have moved the forces of the Crown, and that is what we are told by hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite. They seem to think that we could deal with this question in an autocratic and dictatorial way. No, Sir. We cannot do anything in secret. Everything, even the smallest movement, under such circumstances is known to all the world. Of course, we had to consider when the time came what was to be done when we would no longer have any choice. Of course, Lord Wolseley, who is not a politician, suggested—I forget what he called them—"discreet movements" or something of that kind. The thing is impossible. We who are politicians know that it is absolutely impossible. Hardly a regiment could be moved without everybody knowing it; therefore we could not take any really substantial or important step without thereby giving a warning to the Transvaal, which it might have been wise to give, but which might have been followed by a declaration of war which would have been supposed to be due to our action. It was a very difficult and delicate case. I do not, let me say, defend myself against those who think we acted wrongly. Undoubtedly there were preparations which otherwise we might have made, but which if made, would have become known, and perhaps hindered the object we had in view.

Now, Sir, what are we told now? The hon. and learned Gentleman for half-an-hour, at any rate, repeated to the House the reports, or the substance of the reports, of the Intelligence Department. We knew everything that is contained in those reports. It is quite true that the hon. and learned Member says we ought to have known. I repeat, in order to give him satisfaction, that we knew all about those reports [Cries of "Balfour did not know"]; but the hon. and learned Member does not make a distinction, which he ought to make, between those things stated by the Intelligence Department as facts and those things stated as opinions; and that is a very important distinction. In the case of facts we can accept them without the slightest doubt; but in the case of opinions they are submitted for criticism and comment. But what became of those reports? They went to the War Office. That was the first place. They were intended for the War Office. Does the hon. and learned Member suppose that the Intelligence Department is for the private information of the Colonial Secretary? If he or any of his friends think that they are mistaken. It is primarily for the information of the War Office, and the War Office, perceiving the reports concerned matters in which the Colonial Office was much interested, sent copies to the Colonial Office which is entitled to them, and did comment upon them from time to time. I ought to have said what I say now, that I do not yield to the hon. and learned Gentleman in my admiration of the work of the Intelligence Department. It was said that at the outbreak of war we knew nothing, and that the Intelligence Department must have been very inefficient. On the contrary we knew everything that I think we could fairly have expected to know. We did know the number of men likely to be opposed to us. We did know—I believe almost exactly— the number of the great guns opposed to us and their calibre, and we knew practically the number of rifles possessed by the Boers and the amount of the ammunition which they had. The whole Cabinet knew. [Cries of dissent from the OPPOSITION.] No one has ever denied it. [Cries of "Yes."] Who? [Several HON. MEMBERS: "Balfour."] Certainly he knew, and in his absence I deny that for him. He knew it; we all did, and we discussed it. ["Oh!"] We knew all that. I am not dealing for the moment with the political situation in the two States, but we knew all this about the military preparations of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. Well, all that went to the War Office.

It is all very fine to say now that the Government have tried to throw the blame off their own shoulders on to those of anybody else. So far as I know they have not blamed anyone. It is a perfect imposture for hon. Gentlemen to pretend that laymen can have the same valuable opinion or assert the same opinion as military men are entitled to have and assert. When the next war comes, and when the hon. and learned Gentleman attains to that high position to which I hope, in justice to his talents, he will attain, I suppose it will be the office of the Attorney-General which will have to deal with that war. That was not our view. We do not think it is the business of any office but the Military Office or the Naval Office, as the case may be. But as to policy and principles—that is the business of the Cabinet. But for the details of war, it is perfect nonsense to pretend to be in any sense personally responsible. I may have all kinds of opinions about strategy, but I am not conceited enough to put them forward as worth attention for a moment against those of the most subordinate officer in the Army. No, Sir, these facts relating to the military situation came to the War Office in the first instance, and afterwards they were at the disposal of the Government. What, then, was the duty of the Government? They went to their military advisers, they asked their advice, and they had their advice, and I have no reason to believe the advice they received was wrong; therefore I am not blaming the military authorities. What would the hon. and learned Gentleman have had us do? When I came to the Colonial Office how many men were in South Africa? Three thousand men, left there by my predecessor. [Cries of "Hear, hear," "Before the Raid," and "Order."] Was that because there was no danger of war? ["Yes."] Nonsense, there was danger of war, there was real danger of war during the time the right hon. Gentleman was in office. Why, we were very near serious trouble at the time Lord Loch was at Johannesburg. It is very convenient to forget that now, but the situation was one of danger, and was so recognised at the time. Is it pretended that 3,000 men was a sufficient protection against possibilities long before the Raid was ever thought of? It is perfectly absurd. Well, what did we do? We did not want to do anything unnecessary, we did not wish to draw too much attention to it, but in four years we increased that 3,000 to 12,000. But these 12,000 men were not even then properly co-ordinated; there was not enough artillery, not enough cavalry. The right hon. Gentleman knew that perfectly well: he knew—he must have known, having had experience of military administration—that the military arrangements of the 12,000 troops in South Africa were not sufficient, that they were not a complete body, that the arrangements required additions, alterations, changes, and modifications, in order to make them complete even for that force.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: What year is the right hon. Gentleman referring to?

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: 1899.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I was not in office then.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Certainly not; but surely the right hon. Gentleman does not mean to say that, although he was not in office, he, having the experience he has had, and knowing all about the organisation of the Army, he did not know, not merely from his own knowledge and experience, but from other information, that the condition of the force was unsatisfactory in the sense that it was incomplete? That is all I say.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Does the right hon. Gentleman refer to a conversation I had with him at that period, and the correspondence that followed it?

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN assented.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Will he absolve me from any condition of confidence in regard to it?

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Yes, I am delighted to do so. The right hon. Gentleman knows that I am leaving this country very quickly; he knows that probably or, if not, I may tell him, that I am leaving very shortly for a holiday I have not taken for a great many years; therefore it is not possible for me to supply the whole correspondence, but I shall be perfectly content if he will undertake to do so. I shall be glad if he will do so.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: In answer to that particular point I must explain that part of the correspondence is locked up in my house in Scotland. It is one of the inconveniences of having two houses that the particular thing you want is in the other house.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I most thoroughly sympathise with the right hon. Gentleman, for I am in exactly the same position. I am afraid I really could not get at the correspondence in the time that remains to me. But I have absolute confidence in the right hon. Gentleman, and I shall be perfectly satisfied if he will produce the whole of the correspondence at such a time as may be convenient to him. For the moment I dismiss the correspondence, and I will rely on this—that it is obvious, with the experience the right hon. Gentleman has had of War Office matters, that he must have known that the 12,000 men in South Africa at the time were not satisfactorily provided for, that they were not properly co-ordinated, and that certain alterations were required. My point is this, although he knew that—and I think he must have known it—he nevertheless declared there was—to use his words—no need for military preparations. That was the state of the case in 1899. About that time—I do not give the exact time, for they were very close together—it became almost certain that war would ensue. There must be some personal difference of opinion in matters of that kind. From Lord Lansdowne's evidence it would seem that I was more sanguine than he was. About the 5th September he thought war was inevitable. I certainly did not. I had hopes for some time after that date—but at all events the matter had got to the point that it was dangerous; and, as we considered that the time had come when we must deal with the necessary reinforcements, we did deal with the necessary reinforcements. We asked the military authorities, "What is the amount of troops you require in South Africa in order that we may substantially defend our colonies?" The answer was 20,000 men. We had within a day or two of the breaking out of war 22,000 men. You may say we ran it very close. So we did. We put it off to the last moment for the reason that I have frankly stated; but we were in time. We did even more than we were required. We had in fact rather more men on the spot before any substantial operation had taken place. They were sufficient to prevent the substantial invasion of Natal. The hon. and learned Gentleman talked of days and weeks wasted in moving the Indian troops to Ladysmith. They were taken from the ship, put on the train, and were at Ladysmith almost as soon as they landed. To those men who fought there during that glorious siege we owe it that Ladysmith remained a virgin city, and that anything like a really dangerous, substantial overthrow of Natal was entirely prevented. That is the preparation we made, and who is going to blame us? You may say we might have sent these reinforcements before. All I can say is you would have had war so much earlier and you would have been the first to blame us and to declare that it was entirely our fault. We asked more. We asked of the military authorities again, "What do you want to carry on the war?" Now what is this ridiculous quibbling about whether the war was to end in annexation or not? No question of the kind was ever raised. The object was to beat the enemy. When we had beaten the enemy we could do what we liked with them; and whether we annexed, or did not annex, had nothing to do with the military authorities. We asked what do you want, and the answer was 50,000 men roughly and generally. The hon. and learned Member produced a statement which amazed me, that Sir William Butler had said that 80,000 to 100,000 men would be required. When did Sir William Butler say that?

MR. ROBSON: Sir William Butler, in his evidence, described a conversation he had with his staff as to that number. He was never asked to advise the Government. He was only asked, so far as the Government was concerned, to prepare a defence scheme on the basis of the existing forces, but he described in his evidence what was the view he had given to the men about him.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Really, the hon. and learned Gentleman would be wiser to wait before he makes interruptions of that kind. I do not know quite how to describe them, but I entirely differ from their tone. The hon. and learned Gentleman, amid the loud cheers of that side of the House, cited Sir William Butler as saying that 80,000 to 100,000 men were required for this work. If he had done so it was his first duty, whether he was asked or not, to say so to us. The Government were employing him. He was one of the representatives of the country. I would not do General Butler, whom I believe to be a soldier of the highest reputation, the dishonour that was done to him by the hon. and learned Gentleman. He did not say anything of the kind. He said something quite different. He said the reverse. In the evidence before the Commission it was stated that all General Butler's letters had been read and the only one that referred to the number of troops required in the event of war in South Africa was in a letter of 10th May, 1899. His words were—

> "All things considered, I put the total of troops required in the event of war between the English and Dutch races"

(He does not say between us and these two colonies.)

> "For that is the real meaning of a war in the Transvaal."

At what did he put it? At 100,000 men? 80,000 men? No. "40,000 men." And yet the hon. and learned Gentleman, who has evidently given hours of time to the study of the Blue-books, and read every word of them, and picked out every syllable which could possibly tell against the Government, comes down here and delivers a philippic, and produces an impression so erroneous! I do not refer more to General Butler. It was thought, not that 40,000 men on the whole, but 50,000 in addition to the 20,000 that were required for the purpose of defending the colony should be sent. We adopted that advice to the letter—No! not to the letter, because we sent more than 20,000 to hold the forts and more than 50,000 men to carry out the operations. The hon. and learned Member, who knows all about military affairs, asks why it was we did not succeed at first. I am not going to say whose fault it was that we did not succeed at first. But I thoroughly agree with him that, if we had succeeded at first, our military advisers would have been found to be correct in the opinion that 70,000 men would have been sufficient to complete the work. But who said at the time that we had not sent a sufficient force? I say that no one of the slightest importance or authority at home or abroad—for, of course, we paid attention to military critics abroad—suggested that we required to send out more than 50,000 in the first instance to carry on the war.

I now come to a smaller issue to which I must refer. The hon. and learned Gentleman said we were advised by the Intelligence Department that the Orange River Colony would go to war with us. Yes, we were. It is said that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister declared that we were not. My right hon. friend can defend himself, and I do not know how far the extract read from his speech may have been qualified. But if it was not qualified, I can only say that my right hon. friend went a little too far. We both knew, and did not know. We knew in the sense that there was a treaty between the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal. But who could say in the light of the past history of South Africa, or of any part of the world, that at the exact moment that treaty would be fulfilled? Mr. Schreiner—a gentleman who is quoted by hon. Members on the other side if by any chance he says anything that lends itself to their view, but whom I am content to take as a very honourable man, and a man of keen judgment, thoroughly conversant with the local situation—had assurances from the President of the Orange River Colony, Mr. Steyn himself, that the country would not take sides against us. Mr. Schreiner subsequently stated how disappointed he was that these assurances which had been given to him had not been fulfilled. At all events, there was a possibility that Mr. Schreiner was right.

The hon. and learned Member says that we ought to have given the route to General Buller. That is perfectly ridiculous. General Buller had to prepare the plan of campaign, he had to prepare it on two hypotheses. There were two and we gave them. The probable hypothesis was that they would stand by the Transvaal and the other was that it was possible at the last moment that they would fall off. He himself said that we ought to go through the Orange River Colony to attack the Transvaal, but that in case the Orange River Colony remained neutral we could not, of course, attack a friendly State, and would have to go round the other way. What is there in all that on which to base a serious charge against the Government? I say we all knew. The words quoted from the Prime Minister went only to this, that he himself believed it was inconceivable that a friendly State like the Orange River Colony—with whom we had no quarrel, and which was absolutely certain to retain its independence if it did not go to war—would join the Transvaal. But it was quite possible for us to have differences of opinion on a matter of that kind. At all events we asked our military advisers to be prepared for both alternatives; and then when it was decided to go through the Orange River Colony to the Transvaal—which I humbly think would have been the better strategy—a change was made by the Commander-in-Chief in the field, and he went to Ladysmith instead. But where is the blame for the Government? What ground is there for the action of the Opposition except the trumpery excuse that any stick is good enough to beat a dog with, or any Amendment fair where, by hook or by crook, you can lug in the ex-Colonial Secretary and say disagreeable things about his late colleagues. The hon. Gentlemen the seconder of the Amendment wound up in a peroration expressing sympathy with those who died in the war and those who suffered by reason of it. Yes, Sir, so far as that sentiment is sincere ["Oh!"]—Do you want me to dispute it?—so far as that sentiment is sincere, and I do not dispute it in the case of hon. Gentlemen, it finds an echo in every heart. Sir, I should value the sympathy more, and think it of greater value, if it were not accompanied by a partisan Amendment and partisan bitterness of speech.

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned"—(Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Adjourned at five minutes before Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 5th February, 1904.

The House met at Twelve of the Clock.

PETITIONS.

COURTS OF ARBITRATION FOR ALL STATES.

Petition from Calne, for establishment; to lie upon the Table.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).

Petitions against alteration of Law; from Warrington (two); Bristol; Lancaster; Norton Canes; Radnor Park; Rochdale; Bethania; Ceunant Llanrug; Penygroes; Cesarea; Croesywaen; Liverpool (six); Glasgow (four); Edinburgh (two); Tuxford; Posselpark; Hackney; Garston; Misterton; Spennymoor; New Shildon; Leicester; Gilfach; Clatford; Cholderton; Broughton; Whitchurch; Micheldever; Stockbridge; Mottram; Hartlepool; Torpoint; St. Anthonys; Winnington; Runcorn; Redruth; Camborne; Whittlesey; Atherstone; Pollokshaws; Marsden; Jarrow; Hebburn (two); Bill Quay; Kidderminster; Plumstead; Hanging Heaton; Middleton; Castleton; Exeter (two); Coatbridge; Glenboig; Whifflet; Penzance; Sancreed; Sennen; St. Mary's; Scilly; Halton Chirk; Coatdyke; Portmadoc; Penygroes; Rhyd-ddu; Nazareth; Talysarn; Cae Athraw; Tan y Coed; Hyfrydle; Tainant; Llandynan; Llanrug (six); Glanrhyd; Prenteg; Notting Hill; Sheffield; Middlesbrough (two); Todmorden; Frome; Grangetown; North Ormesby; Arreton; Newchurch; Sandown; Niton; Freshwater; Newport; Clapham; Navenby; Willington; Belmont; Stillington; Gateshead (two); Low Fell; Dunfermline; Cheltenham; Raunds; Brigstock; Woodford; Langley Moor; Llanfairfechan (two); Graig; Clegyr; Llanfyllin; Cwmyglo; Cleveland; Huntingdon; Kilbarchan; Scotstoun; Bridge of Weir; Nitshill; Pangbourne; Ashbourne; Trefeirig; Wootton; Cwmorfin; Bwlchydderwen; Cwmsynog; Aberporth; Nantperis; Llandudno; Cefn Mawr; Pendleton (two); Birkenhead; Sedbergh; Penmachno; Pentir; Preswylfa; Tynmaes; Gerlan; Waenpentre; Rhiwlas (two); Lochgelly; Lincoln (two); Bedwas; Great Ayton; Camberwell; Everton; Wrexham; Waenfawr; Coupar Angus; Burradon; Weston-super-Mare; Lytchett Minster; Hollington; Bridlington; York; York and Scarborough; Poole and Parkstone; and Caersalem; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY.

Petition from Weymouth, for prohibition; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

GREENWICH OBSERVATORY.

Copy presented, of Report of the Astronomer Royal to the Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

NAVY (COURTS MARTIAL).

Copy presented, of Return of the number of Courts Martial held and Summary Punishments inflicted during the year 1902 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

WAR OFFICE (RECONSTITUTION) COMMITTEE.

Copy presented, of Report of the War Office (Reconstitution) Committee [by Command]; to lie upon the Table,

EAST INDIA (THIBET).

Copy presented, of Papers relating to Thibet [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

TRANSVAAL.

Copy presented, of Telegraphic Correspondence relating to the Transvaal Labour Importation Ordinance, with Appendix, the Ordinance as amended in accordance with Telegrams [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the borough of Maidstone, in the county of Kent (Maidstone Corporation Light Railways Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Robertsbridge and Pevensey Light Railway Order, 1900 (Robertsbridge and Pevensey Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the urban districts of Quarry Bank, Brierley Hill, and Rowley Regis, in the county of Stafford (Quarry Bank, Brierley Hill, and Rowley Regis Light Railway Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the parishes of Acton, Edgware, Edmonton, Enfield, Finchley, Friern Barnet, Hendon, Hornsey, Little Stanmore, Southgate, Tottenham, Wembley, Willesden, and Wood Green, in the county of Middlesex (County of Middlesex Light Railways Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Copy presented, of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the county of Hertford, in the parish of Watford urban and the urban district of Watford (Watford and District Light Railways Order, 1903) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP).

Copy presented, of General Rules made pursuant to The Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and The Judicature Act, 1881 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

1. Intermediate Education (Ireland), Accounts of Receipts and Expenditure for 1902, with Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 32.]

2. Richmond Bridge. Cash Account for the year 1902 [by Act].

BREWERS' LICENCES.

Return ordered, "of Accounts of the number of persons in each of the several Collections of the United Kingdom licensed as brewers for sale, i.e. Common Brewers, Victuallers, Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises, Retailers of beer not to be drunk on the premises, and Brewers of beer not for sale, particularising each class in each Collection; and of the number of Licences issued to Victuallers and Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises and not to be drunk on the premises; and stating also the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, &c., sugar, including its equivalent of syrups, &c., hops and hop substitutes, used by Brewers of beer for sale, and of malt and sugar used by Brewers not for sale, from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903.

"Of the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903, distinguishing Brewers for sale from other Brewers.

"Of the number of Brewers for sale (i.) who use malt and hops, or hop substitutes only and (ii.) who use malt with substitutes for same and hops or hop substitutes paying for Licences, from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903, separating them into classes, according to the number of barrels of beer charged with duty calculated at 1·055 degrees gravity—viz., under 1,000 barrels; 1,000 and under 10,000; 10,000 and under 20,000; 20,000 and under 30,000; 30,000 and under 50,000; 50,000 and under 100,000; 100,000 and under 150,000; 150,000 and under 200,000; 200,000 and under 250,000; 250,000 and under 300,000; 300,000 and under 350,000; 350,000 and under 400,000; 400,000 and under 450,000; 450,000 and under 500,000; 500,000 and under 600,000; 600,000 and under 700,000; 700,000 and under 800,000; 800,000 and under 900,000; 900,000 and under 1,000,000; 1,000,000 and under 1,500,000; 1,500,000 and under 2,000,000; 2,000,000 barrels and over; showing separately, in each class, the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, &c., sugar, including its equivalent of syrups, &c., hops and hop substitutes used; and stating also the number of bulk barrels of beer produced, and the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged in each class."

"And, of the number of barrels of beer exported from the United Kingdom, and the declared value thereof, and where exported to, from the 1st day of October, 1902, to the 30th day of September, 1903, distinguishing England, Scotland, and Ireland (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 40, of Session 1903)."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Ventilation of the House of Commons.

MR. WYLIE (Dumbartonshire): To ask the hon. Member for Chorley, as representing the First Commissioner of Works, what has been done during the recess for improving the ventilation and sanitary arrangements of the House of Commons, and also if it is intended to do anything further.

(Answered by Lord Balcarres.) During the recess the improvement of the Committee Rooms and of the lavatories has been continued. The fittings of the lavatories over the Members' Cloak Rooms, in the Library Corridor, and the Lower Waiting Hall and elsewhere have been renewed. Sums will be taken in the Estimates for 1904–5 for carrying on these improvements to completion. Immediately after the Report of last year's Committee on Ventilation, experiments were instituted for the purpose of determining details incidental to power of fans, velocities of air passing through washing screens, etc., etc., and the result of these experiments has only recently been recorded. The improvements decided upon can now be carried out, and will be provided for in the Estimates. The various works will be proceeded with during this year, but there is difficulty in doing much while the House is in session.

Street Accidents—Covered Vans.

SIR THOMAS DEWAR (Tower Hamlets, St. Georges): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, having regard to the number of accidents in the streets of the Metropolis with covered vans, owing to the drivers being unable to see passing and following traffic, he will state whether any regulations have yet been framed regulating the construction of such vans, if so, will he state their nature; and whether it is proposed to recommend their adoption in other large cities of the Kingdom.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) This matter has been the subject of long and anxious consideration, and the London County Council have now, with my approval, made a bye-law requiring all vehicles to be so constructed that the driver shall have a full and uninterrupted view of the traffic in front and abreast of him on each side. The bye-law will come into operation on the 1st May next. Similar bye-laws have been adopted in several large towns; but it rests, in the first instance, with the local authority having power to make bye-laws to decide whether the local circumstances render a provision on the subject desirable.

Criminal Statistics.

Mr. J. A. PEASE (Essex, Saffron Walden): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of men sent into convict establishments in England and Wales during the five years 1849 to 1853, and during the five years 1899 to 1903 inclusive, and the average per 1,000 of the population; whether a greater number of old offenders, in proportion to the total convictions, are convicted now than were convicted fifty years ago; and what are the relative proportions then and now.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) The number of persons sentenced to transportation or penal servitude during the years 1849 to 1853 was, on the average for the five years, 2,632 a year, being 14·64 for every 100,000 of the population. The similar average for the years 1898 to 1902 was 844, being 2·61 for every 100,000. As regards the proportions of old offenders it may be stated that in the earlier period the percentage of persons committed for trial who were known to have been previously convicted was 33·74; and that in the later period the percentage of convicted persons received in prison who were known to have been previously convicted was 58·68. But these figures do not admit of comparison. The changes which have taken place in legal procedure and in the form of the statistics, the substitution of short terms of penal servitude for long terms of transportation, and the great improvement made in the means of identification render it impossible to compare the two periods in this respect.

Assessment of Working Men's Cottages.

Mr. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.): To ask the President of the Local Government Board whether, in the preparation of the Government measure as to valuation and assessments, consideration will be given to the present difference between the assessment of cottages owned and occupied by working men and the assessment of similar cottages when the rates are compounded; and whether provisions will be made to modify this practice so as to give greater encouragement to thrifty men to acquire their own cottages.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) The proposed Bill will relate only to amendments in the Law with respect to valuation authorities and the effect of and procedure for making valuation lists. Where the owner compounds for the rates he receives a deduction from the amount which would otherwise be payable in respect of the rate, but the valuation of the property is not affected. The alteration in the Law suggested by the hon. Member would therefore be outside the scope of the Bill.

Trade "Corners"—Government Action.

Mr. CHANNING: To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any communications have been made by the present or previous Governments to the United States Government as to steps that might be taken by international agreement to restrain or minimise the disastrous results to trade and manufactures in both countries from the manipulation of the produce markets, whether as to cotton or wheat or other articles, by the attempts of speculators to create corners and to artificially drive up prices.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) I am not aware of any such communications having been made.

Foreign Ministries of Commerce.

Mr. LOUIS SINCLAIR (Essex, Romford): To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is now in a position to lay before the House the Reports as to the constitution and functions of Foreign Ministries of Commerce.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) The Reports have all been received and will shortly be laid upon the Table and distributed.

Exports of Woollen, Cotton Goods, etc., from France and Great Britain.

Mr. J. A. PEASE: To ask the Secretary to the Board of Trade whether he can state what were the average yearly values of woollen, cotton, hardware, and silk manufactured goods exported from France, and also from Great Britain, during the five years ending 1853 and 1903 respectively.

(Answered by Mr. Bonar Law.) The following is the information asked for so far as it is available. (Yarns and thrown silk are included under the head of manufactures.)

	Average Annual Value of Exports of Domestic Produce in 1849–53.	1899–1903.
	£	£
Exports (Domestic Produce) from the United Kingdom :—
Cotton manufactures	29,542,000	71,414,000
Woollen and worsted manufactures	10,025,000	19,284,000
Silk manufactures	1,435,000	1,918,000
Hardware and cutlery	2,805,000	2,163,000
Exports (Domestic Produce) from France :—
Cotton manufactures	2,609,000	7,147,000
Woollen and worsted manufactures	5,082,000	10,461,000
Silk manufactures	10,990,000	12,728,000
Hardware	Not separately specified.

Import Duties.

MR. J. A. PEASE: To ask the Secretary to the Board of Trade upon how many articles an import tariff was placed during the last financial year in Great Britain, the United States, France, Russia, and Germany respectively.

(Answered by Mr. Bonar Law.) If the hon. Member refers to articles on which import duties were imposed by the countries named for the first time during 1903–4, the answer is "none." If the Question relates to the number of articles actually charged with duty, it would be difficult to give the information in a form which is not misleading, owing to the various modes in which articles are grouped together or sub-divided in the different tariffs. For instance, the French tariff contains 654 tariff headings, while the number in the German tariff is 43.

Head Constable at Leopold St. Barracks, Belfast.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state on whose recommendation was the recent appointment of Head Constable of Leopold Street Barracks, Belfast, made.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The Commissioner of Police at Belfast.

Royal Irish Constabulary—Acting Sergeants.

MR. SLOAN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will state the number of acting sergeants holding temporary rank at the Royal Irish Constabulary Depôt, what are their rank and actual charge to the Constabulary Vote yearly; whether they receive the same pay as men holding similar permanent rank; and, will he say what are the duties of these temporary acting sergeants at present, and how many constables of the reserve force and recruits are at present stationed at the depôts.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) There are seventeen constables holding the temporary rank of acting sergeant now serving at the Depôt. The total amount of pay and allowances charged to the Constabulary Vote in respect of these men is £1,275 10s. per annum. They receive the same rate of pay as men holding similar permanent rank. They are employed as follows: four as rough riders, one as swimming instructor, one as gymnastic instructor, one as bugler, two as clerks, one as carpenter who also does ordinary duties when available, and seven as drill instructors. There are 146 reserve constables (including mounted men and members of the band), and thirty recruits now at the Depôt.

Militia Training Bounties—Case of Patrick Kerr.

Mr. HEMPHILL (Tyrone, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been called to the case of Patrick Kerr, of the Mid-Ulster Militia Artillery, whose application for the usual training bounty last year was refused on the ground of his absence from the training, although such absence was occasioned by his not having received any notice of such training, or having been made aware of the time or place of same; and whether he will take steps to have such bounty paid.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) This is a matter entirely for the General Officer Commanding concerned to decide, and I am not prepared to interfere with his discretion. With regard to the serving of notices the Law on the subject is quite clear, and runs as follows: Militia Act, 1882, Sec. xxii. (4). "The publication of any such notice in the prescribed manner in every parish in the county or area to which a corps belongs shall be sufficient notice to every militiaman in that corps to whom the notice applies, notwithstanding that a copy of such notice is not served upon him."

Alleged Atrocities in the Congo State.

Mr. J. A. PEASE: To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether his attention has been drawn to the facts related by Mr. A. E. Scrivener, in the West African Mail of 8th January, recording atrocities committed upon natives in the Congo State; whether the British Consul, who has recently returned from the interior, has reported to the Government; if so, to what effect; and what steps the Government have already undertaken, or are intending to take, to enforce the carrying out of the declaration made by the Brussels Act in 1890, intimating the firm intention of the Government to effectually protect the aboriginal population, and insuring for them the benefit of peace and civilisation.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The attention of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs has been drawn to the article alluded to. The Report of His Majesty's Consul for the Congo will shortly be presented to Parliament. The circular addressed by His Majesty's Government to the Powers in regard to the administration of the Congo State has already been published: other Papers on the subject will be laid at the same time as Mr. Casement's Report.

NEW BILLS.

MUSICAL COPYRIGHT BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Musical Copyright," presented by Mr. Mount; supported by Mr. Stuart-Wortley Mr. Galloway, and Mr. Malcolm; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th February, and to be printed. [Bill 1.]

TOWN TENANTS (IRELAND) BILL.

"For the improvement of the position of Tenants in Towns in Ireland," presented by Mr. MacVeagh; supported by Mr. Field, Captain Donelan, Mr. William McKillop, Mr. Joseph Devlin, Mr. Joyce, Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. Murphy, and Mr. John O'Donnell; to be read a second time upon Friday, 4th March, and to be printed. [Bill 2.]

LAND VALUES (ASSESSMENT AND RATING) BILL.

"To provide for the separate Assessment and Rating of Land Values," presented by Mr. Trevelyan; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Charles Douglas, Mr. William Jones, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. McCrae, Dr. Macnamara, Sir Albert Rollit, and Mr. Whitley; to be read a second time upon Friday, 11th March, and to be printed. [Bill 3.]

RAILWAYS (PRIVATE SIDINGS) BILL.

"To explain and amend Section 76 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and Section 69 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, and to amend the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, 1854 to 1888," presented by Sir John Brunner; supported by Mr. Channing, Mr. Alexander Cross, Sir Joseph Dimsdale, Mr. Field, Sir Alfred Hickman, Mr. Kerr, Mr. Charles McArthur, Mr. Stroyan, Sir William Tomlinson, and Mr. Ure; to be read a second time upon Friday, 18th March, and to be printed. [Bill 4.]

OUTDOOR RELIEF (FRIENDLY SOCIETIES) BILL.

"To amend the Out-door Relief (Friendly Societies) Act, 1894," presented by Mr. Reginald Lucas; supported by Mr. Butcher, Sir Carne Rasch, Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore, and Mr. Charles Seely; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 5.]

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Weights and Measures," presented by Mr. Bousfield; supported by Mr. Parker Smith and Sir John Brunner; to be read a second time upon Friday, 15th April, and to be printed. [Bill 6.]

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister," presented by Mr. Charles Seely; supported by Sir Gilbert Parker, Sir Brampton Gurdon, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Hambro, Mr. Matthew White Ridley, Sir Joseph Leese, Mr. MacIver, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Charles Shaw, Sir Barrington Simeon, and Mr. Melville; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 7.]

TRADES UNIONS AND TRADE DISPUTES BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Trades Unions and Trade Disputes," presented by Mr. Paulton; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Robson, Mr. Beaumont, Mr. D. A. Thomas, Mr. Johnson, Mr. John Burns, Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Runciman, and Mr. Jacoby; to be read a second time upon Friday, 22nd April, and to be printed. [Bill 8.]

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Local Government (Ireland) Acts," presented by Mr. Field; supported by Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. Clancy, Mr .Patrick Aloysius McHugh, Mr. John O'Donnell, Mr. Reddy, Mr. Roche, and Mr. Kilbride; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 9.]

REGISTRATION OF CLUBS (IRELAND) BILL.

"To provide for the Registration of Clubs in Ireland, and for other purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. O'Neill; supported by Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. John Gordon, Mr. Hugh Law, Mr. McGovern, Mr. T. W. Russell, Dr. Thompson, and Mr. Wolff; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 10.]

MERCHANT SHIPPING (LIGHTHOUSES) BILL.

"To amend the Law with regard to Lighthouses and to abolish Light Dues," presented by Mr. Plummer; supported by Mr. Charles McArthur, Mr. Evelyn Cecil, Colonel Denny, Sir Francis Evans, Mr. Field, Sir John Leng, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Renwick, Sir Albert Rollit, Sir Robert Ropner, and Mr. Charles Wilson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 13th May, and to be printed. [Bill 11.]

MINES (EIGHT HOURS) BILL.

"To limit the hours of underground workers in Mines to Eight Hours per day from bank to bank," presented by Mr. Osmond Williams; supported by Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Jacoby, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda), Mr. Norman, Mr. Thomas Bayley, Mr. William Jones, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. Hatch, and Mr. Nussey; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th February, and to be printed. [Bill 12.]

HALL-MARKING OF FOREIGN PLATE BILL.

"To amend the Law with respect to the Hall-Marking of Foreign Plate," presented by Mr. Samuel Roberts; supported by Mr. Stuart Wortley, Sir Benjamin Stone, Sir Joseph Dimsdale, Mr. Remnant, and Mr. Norman; to be read a second time upon Friday, 18th March, and to be printed. [Bill 13.]

LEASEHOLDS ENFRANCHISEMENT BILL.

"For the Enfranchisement of Leaseholds," presented by General Laurie; supported by Mr. Spear, Mr. Cohen, Sir George Fardell, and Mr. Louis Sinclair; to be read a second time upon Friday, 4th March, and to be printed. [Bill 14.]

MINISTRY OF COMMERCE BILL.

"To establish a bureau for a Minister of Commerce," presented by Mr. Louis Sinclair; supported by Sir Albert Rollit, Sir William Holland, Sir John Brunner, Sir Howard Vincent, Sir Ernest Flower, Sir Fortescue Flannery, and Sir Joseph Lawrence; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd June, and to be printed. [Bill 15.]

TUBERCULOSIS (ANIMALS) COMPENSATION BILL.

"To provide for the payment of compensation to the owners of carcases of animals condemned after slaughter and destroyed by order of a magistrate on account of Tuberculosis," presented by Mr. Price; supported by Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. Tomkinson, Mr. McArthur, Mr. Field, Mr. Batty Langley, and Mr. Ernest Gray; to be read a second time upon Friday, 15th April, and to be printed. [Bill 16.]

AGED PENSIONERS BILL.

"To provide Pensions for the Aged Deserving Poor," presented by Mr. Remnant; supported by Mr. Goulding, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. John Hutton; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, Mr. Claude Hay, Colonel Kemp, Mr. Maconochie, Mr. Forde Ridley, and Mr. Groves; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 17.]

RE-VACCINATION BILL.

"To provide for the Re-vaccination of Children after the age of twelve," presented by Sir John Tuke; supported by Sir Michael Foster, Mr. Haldane, Dr. Farquharson, Captain Jessel, Mr. Malcolm, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Heywood Johnstone, Mr. Cohen, Mr. Moon, Sir Charles Dalrymple, and Sir John Dorington; to be read a second time upon Monday, 25th April, and to be printed. [Bill 18.]

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (WALES) BILL.

"To provide for improving and extending the Procedure for obtaining Parliamentary Powers by way of Provisional Orders in matters relating to Wales," presented by Mr. Vaughan-Davies; supported by Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Herbert Roberts, Mr. Osmond Williams, Sir Alfred Thomas, and Mr. Kenyon; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 19.]

CHURCH DISCIPLINE BILL.

"To amend the Church Discipline Act, 1840, and the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874," presented by Sir John Willox; supported by Mr. Charles McArthur, Mr. Austin Taylor, Mr. Mellor, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. David MacIver, Mr. Brand, and Mr. W. W. Rutherford; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th June, and to be printed. [Bill 20.]

LOCAL TAXATION BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the incidence of Local Taxation," presented by Mr. Cripps; supported by Mr. Wharton and Mr. Henry Hobhouse; to be read a second time upon Friday, 13th May, and to be printed. [Bill 21.]

PREVENTION OF POLLUTION OF RIVERS AND STREAMS BILL.

"To make further and amended provision to prevent the Pollution of Rivers and Streams," presented by Sir Francis Sharp Powell; supported by Sir Wilson Todd, Mr. Henry Hobhouse, Sir John Dorington, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Brigg, Sir John Brunner, and Sir Walter Foster; to be read a second time upon Friday, 22nd April, and to be printed. [Bill 22.]

AGED PENSIONERS (No. 2) BILL.

"To provide Pensions for the aged deserving poor," presented by Mr. Goulding; supported by Mr. Remnant, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. John Hutton, Colonel Kemp, Mr. Duke, Mr. William Redmond, Mr. Carlile, Mr. Claude Hay, Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, Mr. Samuel Roberts, and Sir Albert Rollit; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd June, and to be printed. [Bill 23.]

OLD AGE PENSIONS BILL.

"To provide Pensions for the aged deserving poor," presented by Mr. Spear; supported by Mr. Duke, Sir John Kennaway, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. Goulding, Colonel Williams, and Mr. Randles; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th February, and to be printed. [Bill 24.]

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To give the Ratepayers a direct Veto on the Liquor Traffic in their respective areas in Scotland," presented by Mr. Hunter Craig; supported by Mr. Crombie, Mr. Cameron Corbett, Mr. Black, Sir William Dunn, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. Robert Wallace, Mr. John Hope, and Dr. Farquharson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 25.]

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY BILL.

"To prohibit the sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday," presented by Mr. Perks; supported by Mr. Charles Wilson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 20th May, and to be printed. [Bill 26.]

SHOPS BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Shops," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. John Burns, Sir Ernest Flower, Mr. Charles Hobhouse, Mr. Lloyd-George, Colonel Kemp, Mr. McCrae, Mr. Melville, Mr. Nannetti, Sir Barrington Simeon, and Mr. Tennant; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 27.]

FRANCHISE AND REMOVAL OF WOMEN'S DISABILITIES BILL.

"To establish a single Franchise at all Elections and thereby to abolish University Representation, and to remove the Disabilities of Women," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Atherley-Jones, Mr. Logan, Dr. Macnamara, Captain Norton, and Mr. Shackleton; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 28.]

IRISH TOBACCO BILL.

"To repeal the Law which prohibits the growing of Tobacco in Ireland," presented by Mr. William Redmond; supported by Mr. Hayden, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Charles Devlin, Mr. Patrick O'Brien, and Mr. Joyce; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 29.]

LOCAL AUTHORITIES (TAXATION AND PURCHASE OF LAND) BILL.

"To provide for the Taxation and Purchase of Land by Local Authorities," presented by Mr. Logan; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Harwood, Dr. Macnamara, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Toulmin, and Mr. Logan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 30.]

COLONIAL MARRIAGES BILL.

"To legalise certain Colonial Marriages," presented by General Laurie; supported by Mr. Rothschild, Mr. Arthur Stanley, Sir Gilbert Parker, and Captain Jessel; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 31.]

MEDICAL ACT (1886) AMENDMENT BILL

"To amend the Medical Act, 1886," presented by General Laurie; supported by Sir Walter Foster, Sir John Tuke, Mr. Rothschild, Sir Howard Vincent, and Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 32.]

MERCHANDISE MARKS BILL.

"To amend the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Sir Carne Rasch, Sir Henry Seton-Karr, and Mr. Field; to be read a second time upon Friday next, and to be printed. [Bill 33.]

PUBLIC TRUSTEE BILL.

"To provide for the appointment of a Public Trustee and Executor," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by by Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Howard, and Lieutenant-Colonel Tufnell; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 34.]

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SATURDAYS (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors in Ireland on Saturdays; and for other purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. Sloan; supported by Sir James Haslett, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Jordan, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. T. L. Corbett, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, and Mr. Wood; to be read a second time upon Friday, 13th May, and to be printed. [Bill 35.]

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS BILL.

"To amend the Agricultural Holdings Acts and to make other provisions as to the Tenure of Agricultural Land," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Price, Mr. Harold Reckitt, Mr. Brynmor Jones, and Mr. Lambert; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 36.]

OLD AGE PENSIONS (No. 2) BILL.

"To provide Pensions for persons over sixty-five years of age," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Mr. Burt, Mr. John Burns, Mr. John Wilson (Durham), Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Broadhurst, and Sir Albert Rollit; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 16th February, and to be printed. [Bill 37.]

CORONERS' INQUESTS (RAILWAY FATALITIES) BILL.

"To amend the Land relating to Coroners' Inquests, in the case of Fatal Accidents on Railways," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, and Mr. Schwann; to be read a second time upon Monday, 15th February, and to be printed. [Bill 38.]

SAVINGS BANKS ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Savings Banks Acts," presented by Sir Albert Rollit; supported by Sir Frederick Banbury, Sir James Woodhouse, Sir Frederick Dixon-Hartland, Mr. Broadhurst, Sir Brampton Gurdon, Sir William Holland, Mr. John Campbell, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Sir George Bartley, and Mr. Edmund Faber; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 39.]

SMALL HOLDERS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the tenure of Small Holdings in Scotland," presented by Mr. Black; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Weir, Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. Harmsworth, Mr. J. D. Hope, and Mr. Ainsworth; to be read a second time upon Friday, 17th June, and to be printed. [Bill 40.]

SUNDAY CLOSING (WALES) ACT (1881) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend The Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, and to make further provisions respecting the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors in Wales and Monmouthshire," presented by Mr. Herbert Roberts; supported by Sir Alfred Thomas, Mr. Herbert Lewis, and Mr. William Jones; to be read a second time upon Friday, 4th March, and to be printed. [Bill 41.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Resolved, That this House, at its rising this day, do adjourn till Monday next.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

[FOURTH DAY.]

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [4th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament." — (Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in regard to the preparations for and conduct of the recent war in South Africa, and particularly the evidence taken by Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into those matters and their Report thereon, disclose grave negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, whereby the duration, magnitude, and cost of the war were greatly increased.'"—(Mr. Robson.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): I have intervened much earlier in this debate than I had any intention of doing because of the very pointed way in which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham referred to me in more than one or two parts of this subject during his speech last night. The speech ended close upon twelve o'clock, and, therefore, I was unable to follow him at the time, but I am anxious now to dispose of those attacks which he made upon me with so much vehemence and persistence. The right hon. Gentleman made a remarkable speech. My hon. and learned friend behind me, the Member for South Shields, brought forward his Amendment with great moderation, with cogent arguments, lucidly placed before the House. The right hon. Gentleman appears to have interpreted that speech entirely as what he called a malignant attack upon himself. The right hon. Gentleman spoke of the old Dickens story of King Charles's head always getting into Mr. Dick's petition, and he said that in this case he was King Charles's head. Undoubtedly the right hon. Gentleman is the occupier of that place and discharges that function in his own speeches at all events. It has come to this, as my hon. and learned friend found last night—not much to his discomfiture—that whoever ventures to differ from the right hon. Gentleman and to expose his errors, is at once assailed as if he had committed the crime of high treason. We have all been called very ugly names. I have had my fair share of them myself. Because I wished, as I thought, however mistakenly it may be, to unite closer the two islands of Ireland and Great Britain, I was called a "Separatist." Because I objected to some of the right hon. Gentleman's proceedings I was called a "pro-Boer." Because I did not indulge in high-falutin' language, such as appears to be considered necessary in some quarters, I was called a "Little Englander," and the words "traitor" and "unpatriotic" were thrown in.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.): Not by me. I did not use the word "traitor."

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: If the right hon. Gentleman did not actually use the word himself, I can assure him that, inspired by his example, many of his obsequious followers did apply it. The right hon. Gentleman last night claimed a certain degree of irresponsibility in this matter. He seemed to think it strange that anybody should involve him in this question of preparation for the South African War at all. Why, Sir, he is the most responsible of all. That is why he occupies so large a part in the speeches made on the subject. Whether for good or for evil, he and his diplomacy and his manners of negotiation and his tone and spirit are in the very forefront of responsibility. The right hon. Gentleman quoted a phrase which I have, with little variation, used before the war, during the war, and since the war. I said before the war that the story told and the reasons alleged to us by the Government and the information communicated to us by them, did not seem to me to indicate any case for war or for preparations for war. Supposing I had stated it twenty times oftener and in stronger terms, it would not have been the slightest excuse for want of preparation on the part of the Government. I had formed an independent and necessarily partial opinion, and having a public duty to perform I stated it to those interested in what my opinion was. But the Government were in charge of the whole business; it was their policy, not mine, thank goodness, which was being carried out, and therefore anything that I said does not do any good to their case. But the right hon. Gentleman said that in an unfortunate speech at Ilford I had put this observation of mine much more boldly and plainly than I afterwards saw reason to do. He therefore implied that in subsequent repetitions of the same idea I had shifted my ground a little, and had seen reason to withdraw something of what I had originally said. Now what did I say at Ilford? I take this from The Times of 19th June, 1899, and will read it if the House will have patience—

> "Of the conduct and policy of Her Majesty's Government in this particular (that is, South Africa) we are not in a position to form an opinion. We cannot judge of it until we have seen the Papers which have been promised on the subject, and until this information has been received, in my opinion a discussion in the House of Commons would lead to no advantage and might even be attended with disadvantage to the interests of our country. But there are some newspapers which talk freely of the probability, and even of the necessity, of war, and the public mind has been much disturbed in consequence. I think it right to say plainly that I for my part can discern nothing in what has happened to justify either warlike action or even military preparations."

This is exactly what I said afterwards, judging from the information given to us by the Government. I went on—

> "The people of this country have no hostility to the people of the Transvaal. They have no desire whatever to humiliate them or to give them offence or to take from them any part of the independence which they enjoy. Our only desire is to see the inhabitants of all the States in South Africa, our own colonies as well as the other States, living and prospering in perfect harmony with each other. Let us not be blind, however, to the fact that the maintenance of this harmony is no very easy matter, and it requires the greatest prudence and delicacy in the action which we take."

I did my utmost in that speech to avoid embarrassing the Government, and at the same time to calm the feelings of the public as far as my little authority could extend. I think it was a very different course which was taken by the right hon. Gentleman when, with infinitely greater responsibility, months afterwards, and when things had become much more critical, he used the language referred to last night. But my words, the right hon. Gentleman says, encouraged the Boers. Was I expected to be dumb while there was being pursued what I believed—even with such comparatively imperfect information as had been given to us then—was becoming a misguided, dangerous, and probably disastrous policy? Was I to be dumb lest an expression of any disapproval of the right hon. Gentleman's conduct should encourage the Boers? Why, I should have been greatly surprised if the Boers themselves had not knowledge enough of this country to expect and believe that such a policy as he was pursuing had not, at least, the support of the whole of the British people. The right hon. Gentleman says that he honestly strove for peace. I believe him. I have no reason to dispute or doubt his peaceful intentions, but I greatly doubt whether he took the most peaceful manner of disclosing his policy.

I must go back, I am afraid, to the origin of things and give a brief history. The right hon. Gentleman came into office in 1895, and at once indicated to us all that his purpose was to subvert the prudent ways of his predecessors. The British Empire had been built up by cautious and wise statesmen, and they were not adventurous enough, it appears, for the right hon. Gentleman. He made a speech almost immediately after his appointment in which he indicated the great field which had to be developed, and the great estate we possessed, and in other ways by his whole manner of treating the question he roused, and, as it were, gave a cue to all the adventurous spirits in His Majesty's dominions. What was the immediate result? Certain men in South Africa who had designs of their own felt that now a friendly hand was on the reins in London, and we had the Jameson Raid. Will the right hon. Gentleman get up and say that, in his belief, if a Liberal Government had been in power the Jameson Raid would have occurred? No, Sir, it would not. The "jumping off" ground at Pitsani was refused by a Liberal Government, but granted by the more favourable authorities that had succeeded them. The Raid occurred, and then we had the subsequent proceedings.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I beg the right hon. Gentleman's pardon. It is rather difficult to carry my memory back to the details, but I think he is mistaken. Surely, unless I am wrong, the Liberal Government were in negotiation with Mr. Rhodes for the transfer of the whole of the territory? It was not a mere question of "jumping off" ground being granted.

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I understand it was indicated that at some future time it might be granted. [MR. CHAMBERLAIN: Ah!] But at that time it was the cause of this very cirumstance.

*MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: There is nothing of that in the Papers.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Then we had the right hon. Gentleman in this House, notwithstanding that a Committee of the House had condemned the Raid and all who abetted it in the strongest terms, giving his certificate of honour and good character to Mr. Rhodes. Therefore, I am stating what no man can dispute, when I say that thereupon arose a deep and almost angry, certainly an alarmed, state of suspicion, not only in the Transvaal, but in the Orange Free State; and then at that time began those military preparations of which we have heard so much and which culminated in war. [AN HON. MEMBER: No, they began before, and cries of "Look at the accounts."] Another incidental evil effect of that most mischievous event of the Raid was that the Boers and every one in South Africa acquired the lowest and most contemptuous opinion of British military skill, which had something to do with what happened. As to the Orange Free State, when your neighbour's house is on fire you are concerned; and really I am amused at all these elaborate refinements and discussions as to the effect produced in these two States. Was it not the most natural thing in the world, almost necessary, that they should join with the Transvaal? The right hon. Gentleman said that the course taken by the Orange Free State was unexpected, and he stated last night that President Steyn had given a promise to Mr. Schreiner that the Free State would not move.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: That it would not be aggressive.

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I will read these despatches at all events. Here is the telegram from the Prime Minister of Cape Colony to his Honour the State President, dated 11th October, referring to "the intense strain of the position," and expressing confidence "that the territory of this colony will not be invaded from your side," pressing "the same abstinence" on the President of the South African Republic, and stating that the "forces on our border are not more considerable than defence purposes require." The State President at Bloemfontein replied that—

> "Assurance could be given that Cape Colony territory will not be invaded, if you would give the Government the guarantee that this State will not be invaded from the territory of the Cape Colony and also that no troops would be allowed to go through Cape Colony or move towards the border of this State or that of the South African Republic. I have wired your telegram to the South African Republic, and if you give me the guarantee as above I will use my influence to get a similar assurance from the South African Republic."

[A laugh from the MINISTERIAL Benches]. Hon. Members laugh, and I suppose they have the idea that that was an absurd stipulation to make. I quote it as throwing light on the statement of the right hon. Gentleman as to the absolute assurance given by President Steyn.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: That is not the only one.

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: That is dated 11th October, almost the last day on which any communications passed. The right hon. Gentleman says that in the time of his predecessor the defences of the colonies were so neglected that there were only two battalions, or 3,000 men, in South Africa, and the Government had to raise the force. Yes, Sir, because the force depends upon your policy. At that time there was no ground of fear whatever. [Cries of "Oh!"] The force was adjusted to the policy. There are two policies that you can pursue in a case such as this. There is the policy of force and of threats resting upon force, and on the other hand there is the policy of patience and of peaceful and conciliatory negotiation. That second policy was supported, and demanded from the Imperial Government, by the Natal Parliament, by the Cape Parliament, by Lord Rosmead, who had been High Commissioner, by the Commander-in-Chief, and by all the constituted authorities except the High Commissioner, and by all who had special knowledge of the question. The alternative was a policy of force and of threats depending upon force. Who was in favour of that policy? I cannot find any authority of the same quality as those I have quoted. The right hon. Gentleman went on to develop this question of the strength of troops, and he said that the Government worked the number of troops up to 12,000, but that I was well aware that those troops were not in a thoroughly efficient state because they were not, as he said, co-ordinated. We seem to be drenched with that word "co-ordinated" in military as well as in educational matters. The right hon. Gentleman seemed to suggest that I had peculiar knowledge on the subject, and I asked him whether he referred to the conversation which I had the pleasure of having with him, and to the correspondence which followed. He said that he did, and I asked for leave to break the seal of secrecy or of confidence and to state what occurred. It was on 20th June, 1899. The right hon. Gentleman wrote to me a note saying that he would be very pleased if I would let him have a little conversation with me. I replied in similar terms, and the right hon. Gentleman came to my room. He told me that he wished to submit to me, and of course to those with whom I acted, two proposals that the Government were contemplating. The first was to send out 10,000 men to the Cape—I think Natal—and the right hon. Gentleman asked whether the Opposition would join in recommending that step to the House and to the country. I think I must have looked a little surprised, or I may have uttered a few words of surprise, for the right hon. Gentleman went on to say—

> "You need not be alarmed. There will be no fighting. We know that those fellows"—that was the Boers—"won't fight. We are playing a game of bluff."

I think I ventured to express frankly to the right hon. Gentleman my opinion that such a policy was unworthy of the country. If I did not say that, I felt it; but at all events I said that it was a rash and dangerous policy, that it was dangerous to begin a course of bluff when you did not know what it might lead to, and I said that I must consult my colleagues. I only gave my own personal impression at the time. Then the right hon. Gentleman said that there was another thing—that the forces in Natal were deficient in equipment—in transport especially—that it lacked mobility; and the right hon. Gentleman wanted to know whether there would be any adverse feeling expressed if that fault were made good. Well, Sir, I said that I would consult my colleagues on both of these proposals. I invited my colleagues to come, and I told them what the right hon. Gentleman had said, and I took their mind on both these questions. With regard to the equipment of the troops, which, I think, meant the purchase of mules and horses mostly, we said that we thought there was nothing to be urged against the proposal—it being desirable, if we had a force, that it should be efficient, provided that it was done in such a way as not to be ostentatious or provocative—as not to be trumpeted about—with the view possibly of producing some effect upon the minds of men in South Africa. But as to the other proposal we could only reply that the responsibility for a great movement of troops such as that lay entirely with the Executive Government, and that we were not prepared to relieve them of any part of their responsibility. I think that that was practically the gist of what occurred. I wrote a note to the right hon. Gentleman expressing these opinions—that the undivided responsibility must rest with the Government—and the right hon. Gentleman replied on 24th June, saying that he quite understood and appreciated what we had said, and hoped that there would be an opportunity later of further private consultation, if desirable, or something to that effect. No such opportunity for further consultation presented itself, and there the matter ended.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I do not want to interfere in the slightest degree with the right hon. Gentleman's speech, but I do not entirely agree with the account which he has given. With the permission of the House, I will explain when he has finished.

* Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I will confess to the House that for a long time afterwards, and indeed up to the present moment, that declaration of the policy of the Government sunk into my mind and remained there. To my mind it amply explains all the want of preparation, all the mistakes, and all the complaints. Some, including the Prime Minister, have blamed the soldiers for the want of preparation. The right hon. Gentleman blames the Opposition. Some Ministers say that they were fully informed in every respect. But we cannot forget what Lord Salisbury told us—that they knew nothing about it, because the Boer cannon were conveyed by some wonderful feat in piano-cases and the like. But what is the use of troubling our heads with all these excuses and methods of accounting for the facts, when we have this declaration that a game of bluff was being played, that there was no sincere expectation or intention of using actively any forces which might be sent out?

I do not know that I have anything more to say on that question. I do not wish to speak at all in too strong terms of anything that has happened, or to rake up old questions of difference. But not only have I myself from the first been convinced that the policy of the right hon. Gentleman was a mistaken policy, that patience and good nature and concessions of a small kind would in a few years (probably by this time) have smoothed over the whole difficulty, but I am convinced that, if the right hon. Gentleman was intending to pursue the policy of force, nothing could have been more unworthy of this country than the particular form of that policy which is denominated by the name of bluff.

One thing more I wish to say, and it applies to the Chief Secretary. He quoted a despatch of Lord Ripon's on the question of the franchise, a despatch which he represented to the House as being rather in the nature of an ultimatum presented to Mr. Kruger. What are the facts? It was not a despatch in the sense of having been ever despatched. It was a Paper. There were negotiations going on about Swaziland, and Lord Loch was directed to go up to Pretoria and arrange with the Transvaal Government. Mr. Kruger at this time hinted that it was his intention to raise the question of the Convention; and Lord Ripon wrote to Lord Loch to say that, if that question were raised, the first thing put forward would be the question of the five years franchise, and in this Paper Lord Ripon used certain arguments in favour of it. Why, Sir, we are all in favour of a five years franchise, if not of a lower one, in the Transvaal—everybody except, apparently, the present governing authorities in the Transvaal. But when the negotiations began Mr. Kruger never raised this question of the Convention at all; therefore, a fortiori, the question of the franchise was never raised. This document remained, therefore, merely a hypothetical confidential instruction for Lord Loch. Some time ago the late Secretary of State for the Colonies asked Lord Ripon whether he would allow the arguments used in this Paper to be printed in a public document, and that was agreed to, out of courtesy, as between one Secretary of State and his successor. The right hon. Gentleman now uses this Paper, which was never more than that, as a parallel case to the hurling of an ultimatum at a foreign State.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Wyndham, Dover): Lord Milner made the same proposal, but he did not hurl an ultimatum.

* Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Well, I do not know. If there was not an ultimatum there were a good many ultimata. There was practically a great deal of shaking of fists, a great deal of fumbling with the butt-end of the revolver. The sands were running out and the sponge was being squeezed. No, Sir, I think that the right hon. Gentleman was misled in quoting that document in the way he did. It is not what I should have expected from him, and I think that if he looks into the thing he will find that it hardly bears out the character of importance which he gave to it. That is all. I have disposed of the points which the right hon. Gentleman put forward so violently last night, and I trust that I have made it clear to the House that most of us have had no other intention than to avoid, where we could, embarrassing the Government in any way, and, at the same time, to advocate in this House that peaceful settlement and arrangement in South Africa which would, I believe, have accomplished the same results, and better results, than have been produced by the waste of all the blood and treasure which have been spent.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Mr. Speaker, in reference to the communications between the right hon. Gentleman and myself, to which he has referred again to-day, we are both, as the House perceives, in a certain difficulty, inasmuch as the papers connected with it are in both our cases at a distance. I have done my best to supply the deficiency by sending down to Birmingham this morning, and I hope I may be able before I leave to obtain the original papers. They consist of the letters referred to by the right hon. Gentleman, and also, in my case, of an account of the conversation written immediately afterwards. I differ from the right hon. Gentleman, both in regard to what passed—I do not differ very substantially, but I do differ considerably—as to what passed in our conversation, and as to that it is possible that we may be unable to come to an absolute agreement, because it is always difficult to remember what passed at a conversation. But, fortunately, there can be no difficulty whatever with regard to the correspondence, and I differ also from the right hon. Gentleman in regard to that. Now, at the time of which the right hon. Gentleman speaks—June—matters, although in my opinion they were not by any means poignant, were undoubtedly serious, and I deprecated more than anything else the possibility that a serious discussion, which might ultimately end in hostilities with other Powers, should be treated as a Party matter, and it was my earnest desire, if that could be done, to remove altogether any Party feeling or controversy from the further discussion of the subject. I spoke to the Prime Minister, Lord Salisbury, on the subject, and I had his assent to communicating with and seeing the right hon. Gentleman. The right hon. Gentleman therefore, has omitted the way in which the conversation was opened by me. I told him what I have said to the House. I told him that if he was inclined to accept that view of the situation, and to consider that a great matter of this kind, affecting national interests, should be treated not in the ordinary sense of a Party question, but as a matter in which the Opposition had as much right to be consulted as the Government, then on my part, and on behalf of my colleagues, I was prepared to make him this offer, that we would take no steps whatever without consulting him, and that, if of course we found afterwards that we could not agree, it might be necessary to separate; but, at all events, that each further step from that date, if he and his colleagues saw eye to eye with us, would be in effect a joint proceeding. The right hon. Gentleman, I thought, accepted the idea without unwillingness, but he said—

> "What kind of consultation? What are you thinking of now, for instance?"

Then I told him that two questions were before us. The first was whether the 12,000 troops that were then in South Africa should be made up—I think the proper word is to complete the unit; I am afraid I am weak in the matter of military terms—

*Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Transport.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Well, I have no doubt the transport was an important portion of the proposal, but my recollection is that at that time there was a deficiency of field artillery in proportion to the numbers of the troops and a deficiency of cavalry, and that we proposed to send, not, of course, a large number, but a sufficient number of cavalry, artillery, and transport to complete the forces then in South Africa. The right hon. Gentleman said, almost in the words he has used to-day, speaking for himself and not for his colleagues, that as far as he was concerned he saw no objection whatever to that—he did not think any objection would be taken to that. Then I said there was another proposal, which was to reinforce the garrison by sending out a considerable number of men—it may have been 10,000; I do not remember, but I told the right hon. Gentleman that in my opinion there was no probability at that time of war. But I said that our difficulty was then, as it had been all along, to convince the Boers that we were in earnest, and it had been represented, I do not know whether I expressed it as a settled opinion of the Cabinet, but, at all events, it had been under consideration by us, whether it would not have a good effect to send out a considerable body in order to impress on the Boers the fact that we did mean to pursue this matter to the end. The right hon. Gentleman now says that I used the word "bluff." I cannot charge my memory with a contradiction. It is not a word that I am fond of, or that I think I should have been likely to use. My impression would have been, but for the contrary statement of the right hon. Gentleman, that I did not use that word.

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Will the right hon. Gentleman allow me to prove that I have not said so from my own memory only? Immediately after leaving the right hon. Gentleman I came into the House and met one or two of my colleagues, and I used the same expression to them. It is within their recollection.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: That I quite believe, and I absolutely believe that the right hon. Gentleman thinks that I used it. But he must remember this. It may have been the impression I gave him, but it may not have been the word I used or the impression I intended to give. I certainly feel confident that at that time I had no idea whatever of "bluffing" in the sense in which the right hon. Gentleman considers that I used the word. My whole intention and object was—and about that I am absolutely certain—to suggest to the right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues to consider whether it would not be desirable to produce a considerable force in South Africa with a view to giving us greater influence in the further negotiations. Now I come to the letters, and here I differ in an important sense from the right hon. Gentleman, and I believe that the letter which he wrote to me will prove that I am right. My recollection of that letter is this, that having said in private conversation that, so far as he was concerned, he was quite willing to approve of the strengthening of the 12,000 men, though he doubted whether he and his colleagues would be willing to send a large additional force, in his letter he wrote that he, having consulted his colleagues on the proposition I made—which included this proposition for a sort of neutral ground in dealing with this matter, the absence of political controversy, which was really the important point—that he, having consulted his colleagues, they had come to the conclusion that they could not accept the offer of the Government, and they must leave the Government to entirely take its own responsibility. He went on to say in the same letter that in those circumstances I must consider as withdrawn any statement which he had made on his own account with regard to the—not what he said just now [Cries of "Oh!"], certainly not; I must give the exact words—that I must understand that the words which he had used as expressing his own opinion with regard to the strengthening of the 12,000 men in the field must also be considered as withdrawn. That is my recollection, and, as I say, the production of the letter, either by the right hon. Gentleman, if he has it, or by me, if I can find it, will clear up that entirely. It does not in the least degree affect the good faith and sincerity of the right hon. Gentleman or of myself, but it is not an unimportant difference as to the facts, because it is my impression that our offer was entirely and absolutely refused; and we were told that even in the small matter of increasing the force and making complete the unit in South Africa the Opposition would give no Party support beforehand to that, but must leave us to take whatever steps we pleased on our own responsibility. That is my view of the position.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): What we are faced with at this moment is an indictment for want of preparation for the war and for the absence of troops in Natal. What is the right hon. Gentleman's own confession? The right hon. Gentleman's own confession is that the urgency of this matter was brought before him as early as June 20th, 1899. The right hon. Gentlemen was invited to co-operate, and he has given reasons which are perfectly clear as to the opinion which he held, and which he was entitled to hold, that our policy was a mistaken policy, and that by patience, good nature, and concessions on small points, further action might be avoided. He is entitled to hold those views, but I ask Members on this side of the House on what possible ground can he then come forward and complain that the Government did not complete the preparations which he himself did his best to discourage.

*SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: No, I did not. My objection in this particular case was to what I called a policy of bluff. If the right hon. Gentleman had come and told us of a dangerous condition of things, and if they had admitted us to some of their secret information, we might have modified our view.

*MR. BRODRICK: The right hon. Gentleman understood that the question had arisen of reinforcing the troops in Natal and sending 10,000 men there. The right hon. Gentleman was perfectly entitled to hold the view that no such reinforcement was necessary, and that he at all events and his Party would not contribute to any such demonstration for the purpose of securing peace. His view was that peace could be secured by weakness in Natal, and not by strength. For five weeks, nay more, after these pourparlers between my right hon. friend and the right hon. Gentleman, he came down to the House and told us that as to the war itself he could only repeat what he had said elsewhere that—"from the beginning of this story to the end of it I can see nothing whatever which furnishes a case for war." That is the right hon. Gentleman's opinion, but what is the position in which we are this afternoon. We are here under this indictment that we were willing to risk the good name of the country in negotiations and by bluff, but that we were not preparing for the actual event of hostilities. I think that anybody who looks at the whole of this story will see that the approach to the Leader of the Opposition was a patriotic approach. It was a peaceful approach. It only occurs to me now as I am speaking, that such an approach is not unusual among men of patriotic feeling when their country is in danger of a devastating war. What is going on at the present moment in Japan? We saw in the telegrams only yesterday or the day before, I think, that not merely members of the then Government, but the past members of past Governments had been called in and convoked in order to give their counsel. For what? Not in order to raise Party difficulties in a great national emergency, but in order that the nation should present an unbroken front to an enemy at a moment of overwhelming danger. I would say for that side of the House that they did not rate any lower than we did the danger and difficulty of warlike operations with the Dutch States in South Africa. They were fully conscious of that danger, and an invitation was addressed to the right hon. Gentleman who had hitherto stood aloof. We knew that he had been backward in supporting the Government at a moment when we thought that from patriotic motives they deserved support. The mass of the House never knew till to-day how backward he had been, and under what pressure. The right hon. Gentleman has made his own attempt to absolve himself. I think it was a vain attempt.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I have nothing to absolve myself from.

*MR. BRODRICK: The right hon. Gentleman says he has nothing to absolve himself from. Then, are we to understand that he dissociates himself from the attack on the Goverment for having undertaken this war with a want of preparation, in which preparation he declined to associate himself, and to which preparation he put by his speeches every impediment which was in his power?

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Let me remind the right hon. Gentleman that it would not be any great crime to hesitate at a particular moment to send reinforcements. This was in June; July passed. In the month of August Mr. Chamberlain wrote to Lord Lansdowne saying that while he wished to avoid the relaxation of pressure he saw no occasion for reinforcements. He should attack the right hon. Gentleman himself.

*MR. BRODRICK: Does that citation absolve the right hon. Gentleman from the charge that when he was told there was a danger of war, and that that danger—[OPPOSITION cries of "When?"]

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: You were not going to fight. [An HON. MEMBER: You were going to bluff].

*MR. BRODRICK: My right hon. friend has given a somewhat different interpretation to that conversation. He has stated that any idea of bluff in the sense in which it was used by the right hon. Gentleman was foreign to the whole tenour of his conversation.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Hear, hear!

*MR. BRODRICK: Two points were advanced. One was that the sending of these troops would have had the effect of making for peace. The other was that the invitation addressed to the right hon. Gentleman was addressed to him with the view of blending all Parties in any future action which might be taken.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Hear, hear!

*MR. BRODRICK: If the right hon. Gentleman really desired peace he had the opportunity at the eleventh hour of working with those who had been working from the first hour in the same direction, but did he accept it or was he willing to take a hand at all?

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Not at such a game.

*MR. BRODRICK: Well, not at such a game! That was not his game, but, having impeded the game, he now comes down to complain of those who tried to play the game earnestly. [An HON. MEMBER: Bluff.] The right hon. Gentleman last night tried to explain away his speech in which he spoke of there being no necessity for preparation.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I did not explain it away. I stated the circumstances in which it was said. That is all.

*MR. BRODRICK: I do not know any form of words ever used by one man in this House which played so large a part in the General Election as that speech of the right hon. Gentleman. The country, who did not express their opinion on anything else, expressed their opinion in the strongest possible way on the impediments which the right hon. Gentleman and some who acted with him, not all, had placed in the way of the Government in a purely national crisis of overwhelming gravity. Is it not rather a stretch even of ordinary Parlimentary forms for the right hon. Gentleman to come forward now to associate himself with those who complain of this lack of preparation. Not being willing to enter into the vineyard himself, nor anxious for the reward which he might have got even at the eleventh hour, and having taken care not merely to decline to work in the vineyard himself, he denounced as blacklegs those who went in and were willing to work. I think it strange that men who have throughout declared that the war was unjustifiable, that our policy was wrong, that our preparations were unnecessary, should come here to-day to attack us for our inertia at a moment when they were hanging on our backs, and should pose themselves as foiled advocates of a strong policy. That is the position that the Opposition occupy this afternoon. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Forest of Dean made an appeal yesterday that this question should not be treated as a Party question. He referred in somewhat vehement terms to the speech of the Chief Secretary as a Party speech and an appeal to Party passions. I quite admit that on occasions the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Forest of Dean has known how to divest himself of Party, but was it quite worthy of him last night to barb an attack on the Government and the Prime Minister by saying that the Commission had been nominated by the Government, a Commission, the chairman of which was one of the political opponents of Government, the members of which were representative men, not one of them in any way whatever attached to the Government, and whose findings, to say the least, bore the appearance of impartiality? I think also I can claim that in every speech, except that made by the Leader of the Opposition, who has not touched on the Motion at all, the Commission's Report has been used to blame the Government. Where the Commission blamed the Government the hon. and learned Member quoted the Commission, and where the Commission absolved the Government the hon. and learned Member scavenged the evidence to find proof that they were wrong. The right hon. Gentleman himself said he objected, and I am going to endeavour to carry out the spirit of what he said' in the course of the few observations I have to make to this bandying across the floor of the House of accusations as to the number of stores which were laid by the late Government, and the number of stores laid by the present Government—the number of stores put into arsenal——

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): I made no accusation on the subject. I quoted the Prime Minister's saying that the stores were allowed to go down after Mr. Stanhope left the War Office, and added that the Prime Minister had claimed that the stores had again been raised before the war to Mr. Stanhope's standard. The evidence before the Commission showed exactly the opposite.

*MR. BRODRICK: My point was that the Government, which the right hon. Gentleman helped us to displace, had not adopted Mr. Stanhope's standard, but had even adopted a lower standard of their own. What is the main result of the findings of the Commission? We were told that our preparations were insufficient. That has been discussed throughout this debate. Take one single point on which I think the Government have a right to absolution. The Commission shows that the highest military authorities differed in all respects as regards the route of advance. It shows that Lord Wolseley differed from Lord Roberts as to the nature of the advance, and that General Buller differed from both. General Buller advocated an advance by Natal, whilst Lord Roberts chose the Cape. Lord Wolseley rejected both, and said the advance should be made by Bloemfontein. There is one point on which all soldiers agreed, whether you take Lord Wolseley, Lord Roberts, Sir Redvers Buller, or Sir William Butler. None of them put the force with which we ought to advance at so high a figure as that adopted by the Government. How can you say that our preparations were insufficient when the number was actually in excess of the number of soldiers asked for. May I invite the attention of the House for one moment to the attack made on the Prime Minister in regard to the Orange Free State? It has been urged that the Prime Minister in stating that no one could have known that the Orange Free State would join in had shown that lamentable want of foresight which characterised the Government throughout these operations. Is there any truth whatever in that indictment? The Prime Minister undoubtedly did say that we had no quarrel with the Free State; that the Free State had no treaty with the Transvaal which made it necessary to join in the invasion of our territory; and the Free State had no interest in the Uitlander question. It has been urged that our reliance upon these facts made us reduce our preparations, and that the ignorance of our commanders as to the probable action of the Free State prejudiced the whole course of the war. Now I deny that in every case. Every preparation was made on the assumption that it might be necessary to fight the Free State as well as the Transvaal, and moreover, from a strategic point of view, it was held by some of the best and highest advisers of the Government that the neutrality of the Free State would have to be watched and might prove even a greater danger than the actual hostility of the Free State. I should like to know whether the Front Opposition Bench take their share of responsibility for the statement that has been circulated in a little leaflet by thousands throughout this country, that the mistake about the Orange Free State cost the country thousands of lives and millions of money. Sir, there is not a shred or shadow of foundation for that statement; and therefore the attack made on the Prime Minister last night had no foundation whatever.

May I say one word in support and in amplification of what fell from the Chief Secretary last night. My right hon. friend dwelt with great force on the points on which the Commission pronounced a verdict in favour of the Government. He dwelt on the thoroughness and remarkable dispatch of the mobilisation of the troops, and he cited their commendation on the quality of the stores and food supplies which was the most successful feature of the war. He mentioned their opinion of the various articles provided, and he also dwelt with not too great force on the denunciations of the exaggerated statements with regard to the failure of the supply of horses. We were told that the stores were insufficient. My right hon. friend made a very clear statement on that point which could not be gainsaid. We did find great arrears in 1895, and we set ourselves first to the better equipment of the Navy. That we were bound to do. We voted for the Army £4 for every £3 voted by our predecessors, and we raised our Army Estimates very considerably in consequence. During that time we had considerable military expeditions in the Soudan, for which we had to find enormous stores, and on which we spent something like a million of money, which we might have spent in filling our storehouses and regaining that which the opposite Party had spent £10,000,000 in losing before. I may say this, that although the stores ran low they never ran short during the war. And if they did not run short I think the House might, in its generosity, admit that some credit is due to those men in the War Office, much abused though they be, who, under Sir Henry Brackenbury and Sir Charles Mansfield Clarke, supplied an Army in the field three or four times the size of that they had been asked to provide for, in an efficient condition for two and a half years.

I would invite the attention of the House to three or four points, before I sit down, on which the Commission found real scope for their labours and which the Government have shown their anxiety to meet. The Director of Military Intelligence has had very marked compliments paid to him in this debate. I associate myself in every respect with the commendations given to Sir John Ardagh for the intelligence which he provided for us under circumstances of great difficulties. I know that the right hon. Member for West Birmingham has made it clear to the House that that intelligence did reach members of the Cabinet, but we cannot conceal from ourselves that the verdict of the Commission is against us on that question. The Commission stated that there had been a neglect owing to the system, for all practical purposes, of the work of the Intelligence Division. I think that that shows that defects did exist. At all events, amongst the military authorities there was not sufficient cohesion inside the War Office and between the War Office and the Government; not that cohesion on which we could depend in a future war. I go far beyond the Commission in that respect. I say not only was there a want in 1895 of sufficient cohesion to secure that the full force of the best military intelligence should be communicated to the Government, but that there was not sufficient cohesion between the Army and the Navy. Both required to be brought under the authority of the Prime Minister. The Defence Committee as it then existed was not a sufficient instrument, and it was that feeling which moved both the First Lord of the Admiralty and myself as soon as the war was over to approach the Prime Minister with a view to the creation of the present Defence Committee. Without labouring that point, I think the House will readily understand that the sittings of the present Defence Committee, amended and amplified as they may be under the new conditions, have secured, at all events, that the two leading military and naval Members are brought face to face with the Cabinet, week by week, through the session and occasionally during the autumn, and that no such hiatus can again occur, as occurred in 1899, between the Military Intelligence Department and the Cabinet. That point is not one which arouses enthusiasm in the party of attack, but I venture to say that it is by far the most vital result that can take place from the investigations of this Commission. The majority of the Commission did not propose changes in the War Office itself, nor in the system of the Army; but the Minority Report made a suggestion towards which, before that time, we had already gone a long way. That men should work in water-tight compartments in such a matter as National Defence is absolutely impossible. The association of those men in the War Office who have been sitting with regularity for the last three years has prevented that isolation which caused many of the hitches in the late campaign and which is made still more impossible by the organisation now proposed to be set up.

The Commission reported strongly about the training of officers and troops. Long before the war, in Lord Lansdowne's time, great changes had been made in that respect. In the beginning of 1899, opportunities for training and manœuvring troops had been afforded as never before. There is one step which has been taken and of which scant recognition has been made by the public, but which will have a lasting effect on the organisation and training of the Army. And that is that officers are appointed now to command troops which they are to command in war. It was universally admitted that the manœuvres of last year showed a nearer approach to a condition of war, and a greater appreciation by the officers and men in the training they had received, than anything that has taken place in this country before. May I remind the House that before the Commission sat all the censures which had been passed on the medical department had been dealt with to such a degree that Sir F. Treves was able to tell the Commission that we should now have the finest medical service in the world?

One other matter, our Army had been trained, had been located previously to the war, mainly with the view of home defence, with a Navy which can defend us, or should be able to defend us, from any formidable attack. That view has been abandoned; the Prime Minister has shown as clearly as possible that the policy adopted by this Government three years ago of holding a force in readiness of 120,000 for service abroad was the only legitimate policy for a country which has great dependencies to defend. That, again, is a result of the war. No longer shall we approach another war, another emergency, with a doubt in our minds whether we can send 70,000 men abroad. The policy of the country has been unmistakably declared. I am very glad this debate has been raised; I think it has swept away a good many misconceptions. I do not believe that those who read the indictment of the Government on the one hand, and the defence of the Government on the other, will doubt on which side they ought to give their votes in this controversy. Hon, Members opposite have shown to their own satisfaction that in the state of the negotiations, which was known to them as well as to the public, preparations for war were inevitable. They cannot produce one single point in which they assisted those preparations which they now reproach us for insufficiently making!

The hon. Member who seconded the Motion endeavoured to barb his invective against the Government by citing passages from the Committee on the Crimean war as bearing on the Report we have under discussion. The records of the two Committee will remain side by side in our library for the deliberations of this House for all time. What is the comparison between them? The one said that by the negligence and want of foresight of the Government 52,000 men, the largest force ever in the Crimea at the same time, had been left deficient in everything that makes the Army able to take and keep the field; the other Report has made it clear that a force five times that number was mobilised, maintained for two and a-half years, and well supplied to the satisfaction of the officers and men composing it, and under conditions which, while they gave much occasion for improvement and much ground for the acceptance of experience, on the whole caused the repeated commendation of the Commissioners as to the way in which the service was carried out. I, for one, rejoice that these defects have been brought out; I rejoice also that the exaggerated estimates of them have been authoritatively disproved. And I believe, with my right hon. friend the present Secretary of State, that now that we have had our difficulty, now that we have confessed where the mistakes have arisen, now that we have set ourselves to repair them, the worst possible policy for the country and for this House is to continue denunciation of our Army system and Army administration, and of the results which have been achieved. I have known what it is, during a period which was not directly under the review of the Commissioners, to conduct a war under those conditions of criticism; I have known what it is to receive from the front protest after protest against the speeches and criticisms which were being made in this House because of the discontent they created among those who had been previously contented. I claim that the adverse critics have said their say, and our point is that we have met, with difficulty no doubt, but still successfully, a call which was unparalleled and unexpected. I say that the mistakes were to a large degree remedied before the sitting of the Commission, that our system is now being reviewed from end to end. I say we did not wait for the verdict of the Commissioners, or for the censure of Parliament, to undertake reforms which have altered the whole condition of our preparations for the eventuality of a war. That being so, let the House of Commons decide between us, whose record at all events shows a sense of our responsibility and an earnest desire to repair that which has been amiss—let the House of Commons decide between us and those whose military record is no record at all for the last twenty years, who let matters go back, without introducing a single reform when they were last in power, and who hung on our backs at the critical moment, and who now come forward on the most flimsy ground and try to subordinate the great national question of Army reform, which we are determined to carry through, to a Party cry.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE (Bristol, E.) said that if they were to take the right hon. Gentleman who had just spoken in earnest, they would fain have to inquire how it was that, after his super-excellent administration at the War Office for four years, he now found his services transferred to another Department. He himself could not help thinking that one cause of that transference was the knowledge which the Government had that the Report of the Commission was hanging over the right hon. Gentleman's head. The right hon. Gentleman in his speech said that the unpatriotic action of the Opposition prevented the Government making good the deficiencies which they acknowledged existed in the force which they were to maintain in South Africa. If it were unpatriotic not to make good such deficiencies, on whom did the blame lie—on the Government who had the power and the knowledge, or on the Opposition who had neither one nor the other?

*MR. BRODRICK: That was not my point. My point was that we could have strengthened the knowledge of the Boers as to our being in earnest by sending out more troops; but that that advantage would have been altogether nullified if it had been met by loud protests on the part of the Opposition, thereby encouraging President Kruger in his belief that the Opposition were opposed to the war.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE said that if the right hon. Gentleman had read the evidence before the Commission he would know that Sir Mansfield Clarke told the Commission in the clearest possible language that it was perfectly possible to make all those preparations without any one of them becoming public. If that were so—and he could not question the authority of such an eminent military official as the late Quartermaster-General—the blame lay on the Government, not only for not preparing for the war, but also for trying to deceive the House of Commons. The right hon. Gentleman also said that in the present dispute between Japan and Russia, statesmen on both sides were called in to give counsel, but what had been taking place in Japan and Russia during the past two months? There had been the largest possible public preparation for the struggle which they feared would ensue. What took place here in the early summer of 1899? The Government did not make any sort of preparation, public or private, for war, although they were responsible, not the Opposition. Even if the Opposition were called into counsel, the Government were responsible for the policy which rendered preparation necessary. The right hon. Gentleman also further said that the last General Election was fought on the cry of the war; the next General Election would be probably fought on the cry of "bluff;" and the cry which floated the right hon. Gentleman in in 1900 would probably float him out in 1904. The right hon. Gentleman went on to tell the House of Commons that the various Governments with which he had been connected had spent £4 for every £3 the previous Government had spent. What had they got to show for it? The right hon. Gentleman said that the storehouses never ran out. Did he remember the evidence of Sir Andrew Noble before the Commission? Sir Andrew Noble was told by the Secretary of State for War there was no shrapnel in the country, except what was in the limber boxes of the artillery, that there were only two cases of ammunition in the country, and that the military stores of every kind were inadequate for ordinary peace requirements. [Mr Brodrick dissented.] The right hon. Gentleman shook his head, but that was the statement of the Director-General of Ordnance; it was also the statement of the Inspector-General of Remounts, of the Director-General of the Army Medical Service, and of the Army Service Corps. Every one of these officers gave evidence in which each said that the requirements of his Department were not satisfactory even up to a peace standard. The right hon. Gentleman stated that the reports of the Intelligence Department reached the Cabinet, but had the Cabinet the intelligence to understand them? These defects were discovered in 1895 by the Intelligence Department. They were not rectified until 1903, and they would not have been rectified then had it not been known by the right hon. Gentleman that the evidence of Sir William Nicholson was going to be made public.

*Mr. BRODRICK: That is a charge, a direct charge, against me. I beg to tell the House that it is absolutely without foundation. So far from its being a case of the Intelligence Department having been left alone from 1899 to 1903, in 1901 Sir William Nicholson was placed on the War Office Council, so that the whole of the evidence from his Department reached the Cabinet direct. But apart from that, as regards the organisation of his Department, I took up the matter very early. The Chancellor of the Exchequer adopted the very natural position that permanent additions to that Department should be delayed till the end of the war. We had an enormous number of officers employed on intelligence in South Africa, and at the end of the war I brought the matter before him. It was before the Treasury long before Sir William Nicholson gave any evidence whatever; and I obtained for him a large increase of officers, I think it was thirteen or fifteen, before he ever went before the Commission.

Mr. CHARLES HOBHOUSE said that if the right hon. Gentleman would turn to the Report he would see the statement there made that £3,000 was to be added to the Estimates for the Intelligence Department. Sir William Nicholson stated that that was the first time he had heard anything about that increase.

*Mr. BRODRICK: Sir William Nicholson was constantly in conference with the Committee that sat at the War Office the previous year to arrange what his future staff was to be, and that was submitted to the Treasury a long time before I think the Commission began its sittings. As to the charge against myself, a most unusual charge, that I never would have made any representation to the Treasury at all to add to this Department unless I had known that General Nicholson's evidence was going to be published, I think the hon. Member should withdraw it. I never knew what evidence Sir William Nicholson had given on the subject, nor had it the slightest effect on my action in the matter, which had been taken months before.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE said that, if the right hon. Gentleman put it on those grounds, he withdrew at once the personal charge against himself, but he would not withdraw it against the Department of which he was the head. He had not got the reference with him at the moment, but the evidence was there in the Report of the Commission for every man who cared to read it. The right hon. Gentleman had further declared that he was glad the debate had been raised. He commenced his remarks by saying it was unworthy of the Opposition to have brought a charge of failure against the Government. This debate had shown that the Opposition were justified in making that charge. The evidence in the Report was clear upon it. It was somewhat difficult to debate the whole of the Report because of the enormous mass of evidence collected and the multitudinous details gone into by the Commissioners, and by the fact that any criticism on the Report itself must fall into one of two lines. First, the want of preparation by the Government, second, the inability of the War Office to perform the duties which fell to their office during the war. That made any criticism on the Report extremely difficult, but it did not diminish the responsibility of the Cabinet. The right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary for Ireland had expressed the opinion that so far as the Army was concerned the Government deserved an acquittal. So far as the House was concerned, the jury which had to give the verdict on this debate was packed, but the discussion which took place in the House would penetrate into the country, and the country was the ultimate judge. The right hon. Gentleman said, supposing you did bring in a verdict of guilty, it was better to have the devil you did know than the devil you did not. But he remembered reading of a case where a house was cleansed of seven devils and the last state of that house was worse than the first.

AN HON. MEMBER: Because the other devils came in.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE said the devils alluded to were the devils who had come in in the last three or four weeks. It was quite true that the right hon. Gentleman was not fully responsible for the inception or the continuance of these defects, but he was responsible for a great part of the time covered by the Report. Lord Lansdowne, the first of the various Secretaries of State for War, had pointed out that the enemy we were going to fight was more formidable than any we had grappled with for years, and in view of that remark they were entitled to criticise the action of the Government. Reference was made to the fact that there was no plan of campaign, and Lord Lansdowne said—

> "I cannot see that anyone was prejudiced by the lack of a definite plan of campaign."

His secretary did not take that view, but thought that if a general had been sent out with definite instructions it would have been far better, and that view was the one that had been accepted by the Commission. No precise and definite instructions were given to any general officer who went out. That had been admitted by all. Lord Roberts pointed out to the Commission that in India, when hostilities were threatened, the Commander-in-Chief and the Quartermaster-General both submitted to the authorities definite plans of campaign, and measures were taken accordingly. Such was the experience of Lord Lansdowne during his Vice-royalty of India. And that was a plan that must have recommended itself to him during the time he was expecting hostilities to break out between ourselves and these two Republics, yet so far as they could make out, no precaution had been taken by him or any of his subordinate officials.

It had been said that no army was better found in the field than that in South Africa. The evidence relied on for that statement was that of Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener. They were not there until five months after the war broke out, and by that time the defects in the supply and so forth had been remedied by the officers on the spot. The evidence that should have been relied on was that of the Chief Supply Officer, General Buller, Lord Methuen, and others on the spot, which was of an entirely different character.

Colonel Richardson, the officer in charge of supplies in South Africa, had stated that when General Buller landed there was only a fortnight's supply for the troops, and that was brought out in the ships with which General Buller came. There were £8,500,000 worth of supplies in the storehouses in England, and Ladysmith had ten days supply for the ultimate garrison there, yet the fall of Ladysmith was to be the turning point of the war. That was to be the signal of the rising of the whole Dutch nation in South Africa against the British. What happened in order to pour supplies into Ladysmith? All the transport service of South Africa had to be disorganised and everything else had to be taken off the single line of railway that supplied it in order that these supplies should be got in. Such things might sound ridiculous to people now, but they were not ridiculous to those who had to defend Ladysmith, or to the Boers who hoped through the want of our preparation to be able to capture Ladysmith and raise the whole of the Dutch population. Lord Lansdowne had said if we had been at war with a naval Power we should not have sent out two army corps, and should have had a few weeks to accumulate stores on the sea-board, but we were not at war with a naval Power, the Boers had no fleet, and the result of all this delay was the Boers had all the advantage of the initiative, and during the weeks in which supplies and equipments were being prepared here, South Africa might have fallen. The whole of the delay which occurred proceeded from a false assumption. The Government pretended that they were ignorant of the preparations of the enemy. They played a sort of game with themselves, and thought that other people would be as slack as they were. But the Boers, who learned their lesson better, rigidly adhered to the maxim that diplomacy and military preparations should proceed side by side.

There was only one more point he wished to allude to. The right hon. Gentleman had talked, not for the first time, of the statement that at the beginning of the war in October, 1899, the War Office was not in a position to put into the field any part of the two army corps laid down as the standard of our requirements. There was only one organised body which went out—viz., General Barton's brigade of 45,000 men, and apart from that there were no organised forces in the country. Our fortresses, after we had provided one army corps, were practically defenceless, while as to the Auxiliaries, Lord Wolseley had stated that they were armed with obsolete guns with a range of shell fire which was contemptible, and that it would be dangerous and criminal to ask these Auxiliary forces to stand up against any modern artillery. That was the position around London, that was the state of the country after the right hon. Gentleman and the War Office had sent out one army corps. No wonder the Report stated that the defences of the country were at the time dangerously weak, and if in those facts the right hon. Gentleman could find matter for congratulation, well he must indeed be very short of comfort. If this state of things was to be remedied it could not be done by pretending that all had been well in the past and probably would be well in the future. The right hon. Gentleman had not always taken up that attitude. He could remember the time when he attacked the Secretary of State for disregarding the advice of his military advisers. Yet he seemed very apt nowadays to shelter himself behind the advice of his military advisers. He told them that if he or his successor failed they ought to be dismissed. But the House had been debarred by the action of the head of the Government from dismissing the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for India. It might have been an act of kindness on the part of a colleague to remove him from the War Office but it was an injustice to the public, for unless faults were brought home to the individuals responsible for them we should have neither economy nor efficiency in the future.

SIR CARNE RASCH (Essex, Chelmsford) thought the right hon. Baronet the Member for the Forest of Dean was hardly correct in his view as to quick-firing guns. The French had a battery of quick-firers in China which for some reason were withdrawn; the Germans and the Italians had quick-firing guns, with which they had been supplied at a cost of £2,000,000 in one case, and £1,000,000 in the other, but the guns were not satisfactory. In our case, we had two kinds of guns, one invented by Sir G. Clarke, and he thought the Government were better off now with those guns, although not absolutely up-to-date, than if they had re-armed the artillery three years ago with guns which were now obsolete. He considered the attack made by this Amendment on the present Front Bench was rather unfair. The condition of the War Office was due to the neglect of the Army by the Press, the nation, and the Government for the last 200 years. The country had been willing to find the money, but it had never gone into details, it had always allowed the War Office to muddle on as it could, and the standing Army had always been unpopular. That sort of thing had gone on from the time of William the Dutchman to the time of King George, and from the time of George III. to the South African War. It was the fault of the system rather than of the Government that during the last half-century or century the War Office had got into the condition described by The Times that morning as absolutely rotten and effete. It was well known that when Army Estimates came up for discussion Members immediately left the Legislative Chamber for more congenial employment. It might be, as Lord Randolph Churchill once said, that the Service Members were more vocal than articulate on military matters; but even though they were endowed with all the dialectical ability of the two Front Benches combined, it would be extremely difficult for them to induce hon. Members to listen to them on questions affecting the Services. The present Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland was responsible more than any other man for the condition of things which fell out during the South African War. He heard from the right hon. Gentleman three years ago speeches which he considered were the cleverest he had ever heard under the circumstances; and the Chief Secretary carried with him all Members on the Government side and the greater part of those on the opposite side of the House. But he and others felt that in certain details the right hon. Gentleman was absolutely incorrect; he had not had time to study the question. But that was not the fault of the right hon. Gentleman. When a man, after being in civilian life for some years, was pitchforked into a maelstrom of difficulties such as the War Office, he could not be expected to know every detail in six months. It was surprising that this attack should have come from a supporter of the Leader of the Opposition who, a few years ago, tried to run the British Army on the cheap by keeping it short of powder. The real point of importance was that this system which during the last 200 years had cost the country millions of money and thousands of lives, was, he hoped, under the auspices of the present Secretary of State for War, about to be for ever abolished.

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.) said that during the last ten years in Parliament he had taken a continuous interest in Army affairs, and, although a strong Party man, had invariably placed the welfare of the Services before Party allegiance. Before the outbreak of war he gave constant support to the Government in doing the best they could for the Army, and he desired to treat the subject now under discussion in a somewhat different way from that adopted by previous speakers. He fully agreed with the views put forward by the hon. Member for the Chelmsford Division. Over and over again when attempting to improve Army conditions they had had to speak to a practically empty House, empty Press Gallery, and unsympathetic public, and his sympathies had been altogether with the gentleman who had had the misfortune to be in charge of the War Office. The present Chief Secretary for Ireland, than whom no abler man sat on the Treasury Bench, did wonders to extricate the Government from the difficult position in which it found itself during the late war, and his successor the present Secretary of State for India had to perform a most difficult task in the face of fierce opposition from the military element at the War Office. The difficulty in dealing with the present question was that last night the Chief Secretary spoke with one voice, whereas the Prime Minister had recently spoken with another. It might be admitted that had great preparation been made it would have acted as a provocative upon the South African Republics. That the Government were sufficiently warned by the military authorities was agreed. The Chief Secretary declared that when the Government came into office their entire attention was devoted to the Navy, and very properly so. But the Secretary of State for War and his assistants must have known that they had duties to discharge, and they ought to have prepared what little army the country would allow them to have, for the object for which it was intended. Quite apart from the South African war we were supposed to have two army corps in a complete state of efficiency. We were to have at our disposal in this country 120,000 men, of whom 70,000 were to be ready to go at a moment's notice to any position for the purpose of carrying on warlike operations. Not only were they not in that condition, but, although warned every time the Army Estimates came up for discussion, the Government omitted to take the proper precautions for keeping that force in readiness.

There were in the House fifty or sixty members who, like himself, had had the honour of wearing Her Majesty's uniform, and they had done their utmost to force successive Ministers to put the Army on a sound foundation. On 8th April, 1897, he asked the Secretary of State whether he was aware that the Army Medical Department for the two army corps was forty short of its number, and the reply was that it was forty short, but that measures to make good the deficiency were under consideration. In June, 1898, the right hon. Gentleman declared there were sufficient for two army corps when at full strength, but it was then under strength. In 1898 on the Army Estimates he pointed out that not two but three army corps would be required in the event of war in South Africa, that the two army corps were not fully equipped, that we could not move troops from India or Egypt, and that the troops left in the Empire would be insufficient for its defence. In March, 1899, he pointed to the failure of the system and the fact that out of eleven new batteries only eight had been completed. The Service Members as a body complained of the position in which the Auxiliary forces were, but without avail. It had been urged that in the late war we were called upon to deal with circumstances altogether different from those of any other campaign. That could not be said with regard to the war which preceded the struggle in South Africa—viz., the Egyptian War. Nevertheless, in the debate on the Address in 1900, he pointed out that in the Egyptian War the hospitals were so defective that at the base of operations there were only two nurses, and that men were dying like flies owing to the cheeseparing policy of the Government.

Many references had been made to the fact that our guns were not up to standard; yet during the period 1886–92, while a Conservative Government was in power, the artillery batteries were reduced from six guns to four, and the spare horses taken from them. It was pointed out at the time that properly trained horses could not be produced at a moment's notice, and protests were entered against the starvation that was taking place. The same thing was true of all the departments. Everybody knew the result of the Veterinary Department being undermanned. Through the horses not being properly conditioned, and there being no one competent to take charge of them, at least £3,000,000 out of the £8,000,000 spent was wasted. In June, 1903, the Secretary of State, in reply to a Question, stated that there were no fewer than thirty-five vacancies, that the establishment was 20 per cent. below peace strength, and that there were five candidates for thirty-six vacancies. So that not only were the Departments defective before the war, but even after the war no steps were taken to bring the forces up to their proper strength. It was well-known that when war broke out the fortresses of the country had to be depleted of their guns and the Navy drawn upon, and he distinctly remembered the then Financial Secretary to the War Office, while refusing to supply the quick-firing guns which it was pointed out were absolutely essential, boasting that he had given a sum of £150,000 for converting practically worthless guns into quickfirers. In the face of these facts it was impossible to justify the Prime Minister's recent statement that immediately on coming into office the Government set to work to bring up the Army which had been abandoned by the "professors of economy."

As to ammunition, Sir H. Brackenbury had stated that there was a deficiency of 326 machine guns, and a reserve of only one horse artillery battery and one 5-in. howitzer, while Lord Lansdowne stated—

> "It would be a national misfortune were it to become known that after our First Army Corps had left these shores we could produce only thirty-six battalions with nothing behind them but numbers of partially trained Militia battalions and men who had been discarded from the regular battalions because they were too young to go on foreign service."

Therefore only one army corps was available, and even that was not properly equipped, for on 11th October Lord Wolseley said—

> "We soon came to the end of our available military stores. I found that a demand for 250 sets of saddlery could not be completed."

Further there was neither clothing nor saddlery for the mounted infantry of the Fifth Division if they had been ordered to embark in the month of November, and the Commander-in-Chief declared that when one army corps had been despatched he had not the necessary material to despatch a second army corps. The Prime Minister did not wish to throw blame upon the military authorities, for he said—

> "What I want you to understand is that all the so-called failures of the war arose out of that miscalculation, and not out of previous War Office maladministration."

But that did not exonerate the Prime Minister for not having ready the two army corps. Then the Prime Minister went on to say—

> "Observe that in so saying I am offering a defence, not for the Government, but for the military advisers of the Government."

The right hon. Gentleman attempted to escape Cabinet responsibility, and that was what he wanted to enforce upon the House. He was not going to take any advantage of that in order to abuse the Ministry, but when the Government attempted to ride off upon the backs of their military advisers, and claimed that they did all the military advisers asked them to do, they stood condemned by the Report of the Commission. He had shown how, years before the war broke out, he had pressed the Government to attend to this service. Surgeon-General Jameson, referring to the deficient medical service, said—

> "He had often made representations at the Army Board, but that the answer given was that 'the trained soldier is the only man you cannot purchase in the open market, and that all the money was wanted for trained soldiers.'"

Well, they did get medical officers in the open market, but they all knew that ordinary medical practitioners had no chance whatever, without previous military experience, when called upon to deal with great administrative questions, or to establish a hospital at the base. The Secretary of State for War of the day said he had reserve medical officers to draw from, but he knew they were men who, for active service, were past their work. The result was that he had to draw upon inexperienced men in South Africa, with the shocking results which were disclosed by the hon. Member for Westminster. The people of this country had not realised the number of men who went out to fight our battles in South Africa who would have been safe and sound to-day if only proper precautions had been taken to keep a sufficient staff of Army medical men for the two army corps. Surgeon-General Jameson went on to say—

> "When the South African war broke out what happened was as follows: The whole, practically, of the Army Medical Corps personnel, officers and men, was exhausted in supplying the First Army Corps, and in manning the base hospitals and stationary hospitals."

All that was pointed out two or three years before the war broke out, and in the face of that the Prime Minister said—

> "I do not believe it will ever be maintained that the Army we have sent into the field was inadequately equipped with any modern requirements or any equipment which the progress of invention has shown to be necessary to a modern Army."

That would be poor consolation for himself and many others, for he did not suppose there was a member of the Service Committee who had not sustained some loss during the war, and could count upon his fingers the number of relatives, connections, and friends lost in the war, many of whom might have been saved if what the Prime Minister boasted was true had been true. Here was what Sir Frederick Treves said upon this point—

> "The ambulance waggons jolted and were old-fashioned. The Boers had good ambulances, but an English ambulance is hardly fit to transport the sick."

That was not much consolation for those who had relatives wounded in the South African war.

With regard to stores, so far from being prepared, they were not only deficient, but the Government absolutely refused to incur the necessary expenditure in order to bring their military stores up to what they declared to be the necessities of the situation for the general defence of the country with two army corps. The Commissioners reported that—

> "The Army Board soon brought to light a serious deficiency in the stores and material required on the mobilisation of an army corps. The minutes of the Army Board during the period up to 22nd September, 1899, make it clear that in the opinion of that Board the main difficulty was the refusal of sanction for the expenditure of the money involved, amounting to about £640,000."

Lord Lansdowne said he brought the whole circumstances before his colleagues. The decision not to sanction the expenditure, therefore, was taken by the Cabinet, though Lord Lansdowne of course does not dissociate himself from it. They could not therefore get rid of Cabinet responsibility in this way. In the minute in which Lord Lansdowne brought this matter before the Cabinet he said—

> "As matters now stand, it would not be possible to place a mobilised army corps and a cavalry division in the north of Natal under about four months. If, on the other hand, all our preparations were complete, this period might be reduced by about one month."

Therefore that period might have been reduced by about one month if proper preparations had been carried out in this country. How absurd, under these circumstances, it was to endeavour to throw the blame on the Commander-in-Chief, because every particle of evidence went to show that the whole key of this position was in the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition that the Government were playing a policy of bluff, and failed to make the necessary preparations. They were doing this behind the backs and without the knowledge of the military authorities, and when this policy of bluff failed they came down upon their military advisers and blamed them. Lord Wolseley suggested that an army corps should be mobilised on Salisbury Plain in order to see what defects there were, and in order that they might be ready to move abroad at any moment. That advice was neglected, and Lord Wolseley went on to say—

Captain Norton.

> "As a soldier, it seemed to me to be madness to go on as we were from week to week, not making preparations for an eventuality which to me seemed a certainty."

He went on to say that if those preparations had been ready they might have placed an army in the Transvaal long before they did. It had been said that the transport could not have been got ready. The attempt was made and why was it not got ready? Simply because the Cabinet would not sanction the expenditure. The Prime Minister spoke of starving the Army, but who starved it? Why, the present Cabinet. The Report states that—

> "On the 9th of September the Quartermaster-General asked to spend money on mules, but on the 16th of September the Secretary of State declined to enter upon any expenditure in connection with these services at present."

And the Report went on to say—

> "I think we wanted 6,000 and we were allowed to purchase 1,300 odd, and on the 2nd October permission was given to buy the remainder of the mules we required."

And when it was too late the remainder of the mules were purchased. On the 6th of September, Lord Wolseley said—

> "I pressed that more field artillery should be placed on the higher establishments."

Would that have interfered with political negotiations, for it would certainly have been no threat to the Boers. Lord Wolseley proceeded—

> "The answer I received was that the question should be deferred to the Estimates of 1900."

On the 3rd of November, 1896, Lord Wolseley addressed the Secretary of State on the subject of increasing the Natal garrison and he said—

> "I think I may say that I was always hammering at this one chord, and pointing out whenever I was asked, and even at times when I was not asked, that increases were necessary in order to bring up the Army to what I had laid down as the minimum which I thought we always ought to have ready for home defence; and to enable us to send a small army of two army corps abroad."

Throughout the war he had supported the Government because he knew that owing to the want of preparation and the enormous task before them they were straining every effort to carry out that task as well as they could under the circumstances. His point was that the preparations which ought to have been made, irrespective of any war whatever, were not made. The Commander-in-Chief himself distinctly stated that he was always hammering away and trying to get the Government to bring up the Army to the standard he had laid down. He did not blame the Army authorities, but he blamed the Cabinet for not having given those in charge of the Army proper support. After the war had begun they pressed for a system of organising drafts at Aldershot in order to keep the Yeomanry in South Africa what he called alive, but their advice was not taken until a year or two after, and what was the result? Lord Methuen said—

> "When the second contingent of Yeomanry came out, their riding was hopelessly bad; they had no knowledge of a horse or how to ride, and there were only a few farmers among them."

They had been pressing the Government over and over again to make the Yeomanry force effective. The Commissioners wound up by saying—

> "We regret to say that we are not satisfied that enough is being done to place matters on a better footing in the event of another emergency."

His contention was that they were in no better position at the present moment to send two complete army corps abroad, and have one fully equipped at home, than they were prior to the war. The Commissioners went on to say that—

> "The Volunteers and Yeomanry proved themselves of value in the late war under an organisation which was improvised for them in the face of the enemy."

Complaint had been made by some hon. Members on the Front Bench that the Opposition had not dealt with the Report, but the right hon Baronet the Member for the Forest Dean dealt with the Report and dealt with it exhaustively. There had been no answer given to any of their statements, therefore, whether the Government stood upon the platform of preparation prior to the war, or upon the platform of the Report of the Commission with reference to the carrying out of the war, they stood condemned in the eyes of the country. If the people only realised that owing to the conduct of the present Government between 20,000 and 30,000 British homes had been rendered desolate it would go very hard with the Government when they appealed to the country.

*COLONEL WELBY (Taunton) said that after listening to the greater part of this debate, it was very refreshing to find an hon. Member on the other side who had had practical experience of the Army rising to take part in the debate. He honestly confessed that, taking into consideration the speeches of the mover and the seconder of this Amendment, and those which had been delivered in support of it, it was very difficult to believe that the intention of this Amendment was one to improve the military forces of this country. The hon. and gallant Member opposite ended his speech by saying that the Government stood condemned. He ventured to say that this was not a question of acquittal or condemnation either in the eyes of the man in the street or of the nation at large. The nation was well aware from the Report of the Commission, and from the experience of our soldiers in South Africa, that there had been want of foresight, want of preparation, and there might have been mismanagement; but what they felt was that, no matter which Party had been in office, there would have been the same state of inefficiency, and it might have been even greater if the other side had been in office. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh, oh!"] He was sorry that hon. Members opposite should differ, but it was quite natural that they should. All he was trying to do was to represent to them the general feeling of the country upon this point. The people felt that under our present military and political system there could not have been a war of this magnitude of which it could not have been said that there was want of foresight, want of preparation, and mismanagement. What the nation really wanted was not to pay attention to the details which the hon. and gallant Member opposite had so ably put before the House, but to know how in future they were going to avoid a repetition of those mistakes and this want of preparation and foresight. This Amendment was directed against His Majesty's Ministers. He ventured to say that if they wished to fix the blame, they would have to lay it more upon the system. Ever since he came into this House he had been a constant critic of the War Office. The right hon. Baronet the Member for the Forest of Dean said they ought to approach this subject in a non-Party manner. He could appeal to his past action upon this subject, for he had spoken against the Government and voted against them, and he had divided the House against the Government in what he believed to be the best interests of the Army and the country. Therefore he stood in an independent position in rising to speak that afternoon to condemn the Amendment which had been moved.

Under their present military system it was impossible that there could be proper preparation for a war of this magnitude. The late war had carried a lesson into every home in the country, and the mismanagement and want of foresight in the conduct of that war was known in every village; but to say that those who were to blame were the Ministers of the Crown, and not the system, was an absolute mistake. The people knew perfectly well that if the Front Bench opposite had been in power, there would have been in all probability even less preparation, and there would certainly have been less foresight. [OPPOSITION cries of "No, no!"] There was no efficient preparation, simply because the nation had never foreseen or anticipated a war of this magnitude under modern conditions. Therefore there had not been that public opinion behind the Government upon this question without which it was impossible to carry out a far-reaching reform of the Army system. He felt it his duty when the late Secretary of State for War produced his scheme of reorganisation and reform to oppose it tooth and nail. He thought, however, that the scheme put forward by Lord Esher's Committee struck at the very root of the inefficiency of the War Office and the mismanagement of the Army, and he was prepared to give his hearty support to that scheme. Although he had been a constant critic of His Majesty's Government, and had attempted from the time he came into the House to the breaking out of the war to bring to the notice of the War Office what he knew from experience were defects in their military system; although his criticisms were very often received with a very wet blanket and a shower of very cold water, especially from the present Secretary of State for India, his only regret was that his words were wasted when they might have saved a great deal of trouble and disaster during the late war. He repeated that the responsibility for all these defects did not rest upon His Majesty's Ministers, but upon our system of Army organisation. Under the conditions prevailing when the war in South Africa broke out, it was impossible for the Government to make further preparations in Cape Colony and Natal, for they had not the troops to send there unless they sent out the Guards Brigade, called out the Reserves, or brought troops from India. If any of those three courses had been adopted, he ventured to say that there was not an hon. Member opposite who would not have said that the Government were forcing on a war. Under the present system they could not send out troops in that special way without drawing attention to it in the House of Commons, and in every newspaper, and in that way every word would be carried to foreign countries, and to that particular country which was in dispute with ourselves. Under those conditions it was absolutely unjust and wrong to condemn His Majesty's Ministers, who did their best under the circumstances. Critic as he had ever been of the War Office, he would say that when the strain of the war came upon them no Department could have worked harder and better, for they toiled night and day, and did everything which was possible for them to do. They were not able to put into the field well organised and prepared troops because their system prevented it. With regard to the Amendment, he looked upon it as one which was simply political and had nothing whatever to do with the military defects of this country. The need for military reform was present to the minds of all those who were not simply and purely Party men, and when this new scheme which was before them was brought forward they would have to debate it, and they must look at it in the light of all the defects and deficiencies which had been shown in the Commission's Report. In the light of what he had said it would give him very great pleasure to vote against this Amendment.

*MR. J. S. AINSWORTH (Argyllshire) said that if the question were asked, "Who won the war?" the answer of the country would be, the Army and the Country. He was particularly sorry to hear the suggestion made that the responsibility for what they all deplored lay at the door of the Opposition and the Army. He thought the Opposition were able to take care of themselves. He would recommend hon. Gentlemen opposite to say nothing against the Army in the country. He was reminded in this connection of a story of what happened before the battle of Waterloo. The Duke of Wellington, observing a British soldier walking about the streets of Brussels, said to a friend, "That is the gentleman who has got to do it, and if they only give me enough of him I think we shall do it." That had been the secret of our success, not only in the late war but in all the wars in which we had been engaged. These men were a credit to the country. It had been frequently stated during the past few years that the cause of the misfortunes during the early stages of the war in South Africa was the failure of the Intelligence Department. It was evident now that it was not the Intelligence Department that failed to supply information to the Government, but the Government that, for some inexplicable reason, refused to avail themselves of that information. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said they were obliged to differentiate between fact and opinion, but it should be remembered that nearly everything they got from the Intelligence Department was opinion. How were they going to differentiate fact from opinion in the case of the Intelligence Department? It seemed to him that what had occurred was not the fault of the Army; he was prepared to go so far as to say that it was not even the fault of the War Office. The breakdown was due to the want of a policy on the part of the Government. That had been made clear by the speech of the right hon. Gentleman. The responsibility for the mistakes which had been made must rest on the Cabinet collectively, and especially on the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. Hon. Members might feel certain that if we had the most perfect Army and the most perfect War Office in the world there would be a breakdown, unless we had at the same time a Government with a definite policy.

SIR GEORGE BARTLEY (Islington, N.) said it so happened that he was in Johannesburg in the critical months of August and September before the war, and it would be wrong of him if he did not say distinctly that our preparations were not sufficient. He agreed with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham that it was extremely difficult to prepare for war, and at the same time convey to the Boers the idea that we desired to prevent war. He regretted, however, that we did not take greater steps to safeguard the country at that time. But everything showed that the Government were most anxious not to do anything which could suggest a threat. He thought they went too far in that way. The mover of the Amendment had referred to the certainty that the Orange Free State would join the Transvaal in the event of war. When in Johannesburg he took an interest in that subject, and he could emphatically say that, as to the action of the Orange Free State, the most competent authorities were in doubt up to the last moment. He had no hesitation in saying that there were two special reasons which determined the action of the Transvaal. The telegram of the Emperor of Germany had given the Boers immense encouragement, and they believed that they would have the support of at least one European State; and another influence unquestionably was that of the speeches of the Opposition, which were reprinted and circulated broadcast in South Africa. Those speeches were one of the greatest incentives to war. He remembered the arrival of the troops from India, and he could say that they did arrive in time, their arrival causing intense relief at a critical moment. He was greatly impressed by the appearance of the troops, and he suggested to the Governor of the Colony that they should be paraded in mass for the purpose of impressing the Boers, but the emergency was so great that this could not be done, and the men were entrained and sent up to Pietermaritzburg immediately on landing. Looking back over those events, he thought it was a pity that they should be made matters of recrimination. They must look to the future and see that something was done to prevent a recurrence of the mistakes which had admittedly been made. He joined the public service after the close of the Crimean War. There was talk then of reforming the War Office. The reform had been going on ever since, but it would appear from the disclosures that had been made that the work was not yet complete. He believed that it would have been impossible for the Transvaal to develop as it should do under the government of President Kruger. He believed that greater happiness and prosperity for that country would ensue as a consequence of the war.

Mr. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk, Mid) said that the failure of the Government to provide adequate guns, rifles, and ammunition was an indication of the general inefficiency of its arrangements. They were told yesterday that in the midst of the war the Government had to buy 108 quick-firing guns in Germany. The Boer Republics had those modern guns; England with its great resources had none. The Boers had provided themselves with pom-poms from England. We had none, and English-made guns were turned upon our soldiers. In February, 1900, he himself called the attention of the then Under-Secretary for War to the incorrect sighting of the rifles with which our troops were armed. The defect was made light of, treated as rather theoretical than practical, but General Brackenbury in his evidence said that the discovery was "an awful blow." The Government reserve of rifle cartridges at the time of the war consisted in the main of hollow-nosed bullets, and it became a serious question whether they did not come within the provisions of the Hague Convention. Partly on this ground, and partly because when the rifle was foul they were apt to break up prematurely, 66,000,000 of them were discarded. For these reasons, if for no others, he thought the Government preparations must be condemned.

Mr. ROBSON (South Shields) May I, with the permission of the House, make a statement, which is in the nature of a personal explanation, with regard to a criticism passed last night by the ex-Colonial Secretary upon what I had said as to the evidence of Sir William Butler? I had stated that in his evidence Sir William Butler had mentioned 80,000 to 100,000 men as being the force which might be required if the Transvaal were to be annexed. The right hon. Gentleman said in reference to that—

> "The hon. and learned Member produced a statement which amazed me, that Sir William Butler had said that 80,000 to 100,000 men would be required. When did Sir William Butler say that? He did not say anything of the kind."

The right hon. Gentleman went on to hint that I had not fairly treated the House in relation to that statement. Now, Sir, without comment, I will read what General Butler did say in his evidence. In answer to a question as to the report that he had given 100,000 men as being the necessary number that would be required, he says—

> "There is no document in evidence of that, but I stated 100,000 men over and over again. To be more particular, I stated 80,000 irrespective of the lines of communication, and the thing was growing. I was asked by a very high authority early in May"

that is the authority the right hon. Gentlemen himself cited—

> "if it was necessary to bring pressure on the Boers with reference to some political questions, such as the franchise, could the existing force in South Africa be of any use if moved towards the frontier? I laughed openly at the idea. 'No,' I said, 'the existing force in South Africa could only hold a few positions, which I have in my mind, until reinforcements arrive, and to bring pressure on the Dutch Republic at least 40,000 men will be required.'"

[Laughter and cheers.] Hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite had better wait—

> "That was early in May—a sudden, offhand question, nothing more. As things went on, I put that number very much higher, and I said to my staff, '80,000 men exclusive of the lines of communication,' and that was nothing wonderful as the Dutch were writing to that effect at the time."

The House had an impression that I had in some way attempted to mislead it. The suggestion ought never to have been made and ought now to be withdrawn.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): I am not competent, and I have no desire, to defend the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham in his presence, but when he happens to be absent I think it is my privilege to continue the quotation which the hon. Member opposite has produced, apparently with the intention of confuting the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. I can find no more pertinent confirmation of the charge, if it be a charge, which my right hon. friend produced last night than the sequel to the passage which the hon. and learned Gentleman has quoted. What was the gist, the whole point, of my right hon. friend's remark? He said that Sir William Butler, an officer for whom I may say I have the most profound and sincere respect, being the officer in command of the troops in South Africa, advised the Executive Government that in his opinion a force of 40,000 men was sufficient for the purpose of putting pressure on the Dutch Republics. The hon. and learned Gentleman interrupted and said that on some other occasion he made some other remark. My right hon. friend said—

> "I will not do Sir William Butler the injustice of supposing that, if he knew that a larger force than that was necessary, he failed to perform the primary duty of a general in command and inform his Government."

Now what is the sequel? The hon. and learned Member stopped at the end of question 13,506. The next question is this—

> "Did you put that in an official document of any sort? Answer—I do not know that I put it into any official document."

MR. ROBSON: I must ask the right hon. Gentleman to deal fairly with the point between myself and the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. I stated in my speech that Sir William Butler had said this to members of his staff. That was the observation I made. That was the observation which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said did not exist.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I am within the recollection of the House, and I ask whether that is the meaning of a statement made in a debate on the Address—on a vote of censure on the Government—when the hon. and learned Member gets up and reproaches the Government with not having sent more troops because their own general in the field said they ought to send more. I have not done. The next question which I think the hon. Member might have read is this.

MR. ROBSON: I will read it all if you like.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: No, I think the time is not long enough. But I will read it.

> "Sir John Edge—Did you inform the Government or the War Office? Answer—No, in fact I waited to be asked my numbers."

I ask the House whether the hon. and learned Member's presentation of his own defence just now was a full and adequate presentation of the facts.

I think I have said enough about what, after all, is an unimportant point. I address the House with some reluctance upon this question at all. My position is a peculiar one. I am not personally acquainted with the transactions which have been discussed during this debate; I am not personally responsible for them. I cannot deny that there have been occasions on which I have expressed opinions which have committed me to certain views with respect to them. I hold those views still. I do feel, nevertheless, that nothing I have said disqualifies me from expressing a very clear opinion as to the discussion which has taken place and as to the view which the House is invited to take with regard to this Amendment. I believe that the Opposition has once more misunderstood the whole feeling of the country. The hon. and learned Member for South Shields rebuked me with having said that in my opinion the country did not greatly care about the question he has raised and which he has placed before the House with so much ability. I am bound to say that if at the beginning of this discussion I thought, as I did, that the country does not very greatly care to reopen this long-past matter, that it does not really very greatly care about the minute details which the hon. and gallant Member for Newington discussed with so much propriety, but not, I think, with very great relevance; I think so still. But I think that the country does care very much about a matter which has been touched upon very little during the course of this debate—namely, the condition of affairs at the present time and the condition of affairs as it may be in the future. It may be alleged that I have committed myself to much that has been said by hon. Members, whether on the other side of the House or on this side. I have not been in the habit of going back on my own opinion, and nothing has occurred to induce me to do so now. It may indeed be possible to learn a wise lesson from the views which seem to be common among hon. Members on both sides. But I do think there has been an enormous amount of serious exaggeration and misapplication of the lessons taught in the Blue-book. I was interested and gratified to hear the soldiers defended from that side of the House. It was a new and pleasant experience. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh, oh," and MINISTERIAL cheers.] I am not speaking of all hon. Members opposite, but I have a very keen and painful recollection of the opinions I have heard expressed about our officers, and about our soldiers, from hon. Members on the other side of the House. [AN HON. MEMBER: Methods of barbarism.] I shall make no personal allusions. I am only too delighted that we have now come to a saner frame of mind, and that the merits and capacities of our soldiers, whether officers commanding or privates, are coming to be recognised by hon. Members opposite as they ought to be.

It does not become me to discuss in any detail what I may call the diplomatic side of this question. There has been a great deal said, and effectually answered, on this side in respect to the diplomatic proceedings which took place before the commencement of the late war. I have never been quite able to understand the disclaimer of the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition. He has told us that he really did not in any way contribute to these diplomatic difficulties, and he has explained, or endeavoured to explain, a phrase which has very often, and I think justly, been quoted against him. I was at that time in no way responsible for the Army or for the diplomatic proceedings, but I have refreshed my memory, and I have informed myself of what the right hon. Gentleman did say. Although I do not want to enter into any recriminations, I say this—that if I had been a soldier serving in the field, or if I had been a member of the Transvaal Legislature at the time when the right hon. Member spoke, I should have put only one interpretation on what he said, and I should have agreed that that interpretation was the same which would be put upon it by any sane man in this country or out of it. The right hon. Gentleman has referred to a second edition—a revised version—of the remarks attributed to him. I have the original report which appeared in an Essex paper on the morrow of the speech. This is what the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "There are some newspapers which talk freely of the probability and even the necessity of war, and the public mind has been distracted in consequence. I think it right to say plainly that I for my part can discern nothing in what has occurred to justify either warlike action or military preparations."

I turn to another column of that same Essex paper on that same day, and I find that the whole of the remarks were straightway telegraphed to South Africa. [OPPOSITION cries of "Why not?"] Very well, why not? Now, I cannot but believe that if it had been the object of the right hon. Gentleman to encourage those who were intending war against us, no better means could have been devised for the purpose. An hon. Member says

"Why not?" I will tell him why not. I heard the hon. and learned Member for South Shields make his attack on the Government. One of the things which impressed me most in his able speech, was his admission, from start to finish of that speech of the, proposition for which we have always been contending—that the Boer Republics were preparing for war, that they meant war and were bent upon war, and that we ought to have expected nothing but war. That was the argument he adduced in order to strengthen his attack on the Government and I admit the logical consistency, but what about the speech of the right hon. Gentleman when he knew that war was being contemplated and that war was in preparation against the country to which he belonged?

I pass to another phase of the question. It is made a matter of reproach against the Government that they were not prepared for this emergency for which the hon. and learned Member says they ought to have been prepared. My opinion would coincide with that of the hon. and gallant Member for Taunton, who said our Army system was to blame for the position in which we then found ourselves. The hon. and gallant Member for Bristol spoke of the preparedness of the Boers. He said that within two days they had mobilised and crossed the frontier. It was perfectly true that they did make an aggressive advance against our colonies. What was our position when this war broke out? It was a position in which the Army system had invariably placed us. It was a position absolutely different from that which is occupied by any other European country. In the first place we cannot send any force into action without mobilising the Army. That is not a new thing. That is part of the system which was invented by hon. Members opposite, which has been cultivated by hon. Members opposite, and which is now defended by hon. Members opposite; and let me point out that mobilisation must have taken place, and did take place, 8,000 miles from the military front. The hon. Member cites to us the action of the Boers. Does he really suggest that it would have been in the interests of peace, for which the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition was so curiously anxious—and to which he contributed so little—that it would have been of any assistance to the negotiations if we had mobilised the whole of the Army Reserve three months before the date at which war was declared? No, Sir, I draw a totally different lesson from the words of the hon. and learned Member for South Shields and the hon. Member for Bristol. It has been pointed out that when the war began we had no troops that we were able to send without mobilising the Army. The Report of the Commission has demonstrated in unmistakable language that another brigade might have turned the fortunes of the war in Natal. Is the hon. Member who dwelt on this subject prepared to give us that brigade in future? There are two things which are needed before you can enable a martial nation to give effect to its power at the outbreak of war. There is preparation in the matter of men; there is preparation in the matter of money. Both these things, the Commissioners pointed out, we ought to have. Never yet have we had either. The authority of the House of Commons is paramount. We cannot spend a shilling without the authority of the House of Commons. Does the hon. and learned Member suggest that it would have been well for the Government to come down at the time these negotiations were being conducted and ask for a credit of £10,000,000 sterling to fight the Transvaal? Does he suggest that it would have been well for the Secretary for War to have issued a proclamation in the Queen's name to embody the Reserve? What is the alternative? The alternative is always to have a force adequate to the needs of this country, and possibly a sum available for the utilisation of that force. I think I am right in saying that in the corners of this Report we find recommendations of that character. We find recommendations, put, no doubt, with great moderation, that this country assign to the Executive Government a fund which would enable it to prepare for war without the publicity which necessarily accompanies a Vote of Parliament. Does the hon. and learned Member agree with that proposition? If so, I look upon him no longer as an opponent, but as an ally. I quite agree that that is a remedy for the disease we all know to exist. But these defects are part of our Army system—inherent in it. They have been part of our Army system for years and years, and if anybody has done anything to mend that system it is certainly not the Party opposite.

I claim the support of the hon. and gallant Member in a reform of which I think he has justly pointed out the importance, but I cannot go further, when he comes to speak of matters of supply, clothing, and transport. I believe that he struck an entirely false note with regard to these matters. I think, perhaps, if he had studied as much as some of us have studied the history of other wars in other lands he would have been cautious before he ventured upon a denunciation of the performances of our auxiliary departments during the late war. It is perfectly true that there was a depletion of our stores, and I have spoken very strongly about what I considered were the steps which ought to have been taken to set that right; but when it is said that there was great dereliction of duty in supplying the necessary stores and provisions to the troops in the field, he goes far beyond the fact, and he goes far beyond the authority given to him in the Report of the Royal Commission. I believe there was a great, an unreasonable, a wrong depletion of our stores at the beginning of the war. I know perfectly well that it was true before the war, and much more true of many a year anterior to that time. But it is not the fact that our troops were without the necessaries, I may almost say the luxuries, of life during that campaign. I honestly believe that never was an army in the field better supplied from start to finish with everything that was necessary for the clothing, the feeding, equipment, and arming of the men. I admit that those supplies were furnished under circumstances of which we have no reason to be proud, and I think we ran very near to the point of danger. In some respects we passed it. But, admitting that, I think a little credit should be given to those who repaired that error in the face of an emergency. It would have completed the story if the hon. and learned Member had told us that, barring the accidents of war, the fighting, and the marching, which are incidents of every campaign, the troops were never without food. No army was ever so well fed. As to the clothing, too, although the clothing which was adapted to the climate was lacking at first, it was supplied in time for the troops to get the benefit of it. That the transport, which had to perform its duties in a country where distances are reckoned, not by miles or scores of miles, but by hundreds of miles, where railways in war time are practically non-existent, or where they exist, make an enormous extra demand upon the Army—that that transport succeeded in practically never being a day behind the troops for the benefit of which it existed is a fact to be proud of.

Now, Sir, let me say a word about guns, There, again, I venture to think the hon. Member has gone a little beyond the facts. It is true that there is need for reformation in our artillery material, but I think the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Forest of Dean is a little in advance of the facts on this point. I am sure the House will recognise the value of any statements he may make and that he has been a most impartial critic in these matters, and has earned the goodwill of both services in that respect. Therefore, I hesitate to dispute any allegation he may make; but when he told us that the Boers had 120 quick-firing guns, and that in that was to be found the mark of the inadequacy of our supply of guns, I think he went a little in advance of the facts.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE: The statement I made I believe to be true. It was not my own statement. I quoted it from the notes of the Prussian Staff on the war.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I have read that statement, and I think there is some confusion of fact in it. The fact is that the number of quick-firing field guns was exceedingly small, though the number was in advance of our own, for this reason. There was no country in Europe, with the possible exception of France, which at that time had a quick-firing field gun; but it was possible for a small State to buy a fancy article, and the Boer States did so. But they bought a very much smaller number than the right hon. Gentleman suggested. It would have been a very serious undertaking for us to have armed ourselves with what I call this embryo quick-firing gun which no European country possessed. France did possess something approaching a quick-firing gun, but Germany did not, Russia did not, and we did not. I believe we have gained greatly by the postponement of the operation of re-arming our artillery, and, if I am permitted to ask the House to sanction expenditure this year, I believe I shall be able to prove that as the result of that postponement we shall get a much better gun. It is undoubtedly true, and there is undoubtedly force in the allegation that in respect of heavy guns we were out-classed at the beginning of the war by the heavy guns in the possession of the Boers. We were only then beginning to realise what one or two Governments, notably the Russian and the French Governments, had realised—that these heavy guns can with advantage be taken into the field. We suffered, but I do not think to anything like the extent that the hon. and learned Member opposite has suggested. I think the general artillery view is that the material damage done by these guns was small, and that the effect of our guns was quite as great as could be possibly expected, considering the country in which they were operating and the obstacles to which they were opposed. I do not believe, as a matter of fact, that the introduction of quick-firing guns would have made any substantial difference in the progress of the war. But I admit that it would have been wise and provident if we had gone a little in advance of military opinion of the time and had furnished our Army with a certain number of heavier guns. We were not, after all, so very inadequately provided with artillery in the war. We began with 91 guns. We ended up with 752, and I am unable to credit that the organisation at home could have been so bad as it has been described if, during the progress of the war, it could increase the number of guns from 91 to 752.

The peroration of the hon. Member for Camberwell was undoubtedly eloquent, but he pitched in a very false note. He spoke of the bones of men whitening in South Africa, of hearts made sad, and of many homes darkened because the supplies which ought to have been furnished to our troops were not forthcoming. That is a false note. It is not a fact. I do not believe, if you went through the whole of the regiments which so cheerfully bore the inevitable privations of the campaign, you would find they adopted such an attitude at any period of the war. There were losses, lamentable losses. I do not care to apportion the responsibility for those losses, but I would say that principally they were due to the fact that with an army unspecialised for the task it had to perform we were fighting an army thoroughly specialised in their own country. But granting every loss, I believe that no modern campaign has ever been conducted in which there was so small a proportion of avoidable losses as there was in this campaign. If any hon. Member had gone as I have gone in the footsteps of the armies in the Franco-German and the Russo-Turkish Wars, then he would have understood what is meant by the losses which overtake armies in the field, due to causes such as were described by the hon. Member for Camberwell.

Well, Sir, we are asked to take our example from the other side. We are told we ought to have been more provident, that we ought to have foreseen the number of men that would be required to terminate this war. We were told that the Government of the day estimated that an Army of 70,000 or 80,000 men would be sufficient, and that we did not foresee that 250,000 men would eventually have to be put in the field. Let me say a word on that. The hon. Member pointed out that the addition to the numbers originally calculated was the necessary penalty we paid for our want of success in the first weeks of the campaign. That is perfectly true, but I can recall a campaign which is famous, or infamous, and which is usually called the surrender of Majuba. I have never had any reason to doubt that what took place then was that the officer in command of the troops had positive orders to make no terms with the enemy until he had defeated them. But what happened? The enemy defeated him, and, within a day or two, orders were sent to make peace. I quite admit that in that case no addition was necessary to the numbers originally sent out. That is the analogy we are asked to follow.

SIR JAMES JOICEY (Durham, Chester-le-Street): That is not correct. I myself heard Lord Kimberley make the statement that orders were sent to make terms of peace before Majuba.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I adhere to the opinion that my information is correct. But I quote the case as an example of what ought to be avoided in making war. It is true there were failures, which we all regret. Our soldiers fought bravely, and if they were defeated, and because they were defeated, we had to send out more men until we achieved success. That was done then, and I hope it will always be done when a British Army is in the field. So far from having anything to apologise for, I think the Government of the day ought to be congratulated because they had the determination to insist that the war should be carried through to the bitter end, and that the honour of the British Army should be re-established. We are asked to censure the Government because they failed to prepare the Army for war. I have been, perhaps, occasionally rather a stormy petrel in these military waters, and I have not always been in agreement with my Party, but I have been a very careful, and I hope a very impartial, student of the history of the War Office and the Army during late years. I challenge contradiction from any hon. Member when I say that what has been done for the Army by the present Administration is incomparably in advance of anything that has been done in the whole of the last twenty years by the Party opposite. Hon. Members opposite laugh. I wonder how many of them know. I believe I have earned a cheer now and then by enlarging on this subject, but when I spoke I did not speak altogether without knowledge. We are asked now to give a verdict on the Blue-book. It is not the first Blue-book, nor the tenth, nor the hundredth—my shelves are piled with Blue-books which have recorded the failures of the past, and principally of the Party opposite. [AN HON. MEMBER: Oh!] I do not think the hon. Member who objects has any real recollection of the facts. I have the most painful recollection. I have been through them all, analysed and annotated them, and know of what I speak. They have one common characteristic. I do not desire to draw a distinction between this and that Party. I have always said the same thing, that these Blue-books have been sterile, that they have produced no result whatever, and that, while condemnation of our system has been persistent, action to improve our system has been non-existent. But now we have this Blue-book, on which the Opposition desires to base their indictment. Has it anything in common with any of these previous Reports? Nothing. I will differentiate in a sentence. The lessons which that Blue-book has taught have been learnt. Action has not been deferred, indeed, till that Blue-book was issued. I suppose I cannot appeal to hon. Members opposite, but I do appeal to hon. Members on this side to say whether I am right or wrong in declaring that in this matter the Government is entitled to a verdict, because they have not failed to take those lessons to heart.

What are the lessons? We are told that we needed stores; we have got them. My right hon. friend the Secretary of State for India said truly that it was the first care of the Administration of which he was at that time a member to supply stores for the Navy, and I can bear testimony by visual evidence that these stores exist, and that there never was a time in the history of the British Navy when the supplies of the Navy were in a better condition than they are at this moment. I can now bear testimony to a similar state of things with regard to the British Army. Ten million pounds was asked for and voted by this House; that £10,000,000, with some inappreciable exceptions, will be expended by the end of this year, and value will be received for it. I could take hon. Members to storehouse after storehouse where they would see these stores in their places, ready for any emergency. That is very different from what has happened as the result of any of these voluminous inquiries which have taken place before. Criticism was directed to the Remount Department; the hon. Member said it was undermanned considering the amount it had to administer. But do not accept that too readily. The Transport Department of the Navy administered £32,000,000, and I am not aware that its personnel is very much greater than that of the Remount Department. Judge the work not by cost, but by quality. But the Remount Department was in need of extension; we were taught how a great emergency might arise such as had never been contemplated before, and we have now provided against that emergency if it should recur. As to the new armaments required, a vast proportion of the fixed armaments of this country have already been provided, and, if I am permitted, I am in a position now to ask the House of Commons to sanction the introduction of new armament for the artillery which, I believe, will place us in advance of any country in Europe.

A great deal has been said about the Intelligence Department. I should like, as one who, for a short time, has had the privilege of working in close touch with the Department, to bear my testimony to the value of the work it has done and is capable of doing. But I have been one of those, I think, who have always said that there was room for great extension in the organisation of the Intelligence Department. That Department has been extended, and if I have the honour of occupying this office much longer, it will be still further extended. We have been challenged because we did not provide enough manœuvring grounds for the troops; there has been more done in this respect during the last three years under the administration of my right hon. friend than during the previous thirty years. We have been told that the Army is over-centralised, and that from that springs half its evils. Never has the Army been as decentralised as it is at this moment. We are told that the War Office ought to be reorganised. Well, I think it will be admitted that we have not been slow to learn the lessons of the Commission, and that we are doing what we can;—we can only do it with the cordial support of this House, and of both sides of the House—to reorganise the constitution of the War Office and make it even more efficient.

There are things we have not done, and we have got to learn lessons from this discussion. We have not yet filled up that hiatus to which many hon. Members have referred. We have not yet got this striking force which will relieve us from the painful and dangerous position we were in when the last war broke out. We have not yet reorganised the Army in a way which will ensure the continuance of recruiting and enable us to get full value out of the splendid material we possess, but we have gone very far in the direction of progress. This House is asked to pronounce a vote of censure upon the Government, which has, I suppose, made the kind of mistake which I think I have shown is common to every Party which has sat in this House, of not understanding that the military needs of this country are great, and that they can only be met by forethought and scientific organisation. But it is a Government which, having learnt a sharp lesson in the school of experience, has applied itself as no Government ever applied itself before, to giving practical effect to that lesson, and therefore there ought to be no choice at all. If this House, aye, and the country, which has been appealed to, really desires to put its military arrangements on a satisfactory basis, if it desires to continue this work, which I believe has been well begun, then it will do, what I am confident the House will do, give a negative to the Amendment.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 192; Noes, 278. (Division List, No. 1.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.)
Ainsworth, John Stirling
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Asher, Alexander
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herbt. Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Bell, Richard
Black, Alexander William
Boland, John
Brand, Hon. Arthur G.
Brigg, John
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson.
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland-
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carvill, Partick Geo. Hamilton
Causton, Richard Knight
Channing, Francis Allston
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark)
Crean, Eugene
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Crooks, William
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies M. Vaughan-(Cardigan)
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway)
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.)
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Dunn, Sir William
Elibank, Master of
Ellice, Capt. E. C(S. Andrw's Bghs
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, Sir F. H. (Maidstone)
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Farquharson, Dr. Robert
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Field, William
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Fuller, J. M. F
Furness, Sir Christopher
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Grant. Corrie
Grey, Rt. Hn. Sir E. (Berwick)
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B.
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir William
Harmsworth, R. Leicester
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Hobhouse, C. E. H. (Bristol, E.)
Holland, Sir William Henry
Hope, John Deans (Fife, West)
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles Fredk.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Jacoby, James Alfred
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, D. Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, W. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Joyce, Michael
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kennedy, Patrick James
Kilbride, Denis
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Langley, Batty
Law, Hugh Alex. (Donegal, W.)
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir Jos. F. (Accrington)
Leigh, Sir Joseph

Leng, Sir John
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Crae, George
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Kenna, Reginald
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
M'Laren, Sir Charles Benjamin
Mellor, Rt. Hon. John William
Mooney, John J.
Morley, Charles (Breconshire)
Morley, Rt Hn John (Montrose)
Moulton, John Fletcher
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan, Col. J. P. (Galway, N)
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, Kendal (Tipperary, M)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, James (Wicklow, W)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Malley, William
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Perks, Robert William
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Price, Robert John
Priestley, Arthur
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Reid, Sir R. Threshie (Dumfries)
Rickett, J. Compton
Rigg, Richard
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Roe, Sir Thomas
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, Herbert L. (Cleveland)
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sheehan, Daniel Daniel
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Spencer, Rt. Hn. C. R., Northants
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.)
Thomas, D. A. (Merthyr)
Thomson, F. W. (York, W. R.)
Tomkinson, James
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Ure, Alexander
Walton, J. Lawson (Leeds, S.
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay, T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan)
Weir, James Galloway
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
Whiteley, George (York, W. R.)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams Osmond (Merioneth)
Wilson, F. W. (Norfolk, Mid)
Woodhouse, Sir J. T., Huddersf'd
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Mr. Herbert Gladstone and Mr. William M'Arthur.

NOES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hn. Hugh
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Capt. C. B. (Hornsey)
Balfour, Rt. Hn. G. W. (Leeds)
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Banes, Major George Edward
Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor)
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir Michael Hicks
Beckett, Ernest William
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bignold, Arthur
Bigwood, James
Bill, Charles
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Bousfield, William Robert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, William James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin Univ.)
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edw. H.
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire)
Cayzer, Sir Charles William
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. A (Worc)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Chapman, Edward
Charrington, Spencer
Clive, Captain Percy A.
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Coddington, Sir William
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir J. Charles Ready
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge
Craig, Charles Curtis (Antrim, S
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Cubitt, Hon, Henry
Cust, Henry John C.
Dalkeith, Earl of
Dalrymple Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley-
Davies, Sir H. D. (Chatham)
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Dickson, Charles Scott
Digby, John K. D. Wingfield-
Dimsdale, Rt. Hon. Sir Joseph
Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
Doughty, George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Durning-Lawrence, Sir Edwin
Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir W. Hart
Faber, Edmund B. (Hants, W.)
Faber, George Denison (York)
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Manc)
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose-
Fitzroy, Hon. Edward Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Foster, P. S. (Warwick, S. W.)
Fyler, John Arthur
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William

Gordon, Hn. J.E.(Elgin&Nairn)
Gordon, Maj. E. (T'r Hamlets)
Gore, Hon. S. F.Ormsby-(Linc)
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Hon. George Joachim
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greene, SirE.W.B'ry S.Edm'nds
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury)
Grenfell, William Henry
Gretton, John
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Hain, Edward
Hall, Edward Marshall
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hamilton, Rt.HnLordG. Midd'x
Hamilton, Marq.of, L'nd'nderry
Hardy, L. (Kent, Ashford)
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F.Leverton, Tynemouth
Harris, Dr. Fredk. R. (Dulwich)
Hay, Hon, Claude George
Heath, James (Staffords., N.W)
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Sir A.(Stafford, W.)
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hobhouse, Rt.HnH., Somers'tE.
Hogg, Lindsay
Hope, J.F. (Sheffield, Brightside)
Horner, Frederick William
Houston, Robert Paterson
Howard, J. (Midd., Tottenham)
Hozier, Hon. J. Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hunt, Rowland
Hutton, John (Yorks., N.R.)
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Kenyon, Hon.Geo. T.(Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. W. (Salop
Kerr, John
Keswick, William
Kimber, Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Sir Lees
Lambton, Hon. Frederick Wm.
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence, Sir J. (Monmouth)
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lawson, Jn. G. (Yorks., N.R.)
Lee, A. H. (Hants., Fareham)
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Leveson-Gower, Frederick N.S
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Long, Col. CharlesW.(Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hn. W. (Bristol, S.)
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Lucas, Reginald J.(Portsmouth)
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
Maconochie, A. W.
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Cecil
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Maxwell, Rt.Hn.SirH.E., Wigt'n
Maxwell, W. J. H. (Dumfriessh)
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. W.
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milner, Rt. Hn. Sir Frederick G
Milvain, Thomas
Mitchell, Ed. (Fermanagh, N.)
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William
Morgan, D. J. (Walthamstow)
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Murray, Rt. Hn. A. G (Bute)
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Nicholson, William Graham
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
Palmer, Walter (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Peel, Hn. Wm. R. Wellesley
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Walter R.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Ernest George
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Randles, John S.
Rankin, Sir James
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renwick, George
Ridley, Hon.M.W. (Stalybridge)
Ridley, S. Forde, Bethnal Green
Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Charles T.
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Ropner, Colonel Sir Robert
Rothschild, Hon. Lionel Walter
Round, Rt. Hon. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford-
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Samuel, Sir H. S. (Limehouse)
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Saunderson, Rt. Hn. Col. Edw.
Scott, Sir S. (Marylebone, W.)
Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln)
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, James Parker (Lanarks.)
Spear, John Ward
Spencer, Sir E. (W. Bromwich)
Stanley, Hon. Arthur, Ormskirk
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord (Lancs.)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot, Rt.Hn. J.G. (Oxf'd Univ
Taylor, Austin (East Toxteth)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col.Sir C. E.H., Sheff'd
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walker, Col. William Hall
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir William
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Webb, Colonel William George
Webb, Colonel William George
Welby, Lt.-Col.A.C.E. (Taunton
Welby, Sir Charles G. E. (Notts)
Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, RtHnJPowell- (Birm.
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willox, Sir John Archibald
Wilson, A. Stanley (York, E. R)
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H. (Yorks)
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn.E.R. (Bath)
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

Main Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question, "That the Debate be now adjourned"—(Mr. Joseph Walton)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

Adjourned at twenty-three minutes after Five o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 8th February, 1904.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Appleby Corporation Gas Bill [H.L.]; Barrow-in-Furness Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Belfast and North East Ireland Electricity and Power Gas Bill [H.L.]; Belfast Corporation (Tramways) Bill [H.L.]; Bournemouth Corporation (Tramways) Bill [H.L.]; Bridlington Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Bristol Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Buxton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Chesterfield Corporation Tramways and Improvements Bill [H.L.]; Chesterfield Gas and Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Derwent Valley Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Ebbw Vale Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Edwardes Square Protection Bill [H.L.]; Elysée Palace Hotel Company Bill [H.L.]; Filey Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Great Yarmouth Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Harrogate Waterworks Tramroad Bill [H.L.]; Holywood Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (Amendment) Bill [H.L.]; Hutcheson's Hospital and Hutcheson's Educational Trust Bill [H.L.]; Ipswich Dock Commission Bill [H.L.]; King's College Hospital Bill [H.L.]; Leeds Corporation (Waterworks) Railway Bill [H.L.]; Liverpool and Wigan Churches Bill [H.L.]; Llanelly Harbour Bill [H.L.]; Maidenhead Bridge Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Corporation (General Powers) Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Corporation Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Mersey Docks and Harbour Board Bill [H.L.]; Milwr and District Mines Drainage Bill [H.L.]; Minehead Urban District Council Water Bill [H.L.]; Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Nuneaton and Chilvers Coton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Oakengates, Dawley, and District Joint Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Preston and Blackburn Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Preston, Chorley, and Horwich Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Preston Corporation Water Bill [H.L.]; St. Bartholomew's Hospital Bill [H.L.]; St. Mary Woolnoth Bill [H.L.]; Shipley Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; South Staffordshire Mines Drainage Bill [H.L.]; Stretford Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Tynemouth Corporation Bill [H.L.] Ulster Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation (Additional Finance) Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation (Constitution and Finance) Bill [H.L.]; Withnell Gas Bill [H.L.]. Presented, and read 1ª.

Alexandra (Newport and South Wales) Docks and Railway Bill [H.L.]; Barnard Castle Gas Bill [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Extension of Time, etc.) Bill [H.L.]; Barry Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill [H.L.]; Cambrian Railways Bill [H.L.]; Cardiff Railway Bill [H.L.]; Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Gosport Water Bill [H.L.]; Great Western Railway Bill [H.L.]; Harlow and Sawbridgeworth Gas Bill [H.L.]; Isle of Thanet Light Railways Bill [H.L.]; Lancashire Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company Bill [H.L.]; London Chatham, and Dover Railway Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Ship Canal Bill [H.L.]; Manchester Ship Canal (Finance) Bill [H.L.]; Matlock and District Gas Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan District Railway Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Railway Bill [H.L.]; Neath, Pontardawe, and Brynaman Railway Bill [H.L.]; Newcastle and Gateshead Water Bill [H.L.]; New River Company Bill [H.L.]; New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company Bill [H.L.]; North Wales Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Portmadoc, Beddgelert, and South Snowdon Railway Bill [H.L.]; Southport and Lytham Tramroad (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Ticehurst and District Water and Gas Bill [H.L.]; Trafford Park Dock and Railway Bill [H.L.]; Tynemouth Gas Bill [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads Bill [H.L.]; Victoria University of Manchester Bill [H.L.]; Victoria University of Yorkshire Bill [H.L.]; West Metropolitan Railway (Abandonment) Bill [H.L.]; West Metropolitan Railway (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier Bill [H.L.]; West Riding Tramways Bill [H.L.]; York Town and Blackwater Gas Bill [H.L.]; Presented; read 1ª; and referred to the Examiners.

COULSDON TRAMWAYS BILL.

The CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES informed the House that the Promoters do not intend to proceed further with the Bill. Ordered that the Bill be not further proceeded with.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL).

No. 3118. Italy (South Italy); No. 3119. Denmark.

NAVY.

Returns of the number of courts-martial held and summary punishments inflicted on seamen of the Royal Navy, etc., during the year 1902.

GREENWICH OBSERVATORY.

Report of the Astronomer-Royal to the Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, read at the annual visitation of the Royal Observatory, 6th June, 1903.

INDIA.

(Thibet): Papers relating to Thibet; (Tariff): Views of the Government of India on the question of Preferential Tariffs.

TRANSVAAL.

Telegraphic correspondence relating to the Transvaal Labour Importation Ordinance, with Appendix; the Ordinance as amended in accordance with telegrams (in continuation of [Cd. 1895], Feb., 1904).

ARMY (IMPERIAL YEOMANRY).

Training Return of Imperial Yeomanry in Great Britain and Ireland for 1903.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the year ended 31st December, 1902; together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon.

SUPERANNUATION—TREASURY MINUTES.

Dated 12th August, 1903, granting a retired allowance to Theophilus Evans, inspector of postmen and telegraph messengers, Worcester Post Office.

Dated 2nd October, 1903, granting a retired allowance to Commander Francis Alford, Navigating Commander H.M.T.S. "Monarch" Post Office.

Dated 19th October, 1903, granting a retired allowance to Charles Hasdell, third-class clerk in the Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office.

Dated 19th October, 1903, granting a retired allowance to James Ruttley, late overseer and senior telegraphist, Central Telegraph Office, London.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

RICHMOND BRIDGE.

Account of the Commissioners of Richmond Bridge for the year ended 25th December, 1902. Delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

POST OFFICE (TELEGRAPHS).

Account showing the gross amount received, and the gross amount expended, in respect of the Telegraph Service from the date of the transfer of the telegraphs to the State to the 31st day of March, 1902 (in continuation of No. 31, of Session 1903). The Order of Thursday last, that the said account do lie on the Table, discharged.

House adjourned at Four o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 8th February, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been complied with, viz:—Blyth and Cowpen Gas Bill; Gomersal Gas Bill; Harrow Road and Paddington Tramways Bill; South Shields Gas Bill; South-Western and Isle of Wight Junction Railway (Extension of Time) Bill; Sutton Gas Bill; Whitby Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 63 has been complied with, viz:—Bishop's Stortford and District Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has not been complied with, viz:—Ryde Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

PETITIONS.

CONFESSIONAL AT ST. PAUL'S, BEDFORD.

Petition from Bedford, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).

Petitions against alteration of Law: from Camden Town; Barrow-in-Furness; Moss Side; Fowey; Maerdy; Cargreen; Bradford; Blackwood; Woodside; Sutcombe; Eastnor; Govan (three); Bedford; Stewarton; Ardrossan; Blackpool; West Bridgford; Southampton (two); Northumberland; Bedlington Colliery; Martock; Pembroke; Kilwinning; Mottram; Glossop (two); Clifton; Bishopsgate; Beuhar; Thorniewood; Motherwell; Holytown; Shotts; Skelton; Bellshill; New Stevenston; Craigneuk; Greenock; Torry; Rochester; Newcastle; Bates Cottages; Ashbourne; Clapham Road; Blackburn (two); Woolston; Ormskirk; Prescot; Crainford; Crawford; Waterloo; Hatton; Preston-on-the-Hill; Stockton Heath; Wilmslow; Lostock Gralam; Boxmoor Hall; Strickland; Great Ayton; Higher Broughton and Hoghton; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

EAST INDIA (TARIFFS).

Copy presented, of Views of the Government of India on the question of Preferential Tariffs [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

PILOTAGE.

Copy presented, of Abstract of Returns relating to Pilots and Pilotage in the United Kingdom (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 312, of Session 1902) as furnished by the various Pilotage Authorities [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 33.]

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

Copy presented, of Statements of Accounts, and of Life Assurance and Annuity Business and Abstracts of Actuarial Reports, deposited with the Board of Trade during the year ended 31st December, 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 34.]

ARMY (IMPERIAL YEOMANRY).

Copy presented, of Training Return o Imperial Yeomanry for 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

COMMONS ACT, 1876 (OXSHOTT HEATH‘ SURREY).

Copy presented, of Report by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries upon an application for a Provisional Order for the regulation of Oxshott Heath, in the parish of Cobham, in the county of Surrey [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 35.]

COMMONS ACT, 1876 (MERROW DOWNS, SURREY).

Copy presented, of Report by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries upon an application for a Provisional Order for the regulation of Merrow Downs, in the parish of Merrow, in the county of Surrey [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 36.]

DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS ACT, 1877.

Copy presented, of an Order dated the 13th October, 1903, revoking the Orders of the Board of Agriculture under the Act dated respectively the 22nd August, 1901, the 31st May, 1902, and the 5th June, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

BREWERS' LICENCES.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 5th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 37.]

CONSOLIDATED FUND.

Abstract Account presented, showing the issues made from the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom in the financial year ended 31st March, 1903, for the Interest and Management of the Debt, for the Civil List, and for all other Issues in the financial year for services charged directly on the said Fund; with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 38.]

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 12th August, 1903, granting to Theophilus Evans, Inspector of Postmen and Telegraph Messengers, Worcester Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 19th October, 1903, granting to Charles Hasdell, 3rd Class Clerk in the Engineer in Chief's Department, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

Copies presented, of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3118 to 3120 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 19th October, 1903, granting to James Ruttley, late Overseer and Senior Telegraphist, Central Telegraph Office, London, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd October, 1903, granting to Commander Francis Alford, Navigating Commander H.M.T.S. "Monarch," Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT THREE PER CENT. GUARANTEED STOCK.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 1st November, 1903, guaranteeing the payment of interest and repayment of principal of the Transvaal Government Three per Cent. Guaranteed Stock [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

COMMITTALS (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Peace of the number of persons committed for trial in 1903 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPER LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Lunacy.—Copy of Return to the Lord Chancellor of the number of Visits made and the number of Patients seen by the several Commissioners in Lunacy during the six months ending on the 31st December, 1903 [by Act].

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Deputations of Dockyard Trades.

MR. REGINALD LUCAS (Portsmouth): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether it is the intention of the Board to receive deputations representing the various trades in His Majesty's dockyards this year in continuance of those granted last year.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) The Board visited the dockyards at Portsmouth, Plymouth, and Chatham during last financial year for the purpose of receiving deputations; and Pembroke and Sheerness will be similarly visited this year. It is not proposed to visit every yard every year.

Registrar General's Returns—Grouping of Counties.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH (Anglesey): To ask the President of the Local Government Board whether his attention has been called to the fact that in the Registrar General's Returns the statistical figures are given for each English county separately, whereas in the case of Wales six counties are grouped together; and whether he will take steps to have these figures published for each Welsh county separately.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) I have communicated with the Registrar General and find that it will not be practicable to give the statistical figures referred to for each Welsh county separately in his next Annual Report which is now in the printer's hands; but the form of the tables in his future Reports and quarterly Returns will be altered so as to include the information desired by the hon. Member.

Indebtedness of Borough Councils.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): To ask the President of the Local Government Board when he expects to lay upon the Table the Return of indebtedness of borough councils ordered by the House on the 24th June, 1903.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) There has been some difficulty in procuring the information required, and some of the returns are still outstanding, although repeated applications have been made for them. Further, after the returns have been received, additional particulars have had to be applied for in a large number of cases. The information obtained is being sent to the printers as rapidly as possible, and every effort will be made to complete and present the Return at the earliest date practicable.

Return of Electric Lighting Acts.

MR. JOHN ELLIS: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will lay upon the Table a Return showing the names of companies or persons who have obtained Acts conveying powers for the supply of electric power to districts, with the names and areas of such districts, and the year in which the powers were obtained, and whether such powers have been exercised or not; and, in the former case, what is the state of the works constructed under such powers.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) I have given instructions for the preparation of this Return, but as the information asked for in the latter part of the hon. Member's Question is not at present in the possession of the Board of Trade, it will be necessary to communicate with the companies, etc., on the subject before the Return can be completed.

Customs Duty—Tobacco for Personal Consumption.

MR. MOON (St. Pancras, N.): To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what authority Customs officers refuse to accept from the master of a British ship the duty spontaneously tendered by him in respect of tobacco brought by such master to this country for his own use, unless he pays an additional sum or fine of 1s.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) Under Section 42 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, as amended by The Finance Act, 1896, tobacco contained in packages of less than 80 lbs. gross weight is, for the safety of the revenue, prohibited to be imported into the United Kingdom, and if so imported is liable to forfeiture; but by ancient custom small parcels may be cleared on payment of duty and a regulated fine varying from 3d. to 1s. 3d. the pound according to the description of the tobacco, and whether or not it is entered on the importing ship's report. Masters and members of ships' crews are not and never have been entitled to any exemption from these regulations in respect of small quantities of tobacco brought by them into this country.

Congestion of Business at the Law Courts.

SIR THOMAS DEWAR (Tower Hamlets, St. George's): To ask Mr. Attorney-General whether his attention has been called to the congestion of business in the London Law Courts, and will he consider the practicability of rearranging the circuits with a view to the retention of the services of one or two additional Judges in London.

(Answered by Sir Robert Finlay.) I have ascertained that there is no exceptional congestion of business in the Royal Courts of Justice. The general condition of business is much better than it has been for some time past, though there are a larger number of common juries waiting for hearing than usual, which has been occasioned by the illness and temporary absence of some of the Judges. No rearrangement of the circuits would enable two or even one additional Judge to be available for sittings in London for any substantial time unless arrangements were made either to diminish the number of circuits or to group the counties on alternate circuits. Many serious objections have been raised to both these proposals, which have been under constant consideration during the last ten years. It is right to point out that the present number of Judges in the King's Bench Division leaves no margin or reserve whatever for illness or temporary absence.

Consols Bought and Sold under Public Buildings Expenses Act, 1898.

MR. COHEN (Islington, E.): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any of the Consols stated in the Fourth Report of the Public Accounts Committee last year to have been bought under The Public Buildings Expenses Act, 1898, have been sold since the 31st March, 1903; and, if so, what was the amount of those sales, the average price at which the sales were effected, and the loss thereby incurred.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) The Consols sold from the Public Buildings Expenses Fund since the 31st March, 1903, amount to £464,104 14s. 1d. The average price obtained was 90·28 per cent., and the loss on these transactions £89,061 13s. 10d.

Indian and Australian Mail Delays.

SIR SEYMOUR KING (Hull, Central): To ask the Postmaster-General whether his attention has been called to the repeated and serious delays which occur in the delivery of newspapers and other book matter by the Indian and Australian mails viâ Brindisi, particularly when the mail arrives on Saturdays; whether he will state at what hour the Indian mail arrived in London on Saturday, 30th January, and at what hour the first delivery of newspapers by that mail was made by express delivery, and by ordinary course of post; whether he is aware that some of the newspapers by that mail had not been delivered in London by 11 o'clock on Monday morning, about thirty-eight hours after arrival; and whether arrangements can be made to accord to the Indian and Australian mail services the same promptitude of treatment which is given to mails from the United States.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) The Indian and Australian mail viâ Brindisi, which had been somewhat delayed by bad weather in the English Channel, reached London at about 4.10 p.m., almost at the same time as a heavy mail received from the United States viâ Plymouth. Ordinary and express deliveries of letters were made on the evening of the 30th January, but it was not found possible to deal with the newspapers before the morning of Monday the 1st February. It appears that certain newspapers, apparently those to which the hon. Member refers, were treated in the ordinary manner, whereas they should have been sent out for express delivery, and of this irregularity proper notice has been taken. I do not find that any were delayed in delivery by the fault of the Post Office until 11 a.m., but if the hon. Member will furnish me with particulars of any papers so delayed, I will have further inquiry made and will communicate with him. The Indian mail is dealt with in London with the same attention to promptitude as is bestowed on the American mails.

Ireland—Reduction on Second-term Rents.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland what the percentage of reduction on second-term rents has been in the several counties in Ireland for the months of October, November, and December last.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) A Return of judicial rents fixed by the Chief Commission, Sub-Commissions, and Valuers, during the three months ended 31st December, 1903, is appended.

Province and County.	Number of Cases.	First Statutory Term Rent.			Second Statutory Term Rent.			Percentage of Reduction.
		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Ulster :—
Antrim	56	1,350	13	8	1,055	11	0	21·8
Armagh	64	697	11	3	573	9	6	17·7
Cavan	130	1,947	8	0	1,572	16	4	19·2
Donegal	2	14	5	0	10	10	0	26·3
Down	232	4,300	9	2	3,346	6	0	22·1
Fermanagh	31	624	12	8	511	14	6	18·0
Londonderry ...	4	93	12	0	79	2	3	15·4
Monaghan	140	1,342	10	6	1,181	12	0	11·9
Tyrone	32	249	4	6	218	0	0	12·5
Total ...	691	10,620	6	9	8,549	1	7	19·5

Province and County.	Number of Cases.	First Statutory Term Rent.			Second Statutory Term Rent.			Percentage of Reduction.
		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Leinster :—
Carlow	—	—			—			—
Dublin	—	—			—			—
Kildare	—	—			—			—
Kilkenny	32	1,370	3	5	1,158	6	7	15·4
King's	—	—			—			—
Longford	49	1,500	7	6	1,261	0	0	15·9
Louth	—	—			—			—
Meath	27	908	7	5	817	6	10	10·0
Queen's	4	126	18	0	107	19	0	14·9
Westmeath	15	667	4	4	571	17	0	14·2
Wexford	29	562	10	4	519	7	6	7·6
Wicklow	21	895	14	0	789	4	0	11·8
Total ...	177	6,031	5	0	5,225	0	11	13·3

Province and County.	Number of Cases.	First Statutory Term Rent.			Second Statutory Term Rent.			Percentage of Reduction.
		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Connaught :—
Galway	28	1,053	7	0	916	17	0	12·9
Leitrim	—	—			—			—
Mayo	—	—			—			—
Roscommon	70	1,141	9	7	980	7	6	14·1
Sligo	32	302	18	4	266	6	0	12·0
Total ...	130	2,497	14	11	2,163	10	6	13·3

Province and County.	Number of Cases.	First Statutory Term Rent.	Second Statutory Term Rent.	Percentage of Reduction.
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Munster :—
Clare	31	1,343 3 6	1,116 13 0	16·8
Cork	142	6,427 17 9	5,506 6 6	14·3
Kerry	31	476 19 0	373 6 0	21·7
Limerick	63	2,733 14 6	2,290 15 0	16·2
Tipperary	25	1,331 19 0	1,123 0 6	15·6
Waterford	3	156 19 6	137 3 0	12·6
Total ...	295	12,470 13 3	10,547 4 0	15·4
Ireland ...	1,293	31,619 19 11	26,484 17 0	16·2

Irish National Education—Reduction of the Average.

Mr. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in accordance with the promise made last session relative to the reduction of the average to fifty for an assistant, he will direct the Commissioners of National Education to put the new rule in force.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) No promise was given by me last session that the average required for assistant teachers would be reduced to fifty. What I stated was that a proposal to this effect, involving an additional charge of £24,000 per annum on the Estimates for public education, had been made; but that, in the opinion of the Irish Government, an addition of so large a character should be considered in relation to all other educational demands.

Salaries of Irish National School Teachers.

Mr. SLOAN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state the amount voted for increase of salaries to national teachers, and the amount actually expended.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The amount provided for this purpose in the Estimates for Public Education, Ireland, for the current financial year was £35,000, which amount has been expended.

Gun Licences in Ireland—Case of Patrick Needham.

Dr. AMBROSE (Mayo, W.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state the reason why Patrick Needham, of Saula, Achill Sound, County Mayo, was refused a gun licence.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The question of the issue of an arms licence is one for the consideration of the resident magistrate, who is the licensing officer of the district. It would be contrary to the invariable practice to state the reasons that actuate the licensing officer in declining, in the exercise of his discretion, to grant a licence in any individual case. But having been informed of these reasons in the present instance, I am satisfied he exercised his discretion in a reasonable manner.

Duke of York's School—Disposal of Site.

Mr. WHITMORE (Chelsea): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether any decision has been arrived at as to the disposal of the site of the Duke of York's Military School at Chelsea.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The matter is still under the consideration of His Majesty's Government.

New Field Guns—Proportion to be made by Private Firms.

Mr. J. F. HOPE (Sheffield, Brightside): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether he is in a position to state what proportion of the new field guns will be manufactured at the Royal Arsenal and what proportion will be put out to tender by private firms.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) I am not yet in a position to give any information on this matter.

Lady Clerks in Crown Agents Offices.

MR. HEYWOOD JOHNSTONE (Sussex, Horsham): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what are the hours of work for lady clerks in the office of the Crown Agents for the Colonies; if they are compelled to work overtime; and at what rate of pay or remuneration.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The internal administration of the office of the Crown Agents for the Colonies is entirely in their hands. They inform me, however, that the hours of work for lady clerks in their office are 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., but, like all other members of the staff, they are required to remain until any pressing work is completed before they are at liberty to leave. The Crown Agents do not give extra pay for overtime work, but the fact that overtime is often necessary is taken into account in the amount of the salaries which they give to their staff. I may add that the lady clerks in the Crown Agents' office receive salaries commencing at £70 and rising to £150 a year. They have four weeks holiday in the year, in addition to Bank and other special holidays, a half holiday on every Saturday, and a whole holiday on every third Saturday whenever the state of business permits. I understand that these conditions of employment compare favourably with those which are in force in Government offices, even when the fullest allowance is made for overtime payments in the latter, and I am informed that no complaints on the subject have reached the Crown Agents.

Immigrants into Canada.

MR. D. A. THOMAS (Merthyr Tydvil): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he can state the number of immigrants into Canada for settlement during the year ending 30th June, 1903, distinguishing between the various nationalities.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I have not yet received the statistics of immigration into Canada for the year ended 30th June last, but I have asked for them and will communicate them to the hon. Member when received.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Cubicles for Soldiers.

LIEUT.-COLONEL TUFNELL (Essex, S.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether the barracks now in course of erection on Salisbury Plain will be on the cubicle system; and whether it is proposed to adopt this system in the future.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): The barracks now in course of erection at Tidworth for eight infantry battalions are being so built that at any time if desired the cubicle system can be introduced. Experiments are now being made, but no decision can be arrived at until the present experiments with cubicle fittings are concluded.

LIEUT.-COLONEL TUFNELL: Will it apply to cavalry as well as infantry?

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I can only say that until the result of the experiments is ascertained we cannot say whether the system will be adopted.

Destruction of Military Stores at Durban.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that stores of ham and bacon packed by well-known Britis and Irish firms sent out to South Africa as war stores, and to all appearances sound and good, were burnt at Durban by order of the military authorities; and, if so, will he state what was the estimated cost of these stores, and what was their aggregate amount; and what explanation, if any, is there of the waste of this public property, having regard to the severe distress and scarcity of food in many parts of South Africa.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The hon. and learned Member has been somewhat misinformed. The stores of ham and bacon destroyed at Durban suffered through the deficiency of proper storage consequent on war conditions, and were condemned as unfit for human consumption, having become so corrupt that they were a danger to the health of the inhabitants. The general officer commanding reported on the 12th October last that the total then condemned amounted to 48,413 lbs. bacon and 161,273 lbs. ham, and that a further 190,000 lbs. bacon known to be bad awaited formal condemnation. The estimated value of all these supplies is £19,000.

Cost of Somaliland Expedition.

Mr. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War what has been the cost of the Somaliland Expedition during the present financial year; what was the original estimate of its cost; and what is the total amount of money expended down to the present time.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Full information on these points will be given on the introduction of the Army Supplementary Estimates, and I must ask the hon. Member to be good enough to postpone his Question until that occasion.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Can the right hon. Gentleman say how much money has been spent up to the present time.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I do not think I can.

Mr. BUCHANAN: May we assume there will be a Supplementary Estimate for this expedition?

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Yes, Sir.

South African War Correspondence.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been directed to a statement of General Sir William Butler, K.C.B., in his evidence before the War Commission (vol. ii., p. 74), that he was unable to produce in its entirety the correspondence which passed between the War Office and himself during the period of his command, from November, 1898, till August, 1899, because he was recently informed at the War Office that much of the confidential correspondence at that time had been destroyed by order of the authorities at Cape Town; did the destruction of this confidential correspondence take place at the War Office or Cape Town; if it took place at the War Office was the destruction carried out with the sanction of the Secretary of State for War at the time, and what was the date of the destruction; if it took place at Cape Town who were the authorities by whose order these documents were destroyed, and had these authorities the sanction of the War Office for that destruction; and whether, having regard to the gravity of the destruction of public documents, he has any, and, if so, what explanation to offer.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: A considerable quantity of correspondence stored at Cape Town was destroyed by order of the military authorities there in consequence of a suspicion that the papers in question were contaminated by plague infection. The papers in question are believed to have been among those thus destroyed. Copies of all official correspondence that passed between the War Office and General Sir William Butler during his tenure of command at the Cape have been preserved.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: Were these confidential documents destroyed by the Government in order to save their own bacon?

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order!

Thibet.

Sir MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N. E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he will give the Return relating to British and Indian Commerce with Thibet, asked for in the Order Paper this day.

The SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford): I have no objection to giving a Return showing the imports and exports between India and Thibet from 1890–1 to 1902–3 with such details as are possible.

The Return referred to is as follows:—

Thibet (Trade Statistics),—Address for Return of Statistics relating to trade with Thibet since the date of the signing of the Convention of 1890, giving particulars regarding the quantity, classification, and value of the annual exports from British India to Thibet of (a) non-Indian merchandise; (b) of Indian merchandise; and (c) of exports from Thibet to British India.

Government Purchase of South African Railway.

MR. BUCHANAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the purchase by the Government of the railways in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony has been completed; and what is the total amount paid for that purpose under the South African Loan Act of last year.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): The purchase has not yet been completed. The amount paid so far is about £11,000,000.

Chinese Labour in the Transvaal.

SIR BRAMPTON GURDON (Norfolk, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether it is proposed that the Chinese labourers imported into the Transvaal should be accompanied by their wives. May I also ask why the provisions with regard to the wives and families which appeared in the first draft have been omitted from the last?

*MR. LYTTELTON: The Ordinance provides that the families of labourers shall be subject to the same conditions as govern the introduction of the labourers themselves and also for their prompt repatriation in case of the labourer's death. Power is also given to the Lieutenant-Governor to make regulations for the introduction, repatriation, and control of the families of labourers, and these regulations will be subject to the sanction of the Secretary of State. My intention is to take precautions that all reasonable facilities shall be given for the reception and accommodation of the families of labourers. It is only a surmise, but I imagine the provisions introduced in the first draft of the Ordinance, and which I think affected Clauses 13 and 14, have been omitted because provisions which had been placed in the regulations rendered them surplusage.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland): Are we to understand that all Chinese labourers that go from China to the Transvaal are to have the option of bringing their families with them if they wish?

[No answer was returned.]

Malta.

MR. BOLAND (Kerry, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is aware that four general elections have taken place in Malta since June, 1903; and whether, in view of the state of affairs in the island, he will consider the advisability of proposing a change in the constitution to give more effective popular representation.

*MR. LYTTELTON: Owing to the action of the elected members in resigning as soon as elected and then offering themselves for re-election, four so-called general elections have taken place in Malta since June 1903. The reasons for introducing the present constitution have been fully set forth in the Papers which have already been laid before Parliament, and nothing which has since occurred has led me to think that any change of the kind suggested is advisable.

MR. BOLAND: How many more elections will be required in order to satisfy the Government as to the attitude of the people of Malta?

[No answer was returned.]

The West Indian Relief Grants.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the whole of the £250,000 voted on 31st July, 1902, to assist the sugar producers of the West Indies has been distributed; on what principle the money was allotted; and whether he will furnish a Return setting out the names of the persons or firms who may have received any portion and the amounts allotted to them respectively.

*MR. LYTTELTON: Perhaps I may be allowed to answer this Question. The whole fund except a few hundreds has been distributed among the beneficiary colonies. The money was applied to cash payments, to loans, to remission of taxation, to improvement of machinery according to the particular conditions of each colony; and peasants' interests have been safeguarded as well as planters.' Such a Return as is asked for would not be possible and would be misleading if it were possible, but if the hon. Member desires information in regard to any particular colony it will be given as far as possible.

Germany and Canada.

Mr. BLACK (Banffshire): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether Germany has offered to restore Canada to most-favoured-nation treatment upon terms which do not include recall on the part of Canada of her preference to the Mother Country; if he will state what is the position of the negotiations between Germany and Canada; through what medium they are being conducted; and when will Papers be laid.

*The UNDER-SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.): As to the first Question I would refer the hon. Member to the Parliamentary Paper, "Commercial, No. 5, 1903," giving correspondence between the British and German Governments and particularly to the last two Papers. The position has not altered since then. The Secretary of State for the Colonies is in communication with the Government of Canada in regard to the matter. There are no further Papers which can be published at present.

The Purchase of Chilian Battleships.

Mr. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is proposed to provide for payment of the two warships purchased by Government out of the revenue of the financial year now current; and whether Supplementary Estimates will be laid.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.): The payments for the Chilian ships falling due within the current financial year will be inserted in the Supplementary Estimates of this year, viz., £707,904, and the remainder, which is due to be paid in August, will be provided for in next year's Estimates, viz., £1,167,096, making a total of £1,875,000.

Tobacco Growing in Ireland.

Mr. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state what arrangements have been made by the Treasury for the encouragement of tobacco growing in Ireland.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: It has been decided to allow the experimental cultivation of tobacco in Ireland upon a considerable scale for a period of five years under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland and by persons approved by that Department. A rebate of one-third of the existing duty will be granted on any tobacco produced as the result of the experiment. The Department of Agriculture is in communication with the Board of Inland Revenue regarding the regulations under which the tobacco is to be grown.

Status and Duties of Government Departments.

*Mr. D. A. THOMAS (Merthyr Tydvil): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he can state what progress has been made by the Committee appointed to consider the position and duties of the Board of Trade and Local Government Board, and to report on the desirability of alterations in the constitution and status of these offices and of a rearrangement of duties between these Departments and other Government Departments; and when such Report is likely to be in the hands of Members.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I note that the hon. Member for Hoxton has a Question on the Paper for to-morrow on the same subject and will ask him to be good enough to consider this as an answer to him as well. The Committee, which originally consisted of Lord Jersey, (Chairman), Sir James Mackay, Sir Charles Ryan, Sir J. Gorst, and Mr. Alfred Emmott, M.P., was appointed on the 18th July last. They met at once, and adjourned pending the receipt of memoranda from the Board of Trade and Local Government Board setting forth the history and duties of those Departments and their views on the subject of the Committee's reference. The Committee resumed their sittings last week, Sir G. Ryder having been added in place of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Cambridge University who had resigned. I am unable to name a date for the completion of their inquiry, but I am aware that the chairman is anxious to proceed with it as rapidly as possible.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS: Do I understand that no meeting of the Committee was held for six months?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Yes, Sir. The Committee met immediately on its appointment and then adjourned in order to obtain certain information from the two Departments concerned. That information has only been supplied by one of the Departments within the last three or four weeks and the Committee met again as soon as it got it.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS: In which Department was it that the delay in replying occurred?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The Local Government Board. I have no personal knowledge or information as to the reasonableness of the time taken.

Welsh Smokeless Coal.

SIR LEES KNOWLES (Salford, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total area in South Wales of the smokeless semi-bituminous coalfield; what is the estimated quantity in that area of unworked smokeless coal, such as is suitable for naval as distinguished from ordinary steam purposes; and what was the total amount of such coal exported to foreign countries from Newport, Swansea, and Cardiff in 1903.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I am afraid the information in my possession does not enable me to answer the Question adequately. As regards the first two paragraphs, I can only say that the whole matter of coal supplies in South Wales will come under the consideration of the Royal Commission which is now sitting. As regards the last paragraph, I am informed by the Board of Customs that the total amount of steam coal exported from Newport, Swansea, and Cardiff in 1903 was 18,427,574 tons, but they are unable to distinguish in this amount between the different classes of coal indicated by the hon. Baronet.

SIR LEES KNOWLES: Is it the fact that the agents of the Admiralty at the present time are unable to obtain at Cardiff what are known as "spot" cargoes?

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: No, Sir.

MR. COGHILL (Stoke-upon-Trent): Will the Government take steps to acquire these stocks of coal for this country?

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: I must ask for notice of that.

SIR LEES KNOWLES: May I ask whether, in view of the urgency of the question, the right hon. Gentleman will ask the Commission to make an interim Report?

*MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: I do not think I can do that.

SIR LEES KNOWLES: I beg to give notice that on an early date I will move that it is desirable that the Government should make early provision to ensure an adequate supply of smokeless steam coal for naval purposes in future years.

Servants' Registry Offices.

MR. BOLAND: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to introduce any legislation with a view to regulating rates charged to applicants for employment through servants' registry offices.

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: No, Sir. I have no information before me on which I feel called upon to contemplate such legislation.

Board of Trade and Railway Management.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will state the steps which have been taken by his Department since March, 1903, to carry out the Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900, particularly as to the making of rules under Section 1, the inspection of railways under Section 13, and the making of inquiries and experiments under Section 15.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): As the hon. Member is aware, the Board of Trade put forward an amended rule under Section 1 of the Act respecting the provision of either-side brake levers on goods wagons, such rule being drawn on lines indicated by the Court of the Railway and Canal Commission when this subject was previously before the court. Certain objections were made to this amended rule by railway companies and were referred to the court. These objections were heard by the court in July last, but the hearing was adjourned in order that experiments might be conducted on certain forms of brake with regard to which evidence had been given. The Board are also proposing a rule to meet an application by the Taff Vale Railway Company for an exemption of certain trains from the operation of No. 8 of the rules made in 1902. The application was not in the first instance entertained by the Board of Trade, but the Commissioners to whom the matter was referred in pursuance of the Act decided that in the particular circumstances some exemption was reasonable. Since I replied to a Question by the hon. Member on the 25th March last year†, sixty-eight additional inspections have been ordered of stations and sidings in connection with either the lighting thereof or the operations of propping and tow-roping. The reports of the inspecting officers on thirty-five of these cases have been received, and I am glad to be able to say that so far the railway companies seem generally willing to carry out any improvements the Board's officers have thought necessary. Arrangements are being made for the experiments to which I have already referred on particular forms of either-side brakes and I hope they will shortly be carried out.

MR. JOHN ELLIS: Are any experiments contemplated in regard to automatic couplings?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: None have been undertaken, and none are in immediate contemplation.

The Fiscal Inquiry.

MR. BLACK: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the inquiry undertaken by the Government as to our fiscal policy is now concluded; and whether all the documents and statistics laid before the Government have been published.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: As I stated in reply to my right hon. friend the Member for East Somerset on Thursday last,† inquiries are continually in progress by the Commercial, Labour, and Statistical Departments of the Board of Trade with a view to supplement and complete the information contained in the Blue-book (Cd. 1761). Some of the information procured is of a confidential character and could not be published, but the question of publishing other parts of the material—which is being got together—will be considered at a later stage.

MR. BLACK: May I ask when the Prime Minister's pamphlet, advocating the taxation of food, will be circulated.

[No answer was returned.]

*MR. REA (Gloucester): Will the right hon. Gentleman cause to be reproduced and published the charts prepared by his Department for the St. Louis Exhibition.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I cannot give a definite answer at the present moment, but, if it is found to be possible, it will be done.

Coal Export Duty.

MR. D. A. THOMAS: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are taken by the Customs authorities to check the accuracy of the declared values of coal furnished by exporters at Cardiff and other South Wales ports; if he has any official information tending to throw doubts on the substantial correctness of the values of coal given in the monthly Trade Returns; and whether it has recently been found necessary in any case to enforce the penalties provided for in Clauses 110 and 168 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxx., 176.

† See page 347.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Board of Customs inform me that as regards all coal on which rebate of duty is claimed, on the ground that the value did not exceed six shillings the ton, they require statutory declarations and invoices, in proof of value, and if necessary the exporter is called upon for an explanation, and required to amend the entry. As regards other coal, inquiries are made and invoices called for if there appears to be any reason to doubt the accuracy of the declared values. The answer to the second part of Question is in the negative. The Board of Customs have not, so far, had occasion to enforce the full penalty provided for by Section 168 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, in connection with erroneous declarations as to the value of coal exported, but fines have in some cases been inflicted on offenders. Section 110 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, has been repealed, and Section 11 of the Act, 44 Vict., Cap. 12, which replaced it, is not applicable to coal.

Brussels Sugar Convention.

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade, having regard to the undertaking of the Government given on the 5th August, 1903, that if the Commission set up under the Brussels Sugar Convention should decide that sugared goods were not to be treated on the same basis as sugar by the contracting parties, steps would immediately be taken by the Government on behalf of the manufacturers in this country; and, seeing that this eventuality has now arisen, whether he will state what steps the Government propose to take.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The undertaking given on the date referred to is not correctly described in the Question. The statements made by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer and by myself were to the effect that if and when the necessity should arise the Government would take precautions to prevent our manufacturers from being injured by the unfair competition of imported sugared products enjoying a bounty, or made with bountied sugar. To that pledge we adhere, but up to the present we are not aware that any appreciable quantity of sugared goods enjoying advantages of this nature are being imported into this country to the detriment of our manufacturers.

MR. LOUGH: But has not the Sugar Commission given an exactly opposite decision to that stated by the right hon. Gentleman? Has he received any complaints from sugar manufacturers?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I think the discrepancy to which the hon. Member refers is in relation to the surtax. It was certainly understood that there should not be a larger surtax on sugared goods than on sugar, but the Commission has decided in an opposite sense.

Amendment of the Companies Act.

MAJOR EVANS-GORDON (Tower Hamlets, Stepney): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been called to the evasions of the Companies Act of 1900, disclosed in the last Report of the Inspector-General, in companies liquidation; and whether he proposes to take any steps to prevent the further issue in this country of companies without prospectus, by which expedient the revenue and the public are defrauded.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A Bill amending the Companies Act, 1900, in this and some other respects is in course of preparation.

London Tube Railways.

SIR THOMAS DEWAR (Tower Hamlets St George's): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the Tube Railways have been subjected to inspection by the Board of Trade within the last few months; and is he in a position to state that all reasonable precautions have been taken calculated to reduce to a minimum all risk of disasters similar to those which occurred in the Paris tubes.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The precautions which are or might be taken against the risk of fire were discussed last autumn between the officers of the Board of Trade and those of the several Tube Railways open for traffic or in course of construction. The Board's Chief Inspecting Officer of Railways and their Electrical Adviser subsequently drew up a list of recommendations on which the observations of the companies were invited. The replies are not yet complete, but although there may be differences of opinion on some matters of detail, I have every reason to believe that the views of the Department, so far as not already met, will in the main be given effect to. When finally settled, these recommendations will be imposed as requirements so far as the powers of the Board extend.

London Telephone System.

SIR THOMAS DEWAR: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General if he will state what progress has been made with the London telephone system, and how much of the money provided for the service has been expended.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord STANLEY, Lancashire, Westhoughton): Nine post office telephone exchanges have been opened in the London area, and three others are in course of construction. On the 4th inst., 15,020 telephones were working in connection with these exchanges. The expenditure for the working lines, and for a large amount of general construction available for the further development of the system and the establishment of additional exchanges, amounted, on the 30th November, to £1,441,775. Parliament, when providing money for telephone capital expenditure, did not allot a defined portion of that money to expenditure in London; but I may mention that the sums provided for such expenditure in general will be exhausted by the end of the present financial year, and that I propose at the earliest opportunity to ask leave to introduce a Bill to provide further moneys for the extension of the telephone system.

American Mail Routes.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether, in view of the fact that the American mails delivered viâ Portsmouth take a longer time for delivery, especially in the commercial centres in the North of England and Scotland, than the mails carried viâ Queenstown and Dublin, he will arrange in future to continue the route most suitable to public convenience.

LORD STANLEY: The United States Post Office makes its own arrangements for the conveyance of the mails which it sends to this country, and I have, I am afraid, no control over its action.

M.P.'s and the Telephone.

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he will state on what grounds a charge of twopence is made to Members of this House for the use of a telephone which the Post Office has erected in one of the rooms of this House, while no charge is made to Members for the use of the Telephone Company's instruments; and whether he can see his way to remove this charge.

LORD STANLEY: Twopence is the ordinary charge for the use of the telephone at a public call office in London, but circumstances in the case of telephones supplied in the precincts of this House are special, and I have decided that in future no charge shall be made to Members for their use.

The Christ's Hospital Site.

SIR JOSEPH DIMSDALE (London): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General, whether in the contemplated acquisition by the Government of the site of Christ's Hospital, the purchase will be subject to the arrangement agreed to between the Corporation of London and the Governors of Christ's Hospital for making a street fifty feet wide between Giltspur Street and King Edward Street and for the widening of the latter thoroughfare.

LORD STANLEY: The acquisition of the site of Christ's Hospital will not be subject to any arrangement for the formation of a new street, since any such scheme would render the property entirely unsuitable for the purpose for which it is required by the Post Office; but a strip of land is left at the disposal of the Governors of Christ's Hospital with a view to the widening of King Edward Street.

SIR JOSEPH DIMSDALE asked if the noble Lord was aware that months before the Government entered into communication with the Governors of Christ's Hospital a site had been proposed to the Corporation of London for a new street and the widening of another street.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, Order! The hon. Gentleman is now arguing the Question.

Tay Fisheries.

SIR JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary for Scotland whether a report has been made to the Fishery Board for Scotland on the dispute between the drift and bag-net fishers on the Tay; and whether publicity will be given to it for the information of the disputants.

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. SCOTT DICKSON, Glasgow, Bridgton): No report has yet been received by the Fishery Board for Scotland regarding the dispute between the drift and bag-net fishers in the Tay.

Geological Surveys of Ireland.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Board of Education whether, in view of the fact that the rock survey of England is completed and the soil or drift survey is now being carried on to completion on six-inch maps kept in the Geological Survey Office, he will state whether in Ireland the rock survey is finished and whether the drift or soil survey is being carried on; and whether he will consider the advisability of transferring the work of the Geological Survey of Ireland to the Department of Agriculture in Ireland, and of publishing maps in the annual reports showing the progress made.

*THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION (Sir WILLIAM ANSON, Oxford University): The survey of the solid geology of England has not been completed, but together with the drift survey is being carried on on the basis of six inches to the mile on maps published since the primary geological survey was undertaken. The survey of the solid geology of Ireland was completed in 1887, and has been revised as materials became available. The drift survey, which must not be confused with a soil survey, continues to be carried on. The Board are considering the future relations of the work of the Geological Survey in Ireland to the allied economic inquiries conducted by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, and hope shortly to be in a position to communicate with that Department on the subject. Maps showing the progress made are published with the Report of 1902; details of the progress are there given in the text. Fuller details are being prepared for the maps in the forthcoming Report.

Railway Rates In Ireland.

MR. BOLAND: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that dissatisfaction prevails amongst farmers and others in South Kerry who undertook experiments in the growing of early potatoes last year because of the failure of the Congested Districts Board to secure from the railway company a reduction of freight; and whether steps will be taken to secure a reduction in the coming season, and to advertise it for the benefit of those who are engaged in this industry.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): The agricultural work of the Congested Districts Board has lately been transferred to the Department of Agriculture. The Department has taken steps to secure reduced rates for the carriage of early potatoes grown in connection with its experiments, and steps will be taken to give publicity to the reduced rates that may be secured.

Subsidised Coach and Steamer Services, Ireland.

Mr. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if the Government intend to withdraw the subsidy granted in connection with the tourist routes via Kilrush and Tarbert and via Kilrush and Foynes; and, if so, whether this intention may be reconsidered in the interest of the districts named.

Mr. JOYCE (Limerick): At the same time may I ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Government will continue the subsidy granted to coach and steamer services in the West of Ireland so that tourists will be able to avail themselves of those routes.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The two coach services between Listowel and Tarbert, and Ennistymon and Ballyvaughan, and the steamer service between Tarbert and Kilrush were experimentally established and subsidised under the Railways Act, 1896. These services have now been worked for nearly seven years, and I regret to say that the result of the experiment, financially, has been unsatisfactory. A considerable loss has been experienced on each service, and from the three services the total receipts have been less than twenty per cent. of the expenditure. Under the circumstances, and having regard to the small unexpended balance of money available under the Act of 1896, notice has been given to terminate the existing contracts on the 31st May next.

Lettir (Kerry) National School.

Mr. BOLAND: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the National Board of Education has finally decided on the plans for new schools; and whether the necessary steps will be taken to facilitate the immediate erection of a school at Lettir, Glenbeigh, County Kerry.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The applicant for a grant to build the school at Lettir has elected to wait until the new plans have been sanctioned. In respect to the general question, the Irish Government is in communication with the Treasury, and I hope shortly to be in a position to make an announcement on the subject.

Land Purchase Act—Public Trustee.

Mr. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland the name of the public trustee appointed under the Land Purchase Act of last session, and the salary attached to the office; what his previous employment was; and whether he has any official address in Ireland.

Mr. WYNDHAM: Mr. Arthur McClintock, whose appointment was published in the Press on the 9th October last. His salary is at the rate of £1,200 a year. For twelve years he occupied the position of land agent, and previously to that he was employed under the Arrears of Rent Act, 1882. His official address in Dublin is 25, Upper Merrion Street.

Glannagh Land Dispute.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the case of John Kenny, tenant to a middle landlord, living at Glannagh, county Longford, who is willing to sell his holding to him, but cannot do so in consequence of the attitude of the head landlord; and, if so, will he direct the Estate Commissioners in this case to purchase the holding with a view to resale to the tenant.

Mr. WYNDHAM: A letter has been sent to the hon. Member saying there is a difficulty in identifying the case to which he refers, owing to the fact that the name of the middle landlord is not given. I have also told him that if he will communicate the name to me, I will be happy to make further inquiry.

Longford Crimes Act Prosecution.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the £5 odd claimed by the Inspector-General of Police for an extra police force in County Longford, in connection with a Crimes Act prosecution there in the month of October, 1902, has been abandoned; and, if not, will he now direct that it be struck out.

MR. WYNDHAM: The county council objected to make this payment under a misapprehension of the requirements of the law, which were explained to the council on the 4th inst. The claim will not be abandoned.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: Then is it intended to exact the £5 from the county council?

MR. WYNDHAM: Yes, Sir.

Longford Police Barracks Lock-up.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the insanitary condition of the lock-up for untried prisoners under temporary arrest in the Royal Irish Constabulary Barracks, Longford; and, whether, seeing that in consequence of cold and dampness several deaths have occurred in consequence of detention in this lock-up, he will cause inquiry to be made with a view to putting these cells into sanitary order and comfort, so that prisoners can be detained without danger to their health or life.

MR. WYNDHAM: I am informed that no deaths have occurred attributable to the condition of this lock-up. The building is detached from the police barrack and in this respect is inconveniently placed. I am making inquiry into its general condition and will communicate the result of my inquiries to the hon. Member.

Irish Land Purchase—Future Tenants.

MR. O'DOWD (Sligo, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that there are on estates in Ireland numbers of tenants who under pressure of eviction and from other causes have been forced into the position of future tenants on the landlords' terms; and, if so, whether the cases of such will be considered in any amending Bill to the Irish Land Act of 1903 which may be introduced.

MR. WYNDHAM: There is nothing in the Act of last year to debar future tenants from purchasing. They can purchase under Clause 1 (2).

Owenmore River Floods.

MR. O'DOWD: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that, owing to the periodical flooding of the Owenmore River, in the county of Sligo, quantities of hay and other feeding stuffs are annually destroyed; whether he has received any report as to the effect of last year's flood, by which poor people have been ruined; and whether, in response to resolutions of the county council and other public bodies in Sligo, steps will be taken by the Irish Government or the Department of Agriculture to have this river drained.

MR. WYNDHAM: The Department of Agriculture will cause an inspection of this district to be carried out at an early date, with a view to determine what action it is practicable to take.

Labourers' Cottages in Ireland.

MR. O'SHAUGHNESSY (Limerick, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will grant the Return standing on today's Notice Paper relating to Labourers' Cottages in Ireland.

MR. WYNDHAM: Yes, the Return will be granted.

The Return referred to is as follows:—

Return showing the number of cottages applied for in every Poor Law Union in Ireland under the latest completed scheme in connection with the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, together with the number of applications for extra half acres to Cottages already built under the Acts under said scheme; how many of these applications for Cottages and extra half acres were sanctioned; the amount of expenses connected with such scheme; and in what way applied.

Cusack Estate.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that application is being made to Mr. Justice

Ross to admit as tenants on the Cusack Estate for the purpose of sale a number of large farmers and planters to the exclusion of the evicted tenants or their representatives residing in the neighbourhood of this estate; and whether he is prepared to offer any suggestion to the Estate Commissioners to purchase this estate, with a view to re-sale to the former tenants or their descendants.

MR. WYNDHAM: The application referred to comes on before Judge Ross to-day. The procedure in respect of estates for the sale of which an absolute order has been made is, so far as the Estate Commissioners are concerned, laid down in Section 7.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: Does the right hon. Gentleman propose to take any action such as he took last year?

MR. WYNDHAM: I must refer the hon. Member to the section of the Act which shows that the Estates Commissioners can only take action on information being laid.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: But cannot the right hon. Gentleman intervene. It would be much more effective.

MR. WYNDHAM: I cannot undertake to do the work of the Judges or of the Estate Commissioners.

Bee-keeping in Ireland.

MR. BOLAND: I beg to ask Mr. Attorney-General for Ireland whether any steps will be taken in the present session to frame a legislative measure with a view to stamping out the disease of foul brood amongst bees in Ireland.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): A scheme has recently been issued by the Department of Agriculture enabling local authorities to arrange for the treatment of bees infected with this disease. The scheme also provides for their destruction, with the consent of the owner, and for the payment of compensation to the latter. The question as to the necessity for legislative action can best be decided when the scheme has been in operation for a sufficient time.

Irish Magistracy.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask Mr. Attorney-General for Ireland whether persons recommended for the commission of the peace by the Lord Lieutenant of the county are entitled thereby to be appointed to the magistracy, or whether, in case of conviction involving fine or imprisonment for any offence the Lord Chancellor is entitled to refuse the appointment though so recommended.

MR. ATKINSON: The answer to the first part of the Question is in the negative. It is always competent to the Lord Chancellor to refuse to appoint a person to the commission of the peace under any circumstances. I cannot reply to the second part of the Question specifically, without being informed of the nature of the offence referred to.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: If I bring concrete cases before the right hon. Gentleman will he take action.

MR. ATKINSON: I shall be happy to answer any Question I can.

Belfast Post Office—Counter Losses.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he has received official reports showing that the sums lost at the money order counter, Belfast, were actually passed over the counter to the public, and what steps have been taken to show that this was the case; and whether, in view of the fact that for the two years from 1st January, 1902, to 31st December, 1903, the sum of £70 18s. 9d. was lost at the money order counter, Belfast, he will state what steps he proposes taking to safeguard the interests of counter clerks in future.

LORD STANLEY: I have not received any reports of the kind indicated by the hon. Member and I am informed that no such reports have been made. The actual amount of the deficiencies noted in the cash at the money order counter during the two years ended the 31st of December last was £63 12s. 9d. and this was among twenty-seven officers who performed duty at the money order counter during that period. In some cases it was afterwards found that the apparent deficiency was due to errors made by the officers in their accounts, and in consequence a considerable proportion of the above-mentioned sum was returned to the officers concerned. The conditions under which the officers work at the public counter at Belfast are considered satisfactory and the Postmaster of Belfast informs me that no complaints on the subject have been made by the staff.

Kilrush and the Canadian Mail Service.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Government, in connection with the new Canadian mail service, will carefully consider the claims of Kilrush, county Clare, as a port of call.

LORD STANLEY: The question is one which concerns the Post Office. The hon. Member may rest assured that in any negotiation respecting the Canadian mail service, any advantages which Kilrush may possess as a port of call will not be lost sight of.

Port of London Bill.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether it is intended to proceed with the Port of London Bill.

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: I understand that my right hon. friend hopes to proceed with the Bill as soon as public business permits.

SIR F. DIXON-HARTLAND (Middlesex, Uxbridge): Is it intended to proceed with it before Easter?

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: That depends on the state of public business.

SIR F. DIXON HARTLAND: Will full notice be given?

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: Yes, Sir.

Town Holdings Committee.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he will consider the advisability of reappointing a Town Holdings Committee to consider and report upon the existing terminable leasehold system and the taxation of land values.

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: I can only repeat the reply which the Prime Minister gave in July † last to this Question—viz., that, while he does not underrate the importance of the question, he is not prepared to recommend the appointment of a Committee. I am aware of nothing that has since occurred to alter that view.

RUSSIA AND JAPAN.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): May I ask the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary whether the Government can communicate any information to the House as to the relations between Russia and Japan?

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: We have been officially informed that diplomatic relations between the Governments of Russia and Japan have been broken off. As to the details I can add nothing to the information which appears in this connection in the public Press this morning.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Home Secretary if His Majesty's Government have issued instructions to the authorities of British ports and coaling stations abroad prescribing to them their conduct in the event of war towards belligerent ships of war. Will such ships of war only be permitted in such ports to be supplied with so much coal as will suffice to take them to the nearest port of their own country and no more; will they be prohibited from receiving any further supply of coal in any other British port until the expiration of three months from the date of the first supply, will their stay in such ports be restricted to twenty-four hours, except in the case of stress of weather or distress for necessary repairs; and will such vessels be prohibited from bringing prizes into British ports. Will the same rules be enforced in the ports of the British self-governing colonies.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxv, 1320.

*Mr. AKERS DOUGLAS: The Government have not overlooked the questions of belligerency implied in my hon. friend's Question, but his Question itself is of a very highly technical character, and it would be more satisfactory if he would put it on the Paper.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: I will put it down for to-morrow.

STANDING ORDERS.

Ordered, That the Select Committee on Standing Orders do consist of thirteen Members. Sir John Brunner, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. John Edward Ellis, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Halsey, Mr. Humphreys-Owen, Mr. James Lowther, Sir James Rankin, Mr. William Redmond, Colonel Stopford-Sackville, Sir Mark M'Taggart Stewart, Mr. Whitmore, and Mr. Wodehouse were accordingly nominated members of the Committee.—(Mr. Halsey.)

SELECTION.

Mr. Blake, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Sir John Dorington, Sir William Hart Dyke, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. McKenna, Sir Mark McTaggart Stewart, Mr. Wharton, and Mr. Wodehouse were nominated members of the Committee of Selection with the Chairman of the Select Committee on Standing Orders.—(Mr. Halsey.)

NEW BILL.

COAL MINES REGULATION BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Coal Mines," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda), Mr. Thomas Bayley, Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Hatch, Mr. Jacoby, Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Theodore Taylor, Mr. McKenna, and Mr. Herbert Lewis; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 42.]

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

[Fifth Day.]

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Main Question again proposed,—

*Mr. JOSEPH WALTON (Yorkshire, W.R., Barnsley): I rise to move the Amendment standing in my name—"And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that it is essential for the safeguarding and promotion of the commercial and political interests of the British Empire that adequate steps should be taken to maintain and extend our commercial treaty rights, and that the Consular Service should be reorganised and strengthened on lines calculated to make it more effective for the promotion of the trade of the British Empire." As a Member of the House who has always been actively engaged in endeavouring to promote the prosperity of British trade, I welcome the attention that is now being given on the part of this country to the condition of our trade and commerce, and I desire to bring under the consideration of the House some practical methods which might be employed by the Government in developing that trade, altogether apart from the imposition of protective or preferential tariffs, which would, in my opinion, being an interference with the freedom of our trade and commerce, tend to lessen rather than to increase its prosperity. I will briefly refer to the urgent need which exists for the reorganisation and strengthening of the British Consular Service, so as to make it more effective for the promotion of British trade. As at present constituted, the British Consular Service is deficient and inefficient for this purpose. The Committee which sat last year under the chairmanship of Sir William Walrond to inquire into the constitution of the Consular Service, reported most emphatically in favour of radical and important changes, and it was with the deepest regret that I saw no reference was made in the King's Speech to any intention on the part of the Government to introduce legislation carrying out those recommendations.

The Committee reported that the Consular Service at the present moment is not attractive to capable young men in that it offers no definite prospects of promotion, because men, new to the service, may be appointed over the heads of those who have been years in it. The Report goes on to say that the Committee, while they recognise that power must be reserved to the Secretary of State to appoint any person, regardless of the age limit, to one of the higher positions by reason of his special qualifications, recommend, nevertheless, that such appointments should be rare, so as to avoid lessening the attractions of the service by blocking the promotion of deserving officers. Then, in regard to commercial training, they strongly recommend that an effort should be made to draw into the Consular Service young men who have been trained in commercial houses for four or five years, and that there should be introduced — in order to increase the efficiency of the service—some system of inspection of the Consulates and Vice-Consulates. That reminds me that within my own knowledge several most distinguished members of the Consular Service have been attracted from it by the offer of more lucrative appointments elsewhere, and I venture to say that if there had been some system of appointing Inspectors-General of Consulates, the services of these distinguished and experienced men might have been retained. How, for instance, can the British Minister at Pekin properly supervise and visit all the Consulates and Vice-Consulates throughout the great Chinese Empire? It is absolutely necessary, then, for the efficiency of the service to have Inspectors-General appointed. Another important recommendation is that in large cities the system of having unpaid Consuls should be continued. On that point I am at variance with the Committee, because I venture to hold that the appointment of unpaid British Consuls and especially of foreigners to represent British trade is adverse to the interests of our trade. Probably they are members of business houses working in competition with other firms, and obviously it cannot be expected, while human nature remains what it is, that they should afford equal facilities to the whole British commercial community in conflict with their own personal interests. There has, it is noteworthy, been practically no increase in the expenditure on our Consular Service in the last thirty years. Thirty years ago it cost £200,000 annually. Now the cost is only £230,000, and, seeing that our trade has practically doubled and our shipping trebled in that time, it is clear the service must be deficient so far as regards the employment of a sufficient army of able agents to promote our trade and commercial interests all over the world.

One suggestion I have to make is that our Consuls should have more leave given them to enable them to put themselves in direct communication with the commercial communities in this country doing business where they are located, another is that there should be a better system of control and supervision as between the Foreign Office and the Board of Trade. The delay which formerly prevailed in the publication of Consular Reports has largely been got rid of, but the fact remains that there is no proper provision for a careful examination of the Reports before they are printed, and there is no one at the Foreign Office whose duty it is to read them and to bring their merits or demerits under the notice of the Department or of the Secretary of State. I could quote the opinions of Mr. Bryce, Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Edward Grey, and Lord Derby in regard to the disorganisation of the service and the necessity for ensuring promotion by merit, if the services of the best men are to be secured, and if the service is to be made as efficient as it should be in the interests of British trade.

I have this to say, that in my somewhat extended travels I have had many opportunities of meeting the Consuls of the United States of America, Germany, and Japan in various parts of the world, and I am bound to confess that, though we have many good men in our Consular Service doing excellent work, I believe that the Consular Services of those countries are more highly equipped, better organised, and better paid than ours; and that hey are at the present moment giving more attention to the promotion of the commerce of their countries than to the discharge of judicial and diplomatic functions. They are, in fact, superior to our Consular Service in promoting the trade and commerce of their respective nations. It has been admitted by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that our Consular Service is defective in connection with Persia. Last year the noble Lord said—

> "I am bound to say that my impression is that the Consular Service has for some years past been undermanned in point of numbers, and also insufficiently equipped in point of that special knowledge which members of the Consular Service in remote countries like Persia should possess."

And he added—

> "I hope that before long I shall be able to announce that we have chosen means for giving our Consular representatives in Persia that special knowledge which, under the present system, they have, perhaps, not sufficient opportunities of acquiring."

I shall be glad if the noble Lord can state to us what arrangements have been made to secure that object. We were told only last year in regard to the French Congo, where important British commercial interests were threatened, that this country had only one single Consul in that country, which is larger than France; and I want to know whether that has been remedied. Turning to the Colonies, we find that whilst foreign nations have got Consuls in all the British Colonies promoting the trade interests of their respective countries, we alone have no Consular representatives in the shape of trade agents in any single British Colony to further the commercial interests of the mother country. I learned only the other day from a Canadian friend that, through the active efforts of Belgian Consuls, two or three large bridge contracts had recently been given to Belgium, whereas we had no one on the ground to make similar efforts in behalf of British bridge builders. Again, I would give the House an example that I saw myself last year in Canada. I went to the town of Chicoutimi, where I found huge pulp mills recently erected which had been supplied with pulping machinery, turbines, electrical plant, and huge penstocks constructed of iron and steel for securing water pressure for driving the works. I found, also, that the whole produce of that great pulp mill had been sold for five years ahead in London. Knowing that we had a rebate of one-third from the Canadian import duty, and that our ships were going out light to bring back cargoes of pulp, I naturally expected we should have had a share in that trade; I said to my Canadian friend—

> "I hope the mother country got a share of the orders for the new plant."

But he replied that—

> "British manufacturers did not supply an ounce; they, in Canada, did not even know that we made such things in England. The fact is, he said, we had at least twenty commercial travellers from the United States of America seeking this business, and not one from England."

I quote this as a striking example of the fact that our trade is placed at a disadvantage in having no trade agents at work in our interest the same as other countries have agents working in their interest, and also by the inactivity of our commercial travellers. I recognise that the Agent-General of Canada does what he can to bring about trade relations between Canadian and British business houses, but that is no excuse whatever for the continuance of the present system. We have a Government in power which professes to be concerned about our trade and commerce. Let them take steps to improve by reorganisation on proper lines, and by proper equipment, our Consular Service. I would like to ask the noble Lord whether His Majesty's Government have appointed three Consuls to go to the newly opened treaty ports in Manchuria? We learn that the United States of America have already appointed Consuls there, who are to be at their posts within six weeks. Is the British Government going to be behindhand, are we to have no British agents to look after British commerce as soon as these ports are open? I much regret that there is no reference whatever in the King's Speech as to whether or not the Government intend to give effect to the recommendations in the Report of the Committee on the Consular Service. I raise this as no Party matter. I should be abundantly gratified if the noble Lord is able to give us the fullest assurance that they will be given effect to at the earliest possible date. But at this juncture, when the whole attention of the nation is being devoted to our trade and commerce, I think a reference to it might well have been introduced into the King's Speech.

I turn to the second subject I ask the House to consider—viz., whether our commercial interests have not suffered through the neglect of the Government to vigorously promote and extend British treaty rights. Take an example, in the first place, from our Colonies. We were rejoiced to know that our great Dominion of Canada had made a reduction of one-third on their duties in favour of British goods; but is the country aware—is the hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield aware, that while Canada gives with one hand, she takes away with the other in the case of the iron and steel trade of this country, a trade with which the hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield is identified?

SIR HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): Not a bit of it.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: Evidently the hon. and gallant Member is not aware of the great extension of the bounty system in Canada which has taken place since last autumn, even since 8th May, a notable political date. What are the facts in regard to that bounty system, not only on the iron and steel manufactures of Canada, but upon the iron and steel manufactures from this country, which pay a high import duty in addition to the costs of freight and insurance from our ports to the ports over there? The Canadian Parliament has in the last session passed two new Bounty Bills under which they have taken power to give a bounty not exceeding seven dollars per ton on steel rails produced in Canada, and from three to four dollars per ton on structural iron and steel—joists, girders, channels, bars, and plates.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I ask is this pertinent to the Consular Service? The Motion refers to the inadequacy of the Consular Service, and I am not aware that this has anything to do with that subject.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: The second part of my Motion is that "it is essential for the safeguarding and promotion of the commercial and political interests of the British Empire that adequate steps should be taken to maintain and extend our commercial treaty rights," and I take it that our commercial treaty rights are invaded by the bounty system. I specially notice with astonishment that no protest has been made by the Government or by their supporters, and especially in the numerous speeches delivered by the ex-Colonial Secretary, in condemnation of this extended system of bounties by which Canada is strangling our iron and steel industry. The right hon. Gentleman told us how he had condemned the strangling of the sugar trade of the West Indies by the Continental sugar bounties. Why do not he and his followers equally condemn the system of bounties so widely extended in Canada, and which is absolutely strangling our iron and steel trade? Is the hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield not aware that in the year ending the 30th June last, in addition to their protective duties, the Canadian Government gave in the shape of bounties $1,400,000 to Canadian iron and steel makers; and is he not aware that in the current year they are going to give them $2,000,000? I was told in Ottawa in October last that the new Canadian Railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the making of which was about to begin, would require 3,000,000 tons of steel rails, and that under the new system of bounties they did not expect to get a single rail from England; the whole would, they hoped, be made in Canada. Where is the prospect of the increase of trade in Canada from this country? While the Government have been hypocritically professing to be filled with concern about the trade of this country they have never uttered a word, nor has the ex-Colonial Secretary, who is misleading the nation, as to the true trade relations between this country and Canada.

Turning to another great question on which the Government have, in my opinion, failed to maintain and extend our just commercial treaty rights, let me instance the case of China, with its 400,000,000 of population. If that great country were to increase its trade to the same extent as the trade of Japan has been increased, it would be doing to-day seven times more over-sea trade than it is now doing. For the five years ended 1901, the United States trebled their trade with China, whereas the trade of the United Kingdom fell 15½ per cent. In 1902 the trade of China increased £7,000,000 sterling. The noble Lord smiles; but how much of that £7,000,000 did we secure? We secured only £1,000,000 or 14 per cent., whereas our average previously of the entire trade of China had been 46 per cent. That shows how we are losing ground with regard to our trade with China. There is another point also. Take the shipping trade, upon which we so much depend for the continuance of our prosperity. The shipping trade during the ten years ended 1902, so far as China is concerned, went down 15½ per cent., whereas the trade of Germany during that period increased 8 per cent and the trade of Japan 12 per cent. To what causes may this falling off in British trade be attributed? I think I shall be able to show that it is largely due to the British Government failing to give the same vigorous support to British commercial interests in China as has been given by the Governments of competing nations.

Take the case of railways. China, the richest Empire on earth, is for the first time being supplied with a system of railways. The Government told us in this House with a great flourish of trumpets that British concessionnaires had got concessions for 2,800 miles of these railways. But not one single concession has yet been ratified, whereas Russia, France, Germany, Belgium and the United States are busily engaged in laying down railways in China. We opened China to trade; we fought at least two wars at great cost to keep it open, and yet when this unequalled and unparalleled opportunity of large and profitable trade with China has arisen, we have no share or part or lot in the matter. Yet the British Government says that they are concerned as to the position of our trade and commerce. What did the noble Lord the Secretary of State admit himself last year, as regarded the construction of railways. He said that he freely admitted that we had much ground for complaint regarding the manner in which the Chinese Government had dealt with applications for concessions, that the Government had found it necessary to make strong remonstrances to the Chinese Government on the subject, and that Sir Ernest Satow would return to China fully aware of the views of the Government and with instructions to support them energetically. That is an absolute confession on the part of the Government of the failure of their efforts in respect of British investors and British manufacturers having a fair share in the work of supplying China with a system of railways. But that is not the worst of the case, because in connection with a great majority of the railway concessions granted by China to foreign nations there is to be found inserted a clause under which it is stipulated that the whole of the railway material and rolling stock required is to be drawn exclusively from the countries of the respective concessionnaires to the absolute exclusion of British manufacturers. That, in my opinion, is a violation on the part of the Chinese Government of the most-favoured-nation clause contained in the Treaty of Tientsin. These railways have been constructed by foreign nations for the Chinese Government. They purport to be Chinese railways; the Chinese Government have a right under certain conditions to take them over; and I submit it is a violation of the most-favoured-nation clause that we should be deprived of all chance of having any part in the supply of railway material and rolling stock for these railways. I am bound to say that all the blame does not attach to His Majesty's Government. Very great blame rests on the British syndicates who sought railway concessions and who, when they got them, failed to give effect to them. It is a disgrace to this country that whereas Belgian, French, American, and Russian investors found no difficulty whatever in raising the funds required to carry out their agreements with the Chinese Government, British subjects rest under the disgrace of having failed to fulfil their obligations. I think the British Government ought to try and encourage the entrance into the field of competition of other British investors, and that we should not hope too much from the existing syndicates.

Another important question, so far as British trade is concerned, is that some arrangement should be arrived at under which we shall enjoy equal rights in regard to railway rates over the Chinese railways with those enjoyed by the country constructing them. Lord Salisbury recognised the importance of this question, and gave instructions some years ago that this point should be very strongly pressed, and that some arrangement should be arrived at. The Russian Government in reply said, "Oh well, the railways are not yet built, and it will be soon enough to discuss the question of railway rates when they are," I should like to know from the noble Lord whether this important question is engaging the serious attention of His Majesty's Government.

*THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.): Preferential rates are prohibited by the Treaty of Tientsin.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: I should like the noble Lord to quote the clause which confirms that view. But we ought not to rest too much on the Treaty of Tientsin. It has been superseded by the recent treaty between His Majesty's Government and China, and by other treaties with other Powers. It would have been infinitely better if this particular clause had been brought forward and introduced definitely into the new treaty.

*EARL PERCY: There is no doubt whatever that preferential rates would be contrary to our most-favoured-nation rights under the Treaty of Tientsin, which has not been superseded by the recent commercial agreement.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: I should have imagined that a statesman of the experience of Lord Salisbury would not have thought it necessary to press this as a most important question if it had been already fully and satisfactorily secured by the Treaty of Tientsin. I have great doubt in my mind as to whether the explanation of the noble Lord will bear examination. I complain of the Government for having failed to arrange an equally satisfactory commercial treaty with China as has been concluded between the United States and China and Japan and China. Under our treaty with China one advantage is supposed to be the abolition of the Likin duties, but the Native Customs are continued not only on the coast but on the inland waterways and land trade routes in the interior of China. In the American treaty, however, these duties are limited to the ports and the land frontiers of China. It is perfectly true that in our treaty five new ports are to be opened, but four of these ports are conditional upon the treaty being accepted by all the other treaty Powers, and only one is conditional on the signing of the treaty. As regards our treaty commercial rights in Manchuria, all I will say is that while His Majesty's Government did not get a new treaty port in Manchuria, the United States succeeded in securing three, showing thereby that they regarded Manchuria as an integral part of the Chinese Empire. I should like to ask the noble Lord if he will tell us what Powers have assented to the British treaty; also whether the treaty came into force on the 1st January last, which was the date fixed. There are several provisions in that treaty which if brought into force would promote British trade and commerce. I should like to know whether the new rules relating to the inland waterways have come into force, and whether the five new treaty ports have been opened to trade, and, if not, when they will? Have the ports on the Yangtse River and West River been opened?

There is also another important question, and that is the grave and serious danger which now threatens British commercial interests in Manchuria. That great Province, with an area of 400,000 square miles and a population of 15,000,000, has great possibilities of expansion of trade. Last year its trade, although it has only one treaty port, was £6,000,000 sterling, of which the British Empire secured 42 per cent. Russia, on the other hand, did nil. British shipping was 175,000 tons, Russian shipping 1,200 only, and yet the Government now in power allowed Russia, with no trade interest whatever, through the treaty port of Niu-chwang, to assume absolute military and civil control of the port. At the present moment Russian officials are in control of the Customs House, and collect customs duties to the tune of 1,500,000 taels a year, which they do not hand over to the Chinese Government although those duties are the security for British bondholders. They simply pay them to the Russo-Chinese Bank and what becomes of them no one knows. They are now in actual military and civil occupation of the port of Niu-chwang. It is quite true that they undertook to evacuate it on 8th October last, but they are there still, and I want to know from the noble Lord what steps have been, or are going to be taken, in the interest of British commercial and trading rights, by the Government to restore to the British traders the rights they are entitled to. We have had given to the Chinese Government given in this House; given in the House of Lords; published in the Press; a multitude of assurances as to Russia's intentions in regard to the evacuation of Manchuria and Niu-chwang, but these assurances remain unfulfilled. Before going into that, I say that in our new treaty there is no proper provision for securing to us the most-favoured-nation clause. There is only a very shadowy provision that we shall participate in the most-favoured-nation tariffs, but when I turn to the Japanese treaty I find it is expressly stipulated—

> "That the commerce rights and privileges of Japan shall not be placed at any disadvantage as compared with the commerce rights and privileges of any other Power."

The Japanese Government safeguard to themselves in that explicit fashion every right that may hereafter be granted to the subjects of other countries. Our Government do nothing of the sort. I have the treaty here, and I ask the noble Lord to point to any one clause of it and show where British trade is protected in the same manner. This treaty is only another example of the slipshod manner in which our treaties are framed and worded.

Now I turn to the Manchurian question. In 1895 the Russian Government addressed a communication to the Japanese Government—and I would especially ask the attention of the noble Lord to this quotation—in the following terms—

> "The Imperial Russian Government having examined the terms of peace demanded of China by Japan consider that the contemplated possession of the Liau-tung peninsula by Japan will not only constitute a constant menace to the capital of China, but will also render the independence of Korea illusory and thus jeopardise the permanent peace of the Far East. Accordingly the Imperial Government, in a spirit of cordial friendship for Japan, hereby counsel the Government of the Emperor of Japan to renounce the definitive possession of the Liau-tung peninsula."

Then in 1898, in the Manchurian railway agreement between Japan and Russia, Russia says—

> "This railway concession is never to be used as a pretext for encroachment on Chinese territory, nor to be allowed to interfere with Chinese authority or interests."

Nothing could be more explicit than that. Then we come to 1902, and what is known as the Manchurian Convention, and then we have it stated that—

> "Russia consents to the re-establishment of Chinese authority in Manchuria, which remains an integral portion of the Chinese Empire, and restores to China the right to exercise sovereign and administrative powers as before the occupation by Russian troops."

I especially draw the noble Lord's attention to that. Russia, Sir!

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! I would point out to the hon. Member that though, as he is now speaking of the main question, he is entitled to refer to these matters, but his present observations are not pertinent to his Amendment, and the noble Lord will not be permitted to answer them when the Amendment has been put from the Chair.

*Mr. JOSEPH WALTON: The point I was attempting to make, Sir, was that our trade interests were not being protected.

*Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. Member appeared to have gone beyond that, and gone into the territorial question.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: I had no desire to transgress, and the question on this occasion is really this: Russia undertakes to restore to China the sovereign and administrative power in Manchuria, as before the occupation by Russian troops, my point being that unless the sovereignty of Manchuria is restored to China, our treaty rights will not be protected. But we had some assurances also in regard to the evacuation by Russia of Manchuria. On 30th April Lord Cranborne announced in this House of Commons—

> "That the Russian Government disclaim all intention of seeking for exclusive privileges in Manchuria or departing from the assurances given in respect of that province."

And then again, on the 11th of May, in reply to a Question I put to the noble Lord in this House he told us—

> "In reply to independent friendly communications which during the last few days have been addressed to the Russian Government by the Government of the United States and of His Majesty, the Russian Government have intimated that they adhere to the engagements into which they have entered to evacuate Manchuria; though the evacuation has been temporarily delayed."

I do not desire to enter into any territorial question in China, because we have no territorial questions there. All we desire, in common with the United States of America and other nations, is to maintain the integrity of China and equal opportunity for all nations to trade there. What I would ask the noble Lord to do is to give the House some proof that the Government have not been unmindful of our great commercial interests in that great Empire. It seems to me in the present deplorable condition of affairs in the Far East there should be some mediation by Powers like ourselves and America to press upon Russia the necessity of observing her pledges with regard to Manchuria, and thus avert war. On the Government at the present moment rests the most supreme responsibility, and the eyes of the whole of the civilised world are upon them as to the action they take.

But it is not only with regard to China that we have to complain. Take the treaty with Persia last year; was a more slipshod treaty ever signed? It was presented to us with only the signature of Mr. Naus, the Belgian head of Customs, on behalf of the Shah of Persia. What I complain of is that this Government, which claims to have such a deep interest in upholding and promoting the prosperity of the trade and commerce of this country, actually sanctioned a treaty with Persia which gave Russia great preferences over this country. Under the Treaty of Turkomanchai of 1828, we had equal rights and privileges, 5 per cent. ad valorem. Under the treaty of last year that 5 per cent. was raised to 100 per cent. in the case of tea and 8 per cent. in the case of cotton, while the duty on Russian petroleum has been reduced from 5 per cent. to 3 per cent. In ten years ending 1901, Russian trade with Persia increased 125 per cent. while for the same period British trade declined 33 per cent.

Now, let me turn to the question of British treaty rights with Madagascar. No one rejoices more than I do at the establishment of the entente cordiale between the great French speaking nation and ourselves. What are the facts in regard to British trade with Madagascar? Formerly we had 95 per cent. of the trade; now we have 5 per cent., and the falling off is due to the absolute surrender by the Government of British commercial treaty rights with Madagascar. Moreover, our trade has been curtailed in Tunis, and I say that in view of the present friendly relations between the two countries, His Majesty's Government will be failing in their duty towards the trade and commerce of the kingdom if they do not make vigorous efforts to secure better treatment for us. Turning to the West Coast of Africa, I submit that the Government have failed to uphold the rights and interests of British traders in the Congo—especially the French Congo. At a time when it is said that our trade is going to the dogs, I suggest that the measures I have indicated—the reorganisation of the Consular Service, the making of it more effective for the promotion of British trade, and the maintenance and extension of our just commercial treaty rights all the world over—are practical means for increasing the prosperity of British trade, and I hope that the noble Lord will be able to give us satisfactory assurances on these matters.

If he would assure us that, instead of asking for a loaded revolver with which to enter upon a fiscal war with the whole universe, the Foreign Secretary will devote his earnest attention to remedying the defects I have pointed out, he would secure much more practical benefit to British trade than by any illusory schemes of fiscal retaliation. The question of British trade and commerce is not a Party question, for surely Members on both sides and their constituents are equally interested in upholding and extending the prosperity of the trade and commerce of the country. I beg to move.

MR. RIGG (Westmoreland, Appleby) formally seconded the Amendment.

Amendment proposed at the end of the Question to add the words—

"'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that it is essential for the safeguarding and promotion of the commercial and political interests of the British Empire that adequate steps should be taken to maintain and extend our commercial treaty rights, and that the Consular Service should be reorganised and strengthened on lines calculated to make it more effective for the promotion of the trade of the British Empire.'"—(Mr. Joseph Walton.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

*EARL PERCY: The hon. Member has dwelt with great insistence—and with a pessimism which is not frequently reflected in the speeches of his Party when dealing with our fiscal policy—on the importance of British trade, especially in China. We all recognise the great importance of our trade interests in China. It is almost a common-place. The loss of the Chinese market would be a severe blow to our present trade; the loss of the prospective markets of China would be a still more serious blow to our trade of the future. We all admit the premises of the hon. Gentleman, but when upon those premises he proceeds to build an argument implying that it is the duty of the British Government to maintain, and increase British trade, I must demur from his proposition. So long as we adhere to our present fiscal policy, that is not only not the duty of the British Government, but it is beyond our power. Hitherto we have deliberately adhered to our old system of drawing a clear line of demarcation between the province of the State and the province of the individual trader. We have deliberately adopted an attitude of laissez faire, or at least, of benevolent neutrality towards the efforts of British commercial enterprise. We altogether decline to use State credit for the purpose of financing or aiding industrial or commercial undertakings abroad; and we do not use our tariff for the purpose of imparting an artificial stimulus to our export trade. Foreign countries adopt the very opposite policy. They not only act as the foster-mothers of their own trade, but they might almost be said to be traders on their own account. By a great variety of expedients—the protection of the home market, bounties on exports, drawbacks, preferential railway rates, subsidies to shipping, and guaranteed loans for railway enterprise abroad—they do everything in their power to maintain their hold on existing markets, and to capture new ones; and they test the success of that policy, not by the burden of taxation which it throws upon their own subjects, but by the resultant increase of their export trade. It is well that we should understand one another. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham recently impressed upon an audience the necessity of learning to think Imperially. I think it is equally important that we should learn to think clearly. I should very much like to know what is the policy of the hon. Gentleman opposite. Does he desire that we should change our policy, and adopt that of foreign countries in these matters? If the Party opposite desire that, let them say so, and we shall be prepared to discuss it.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: Change your policy of "drift."

*EARL PERCY: If, however, they are perfectly satisfied with improved technical education, with more Charlottenburg schools, with a remodelled and extended Consular Service, then all I say is—that measures of this kind, however desirable, form but an insignificant part of the machinery on which our foreign competitors rely to take away our trade, and as complete remedies they would not be effective. Unless we are prepared to go very much further, what is the use of indulging in all this hollow rhetoric about the British Government not affording the same amount of support to their nationals that is afforded by foreign Governments to theirs? I entirely deny that the decline of British trade, such as it is, is to be traced to the causes to which the hon. Member refers. As I have said, so long as our present fiscal policy is adhered to, it is not the duty of the British Government to maintain and increase our commerce; that is the duty of British traders. The duty of the Government is to keep clear the avenues and to increase, if possible, the opportunities for commerce, and to see that the open door is really open, and not merely ajar.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: But you do not do it.

*EARL PERCY: It is by that test, and that test alone, that our policy must be judged. The hon. Member will forgive me if I do not follow him into such ancient history as that of our commercial treaty with Madagascar. That has been often discussed in this House, and I think everybody is perfectly aware of the circumstances of the case. When the French first went to Madagascar and established a Protectorate, we did obtain a definite assurance that they would continue to respect the treaty rights which we had obtained from the native Government. Subsequently, when they converted the protectorate into annexation, they held that by the act of annexation they had dispensed themselves from the necessity of acting any longer upon assurance. We did not hold that view at the time, and we not hold it now; we protested at the time, and we have continued to protest. I do not know that there is anything more to be said about it except that it is an experience by which we should do well to profit when we are engaged in negotiations of the same kind, so that, knowing the view the French Government take of the effect of annexation, we may avoid similar misunderstanding in the future.

Then the hon. Member passed from Madagascar to Persia, and criticised our commercial treaty. To begin with I should like to make two corrections. The hon. Member seemed to think that the mode in which the signatures were appended to the treaty constituted a departure from precedent. It did nothing of the kind. The document was signed in the French text by the English plenipotentiaries, and in the Persian text by the Persian plenipotentiaries. Then he said we had gratuitously prevented our Colonies from giving to the mother country preferential treatment. We did nothing of the kind. On the contrary, we took care to obtain a special assurance from the Persian Government that nothing in the treaty would prevent the Colonies from giving preferential treatment to the mother country.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: That assurance is not in the treaty.

*EARL PERCY: No, and there is nothing in the treaty which binds the Persian Government regarding the preferences given by the colonies to the mother country.

*MR. JOSEPH WALTON: Oh yes, there is.

*EARL PERCY: At all events, the Persian Government takes a different view from the hon. Gentleman. Then he says that in that treaty we are worse off than we were under the old treaty. Yes, and I am very glad he has drawn attention to the fact; it is an admirable illustration of the value to us of the most-favoured-nation clause, which hon. Members opposite seem to regard as the sheet-anchor of our commercial prosperity. For something like half a century, up to last year, British trade in Persia depended exclusively on most-favoured-nation treatment under the Russian treaty. The time came when the Persian Government was in need of money, and wished to substitute a new commercial treaty for the old one, and the Russians in negotiating the new commercial treaty took very great care of their own interests and were not specially careful to safeguard the interests of Great Britain. No one can say that that was satisfactory to us, but the blame attaches to both Governments—Liberal as well as Conservative. I think the hon. Member might have given the present Government the credit of having been the first Government who have taken the trouble to put our commercial rights in Persia beyond doubt and secure for us not only the same rights as the Russian Government obtained, but also a definite security that the rate of duties cannot be again raised on British commerce without our consent. I am happy to inform the hon. Member that although, on the face of it, that that treaty did seem likely to have an injurious effect on British trade, it has not had that effect so far as we have been able to ascertain. I have got out the figures of the imports during the first quarters of 1902–3 and 1903–4. I give them in quantities and not in value. The Customs returns show that in the period March to June, 1903–4, the import of Russian tea increased by 398 maunds, while the import of tea from the British Empire increased by 92,855 maunds. The increase in cotton tissues from Russia was 140,288 maunds whilst the increase for the British Empire was 268,738 maunds. So far as we are able to ascertain the facts the Treaty has not had any really serious effect in diminishing British exports to Persia. The hon. Member went on to discuss the position in China. He referred to our trade there, and he seemed to think that it had steadily and even rapidly diminished. I do not want to weary the House by quoting any more statistics, but I assure the House that that is not so, but British trade, on the contrary, is now steadily rising. There was a period just after the Boxer trouble when there was a certain diminution, but since then it has more than recovered its former level. The hon. Member dealt with the question of railway concessions. If we consider merely the mileage obtained by British as compared with foreign concessionaires, our record compares very favourably with theirs. It is quite true that there has been a regrettable delay in materialising those concessions, and so far as that is due to the action of the Chinese Government, we have lost no opportunity of urging them to accelerate the proceedings, and I am happy to say that, at the present moment the prospects of British railway enterprise in China are better than they have been for a long time past. In August last year an understanding was arrived at with Prince Ching under which the Pekin Syndicate's line north of the Yellow River is to have a Chinese Government guarantee, and the promise obtained by the British and China Corporation to construct a railway from Pukon opposite Nanking to join the Luhan line at Sinyang has been confirmed. We have also obtained a promise from the Chinese Government that whenever the time arrives when they wish to have a railway built from the Yangtze to Szechuan and they are not able to find the funds themselves they will apply to British capital. The hon. Member has alluded to the question of railway material and he seems to think that there are certain clauses in the contracts made by foreign companies with the Chinese Government compelling them to order all their railway material from a particular source, which would constitute a violation of the most-favoured-nation treatment. As far as we are aware, there is no clause of such a character in those contracts and we shall be glad if the hon. Member will give us any definite information on that point. He has also alluded to the commercial treaty signed by ourselves and China last year, and he is much aggrieved that we did not insert in that treaty a clause asserting our right to most-favoured-nation treatment. As I said before, there is no need for such a clause, because it does not supersede the Treaty of Tientsin, and under that treaty our right to the most-favoured-nation treatment is safeguarded. The new British commercial treaty came into operation in July last year, and not January of this year as the hon. Member said. Article VIII. will come into force when it has been accepted by the other Powers. With regard to treaty ports Kongmoon has been already opened by Imperial decree and has been a port of call ever since the West River was opened to steamers. Nanning Fu has also been opened by Imperial decree. It was discovered that steamers cannot easily reach Nanning Fu, and that as regards trade it is not the important place it was at one time supposed to be. Therefore no steps have been taken either by the Chinese Government or our own Government to establish a Customs House or Consuls there. As regards ports of call on the West River eight ports have been opened for passenger traffic. Rules for inland navigation have been issued by Sir Robert Hart, and provisional regulations for carrying out the stipulations of the Treaty have been approved by the Chinese Foreign Office. There was no provision in the Treaty for the creation of a conservancy at Canton, but a survey of the harbour has been carried out by a Chinese revenue steamer with a view to the removal of obstructions. At Whangpo a Board was to be formed. It has not, however, been constituted yet owing to the delay of the Chinese Government in appointing their representative. We have made frequent representations on the subject; and it will become necessary if the Chinese Government do not appoint their representative to proceed with the constitution of the Board without him. I do not know whether the hon. Member expects me this afternoon to go into a comparison of the advantages between the British treaty and the treaties made with the United States and Japan. I dispute entirely that the United States treaty is superior to ours. On the contrary, the United States treaty omits provisions of the utmost importance to British trade. As regards their two treaty ports, it is the intention of His Majesty's Government to appoint and send out Consuls to both Mukden and Antung.

The hon. Member asked me a general question with reference to the situation in Manchuria as bearing on the treaty rights of this country. I do not want to discuss that subject in detail for very obvious reasons, but I may say that no effective steps have been taken to carry out the evacuation of Manchuria since the House rose. After the notification by Admiral Alexieff in May that the province of Shingking was to be evacuated, as the hon. Gentleman is no doubt aware, Mukden was again reoccupied by Russian troops. As regards Niu-chwang the hon. Gentleman has correctly stated the position. The maritime Customs are still paid into the Russo-Chinese bank to the credit of the Russian Government. As regards the native Customs which also form part of the security for the Indemnity and were to be administered by the staff of the Inspector-General, we are informed that they have lately been placed under a Russian nominee and the representative of the Imperial maritime Customs has been removed. A Blue-book will shortly be published, which will deal with Manchuria alone, and which will contain a very full account of all the historical events and of our action in regard to them from the date of the Boxer rising. The hon. Member has referred to the assurances given by Russia. On the 8th January the latest of these assurancos was made to Lord Lansdowne in the following declaration by the Russian Government—

> "In order to prevent all misunderstanding and misconstruction Russia considers it indispensable, independently of the conditions which will in the future definitely determine the character of her relations with Manchuria, to declare from this day forth that she has no intention whatever of placing any obstacle in the way of the continued enjoyment by foreign Powers of the rights acquired by them in virtue of treaties now in force."

Count Benckendorff subsequently explained on 19th January, in answer to an inquiry by Lord Lansdowne, that this assurance meant that whatever changes might hereafter be introduced in the relations of Russia and Manchuria the Powers would preserve the rights which they enjoyed under existing treaties. I will only say one word in conclusion in answer to the hon. Gentleman's enquiries with regard to the Consular Service. The recommendations of the Committee that sat last session to consider the new regulations to be drawn up for the Consular Service have been under the consideration of the Secretary of State, and the general principles of these recommendations have received his approval. We hope very shortly to be able to make a more distinct statement on the subject. If these recommendations are carried out we hope that the Consular Service in the future will contain a larger element drawn from the commercial class. A certain number of vacancies will probably be set aside for candidates who have had a commercial training, and they will spend some time subsequent to their examination in the Intelligence Department of the Board of Trade. In regard to the Consular Trade Reports which the hon. Gentleman finds so unsatisfactory, a circular was issued to Consuls in the course of 1902 drawing attention to the point the hon. Gentleman has mentioned, that these Reports are too often overloaded with matter which is not properly commercial to the exclusion of matter which is of special interest to the mercantile community, and also defining the points on which information is required.

*Mr. JOSEPH WALTON asked leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main Question again proposed.

FISCAL POLICY.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs) moved the Amendment of which he had given notice in regard to the fiscal policy of the country. He said: I am sorry to know, though this Amendment has been postponed for some days, that even now we shall not be able to have the advantage of the presence of the Prime Minister. I do not know whether he will be able to attend before the debate is concluded, but in any case, however that may be, I am sure I need not tell the House how much, both personally and on public grounds, I regret his absence. There is one other right hon. Gentleman, only less important, if indeed less important, than the Prime Minister, whose presence I understand we are not to look for during the course of this debate. I refer, of course, to my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham. I hope I shall not be trespassing beyond the proprieties of the occasion if I mention that I have known the right hon. Gentleman for half a life-time. During all those years I was in close and intimate relations with him, and I do not think I will allow any differences of opinion upon public questions—and between him and me they are, and have been, profound, and never more profound than they are to-day—to prevent me from saying, if the House will permit me, that he possesses in a most marked and peculiar degree the genius of friendship—sincere, kind, and staunch friendship. Mr. Powell Williams, who, a few hours ago passed away from our great world-theatre, found friends amongst us all. But to the Member for West Birmingham he was more than an ordinary friend. He was one who, in sunshine and in storm, was his close, faithful, and trusted adherent; and I for one, and I believe in all parts of the House hon. Gentlemen will agree with me, fully comprehend and entirely respect the feeling which has mastered the Member for West Birmingham.

It has been suggested to me that, as these two great protagonists of—I do not know whether I should call them rival policies or of identical policies—are unable to take part in this debate, we should postpone it. I cannot myself, for one moment, think that a well-founded view. I think we are bound in this House to take the very first opportunity of bringing to the test of a discussion at close quarters the question that has agitated the mind of the country for the last four or five months, and we ought to know—it is our duty to know—where the House stands, where Ministers stand, and where the question stands. I think quite long enough, and too long, has it been the case that this House, of all places in the island, is the only place where this question has not been, and apparently is not to be, discussed. We think the House of Commons would be wanting in one of its first duties, perhaps its most fundamental duty, if it were not to take this opportunity of raising the question which arises on my Amendment. After all, its highest constitutional function is to examine the national charges, to survey national ways and means, to adjust the national burden. We are going this session to do so in remarkable—I think in unprecedented—circumstances. We have not only the well-known announcement of the Prime Minister, which I will not trouble at this stage to introduce, that he is for a deep and genuine change in our fiscal policy—that we are to annul and delete the traditions of two generations. We have also from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Minister who is specially responsible for the financial administration of the country, a strong declaration that "the time has come when we should make a breach with the traditions of the past"—I think he must have forgotten that he is on the Conservative side of the House—"and that we should allow ourselves to think for ourselves." That is very impressive, but does that Bench think for themselves? Then he says:—"We are making progress." Who are "we," and where is the progress to? The right hon. Gentleman will, no doubt, answer us those questions; but, be that as it may, it is indispensable that, if we are to discuss our financial situation, the supreme business of the House, with real efficacy, we must know whether we have got a protectionist or an anti-protectionist Government to guide us. It is not very easy to be quite sure of that. We are apt, in this House, to regard with suspicion, and perhaps with a trace of mockery, anybody who introduces a Motion, and begins by saying that it is not a Party Motion. I venture respectfully to submit to the House that I can make that claim to-day, because my Amendment will, unless I am greatly mistaken, be most powerfully reinforced, perhaps even more powerfully than we could argue it on this side, by Gentlemen who are sitting among yourselves, by Gentlemen who a few months ago were amongst your most trusted and responsible and experienced leaders and Members. That is one thing which, I think, divests my Amendment of a Party aspect purely. And I would venture another, however insignificant, observation of a personal kind, that in economics and finance, so gravely do I, for my part, always regard these questions—much more gravely than purely political questions—that when the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bristol was Chancellor of the Exchequer he will remember that I voted freely away from my friends who sit near me, and that I supported the Government on the coal tax and on the sugar tax. But the last straw—the corn duty—broke my back, and I could support him and the Government no more. I do not often regale myself by reading old speeches of my own, but when I went over again the observations which I had to address to the House in moving the rejection of the Report stage of the Corn Duty Clause of the Finance Bill, I really was astonished, not at my own moderation, but at my own foresight. Every observation that I made almost has been verified by the scenes of the last few months. I warned the then Chancellor of the Exchequer that he was entering upon a course which would inevitably lead him or his Party to colonial preference and to a tax upon food—to proposals for a tax upon food.

Well now, the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Tuesday last referred to some language I had used implying that the state of the industries of the country was not all that we could desire. I have always held for the last eight years the same language. I agree with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham on this point. I have said it again and again both inside this House and outside this House. There is a great deal in the state of the commerce and industry, and of the employment of our population which must give every serious and observant man plenty of food for reflection. I have always in the country wound up with the declaration of the late Lord Salisbury, which was that there is ground for anxiety, that no statesman can look around and see these new conditions without anxiety; but then Lord Salisbury went on to say—

> "That is no reason why we should grasp at the first remedy that any man chooses to propose to us."

Sir, if the House will, for an instant, pardon an historical reference: during the last sixty years, which we are going to refer to so often in the course of this debate, the first step was Sir Robert Peel's liberation from the tariff of a certain number of articles in 1842. There then followed, in 1860, eighteen years afterwards, what Mr. Gladstone always used to call the cardinal and organic emancipatory free trade period. During that time, first by Sir Robert Peel and then Mr. Gladstone, an enormous number of articles were removed from the tariff which restricted trade, which interfered with the application of capital, and which presented the free exercise of skill and industry. I am not sure that it was 1860; anyhow, by 1860 or 1866 that great emancipatory period was concluded. And these were all occasions of the most remarkable kind. And there was what the right hon. Member for Bristol will admit, a further important step taken, not in this House, nor by a statesman, but by the constituencies in the year 1874, when they by their rejection of the proposals then made to them for the abolition of the income-tax, settled finally that the income-tax was to be a permanent instrument of the national revenue. There are three or four stages of which I venture to remind the House. It may be; we do not know yet whether the new movement that began on 15th May last year was a conflagration or whether it is to prove merely the flash of a meteor; I hope that this debate will perhaps clear the air a little on that issue; but anyhow there is this peculiarity in the situation in which we have now entered. In 1843 the state of the finances of the country, the state of the industry of the country, the dilapidation of the revenue, were so marked that it was the urgent duty of the Ministry of that day at once to set to work to remedy so deplorable a state of things. That was what Sir Robert Peel did in 1846. There was scarcity and famine which cried aloud for legislation; and in 1860 there were particular relations between this country and France. At that moment there was also an accidental state of things in the Exchequer which precipated the occasion of which Mr. Gladstone took advantage. Upon all those occasions there was urgency; and even, if I may refer to 1886, when a very great and important step was taken by the Prime Minister of that day, which divided Parties, as Parties are divided now, there was urgency. If the Prime Minister had been here now I am sure he would have agreed with me that the solution which we then propounded to this House and to the country and which this House first and the country afterwards rejected—whether that solution of Home Rule was right or wrong—there was in the state of Ireland a condition of social order, and there was in this House a state of Parties which made it a question of urgency. But where is the urgency for the change that the Ministry now propose? What is the crisis, what is the emergency? I know that all controversies are liable to expand and to grow; and after the very effective treatment which my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition gave to the history of this crisis last Tuesday night. I am not going to repeat it to the House. But the change, everybody knows is expressed in a sentence. This new fiscal policy was sprung upon the country. I do not use the word "sprung" in an invidious sense; but it was launched from the colonial point of view. The colonial point of view pretty rapidly disappeared. [MINISTERIAL cries of "No, no."] The hon. Member who says "No," if he takes part in the debate later, will perhaps tell us how he regards the position of the colonial policy. It disappeared, and a new case was presented. It was then that the industry and commerce of the country were languishing and declining, and demanded a prompt and immediate treatment (that was the new case), and that a remedy should be provided with the utmost despatch. It was rather odd, because it was not long before the Member for West Birmingham, who first launched the policy, had in tones of perfectly natural jubilation congratulated the country that it had been able to bear the enormous financial burden of the Boer war without turning a hair. But I see opposite to me the President of the Board of Trade. Very likely he will do me the honour to follow me in this debate. The President of the Board of Trade this time last year did not think that there was any crisis or any emergency. This is the language of the President of the Board of Trade to his constituents on 23rd January, 1903—

> "He confessed that he did not see any signs of the decline and ruin of British industry which was the prominent topic with the British newspapers, and though the critics might have done good by drawing attention to the shortcoming, they could have too much even of a good thing, and he was bound to say that he thought the part of Cassandra had been somewhat overdone. He thought that in this matter they could do well with a little of the optimism which distinguished Mr. Chamberlain."

I respectfully ask the right hon. Gentleman to tell us when he rises whether in his view there was an emergency then. Surely not! Then what happened within three or four months? The President of the Board of Trade seems to have been led by the Member for West Birmingham into a completely new and reverse position, and we should be glad to know whether now he thinks, he having used the language which I have just read to the House, that agriculture is destroyed — [Sir HOWARD VINCENT: Hear, hear!]—and all the rest of it. I should listen to him with the most respectful attention. Will he tell us why he has changed his mind, if he has changed his mind? Is there any indication or the smallest evidence of there being a crisis or an emergency except an artificial and invented crisis? The Prime Minister himself, I think at Bristol, said that he would have been very glad if circumstances—I do not know quite what the circumstances were—allowed him to leave this question, which was an urgent question, as an open question in his Cabinet. If it had been a critical or an urgent question, it would not have been an open question. There is no doubt about that. There is another point about that which I address to the President of the Board of Trade. The Government instituted what they called an inquiry — a proceeding which the Duke of Devonshire, although a party to it, describes publicly as having proved a deception. But the Member for West Birmingham speaks in the most contemptuous language of the inquiry instituted by the Board of Trade. He says that this Blue-book is the library of the free importers, meaning by that the whole contents of that Blue-book are a library of arguments for free importers. [Cries of "No."]

I will not detain the House long in arguing the second clause of my Amendment, namely, "that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the nation." You may dispute, if you please; I fully admit how many other elements there are that have entered into that most prosperous and satisfactory state of things which, until the other day, we were all agreed in recognising. Of course there were other elements which may have entered, but any hon. Member who endeavours to make an adjustment of the degree to which this prosperity is due to free trade, or to other elements, I warn him that he will enter upon a task of the most intricate and complex character. This I do venture to say, without fear of contradiction from hon. Gentlemen opposite or an where else, that the condition precedent to this country's being able to avail itself of the various other elements, such as railways and other things which have been good for the country, was free trade. If I may be allowed to indulge for a moment in a philosophical reflection, you may say, if you please, that the decision, by the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846, to make the ideal of those islands a manufacturing community, instead of an agricultural community—you may say, if you like, that that was a wrong decision. But I am no great idolater of the factory system. I think it has produced, and I refer to them in my Amendment, a state of things which needs manifest and urgent remedies. I remember Mr. Mill, formerly a Member of this House and much more than a Member of this House. He used to tell us that if the alternative was between Socialism and the evil social condition then, as now, prevailing in many parts of these islands, though against Socialism, he would rather face Socialism with all its risks than acquiesce in the subsisting state of things. But it is not worth arguing now. If England is to be characteristically a manufacturing community, the man who denies that free imports actively conduce, and not only conduce but are indispensable, to our commerce and the welfare of our population—I say such a man, whoever he may be, shows himself so grossly ignorant of the social conditions of the country between the end of the great war and the time of Sir Robert Peel that I will not waste the time of the House in arguing against him. Then there is another position taken by some of the disputants in this controversy—I will not argue with them if they say it is matter of history and fact that protective duties were removed on the faith of anticipations and prophecies of imitation by other countries. To make that assertion is to be guilty of a ludicrous falsification of all you will read in speeches by Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Cobden, or anybody else; it is not worth argument. The effect of protective duties had been so examined by the country, had been so repudiated by the country, that the free trade policy, which was not only passed in this House in 1846, but was ratified by the general election in 1847, was held fast to all through the years from 1847 to 1852, when there was another general election, and the country still repudiated, having had bitter experience, anything like a return to protective duties. Mr. Disraeli himself, the Leader of your Party, said the country had decided, and therefore it would be a culpable waste of time to argue whether the country had good or bad reasons for its dislike of protective duties.

I am not going to take the House—and I am sure they will thank me for it—into all the controversy, or points of controversy even, in the discussions that have taken place during the last few months in the country; but I should like to call the attention of the House to what I call general fallacies—not fallacies of statistics, though they were fallacious enough—but general fallacies that seem to me to have pervaded these discussions. It is a very short list, though I do not believe there is a single fallacy that has not found illustration in speeches from hon. and right hon. Gentlemen on that Bench. This is the method. You take every case that is hypothetically possible, theoretically imaginable or conceivable, and immediately treat that as if it were an actual case and an urgent case. Then you begin with the economical argument, and when you find that the ground will not bear you you then change ground suddenly, and, dropping the economical argument, take refuge in sentimental, idealist, or political arguments. The third method, which has struck me very much, is that you show that circumstances might arise which might justify a tariff as the proper expedient, and then you proceed to infer that the argument is exactly as valid for existing circumstances, though these are entirely different from your hypothetical case. Then you state a fact, and if that fact is completely demolished in two or three days, you then say that it was an illustration, not an argument. I have read a number of speeches in which hon. Gentlemen opposite have been literally guilty of supposing that a protective duty is the same thing as a revenue duty, though, of course, a protective duty is the exact opposite of a revenue duty and thoroughly ill-adapted for all the purposes of a revenue duty. And then about the consumer and imports strange language has been used. The consumer has been spoken of as if he were a sort of habitual inebriate, and every import as if it were an affront to the British Empire. There is one argument I wish to deal with, the argument that times have changed and that conditions of industry have altered in our day. That is not at all an unnatural position to take, but I submit boldly to the House that not one of the changes that have taken place since 1846—I think there is not one which does not make against protection and in favour of free trade. I maintain further that protection will aggravate every one of the mischiefs of which you complain. The first argument is, "Oh, since then — [Sir HOWARD VINCENT, Hear, hear!]—there have sprung up great rivals." The hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield ironically cheers that. Does he suppose that any statesman dreamed in 1846 that Great Britain was going to be the manufacturer to all eternity for the whole universe? [Sir HOWARD VINCENT: Mr. Cobden said so.] I probably know a great deal more about Cobden than the hon. and gallant Gentleman, and I say that so far was he from saying that that he said exactly the opposite. I am prompted by the interruption of the hon. and gallant Member to read an extract of a few sentences from Mr. Cobden. When I regard the contemptuous language used about Mr. Cobden by men who are unworthy to loosen his shoe latchet, I venture to recall to the House language—very beautiful language, well worthy of his genius—used by Mr. Disraeli. Standing, I suppose, at this box, when Mr. Cobden died, Mr. Disraeli said—

> "Thus our great men, when taken from us, are not altogether lost. Though not present, they are still Members of this House, independent of the caprice of constituencies, independent of dissolutions of Parliament, independent of the course of time. Their example will long be referred to and appealed to, and their words will often be quoted."

This was the language used by a Leader of your Party, a Leader who really led. Now, in reference to the hon. and gallant Member's statement that Mr. Cobden held out the expectation that this country would remain without manufacturing rivals, I will ask the House to listen to this extract—

> "Looking at the natural endowments of the North American continent, at the boundless expanse of the most fertile soil in the world, at the inexhaustible mines of coal, iron, lead."

Looking at these, the writer reiterates the moral of his former work, declaring his conviction that it is from

> "the silent, peaceful rivalry of American commerce, and the growth of American manufactures," and so on, that the > "grandeur of our commercial and national prosperity is most endangered.'

SIR HOWARD VINCENT: What is the date of this statement of Mr. Cobden's?

MR. JOHN MORLEY: I cannot say offhand, but I will satisfy the hon. and gallant Gentleman. It was the base of the whole policy, and it is, I hope, the base of the policy of us who sit on this side of the House, that it is exactly because you have this formidable competition to face that you should pursue a policy of peace, of reduced expenditure, and a policy of national education. That was the base of the whole of Mr. Cobden's national policy. But I must hurry on. The more formidable the competition is, the more reason is there why you should leave as much freedom as possible for the application of capital, for the exercise of skill and industry, and the general operations of trade. The second change is that you have all over the land enormous aggregates of population in manufacturing towns. Is that an argument for protection? Is it not an argument, the strongest you can use, for leaving all the channels by which food and raw materials find their way to our shores not narrow, not blocked? There is no argument for protection in that change. Then there have been, no doubt, enormous developments in steam locomotion and in telegraphic communication, having the effect of producing enormous mobility of capital and rapidity of transit of products from place to place. Granting all this, how can these great changes, these great material changes, be utilised to the uttermost unless you have open ports? Every change of this kind, if it means one thing more clearly than any other, means that protection in any form would be the most ruinous step you could possibly take.

There is another change. The Colonies have accomplished great permanent power and prosperity. Yes, but I invite attention to this. Suppose that the policy of protection should tend to diminish the protective and accumulative power of this country, and should impoverish this country, what worse thing could happen to the Colonies than such an event as that? The Colonies have almost more to lose than we have by our impoverishment. Diminish our plentiful supply of capital, or our cheap and rapid means of locomotion, and all these boons which we are able to place at their disposal would be either stopped or limited; and I say that the demands of the Colonies are one of the strongest arguments for an anti-protection policy. There is another great change—the transfer of political power, since 1846, from the old £10 householders to the artisans of the towns and the labourers of the fields. I am not going to argue the effect of free trade upon political peace, but I would submit to the House that it cannot be quite an accident — it cannot be a fortuitous coincidence — that the great free trade country of Europe is the one great country of Western Europe which since 1846 has never known even a shadow of a civil convulsion. There is no great country in the West of Europe which equals us in the absence from class division, class envy, hatred, and strife which unfortunately prevails in some other countries. It cannot be that that circumstance is entirely unconnected with our fiscal policy. There is one other change of great importance, no doubt — the Suez Canal. That has made an enormous difference in many ways, and the effect upon the international trade of the world and the effect on our position as a great distributing centre has been of course enormous. But will the President of the Board of Trade tell me accurately, with chapter and verse, how a scientific tariff which is to affect the wool market or the tea market is to prevent that from having changed the position in London as I understand it has. This is the thing. You hear of the Suez Canal doing this or that in the redistribution of commodities, and then you say, "the thing is wrong, we will put it right," but a scientific tariff would not put it right. How could it? Many Members of the House who are well versed in these things will perhaps tell us. I will listen with absolute interest and candour to any demonstration they can offer that a tariff can affect this matter. A scientific tariff means really a tariff arrived at from a judicious computation of conflicting interests. I do not think that would do any good in this case.

Perhaps the House would now like me to turn to the question of the policy of the Government. We are opening a discussion which is no abstract economic discussion. In some ways it is only secondarily an economic discussion at all. We are face to face with a political situation, and it is of great importance that we should have that clearly examined. The Prime Minister, speaking at Bristol, said—

"Did anybody ever hear of a Cabinet which was not merely agreed upon a policy but was also agreed upon every principle upon which that policy was supposed to depend and upon every conclusion to which those principles might be pressed?"

I cannot find the Cabinet are agreed upon any policy which deserves to be so called in any better sense than tactics of Party managers and Party wire-pullers. They are the tactics of make-believe—make-believe that a Party which is divided is not divided. You cannot call these tactics a policy. You take great care that even as a make-believe you do your best to prevent anybody being taken in by it. The Prime Minister said it was—

"Most unreasonable to come forward and taunt us because my colleagues who are agreed upon a policy do not pretend that they are agreed upon every conceivable development of that policy which that policy might under given circumstances take."

What is curious is that all the eloquence and all the energy is given to the "conceivable development." I would now ask the House to consider this agreement upon policy in the light of two or three utterances of important Gentlemen opposite, and I will begin, as indeed I ought, with the President of the Board of Trade. Speaking in October last, the President of the Board of Trade used this language—

"For the present, at all events, he did not consider it would be in the interest of the Party or of the policy they were recommending to include in the official programme (there were, it appears, two programmes) of the Government, a preference carrying as it did with it taxation of food."

That is the President of the Board of Trade. But then there is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. He uses somewhat different language. He says he really believes that a trade preference to the Colonies is an essential part and would be an inevitable result of any change in our fiscal policy. He sympathised with Mr. Chamberlain's proposals. The President of the Board of Trade said one thing and his Parliamentary Secretary said quite the opposite. Then we come to the Postmaster-General, who said that with Mr. Chamberlain's scheme of preferential tariffs he could not agree. Then the noble Lord the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs made some very remarkable declarations indeed as a member of a Government which has quite agreed on its policy. He individually believed in Mr. Chamberlain's corn taxation proposals, and he said unhesitatingly that he believed it would be to the advantage of the country to adopt them. He frankly confessed that he did not think they would really benefit the agricultural industry at home. "For all his objects"—let the House notice this—let hon. Gentlemen opposite who are thinking how they will vote on this Amendment mark this—"for all his objects Mr. Chamberlain carries with him the hearty approval of his colleagues in the Government he has left."

*EARL PERCY: Objects, not methods.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: I invite the noble Lord in the course of this debate to draw a distinction between his sympathy with the objects of the Member for Birmingham and his disapproval of his methods. Then there is the President of the Local Government Board. I scanned his utterance very closely because he had taken the very striking step of going down to a constituency represented by a Conservative colleague and doing his best to turn that Conservative colleague out. He said it was not an inconsistent declaration for him also to say that while with his present information he was against the taxation of food—what is his present information? I wonder what information he does want?—while his present information is against the taxation of food, he could conceive the arrival of a time when Mr. Chamberlain's policy would be satisfactorily developed and the proper system discovered by which it could be applied.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. WALTER LONG, Bristol, S.): Is that not an extract from the speech of a Gentleman who had spoken before me and which I used as a quotation.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: I gave the right hon. Member my most studious attention, and I can assure the right hon. Gentleman I think not. Is a satisfactory development a development that ends in the taxation of the people? Then there is the Colonial Secretary, who went down to Leamington and recalled graceful reminiscences of Carlyle and Ruskin, and how they had overcome what he called the gloomy doctrinaires from Manchester. The gloomy doctrinaires of Manchester made short work of the sentimental idealist from Leamington. Does the right hon. Gentleman forget that if the Corn Laws and the whole policy of protection had two men more thoroughly opposed to them than Carlyle and Ruskin. I should be very much surprised? Carlyle's most saturnine, caustic, and picturesque descriptions are directed against the Corn Laws and against the Party of the kind of gentlemen who are now wanting to bring the Corn Laws back. The right hon. Gentleman shakes his head as if he did not want to bring the Corn Laws back. The right hon. Gentleman said he thought the ends of the right hon. Member for Birmingham were right and good ends, and he accepted as the expositor of those ends Mr. Charles Booth. Mr. Charles Booth is a protectionist. [No.] Is he not for a 5 per cent. duty? The right hon. Gentleman ought not to deny it.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON Warwick and Leamington): Deny what?

MR. JOHN MORLEY: That you are a protectionist. To finish the extracts, I think they are most pithily summed up by the Secretary for the Local Government Board as follows—

> "Some people said that Mr. Balfour and Mr. Chamberlain were in opposition. Others said that their policy was the same. He submitted that the true case was this—that Mr. Chamberlain was weaving a second string of the Government bow lest the negotiation string should snap before its work was done."

When these are the responsible governors of the country can you wonder that Consols are down to eighty-seven? I leave this part of the business with a quotation which expresses my view better than I can express it from the right hon. Member for Birmingham in a speech made in 1885—

> "I will say that Lord Salisbury does intend'

—and here I think he was unjust to Lord Salisbury—

> "to put a duty upon corn, though he does not think it convenient at the present moment to say so, and although he allows some members of his Government to argue in favour of it in one place, he enjoins upon other members of his Government to repudiate it in another. Remember, this is not a question upon which the Government can be allowed to have two voices. If you are going to tax the bread of the people you will affect every household in the land; you will throw back the working classes of the country to the starvation wages and the destitution from which Mr. Gladstone and Sir Robert Peel have relieved them."

What is meant by retaliation? The word "retaliation" is used, I observe, by many gentlemen as a sort of formula by which they can escape the labour of a close examination of what the issue really is. Last summer, in this House the Prime Minister said—

> "If other methods fail I do not shrink from retaliation, but I am not certain that there are not other methods."

I suppose he meant by "other methods" diplomatic negotiations of the ordinary sort. A case was brought to my notice the other day arising out of the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Cuba. Liverpool, Manchester, and, I think, the London

Chambers of Commerce carried on a correspondence and had an interview with Lord Lansdowne, representing to him that the arrangements under that treaty would be extremely prejudicial and would in fact practically close the door to British manufacturers in Cuba. I wonder what "other methods" the Prime Minister would apply to a case of that kind? But now let us suppose a real case of outrageous unfairness perpetrated against us by a foreign Government. I am myself unable to find evidence of there having been any outrageous case of unfairness. [Cries of "Oh!"] I know some hon. Gentlemen regard a high tariff as an act of outrageous unfairness, but that is not what the Prime Minister means. If there be a case of outrageous unfairness the Minister of the day has only to satisfy this House of three conditions, and I am perfectly sure this House, whichever Party be in the majority, would support the Minister. What are the three conditions? The first is that the Minister would have to satisfy the House and make good the case on the facts, that outrageous unfairness had been or was being perpetrated; secondly, he would have to show that he had got a plan for reprisal that would effectually stop it; and, thirdly, he would have to persuade this House that his plan of reprisal not only was likely to effect the special object he had in view, but was not likely to do a great deal more harm in another way. If those conditions were satisfied, I do not think there would be any difficulty in carrying through this House whatever retaliatory powers were necessary. But do you mean power to impose a retaliatory duty independent of, outside of, and beyond Parliament? The Emperor of the French, in 1860, was able to carry the Cobden treaty with this country, though his two Chambers were both of them strongly and stoutly opposed to anything like free trade, because, happily for him and for us, there was a clause in the Imperial Constitution which allowed the Emperor to make a tariff binding if it was part of a treaty Is that what you want? Do you want to be put in the position of the French Emperor? It is extravagant and absurd, the notion of any Minister having the power with his two Chambers both opposed to him, by decree to set up a tariff. I was much interested in another plan set out in a candid and well-argued book called "The Tariff Problem," by Professor Ashley of Birmingham University. What is his idea? He says—

> "What seems dictated by the requirements of the case is a statutory authorisation of the Executive to impose the duties that may be required from time to time as circumstances arise. It will not be safe to wait until the need arises before appealing to Parliament, for the mischief is of a kind that can be accomplished in a very brief period."

Does the House really apprehend what is proposed by this excellent writer, who lives very near the centre of authority, very near to Mecca? To carry out the policy, in order to secure an economic revolution, it is proposed to make the most astounding political revolution in our history since the time of the Civil War. The writer supposes cases so urgent that you cannot wait from August or September, when Parliament rises, till January, when it reassembles. I cannot for my part realise any of those cases. What sort of powers of negotiation do you want? Let us suppose that the Steel Trust of the United States announced, projected, and carried out the landing of an enormous stock of their goods at a low price upon our shores. What are you going to do? I suppose Lord Lansdowne would invite the very distinguished man who represents the United States in this country to an interview with him at the Foreign Office. Lord Lansdowne would say to Mr. Choate, "Unless your Government put a stop to a certain set of traders sending us billets and blooms so cheaply we will impose a duty, or even prohibition as well, so as to close our markets to you."

Mr. Choate, however, has a very easy reply to Lord Lansdowne. He would say, "How can the American Government prevent a commercial company from selling so cheaply to British markets?"

Then supposing statutory authorisation were obtained, and suppose Mr. Secretary Hay said of Mr. Choate, "Are we to instruct him to come to you, who are so famous for selling cheap all over the world, and to say, 'if you do not give up selling cheap we will exclude you from the United States market.'" [MINSTERIAL cries of "They would do it."] You have only to come to close quarters with the subject to see how absurd it is.

There is tremendous suffering at this moment in Lancashire. It is not due to the Americans selling goods too cheap, but to the making of cotton too dear. What are hon. Gentlemen who suppose that by some formula you are going to remedy all the evils of the commercial system going to do about cotton? Are you to request the President of the United States to get Congress to pass an Act to prevent gambling in cotton? The idea is absurd. Then it is said that you want something to bargain with. This is the process I think that the Prime Minister has in his mind. But how do you start? Are you to set up a general or all-round tariff, to build up a general Customs wall with the view of frightening the foreigner into lowering the general level of his adverse tariff? The Prime Minister said in his Sheffield speech that he did not intend to set up a general tariff. What the Government is going to do is to set up a combative tariff, to start with a heavy duty on all manufactured imports. The Prime Minister is against that because he thinks it would be a disturbance of the existing practice, and would lead to the disorganisation of trade; therefore he abandons the general tariff. What does he say next? For a man so clear of speech, when he likes, this is the most nebulous declaration I remember to have seen from a man in a great station. He sees the objection to the combative tariff, but says—

> "I see no such objection to our proceeding, so to speak, from the other end; and if we thought we could do so without disadvantage to ourselves, we might inform any foreign country that we thought they were treating us with such outrageous unfairness that, unless they modified their policy to our advantage, we should feel ourselves compelled to take this or that step in regard to their exports."

I call that nebulous. I want to know what steps? When the Prime Minister announces a revolution in policy surely we have a right to expect that he should tell us what he intends to do, what "this or that step" is going to be. We have a right to ask also what is his "method" of settlement with a foreign negotiator. [Cries of "Speak up."] I suppose it would mean a threat to say to Russia to this effect, "Unless you reduce your general tariff we will impose an adverse discriminating duty on your wheat and hemp and other products," having free trade with the rest of the world. I do not know how that will work or what the effect would be on the corn market; but what is to prevent Russia from sending her grain through Holland and reaching us in that way? In the Napoleonic wars English goods got into the Continent despite all hindrances, and therefore we wish to know accurately what "step" it is that the right hon. Gentleman means.

There is another vital question I wish to put. Is this change to be a permanent or a temporary tariff? After all, that is the great issue. Do you want to put on duties to bargain with and after making your bargain and frightening the foreigner into lowering his tariff are you going to take them off again? Are you going to dismantle your fiscal batteries and to shut up your Customs house? I will not argue the point or dwell upon its prospect of success, but I think it will create a frightful dislocation of trade as well as embarrassing your Budget from year to year unless you know what all these extraordinary operations are to be. This is an urgently important point with regard to the political situation, because this policy of a temporary dealing with the tariff is absolutely inconsistent with the policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. You do not believe in a permanent tariff; but he does. He wants a scientific protective tariff; but you do not tell us what it is you mean. The right hon. Gentleman appeals to the protective policy of the United States, of France, and of Germany, and he recites how they passed tariff after tariff. It was not a haphazard policy; it was a deliberate policy to use tariffs to increase home trade and, if you like, to exclude foreign trade. The right hon. Member for West Birmingham says these foreigners are not fools, and he winds up by asking about this foreign policy. "Has it succeeded? It has succeeded." Those who consider that they are not voting for a protective policy when supporting with cheers and enthusiasm the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham cannot have read his utterances. Now what is your attitude towards these proposals? What, however, was the Government attitude? The Prime Minister's language is obscure and ambiguous; still he leaves room for some expectation that he is not committed to protection. But his language is one thing and his action is another. When a candidate stands for Norwich the Prime Minister sends down his blessing with the watchword "Union and fiscal reform." This gentleman at Norwich was a complete fiscal reformer in its extreme length; and that has been the attitude of the Prime Minister ever since the controversy arose. The great difficulty is to know whether you are men in masks or whether you are straightforwardly telling the country and the House what it is you want.

Now is the moment for hon. Gentlemen to make up their minds and for every individual Member to ask himself whether he is for protection or whether he is against it. It is in the highest degree distasteful to me to place any difficulties by the form in which I venture to put this question to the House in the way of hon. Gentlemen who, to their great honour and to the credit of English public life, have made the greatest sacrifices that any public men can possibly make. I think the case was worth the sacrifice. I do not believe there has ever been a more irresistible demand upon all of us for manliness, frankness, and moral courage; and I hope these hon. Gentlemen will not flinch from the views they have advocated with all the strength of their experience and responsibility. Let them ask themselves this question, "Am I going to vote for confidence in a protectionist Government or for confidence in an anti-protectionist Government." They will shirk the prime duty of political life at this moment if they are not satisfied on this point, and guided by the answer they give to themselves when they go into the Lobby. I, for my part, am not at all careful as to the numbers in the division when the division is taken. After all, what is important is this—What will be the result of that far greater division in the country when it takes place? I will not venture to predict, but I shall be very much surprised if the constituencies, when the time comes, express confidence in the Government at a time like this, when we have just barely emerged from the financial confusion and embarrassment caused by the late war, and when we are face to face with events threatening, or, I am afraid, I must say, events now happening, which, beyond almost any set of circumstances which have arisen in our recent history, impose the necessity on Great Britain, at all events, of keeping her powder dry, and of keeping her resources in steadfast charge. I say that if the country gives its confidence to any Government at a moment so grave as this, it will not be to a Government which, upon the plea of an emergency which does not really exist, and on behalf of a thing called fiscal reform which they cannot—I know they cannot—explain or define, are ready to plunge the country into confusion, and to pave the way to ultimate disaster.

Amendment proposed, at the end of the Question, to add the words—

"But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House, that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentmet, and well being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): It is a matter much to be regretted that the Leader of the Opposition did not see his way to accept the offer of the Home Secretary of facilities for carrying on this debate at a time when the Prime Minister would have been able to be in his place—all the more so as unfortunately we are also deprived of the presence of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham in connection with circumstances to which the right hon. Gentleman has made allusion in feeling and appropriate language. I cannot help thinking that the right hon. Gentleman himself shares this regret, notwithstanding the somewhat hollow, if he will allow me to use the word, explanation which he gave both the other day and again to-day in defence of the course which has been adopted. The right hon. Gentleman tells us that discussion in the House of Commons on this subject has been so long delayed that the impatience of the public would brook no further postponement. I do not at all agree with him. I believe that the public would receive with perfect equanimity the postponement of this debate for two or three weeks in order that the Prime Minister might be present in his place. I must say I think it is permissible, at all events, to suspect that there was some other motive besides that which the right hon. Gentleman has stated to account for the course now taken. We all know that this Amendment is carefully designed with a view to capturing what I may call the extreme right wing of the Unionist Party —a perfectly natural object. Hon. gentlemen opposite think that they have got the Party which goes by the name of the Free Food Unionists in a difficulty [Cries of "No" and "The Government"]. In this carefully framed Amendment they have devised a net for these Gentlemen, and they are unwilling to abandon such a monument of ingenuity. Whether they will be successful in capturing my hon. friends or not I am, of course, unable to say, but I shall be surprised if they do not find, before this debate has come to a conclusion, that they have somewhat overreached themselves, and that the course they have taken, the somewhat paltry manœuvre which they have adopted, will have defeated its own object.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: Will the right hon. Gentleman describe a little more fully what the paltry manœuvre is?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I did not wish to convey any offence in using that phrase, but by paltry manœuvre I meant a manœuvre intended to make it difficult for the extreme right wing of the Party to avoid voting for the Amendment and against the Government.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: Does the right hon. Gentleman contend that it is a paltry manœuvre to introduce such an Amendment as this on the Address? [Cries of "Withdraw."]

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am quite prepared to withdraw the words if they give offence, but what I was referring to was not the bringing forward of an Amendment of this character on the Address, which, of course, is a perfectly natural and proper thing to do, but the insisting on taking the discussion at a time when my right hon. friend the Prime Minister is necessarily absent although they might have taken it at another time.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: Could it have been amended if it had come in another form?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It might have been amended. With regard to the Amendment itself, I hardly know whether it is directed against the policy of the Government or against the policy of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham. With the exception of the first sentence, there is nothing in the Amendment to which those Gentlemen who accept the policy announced at Sheffield but decline to go further could not subscribe to. I will go so far as to say that, with one exception, there is very little in the body of the Amendment to which I myself should object. But there is a strange preamble attached to this Amendment—

> "But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers."

I listened with some attention to discover what it was the right hon. Gentleman intended to convey by those words. How can our discussions on the financial service of the year be impaired by differences of opinion between His Majesty's Ministers in respect of a question which is not now before the House as a practical policy? What bearing can these conflicting opinions possibly have upon the financial service of the year? The right hon. Gentleman says we must know whether we have a protectionist or an anti-protectionist Government to deal with. Well, I say in the most unhesitating manner that the policy of the Government is not protectionist. At a later period of his speech the right hon. Gentleman again returned to this question of the conflicting statements of Ministers, and he read out a series of extracts from speeches by myself and by hon. and right hon. friends of mine to show what? To show that outside the official policy of the Government—I am not ashamed of the phrase—there are great differences of opinion among Gentlemen who sit on this Bench. What is there reprehensible in that? Surely outside the policy which the Government has deliberately adopted and included in its programme any amount of difference of opinion may be allowed. Throughout the course of British history you have had differences of opinion outside the immediate policy of the Government. I really cannot understand what it is that the right hon. Gentleman objects to when he says that, in consequence of these differences of opinion, it is impossible for us to adequately discuss the financial service of the year. It is possible that the right hon. Gentleman may have had something rather different in his mind from the mere conflict of opinion between Ministers in a matter which is quite outside the policy of the Government. He has on other occasions been very eloquent in denouncing the Prime Minister for his opportunism in the question of fiscal reform for having one policy for the Government, and at the same time holding an opinion which went beyond that policy. No doubt it is perfectly true that many of the colleagues of the Prime Minister also sympathise with a fiscal policy which goes beyond the policy officially accepted. I quite admit it. But is that an uncommon circumstance in our political life? Surely hon. Gentlemen opposite must be aware that there are many subjects on which they themselves are not wholly agreed. What of disestablishment? We know perfectly well that many right hon. and hon. Gentlemen opposite strongly hold that the Church should be disestablished. Are they therefore bound, is there any obligation on them, to include that in their programme? What of Home Rule itself? Is Home Rule at the present moment part of the programme of the Liberal Party? Is it not true that in the minds of at least some hon. Gentlemen opposite Home Rule has been rapidly degenerating into something like a pious opinion, and if they are entitled to hold pious opinions are not we also? There is an even stronger case than Home Rule. The noble Lord who was the latest Prime Minister of the Liberal Party has taken upon himself to sweep the whole of the Newcastle programme off the board. Is the Newcastle programme part of the programme of the Liberal Party or is it not? Surely these are all cases in which matters of very great moment and importance are held to be, by important members of the Opposition, outside the policy of the Party. It is exactly the same with us. The policy of preference which has been advocated by my right hon. friend the Member for Birmingham has the sympathy of a great many members of the Government, but it is not included in the policy of the Government, and I cannot see what there is reprehensible in having an official policy and holding an opinion which goes somewhat beyond it.

Mr. Gerald Balfour.

The right hon. Gentleman asks, Where is the urgency? So far as the colonial policy is concerned, the urgency arose when the Colonies offered us a preference. [OPPOSITION cries of "When?"] That occurred two years ago at the Conference of the Colonial Premiers. The urgency arose when the Colonies offered us a preference, and when it was made perfectly clear that they at least hoped that they would enjoy some preference in return. But it is not merely the question of preference that was urgent. The question of retaliation also became urgent the moment an important country on the Continent intimated to us that if this policy of preference were persisted in, not only our Colonies, but even the Mother Country might be deprived of the most favoured-nation treatment. There was the further urgency arising from this, that many Continental countries were already constructing new tarifs de combat, and if we were not in a position to bear our part in the discussions preliminary to the framing of new commercial treaties, our interests undoubtedly would have to go to the wall. Those were the causes which made this matter urgent; but I quite grant this to the right hon. Gentleman—that unless matters had been ripe in the country for a policy of this sort, the incidents to which I have referred might not have been sufficient to raise the question in all the fulness which has been given to it. For a long time past I believe this question has been ripening in the minds of the people—not perhaps the policy of preference, that is of course of comparatively late date, and has its origin in the action of the Colonies; but as far as a free hand for negotiation, as far as what is called a policy of retaliation is concerned, that has been silently growing in favour for a long time past. The Prime Minister has stated that twenty years ago he expressed his opinion strongly in favour of what is now called the policy of retaliation. My own belief is that it will be found on looking at the speeches delivered by many of my hon. friends about the same time that they also expressed similar views. I did so myself, and I have never changed my opinion, that in itself the power of retaliation was a desirable power for this country to possess. Therefore, when the suggestion of fiscal reform was started by my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham and by the Prime Minister, the response of the country itself forced the question forward and made it a practical question. We could not then have set it aside, even if we had desired, but we did not desire because, as I said, many of us had long been converts to the view which regards retaliation as a policy in itself desirable, if the country was prepared to accept it.

The right hon. Gentleman referred to a speech I made at Leeds. I am quite willing to agree that it was a very apt quotation from his point of view. He asks me whether I have changed my opinion since then. Well, if I had modified my opinion in the light of a further study of this question I certainly should not be ashamed to acknowledge it. It is true that I have modified my opinions to this extent, that I do now attach greater importance to, I regard as of graver effect, certain tendencies which analysis reveals in British industry and commerce. I do think that to some of the signs to which I now attach importance I did not attach quite sufficient importance when I made that statement. In other respects I do not withdraw a word of the quotation which the right hon. Gentleman has read to the House. I do not think the ruin of the trade and industry of this country is impending. I do not see how it is possible to affirm that we are on the brink of ruin if you examine the facts and figures. But that is not in itself a reason against fiscal reform. We must look at tendencies, and if we see that those tendencies are drifting us in a dangerous direction it is our duty to take precautions against such a result. I agree that there has been probably a certain exaggeration of statement with respect to the present condition of our trade. [OPPOSITION cries of "By whom?"] But has the exaggeration been all on one side? From the way many hon. Gentlemen talk you would think that the whole prosperity of this country rested upon free imports. [OPPOSITION cries of "Hear, hear!"] Some hon. Gentlemen say that is so. Anybody who has given study to this subject knows perfectly well that though free imports may have been an important element in the amazing growth of prosperity in this country during the last fifty years, they are only one element. I should say myself that the progress of invention, the cheapening of freights, and the large extension of the area under wheat in the United States are all three of them causes which have contributed more to the general prosperity and well-being of the country than the particular fiscal policy which we have followed. This prosperity, undeniable and great as it is, is shared by other countries also which have not adopted our fiscal policy, and I think that ought to be borne in mind by those hon. Gentlemen who a minute ago cheered the suggestion that our whole prosperity must be due to the free trade policy of the country.

The right hon. Gentleman referred to the inquiry undertaken by the Government. It is curious how very many different estimates have been formed of the value of that inquiry. The right hon. Gentleman quoted from the Duke of Devonshire to the effect that this inquiry was a deception, and if I remember rightly the Duke of Devonshire also described the Blue-book which embodied the results of the inquiry as an ill-digested collection of statistics. On the other hand, Lord Rosebery spoke of it as "the exhaustive investigation of the Board of Trade," and hon. Gentlemen opposite have certainly in their speeches in the country not spoken of the Blue-book as if it represented a mere illusory investigation. I should just like to say a word as to the way in which the Blue-book was framed. The basis of the inquiry was laid by questions set by Ministers to the Board of Trade. We answered these questions to the best of our ability, and, so far as the inquiries remained obviously incomplete, the Board of Trade officials, in connection with myself, did their best to fill up the gaps. It is quite true that the Blue-book is a quarry from which both sides can extract material, and from which both sides have extracted material; but it can hardly be brought against it as a reproach that it is sufficiently impartial to supply materials to both sides. This is a most complicated question. There is a great deal to be said on both sides, and if the Blue-book which embodied the result of the inquiry had not been a quarry in which both sides could mine with effect, it would certainly not have fulfilled the object for which it was designed. The right hon. Gentleman opposite pressed us to give a more definite statement as to the procedure and the machinery by which we propose to carry out our views. I am bound to say that the request is not altogether a reasonable one. On one point, however, I can satisfy the curiosity of the right hon. Gentleman. He asked us whether we proposed that the Executive should have the power of imposing retaliatory duties without the consent of Parliament. No, Sir. That has never been contemplated by us. We have never suggested or proposed that Parliament should be invited to divest itself of its power of control over taxation, or that it should transfer to the Executive or the Privy Council the power to impose taxes.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Does the right hon. Gentleman mean that the authority of Parliament will be required in each particular case, or that a general statute may be passed giving general powers to be applied at the discretion of the Executive Government in any particular case?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: In our view no tax could be imposed unless the consent of Parliament had been obtained. [AN HON. MEMBER: In each case?] That is asking rather too much. I do not think it is fair to claim beforehand that we should go so far into detail as to pledge ourselves that the consent of Parliament shall be required item by item. I do not think we should be asked to go into further detail. Hon. Gentlemen opposite complain of that, but it would be impossible to go further into this matter without going into every detail of the plan by which retaliation would be carried out; and that I decline to do, and, I think, reasonably decline. All precedent in this matter is on our side, but I will refer to only one which is really a classical precedent, and it has determined, in my judgment, for all time, what is and what is not obligatory on a Government in the way of disclosing details of a policy beforehand. I refer to Mr. Gladstone's action in connection with the Home Rule Bill. Let us consider what the circumstances were. In 1886 Mr. Gladstone's Bill was thrown out on the question of the position of the Irish Members in relation to this House. Everybody knew that that was the crucial question in connection with Home Rule. Mr. Gladstone had no second opportunity of bringing in a Home Rule Bill until seven years had passed. Everybody knew that there were only three possible courses open. One was known as the "all out" policy adopted in the Bill of 1886, another was the "all in" policy, and the third was the "in and out" policy. Again and again Mr. Gladstone was pressed by the Unionist Party to disclose his intention in regard to this crucial point, and he always refused. Now, Sir, I say you could not imagine a case in which there would be a stronger claim for the disclosure of the details of a policy before an appeal was made to the country, yet Mr. Gladstone never consented to reveal the details of his policy.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis.): Is that a precedent the Government are going to follow?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: My hon. friend asks whether that is a precedent which the Government are going to follow. I say that precedent determined for all time what can legitimately be refused, so far as such a point can be determined by precedents.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: I should like to ask the right hon. Gentleman, and I really think that after all he has said of Mr. Gladstone's action when in opposition I am entitled to press him—the right hon. Gentleman tells us the Government are going to take a certain general line of action. We ask him very innocently, and that is what I want to know, whether Parliament is to be informed before or after this action has been taken? Surely that is a vital question.

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: My reply to that is that we ought not to be pressed before an appeal to the electors is made to lay before the country all the details of our plan, and I appeal to the example of Mr. Gladstone, and I say it is conclusive on that point. Mr. Gladstone was placing a great policy before the country, and we are placing our policy before the country.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: The right hon. Gentleman has volunteered to tell us the manner and method by which this policy is to be applied. [HON. MEMBERS: No.] Yes, he is engaged in doing it, and we ask him one or two questions across the Table which are absolutely essential. He is speaking for the Government. He is not in opposition. He is not announcing a programme to the country. He talks about the electors. We know nothing about the electors.

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I cannot see that that has anything to do with the matter. Mr. Gladstone had a policy to put before the country. We have a policy to put before the country. He refused to go into details, and we are entitled to follow his example. But if hon. Members are really anxious to press this matter any further, all I can say is that it is a pity they should not have waited until such time as the Prime Minister could be here. At all events, I and my colleagues on this Bench must decline, and, in my judgment, properly decline, to go either behind or beyond the policy as laid down by the Prime Minister.

I should think a greater compliment has hardly ever been paid to a statesman in this country than the concentration of attention which has been bestowed on the policy of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham. It is not the policy of the Government. Everyone knew that if an appeal were made to the electors and a majority were returned in favour of the Government policy, that would not entitle us to go further and carry out the policy of preference. Notwithstanding all that, here you have nineteen-twentieths of the flood of oratory poured forth in the recess directed to the policy of my right hon. friend.

LORD HUGH CECIL (Greenwich): You have Conservative Members opposed by Cabinet Ministers.

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I say that is an extraordinary testimony to the force of character and energy and ability of my right hon. friend. But I think there may have been other causes at work. In the first place it is a policy much more easy to attack than that of the Government. The proposal to tax food is not prima facie likely to be a popular policy. Whereas the policy of retaliation is one, you may almost say, which is natural to any Englishman. Then again, my right hon. friend has done what we have declined to do. He has given a somewhat detailed account of his proposal, and a detailed account of a proposal is to an eager Opposition like a pot of honey to flies in summer. You have only to look at the treatment which my right hon. friend's scheme has received in order to judge of the wisdom of a premature disclosure of details. Then I think it is also possible that my right hon. friend's policy, rather than that of the Government, has been accentuated in Opposition speeches, because hon. Members opposite think that by so doing they may succeed in detaching from the main body of the Unionists those who doubt whether to carry this fiscal reform so far as my right hon. friend proposes to carry it is wise in the best interests of the country. Whether the line taken by hon. Gentlemen opposite has really been prudent, in the interest of the cause which they champion, I am somewhat inclined to doubt. The effect of the course they have pursued has been to give the utmost possible advertisement to the policy of my right hon. friend. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife says that was the last thing that was needed. I quite agree that any policy taken up and propounded by the right hon. Member for West Birmingham is certain to attract the attention of the country without any adventitious aid, but I think that in his exertions he has been greatly assisted by the activity and energy of hon. Gentlemen opposite. Besides, it has had another effect, for in their hot haste to blacken the policy of my hon. friend the policy of the Government has been made to shine quite bright by comparison. Hon. Members opposite laugh at that, but let me quote a passage of the speech delivered by the Duke of Devonshire last month—

> "All that I have to add to what I said on another occasion is that while I do not believe so firmly as the Prime Minister does in the probable efficacy of such a policy, I am more disposed than I was to approve of the object of that policy. I do so because it was a policy not only differing from, but absolutely opposed to, the more dangerous and more mischievous policy of Mr. Chamberlain."

[Cries of "Do you agree?"] Then the heart of the hon. Member for Oldham warmed so much to the Government policy in his frenzied opposition to the policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham that he actually went the length of saying that the policy of the Government was interesting but not very important.

Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL (Oldham): Hear, hear!

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I think there is a certain humour in the phrase of my hon. friend applied to what the Prime Minister described as a reversal of the fiscal traditions of this country. How far has my hon. friend travelled, even since last session when he opposed, tooth and nail, the Sugar Convention, which proposed in a modest way and in an isolated case the principle for which we now ask general approval.

Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL: I said the policy of the Prime Minister was not very important because it was not the issue before the country.

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I beg leave to differ from the hon. Gentleman. It is the policy before the country. I think the real explanation of the language of my hon. friend is, that he, like others, can see nothing in fiscal reform except protection. Protection occupies the entire field of his vision, and my hon. friend is not alone in this because there seems to be something like an organised conspiracy to represent the issue before the country as an issue between free trade and protection. I absolutely deny that. I quite admit there is a natural temptation so to represent it. The old proverb, "Give a dog a bad name and hang him," has no doubt a good deal in it. If you can not only give your adversary a bad name, but retain a good one for yourself, double advantage is secured. But this way of presenting the issue is absolutely superficial and misleading. Let us look more closely at the various classes of opinion respecting this fiscal question existing in the country and this House at the present time. There are, at least, four such classes. First you have the free importers; next, those who approve the Government policy, who ask for a free hand to negotiate, and, if necessary, to retaliate; thirdly, there are those who follow the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, and who favour preferential arrangements with the Colonies; and, lastly, there are the protectionists. Anyone who is a protectionist will probably also be in favour of preference and of a free hand in negotiation: but the reverse by no means follows. There are many who are in favour of a free hand in negotiation who do not advocate preference, and others who advocate preference, but are by no means protectionists. The various distinctions have been so loosely appreciated in discussions on the platform that it is advisable to endeavour to define a little more precisely the essential characteristic of each class of opinion.

The free importers are free traders in intention, but not in reality. Free trade in its essence is bilateral. The characteristic mark of the free importer is not free trade. It is the refusal to adopt any other method than that of moral suasion in order to bring about free trade. They are the Quakers of finance. Their policy is a purely negative policy; they are the peace-at-any-price party in relation to industrial affairs. When Sir Robert Peel stated that in his view the best way of fighting tariffs was by free imports, he uttered a maxim which was no doubt a maxim of expediency at the time at which he spoke; but that maxim was subsequently converted into a fundamental principle of English finance, that no taxation should be put on except for revenue purposes; and the principle itself became in turn something like a dogma, under no circumstances to be set aside or modified. You cannot hold that dogma and at the same time be in favour of freedom of negotiation; you cannot hold it to be final and unconditional and yet advocate preferential policy. A fortiori it is not possible to hold it and be a protectionist.

Let me pass to the fiscal reformers, and first of all to the protectionists. When I speak of protection I refer to the system existing at the present time in the United States of America, France, Germany, and other continental countries. What is protection? Protection is a system of artificial assistance deliberately accorded to particular industries by the State, generally by means of import duties, in order to give these industries advantages over and above what they would enjoy under conditions of natural competition. That is my definition of protection, and in order to illustrate it I should like to refer to what are called countervailing duties. Countervailing duties are duties imposed as a counterpoise to a bounty. They have to be most carefully discriminated from protective duties. They are really duties imposed in self defence. There is an ambiguity in the word "protection," and it would be greatly in the interests of clear discussion if, when we are speaking of protection to industry by a duty which is in the nature of a countervailing duty, we were to call it not protection but defence. There is a distinction between defensive duties and protection. Defensive duties are in my opinion perfectly legitimate even as part of the theory of free trade. Protective duties stand in a different category.

We have been challenged to-night to say whether the policy of the Government is protectionist or anti-protectionist. I have already stated, I hope in clear language, that the policy of the Government is not protectionist. If I am asked, not as a member of the Government but as an individual—the distinction is perfectly legitimate—what my own view of protection is, I am perfectly willing to state it. I do not think that protection is a wise policy for this country to adopt. I do not wish to make any absolute statement of faith with regard to protection in other countries. The effect of protection is, practically, to impose a tax on the consumer for the benefit of the producer. If the extra profits resulting from protection, or part of such profits, are employed, as may easily happen, to further the development of industrial enterprise, it is possible—I believe in some instances it is actually the case—that a policy of protection may really stimulate industrial development. I think protection has probably stimulated industrial development in Germany and also in the United States. Therefore I should be extremely reluctant to say that either Germany or the United States had adopted a policy which was wrong for these countries. On the contrary. I think very likely it was right for Germany and the United States. But for our country —which had such an immense start over all others, which was a highly developed manufacturing country at a time when such a description could not be applied to any other country—protection for such a country is, I believe, a bad policy, and I should be sorry to see a return to it now. I will even go so far as this—that if it was a choice between protection as we know it in Germany and America, and other countries and the existing system, I should be on the side of free imports. But, as a matter of fact, nothing of the kind is the case. It is possible to hold the views which I have just expressed and yet be a warm advocate of preferential arrangements with the Colonies. The object of preference is twofold. First, to draw closer the commercial relations between the mother country and the Colonies, and to make the exchange of commodities between them freer. That is the economic object. There is also a political object, namely, to draw closer the political tie between the mother country and the other parts of the Empire. What is there in these aims which has anything to do with the establishment of a protective system in this country? There is absolutely no necessary connection between the two things, unless indeed it be the circumstance that preference involves a small duty on certain foodstuffs, a duty which hon. Gentlemen opposite have repeatedly said in their speeches in the country would practically have no protective effect whatever. [OPPOSITION cries of "Who said it?"] I have seen it stated over and over again. Lord Rosebery is among those who have stated it in very clear and very emphatic language. But then the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Mommouthshire says, "What about the average 10 per cent. tax upon manufactured goods?" If I am to answer that question as a member of the Government and on behalf of the Government, I say that as preference is not in our programme, a fortiori any particular method of carrying out preference is not in our programme.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): It is quite independent of preference.

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am glad o hear that admission, because it is exactly the point which I am trying to drive home. If in my individual capacity I am asked to say what my view on the subject is, why, then, I say at once I should be very glad to see a state of public opinion in this country which would admit of the adoption of the policy of preferential arrangements with our Colonies. But in saying that I absolutely decline to pin myself to any particular method of carrying that policy out. I do not think my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham would say that this particular part of his plan is in his view absolutely essential to the policy preference. Why was this 10 per cent. adopted in the first instance by my right hon. friend as part of his scheme? It was because, in order to avoid the imposition of an additional burden on the working classes it was necessary to remit part of the duties on sugar and tea, and, therefore, to make good the deficiency resulting therefrom to the Exchequer. But that is purely a revenue question [Laughter.] Perhaps I have not made myself clear. It is admitted that the policy of preference cannot be carried out without a tax upon certain food imports from foreign countries. The suggestion of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham was that duties should be placed on corn and meat and dairy produce, and that they should be taken off tea, sugar, and coffee. As the result of that change in taxation would be to produce a deficit in the revenue, of course it would be necessary to make good this deficit it in some way or another; but the particular scheme by which my right hon. friend proposed to make good the deficit is not one which is essential to the policy of preference. For my part, speaking in my individual capacity, while I am in favour of the policy of preference, if the Colonies are able and willing satisfactorily to meet us, I am not equally bound to approve of the method of carrying it out which has been put forward and defended with such eloquence and ability by my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham. If protection is not necessarily implied in preference, still less is it implied in the policy of the Government. [Dissent.] Surely hon. Members have arrived at a more accurate conception of the policy of the Government than to suppose that it involves the taxation of food products.

MR. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): Do I understand the right hon. Gentleman to mean that his policy of retaliation will not take advantage of any duty on food in order to carry out retaliation?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I believe it has already been stated by the Prime Minister that his policy does not contemplate the taxation of food. [A UNIONIST MEMBER: Of raw material?] Of course not; for the objections to taxing raw material are more serious than the objections to taxing food. I said a moment ago that the policy of the Government was not inconsistent with free trade principles. I think I may go even further than that, and say that those who advocate the policy of the free hand for negotiation may fairly declare that they are truer friends of free trade than hon. Gentlemen opposite, who, while they praise free trade, are not prepared to make any sacrifices on behalf of it. They have a platonic love for free trade. They will not do anything for it. They will not fight for it. But we are prepared to fight for free trade, and to that extent I think we may claim to be truer friends of free trade than hon. Members opposite. The line we have taken is this, that the policy of peace at any price with respect to commercial and industrial matters ought to come to an end. We are met by two arguments. We are told that we have the power to retaliate already. We are also told that if we did possess this power it would be of no use to us. As to the first argument, we are told that we have only got to come to Parliament and ask in each case for certain powers, and to act upon the powers so given. I do not think that that is an accurate statement of the position. No doubt Parliament is omnipotent. Parliament could to-morrow reintroduce the system of protection. Parliament could, so far as theory goes, restore absolute monarchy in this country. But would anybody suggest that any Ministry would venture, in any single case, to impose for purposes of retaliation a duty which was incidentally of a protective character without having first got the general assent of the country to the change of policy which that involved? Hitherto we have observed the principle that taxation should not be put on except for revenue purposes, but if we are to have a free hand for negotiation we must abandon that principle, or regard it, at least, as a principle modifiable according to circumstances. Just imagine my noble friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, approaching a foreign Government under existing conditions, with a threat to impose this or that duty unless adequate concessions were made in favour of British interests. It would be out of question for any Minister of Foreign Affairs to do that unless he had the mandate of the country behind him, otherwise he would be making a threat which he would know perfectly well he would not have the power to carry out; and the negotiator, on the other side, would know it also, and would naturally say, "Your revolver is not loaded; you talk of putting on penal taxes, but we know that that is inconsistent with your general fiscal policy." Unless we have a mandate from the country behind us we never shall have the power to negotiate with real effect. Every Government in turn is constantly addressing appeals and warnings to foreign nations against some proposed action hostile to our interests. Those appeals are hardly ever effectual, and they never will be effectual unless the foreign country with whom we are remonstrating is aware that we have got the power of inflicting a penalty if our requests are not listened to. Then it is said, "It is all very well to talk about retaliation, but how are you going to retaliate against countries like Russia and the United States which send you raw material in a very much larger proportion than any other commodity?" Well, of course it would be more difficult for us to apply pressure to Russia and the United States than to some other countries which could be named. But really, the passion for uniformity of hon. Gentlemen opposite seems to me to amount almost to a mania. Because a preferential tariff might affect different colonies differently, therefore we are to have no preferential arrangements at all. And, similarly, because we are not in a position to apply as severe a pressure to the United States or Russia as we should be, say, to Germany and France, therefore we are not to attempt to apply pressure at all. Surely such an argument as that answers itself.

There is one other argument to which I would refer in this connection. It is perfectly true that we should find great difficulty—I fully appreciate it—in applying pressure to the United States; I believe that continental countries, which, as we all know, are equipped for retaliation, have not been successful in bringing pressure to bear on the United States. But they have successfully brought pressure to bear on other countries, though not on the United States. We have not merely to consider freedom of negotiation for the purpose of securing favourable commercial treaties, we have also got to defend our industries against illegitimate and unfair competition. One advantage secured by the Sugar Convention was that you had the representatives of all the principal commercial countries in Europe laying down the principle that high protective duties could under certain circumstances constitute a bounty. I believe that is absolutely true, and the whole system of modern dumping undoubtedly rests on the two factors—first, combination among the producers, and, secondly, the protection of a high tariff. Now, if we cannot induce the United States to lower their tariff, at least, it will be possible for us to provide against the kind of bounty which arises from the combination of producers operating from behind the shelter of a protection system. [AN HON. MEMBER: How?] It is possible to put on duties if necessary.

*LORD HUGH CECIL: On all goods of that class?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am not saying what we should do, but how it is possible—namely, by the imposition of a tax which would act as a countervailing duty, or even by the, in some way, more extreme measure of prohibition that we have taken in connection with the Sugar Convention.

*LORD HUGH CECIL: Do you mean on all goods of one class as was done in the case of sugar.

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am very sensible that it is impossible to cover so vast and complicated a subject as this is in a single speech. I have not entered elaborately into statistics on this occasion, for it is really only the policy of the Government with which I have to deal. That that policy is directed against a real and serious evil no one attempts to deny, and if I were to go through all the figures in the Blue-book bearing on this part of the subject I should only be proving in detail what is already admitted on all sides. ["No."] The hon. Gentleman must really be a very strange free trader if he does not admit that the closing of the markets of foreign nations to the exports of this country is a serious evil. Hon. Gentlemen opposite are of opinion that our remedy would be ineffectual, if not mischievous. Well, we do not agree, and we mean to ask the country to let us try the experiment. ["When?"] Of course it would be far easier to sit down and do nothing. For my own Department in particular Fiscal Reform means a vast addition of toil, trouble and anxiety. But we advocate the policy because we are convinced that it is required in the best interests of the commerce and industry of the country. I myself think that it would have an even wider influence and effect. I believe that the knowledge that the British market is always open to the exports of foreign countries, no matter what fiscal policy foreign countries may adopt towards us, has contributed very materially to encourage foreign nations in erecting those really ridiculous tariff barriers against each other and against us; and I regard it as not only possible, but probable, that if this fiscal reform, which hon. Gentlemen opposite deplore as retrograde, is adopted, it will contribute to the establishment, not, indeed of universal or complete free trade, but at least of a freer exchange of commodities than now between the nations of the entire civilised world.

*MR. EMMOTT (Oldham) said the House had just listened to a very remarkable speech. It was extraordinary in the fact that the President of the Board of Trade had declared himself a free trader although he was sitting by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the President of the Local Government Board, both of whom had so loudly proclaimed their sympathy with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. Before proceeding to comment upon that speech he wished to express his regret that the Prime Minister and the late

Colonial Secretary were not present during this debate and more particularly in regard to the cause which had led to their absence. The President of the Board of Trade commenced his speech by complaining that the Opposition had raised this debate on the Address. What were the facts of the case? Last year they were prevented from having a debate upon this question on a fair issue, because the Government were still in a state of uncertainty and had not declared their policy in any shape or form and they would only allow a debate on a vote of no confidence. Now when the policy of the Government had been declared they were challenging the protectionist views which had been promulgated by various members of the Government. The right hon. Gentlemen had imputed some paltry manœuvre to them and he said this Amendment had been designed to capture a wing of the Conservative Party. It appeared to him that if they had put down a Motion on another day they would not have been allowed to vote on this issue at all, because it would have been altered by some Amendment connived at by the Government, which would have obscured the issue. He felt some sympathy with the right hon. Gentleman in the somewhat weak defence he offered for the Government. The right hon. Gentleman said it was in accordance with precedent for some difference of opinion to be allowed to members of the Government. He himself did not think it was, when the real question they were considering was protection applied to the food of the people. No Government had any right to speak with two voices on a question of such vital importance to the people of the country. In regard to retaliation, the right hon. Gentleman had condescended to tell them that Parliament was to keep the power in its own hands of agreeing to or disagreeing from any proposals that were to be made. Surely Parliament had that power now, and he did not see what other power was wanted. When questioned further, the right hon. Gentleman said he could not say that Parliament was to have the power to deal with the matter item by item. He must say that at this moment he had not the faintest idea how the Government proposed to carry out the policy they announced. They were told that they ought to have waited for the Prime Minister. Were hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite such a set of weak, poor, miserable people that they could not do anything without the head of the Government? Did they not know what their policy was? If they did know, why did they not tell the House? Take the case of Russia and America, to which the right hon. Gentleman referred. The policy of the Government was that in cases of outrageous unfairness we were to be allowed to retaliate. What was generally understood by outrageous unfairness was when very high tariffs were put on the imported goods of countries like Russia and the United States. If it was difficult to deal with Russia and America, how were they going to deal with France and Germany and other countries with a less tariff? If they set up protectionist duties against France and Germany unless they agreed to our demand, and no tariff was set up against Russia and America, the position would be ridiculous. If that kind of thing was done it was perfectly certain that we were going to be landed in tariff wars, and he thought right hon. Gentlemen opposite had no idea what that meant to the trade and industry of this country. Where had retaliation been successful? What reason was there to suppose, from the history of recent tariff controversies, that retaliation would be successful?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Retaliation is only a pis-aller. There is no negotiation possible unless you have the power of retaliation behind it.

*MR. EMMOTT said he wanted to put this question: Sixty years ago, when this country had the power of retaliation, why was it given up? Why did Peel and Gladstone say they were going to fight protective duties by free imports? They said they adopted that course because they had found that, despite all the great tariff that they had, it was no use for purposes of negotiation.

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR pointed out that twenty years later Mr. Gladstone reversed that position by making the Cobden Treaty.

*Mr. EMMOTT said the Cobden Treaty was not in any sense directed against the principle of free trade. It made for free trade.

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: Our object is to make for free trade also.

*Mr. EMMOTT admitted that, and went further than that. As a matter of principle, if retaliation had been successful in the past, if it was likely to be successful in the future, he fully admitted there was nothing against the principle of free trade in retaliation.

Sir GILBERT PARKER (Gravesend) asked if there had not been a recent successful case of retaliation between Canada and Germany? Had not Germany recently made concessions in favour of Canada because of Canada's retaliatory action? He would also like to ask the hon. Member—

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! This kind of question would be more properly put into a speech.

*Mr. EMMOTT said the question of Canada and Germany raised a very large point which he had not time to go into now. If Germany had carried out the implied threat of imposing extra duties against us because Canada had given our goods the preference, that was one of those cases which he would have thought was outrageous unfairness, and if there had been any means he would have gone to all lengths to stop it—any means without injuring ourselves. His constituents were vitally interested in these important matters. They were interested in two trades—the cotton trade and the textile machinery trade. In his constituency there were three men employed in the export trade for one employed in the home trade. They were told that "cotton would go, that sugar had gone, that silk had gone"—although he saw by a recent Government Return that in fifty years our exports had increased 33 per cent., whilst the exports of France had only increased by 16 per cent. It was far from his mind to say that everything was for the best in this country, and in the iron, wool, and cotton trades he admitted there were circumstances which required careful attention. But if there was reason for care and attention to these matters surely it was all the more necessary that no quack remedy should be applied. And when he was told by modern prophets that cotton would go he replied at once that cotton would go if they applied the quack remedy of protection. He saw some figures the other day which showed that to build a cotton mill of 100,000 spindles in this country cost £125,000, to build the same mill in Germany cost £185,000, in France £200,000, and in the United States £250,000. The principal reason for the difference between those figures was because here we had free trade and in all the other countries they had protection. The costs varied according to the degree of protection in those various countries. Take the case of Germany, where the cost was £60,000 more than here. The German must allow 5 per cent. for interest and 5 per cent. for depreciation. That was, he had got to make £6,000 a year more than the Englishman to get the same return, so the Englishman could afford to pay ten shillings a week more to his work-people and still make as large a profit. The practical result of free trade, had been that in any open market we had practically the predominance. In India, for example, for every 100 yards of cotton cloth ninety-eight was sent from this country. Therefore we had little to gain by protection. We had £70,000,000 or more of exports that we might lose if the cost of making those goods was made materially dearer.

It being half-past Seven of the Clock the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question to add the words, 'But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment and well-being.'"—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*MR. EMMOTT, continuing his speech, said in addition to the fact that everything would be made dearer by these proposals there were other terrors so far as the cotton trade was concerned in connection with it. There was the danger that reprisals might be made against cotton on account of our imposing import duties on other articles. If we resorted to a protectionist régime in this matter, it would be manifestly unfair not to allow India to resort to protection also, which would react considerably on the cotton trade of this country. Another danger was that we should be menaced with an increase in the price of raw cotton. The Colonial Secretary had approved of Mr. Charles Booth's recommendations. Mr. Charles Booth recommended a 5 per cent. import duty on all articles introduced into this country from abroad, whether food or raw materials, and a 10 per cent. duty on manufactures. A 5 per cent. duty on all cotton coming to this country would bring in something like £2,000,000 to the Exchequer, but he knew perfectly well that the matter could not stop there, and therefore proposed also a system of drawbacks upon manufactured goods exported from this country. Such drawbacks on manufactured cotton would amount to at least £1,500,000, so that the ultimate benefit which the Exchequer would receive would be only some £500,000. Could anybody conceive a more stupid proposal than to tax a trade with a turnover of £90,000,000 or £100,000,000 a year in order to bring in £500,000 to the Exchequer? The inevitable result would be that no spinner would use cotton coming from India or the Colonies. He would get all his cotton from foreign countries in order to get back the whole benefit therefrom of the drawback. That had been the effect, so he had been informed, of the corn duties which were recently imposed, and which were taken off last year. He had been told that the effect among the millers of Liverpool had been to increase the use of foreign corn, and to decrease the use of home corn, and the effect would certainly be the same with regard to cotton. He did not suggest for a moment that every trade would be affected so strongly as the cotton trade, but every trade would be affected, and it was only a matter of degree. The exported manufactured goods of this country as a whole were much greater than the imported goods, and the principle applicable to the cotton trade applied to trade as a whole. It was a mistake and a delusion to suppose that even if trade as a whole benefited by this new policy, every trade would. It was assumed that some trades might benefit without hurting others; he did not agree with that assumption. He believed that some would benefit and some would not. Injury must result to the cotton trade if tariffs were imposed for it depended not on the home but foreign markets in which it could not raise its price in consequence of the increased cost of manufacture. Therefore, if the cost of the food and the wages of the operatives were raised, a disaster would overtake the cotton trade which was so vast an industry that any disaster happening to it would be a national calamity.

Turning to the general question, he was lost in astonishment at the fact that these new proposals had been so suddenly sprung upon the country. He did not allude to what the protagonists of this policy said in 1885, but in 1885 every symptom now complained of was apparent and he would say that those who were in favour of protection then and were in favour of protection now were greater statesmen by far than those who had become protectionist so recently. In June, 1900, the right hon. Member for West Birmingham said—

> "The prosperity of the country during the last five years has been beyond record. Never before has labour been so well employed or so well remunerated."

On the 24th of October the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "Is it too much to say that in these last twelve months the Empire has been born anew."

And again on 10th May, 1901, the right hon. Gentleman had said—

> "Do not let us exaggerate. When every penny of the new taxation has been paid, the United Kingdom will still be, in proportion, the most lightly taxed nation in Europe."

First of all they had those statements on the authority of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. Three years afterwards, they were told the Empire was in danger by the same gentleman, who, in a speech at Leeds, said as regards the progress of the country—

> "Speaking generally, I say that it is true that in the comparative wealth of the country, in the rate of wages, and in the condition of pauperism, they (the protected nations) have made more progress than we have. Taking these protected nations as a whole—they comprise every nation in Europe and the United States, the Colonies, and many other countries—you will find that statement absolutely correct."

In regard to that statement, Mr. Bowley, the well-known statistician, challenged the Tariff Reform League to produce satisfactory evidence for that statement, and said that as a preliminary he would ask for—

> "The evidence for any two countries, as I greatly doubt the existence of sufficient statistics of wages and pauperism for the last twenty years in any countries, except perhaps the United Kingdom, the United States of America, France, Germany, and New South Wales."

The Tariff Reform League had taken the challenge of Mr. Bowley lying down; they did not reply to it for the simple reason, he supposed, that they could not. He did not know whether the statement which had just been made by the President of the Board of Trade would affect the situation materially. The right hon. Gentleman had made it perfectly clear that, so far as he himself was concerned, he did not advocate retaliation from a protectionist point of view, and it must be remembered that the right hon. Gentleman had spoken on behalf of the Government. The question he (Mr. Emmott) desired to ask, and it was one which was germane to the consideration of the subject, was this. Nothing more had been heard than the fact that a second pamphlet had been handed to the Cabinet by the Prime Minister, which directly recommended the taxation of food, and what he desired to know was, how the taxation of food now stood in the Government programme. It had been denied by one right hon. Gentleman, and it had been accepted by another, and everyone was in the dark. Testing this question from the standpoint of protection versus free trade, the allegation was made that protectionist countries had made more progress than we in the last few years. My first point is one of dynamics not statics. It was said that 13,000,000 people of their country were on the verge of starvation. In order to arrive at that figure, by Mr. Rowntree's method, it would be necessary to include in that proportion the three classes of wage earners, A, B, and C. Class A were those who brought home under 18s. a week; Class B were those who brought home from 18s. to 21s. a week; and Class C were those who had from 21s. to 30s. a week coming into their house. Let them compare those statistics with those of Germany. They had no accurate figures for any part of Germany except Prussia, which, however, is not the least prosperous portion of the German Empire. The Prussian figures showed that the proportion of households where £45 or less a year (or about 18s. per week) was brought in, was about 60 per cent. of the whole, against which Mr. Rowntree's figures showed 30 per cent. up to 30s. per week. Turning to the dynamics of the question the Blue-book showed beyond all doubt or cavil that the increase in the wages in this country had been greater than either in France or America. He would leave them out. Comparing England with Germany he showed them whereas in England, the wages of the skilled artisan had risen from 29s. 2d. in 1886 to 36s. in 1900, or an advance of 6s. 10d., in Germany the wages had risen from 18s. 10d. in 1886 to 22s. 6d. in 1900, or an advance of 3s. 8d. Would not the working men prefer an advance of 6s. 10d. on a wage of 29s. to an advance of 3s. 8d. on a wage of 18s. 10d.? Then figures with regard to the prices of bread and meat showed them there had been an enormous decrease in the prices of those commodities in this country as compared with Germany, so that not only in money wages had there been a great advance, but real wages had increased even out of proportion to the advance in money wages. He also applied the test of pauperism, of the income-tax, and the want of employment; and showed that conditions in protected countries were less favourable than in Great Britain. In Germany the falling off in trade had been so great that the employment of male adults had decreased between June, 1900, to March, 1901, by 10 per cent. No such decrease had taken place in this country, although trade was much worse than it was three or four years ago. In all this there was evidence of a greater advance in this country than in Germany.

In regard to the increase of exports a general statement had been made that protectionist countries were increasing their exports more quickly than free-trade countries. He challenged that statement, and taking the cases of New South Wales and Victoria, and Sweden and Denmark, he showed that the free-trade countries, or countries which imposed a moderate tariff, had made greater progress than those which were more protectionist. He applied another test. He divided the nations of Europe into three categories—those which were free-trade countries, as England and Holland; those which were moderately protectionist, as Germany, Norway, Belgium, and Switzerland; and those which were highly protectionist, as France, Spain, Italy, Austria-Hungary, and Russia. Taking figures for these three groups, he showed that whereas the increase of exports in the first group, between 1892 and 1900, had been £128,000,000, in the second group the increase had been £114,000,000, and in the highly protectionist countries it had been only £60,000,000. These figures showed that the high protectionist group had advanced the least of the three, although they had a vastly greater population. Taking the imports, he said there had been a decided advance on imports, both of the free-trade group and the moderately protected group, but a very small increase in the highly protected group.

The figures showed beyond all question that if they wanted to increase exports, they must at the same time increase imports. That stood theoretically and to commonsense, while at the same time the figures proved it practically. Per head of the population in the free-trade group the figures were in 1882, £7 12s. 6d.; and for 1900, £9 4s. 6d. For the moderate protection group in 1882, £4 10s.; and in 1900, £5 1s. For the high protection group in 1882, £1 15s.; in 1900, £1 14s. So that there was a large increase in the free-trade group, a moderate increase in the moderate protection group, and an actual decrease in the high protection group. Those figures disproved the benefits of protection, at any rate of high protection to the export trade. He must say in regard to this matter if they took an intermediate period, from 1890 to 1900, it would put a somewhat different aspect on the question. In that period the exports from the moderate protection group advanced more than from the free-trade group. In that moderate protection group Germany was the greatest factor, and in the free-trade group the United Kingdom was the greatest factor; and it was perfectly true that the German exports had gone ahead to a larger extent than ours had done. Why was that? During the last ten years Germany had had a lower tariff on food products than in the preceding ten years. The exports from Germany in 1890–4 amounted to £3 2s. 9d. per head of the population; in 1895–9 they were £3 10s. 7d.; and in 1900–2 they were £4. In the United Kingdom the exports per head were 1890–4, £6 2s. 11d.; 1895–9, £6 0s. 4d.; 1900–2, £6 13s 6d., He had excluded ships from these figures.

and there was nothing alarming about them. We had advanced less in the earlier period, but more in the comparison between 1895–9 and 1900–2. The point was this: that both countries had progressed, but Germany a little more than the United Kingdom; but to anyone who said that this was caused by the moderate protection of Germany, he would point out that in the same period Holland, which was practically a free-trade country, advanced more than Germany, and that Denmark advanced more than Sweden. Under these circumstances it was perfectly impossible to put the German advance down to protection. There were many other reasons which might account for that advance. There was the policy of cartels, and of dumping; there was the fact that Germany had a better education than we had, and although that argument had been sneered at, it was of the utmost importance, for an analysis of the exports of Germany showed that the increase was in those trades generally where education told. Then there was the cost of transport, about which Germany had done so much, and we so little. There was further the commercial energy and adaptability of the Germans as compared with Englishmen. These were sufficient reasons to account for the difference without going to the question of protection; and we could imitate Germany in these three latter directions. It should be remembered that Germany was now going to raise her tariff, and that would increase the cost of her food. Under her new tariff he therefore did not dread the competition of Germany as much as before. In his opinion the whole protectionist argument would fall if it were not for Germany. It was absolutely contradicted by the experience of other countries, and in the face of the waste and friction which would follow any change would it not be folly to alter our fiscal plans? Especially was this the case, because if we were to imitate Germany we should have to tinker with the tariff every few years, and he asked any Member of Parliament what time there would then be for this House to deal with other affairs.

He had tried to meet the case for protection fairly and squarely, not by wise saws or musty shibboleths, but by modern instances and concrete facts. He should leave this question uncompleted if he did not refer to the dynamics of protection which had an important bearing on the question. The Prime Minister had told them in his pamphlet that Germany, America, and France had shown "no sign of any wish to relax their system." For the moment he admitted that that was correct; but how about the future? Did we not often mistake tendencies as continuing tendencies when they had reached their climax? He ventured to give the simile suggested to him by the recent extraordinary speculations in cotton. A week ago the price of cotton had reached its highest, and the tendency to increase looked like continuing, but to-day the markets were lower. So, he maintained, that when the protectionist tendency was looking the strongest he was inclined to think that a change was coming. He would give his reason for thinking so. The real question which every nation had to solve was: what is their ideal? Was it to be a self-sustained kingdom or empire, or was it to increase the foreign export trade? In the extraordinary jumble of reasons given to the country for protection last autumn and winter, these two ideas had been both put forward and inextricably confused. But they were antagonistic and distinct from each other. There were some nations which showed considerable muddle-headedness in mixing the idea of being self-contained and the glory of an increase of foreign exports. If they wanted self-sustenance they must regret foreign exports; if they wanted to sell to another nation, they must buy from it. Any other theory would land them in the hopeless quagmire of the old mercantile theory. If they went in for self-sustenance they must impose high duties, and if for foreign exports they must impose low duties. When Germany raised her tariff it was done at the behest of the agrarians. He asked would it last? At any rate there was very grave doubt about it. Count Caprivi was congratulated by the German Emperor as the saviour of his country in 1891 when he reduced the price of food. He believed that Germany was more likely to retrace its steps than to go on with the present system. The German ideal was a foreign export trade, but she could not increase that by unduly increasing her tariff. The ideal of France was to be a self-containing empire, and she had the means for that while her population was not progressive. The ideal of the United States seemed to be rather an increase of foreign exports than a self-sustaining empire. Mr. Schwab's ludicrous boast about never blowing out a single blast furnace for pig-iron in the United States had been falsified, and the production of pig-iron in that country was little more than 50 per cent. of what it was twelve months ago. If the tendency in the three protectionist commercial nations was not to increase, but to lower tariffs, would it not be well for us to wait and see what was to happen. Were we sure that we were not better off with our elastic system, with many small trades, rather than dependent upon two or three great trades? The magnificent edifice of British commerce founded on the rock of free competition had withstood the storms of fifty years, and still towered above that of all other countries, and was the envy and admiration of the world. It was better fitted to meet the winds of hostile tariffs, because its master-builders had so fashioned it that in addition to the stately halls of greater trades, there were endless smaller rooms devoted to minor industries. He wished to say that while we ought to watch and be careful of our woollen, cotton, and iron trades, he was not inclined to sneer at the fact that we were successful in the manufacture of jams and pickles. What was our ideal? A self-sustaining empire or an increase in our foreign exports? Sometimes they were told one thing, and sometimes the other. Our ideal had been free trade in every portion of the Empire which we ourselves controlled; free imports to our self-governing colonies, and to foreign nations also, not for their benefit, but because that by this policy we did better for ourselves. He thought it would be a sorry day if we threw our weight on the side of protection. As it was the scales were comparatively evenly balanced, and our example might alter enormously the dynamics; it might inevitably tend to the further closing of foreign markets. On the other hand patience and well-doing in the policy under which we had become the most prosperous nation of Europe would mean, he believed, that before long the lessening of protective tariffs now raised against us would leave us the ultimate command of the neutral markets of the world. Therefore, in the interests of the country to which he belonged, and of the Empire which he loved, he should vote with heart and soul for the Amendment of his right hon. friend.

SIR M. HICKS BEACH (Bristol, W.): The subject before the House is so large, and its scope so wide, that I think we must all feel that it is absolutely impossible to deal with it fully in the course of a single debate, and, therefore, I cannot but express a feeling of regret that, while it was yet new in the minds of our countrymen, this House could not have been afforded an opportunity of discussing it. I think in those days we might have been able to deal with it without an absolutely Party bias, which perhaps now has become absolutely impossible, and I feel that all the more because, although the right hon. Member for Montrose took, I think, much the same view that I do, that it ought to be possible to dissociate it from Party feeling, yet in the very form of his Amendment he has compelled us to consider it in connection with the Party to which we belong. This subject has nothing to do necessarily with the Address in Answer to the Gracious Speech from the Throne. There is no mention of it in the Gracious Speech, and surely those who most desire that our present fiscal policy should continue will not complain of that omission. There is nothing, so far as I am aware, in the Question which will impair "our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year." Nobody supposes that, assuming this Parliament continues in existence, the finance of the year will have anything to do with the new fiscal policy. I notice that, although I suppose the right hon. Gentleman is the author of the phrase I have quoted, he did not attempt to justify the inclusion of it in his Amendment. No, Sir, I do not understand why the right hon. Gentleman could not accept the invitation of the Home Secretary and delay the discussion of the question until the Prime Minister, whose absence every man in the House regrets, was able to speak on it in behalf of the Government, and until the right hon. Gentleman and those who agree with him could obtain the unbiased opinion of the House upon the Motion itself without any reference to the Party to which we may belong. The right hon. Gentleman has chosen another course. Last year the Opposition, though invited, wisely, as I think, refrained from bringing forward this question in connection with a vote of censure on the Government. Why have they adopted a different course now? I do not think that an Amendment to the Address is quite the same thing as a vote of censure, but practically it is, if carried, an expression of no confidence in the Government of the day, and would, according to our ancient custom, practically involve a change of Government. There may be this reason. Since we met last session His Majesty's Government have declared their policy upon the fiscal question. The Opposition may disapprove of that policy, or they may disapprove also of the position which, in their opinion, His Majesty's Government may have seemed to take up with regard to—what shall I say?—the mission which has been undertaken in the country by my right hon. friend the Member of West Birmingham. Now, I differ widely in this matter, and, so far as I know, in this matter only, from my right hon. friend. We regret the necessity of his absence from this debate, but in his absence I may safely say that there is no one in this country, who through his ability, his eloquence, his energy, and his service to the State, has more won the confidence of his countrymen than my right hon. friend.

I think I shall not be wrong in assuming that the determination of the right hon. Gentlemen opposite to insist on bringing forward this matter in the manner to which I have ventured to take exception is due to the cause to which I have alluded. [An Hon. Member on the Opposition Bench: What cause?] First it is their objection to his policy; and, secondly, the manner in which, in their minds, His Majesty's Government have associated themselves with the mission of my right hon. friend. On the opening day of the session, the Leader of the Opposition said that in his opinion the action of the Government in this matter had been the greatest imposture that had ever been foisted upon the country and upon Parliament. I wish he had reserved those words until the Prime Minister, to whom, of course, they mainly referred, had been in his place. But I will try as an independent Member, perhaps, sitting where I do, more biased in favour of the Government of the day than the right hon. Gentleman, to place before the House what I think is a fairer interpretation of the conduct of my right hon. friend. Sir, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has not concealed the fact that personally he is in some sympathy with the policy of colonial preference. I regret that view, but we are all entitled to our individual opinion. But my right hon. friend has recognised his responsible position, as Prime Minister of the Crown, for the welfare of the Empire, and, as Leader of one of the two great Parties in the State, for the unity of the Party which he leads. My right hon. friend has recognised the limits and established the limits within which he considers the policy of his Government ought wisely and properly to be confined. He has stated, I think plainly, to the country what that policy is very possibly at some sacrifice of his own opinion. He has been rewarded by calumny and by innuendoes to the effect that he has abdicated in favour of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham, and that he is a mere tool of my right hon. friend. That has been said all over the country. And that is his reward. Now, in my humble opinion, my right hon. friend has taken a course in this matter worthy of his high position, and if he has sacrifed his own opinions in any degree for the sake of Party unity, why, Sir, I can remember any time within the last ten years that influential writers and speakers on the Opposition side have begged right hon. Gentlemen and noble Lords on their side to do the same in the interests of the Party to which they belong. That has been the position taken up by my right hon. friend.

But there are words in this Amendment as to "conflicting declarations from His Majesty's Ministers," and I feel there is some justification for those words. I have seen with regret during the last few months that members of the Government, finding it necessary to speak, and in some cases to speak often on this subject, have not taken the course which their chief has taken, of explaining their policy and justifying it from both sides, but have gone on to declare themselves admirers, if not followers, of the policy of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham. I think that was unfortunate; I think it was hardly fair to the chief under whom they serve. I think it would have been better perhaps if those who deemed it necessary to express such opinions had taken the manly and straightforward course of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham and gone out into the wilderness to preach the new fiscal gospel. But I do not apply any language of that sort to the speech which we have listened to-night. We could all have preferred that in answer to the right hon. Member for Montrose the Prime Minister himself should have stated and explained the policy of the Government. That could not be. It is no fault of the Prime Minister, but, in his absence, that duty was undertaken, no doubt at the request of his colleagues, by the Minister who is in very close relation with the Prime Minister, and probably knows everything in his mind, and who himself represents that Department of the State which is charged with these particular affairs. I heard with the greatest satisfaction the speech of my right hon. friend. What does my right hon. friend say? First of all, he put aside that peculiar notion which, as far as I know, has really not been spread abroad by anyone in authority, that this country is on the brink of ruin. Secondly, he reiterated the declaration already plainly made by the Prime Minister at Sheffield, that taxes on food are not included in the policy of His Majesty's Government. Thirdly, he stated that the duty averaging 10 per cent. on manufactured and partly manufactured goods is also excluded from that policy, that the policy of His Majesty's Government is only the policy of retaliation, and that the issue at the next general election, whenever it may come, will only be that policy, and that the result of that general election, if it should be favourable to His Majesty's Government, would not entitle it to carry out the policy of colonial preference. My right hon. friend clinched the matter by declaring himself opposed to protection, no doubt on behalf of the Government. He stated that in his opinion protection was not a wise policy, and he explained that by protection he meant the imposition of a tax on the consumer for the benefit of the producer.

Now, I would appeal to my right hon. friend the Member for Montrose Burghs what his object is in desiring to censure the Government. To me, at any rate, who am a supporter of the Government, the declaration that we have heard to-night is completely satisfactory. Of course, it is possible that hon. Members opposite may consider that they see the cloven hoof of protection in the policy of retaliation. If that be so, no doubt they will persevere with their Amendment, and it would be perfectly fair of them to do so; but I venture to say that it is not an issue which will meet with the acceptance of the House or of the country. I was glad to hear the President of the Board of Trade express his agreement with the Duke of Devonshire in a view which I have always personally taken from the day on which I read the speech of the Prime Minister at Sheffield—namely, that the policy of retaliation is not a step towards the policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, but is absolutely opposed to it. In the course of his speech the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose Burghs quoted the speech of the noble Lord the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and my noble friend explained what he meant by his words. I think that the House quite understood. I think that the object of His Majesty's Government and the object of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham were at the commencement the same. I believe the object of both of them was to increase our export trade, and a very good object too.

But the methods, as my noble friend said, which His Majesty's Government have adopted with that view and the methods of my right hon. friend the ex-Colonial Secretary are different. The method of His Majesty's Government is the method of retaliation. What they want is to get as much as they can of our manufactured goods into foreign countries. They propose to negotiate with foreign countries, and, if negotiation cannot be carried to a satisfactory result, to threaten them, and if necessary to impose retaliatory duties against the goods of these foreign countries in order to effect their object; and when that object is effected these duties will come off. But the method of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham is a different one. What my right hon. friend proposes is, first, colonial preference, or, in other words, the imposition of duties in this country upon the foreign goods which we most require; and, secondly, a general tariff upon manufactured or partly-manufactured goods averaging 10 per cent. coming from all countries, whether protective or not, and of course to be permanently maintained. That is a totally different method from the method of the Prime Minister. With regard to the policy of retaliation—is that policy necessary or not? What is the grievance? I was glad to hear that the right hon. Gentleman in moving his Amendment admitted that the state of of our industries was not all we could desire. [Mr. JOHN MORLEY: Hear, hear.] Surely it will be agreed by all of us that foreign protective tariffs have injured, and in some cases seriously injured, our trade, not only in our export trade but in our home markets. Surely it will be agreed by all of us that if we can induce foreign countries to lower those tariffs we shall be acting in the real interest of freer trade, and conferring a benefit on the world. I do not think that it will be denied by anyone that if we could do this, as was done in the Cobden treaty, by lowering our duties here that policy would be one which would be supported by the House and the country. I am not sure that by some process of lowering or readjustment of our present duties, such as those, for example, on wines and spirits, something of this kind might not even now be done. But of course the question really is whether you should raise or impose duties in order to carry out this policy. Well, that is a question of the balance of advantage and disadvantage. I can conceive cases in which it would be absurd to undertake such a policy; I can conceive other cases, and not a few, when the advantages of the policy would be greater than its possible disadvantages. What has the Prime Minister said? He has said that he does not contemplate entering into a general tariff war or adopting the foreign system of maximum and minimum tariffs. He has said that we might tell any foreign country which we thought was treating us with outrageous unfairness that unless they modified their tariff to our advantage we should feel ourselves compelled to take some steps with regard to their exports to us which they would not like, provided that we could do it without disadvantage to ourselves. Well, is not that a reasonable policy?

MR. JOHN MORLEY: What steps? The whole point is, what steps?

SIR M. HICKS BEACH: What steps? Is it not clear, Sir, that as His Majesty's Government do not contemplate what may be called dealing with this matter by a general tariff, but dealing with it in individual instances, it is impossible for them to state precisely beforehand the particular steps which they would have to take? Would you ask a doctor to write out the same prescription for all his patients? I have no doubt that we shall have, before the country is asked to pronounce on this matter, some clearer statement than we have yet received as to the particular steps that might be taken; but I wish the House to note on this point that to-night my right hon. friend the President of the Board of Trade distinctly recognised the extreme difficulty of taking such steps with regard to those imports of food and raw material the cheapness and abundance of which are absolutely necessary to the welfare of the country, and that, further, he distinctly stated, on behalf of the Government, that they do not contemplate taking action in this matter by the imposition of retaliatory duties without the authority of Parliament. Those are statements which to my mind are extremely satisfactory, and I do not think that we could fairly ask His Majesty's Government at the present time to go beyond them.

Well, but I would appeal to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose Burghs himself. I was glad to hear that he said that if a case of outrageous unfairness on the part of any foreign country against us could be adduced, and Parliament were satisfied of three things (1) of the fact, (2) that reprisals would stop it, (3) that those reprisals would not do us more harm than good, then he practically pledged that side of the House—[HON. MEMBERS: No, no!]—he practically pledged that side of the House to support His Majesty's Government on such an occasion. I am glad to note that as a distinct advance towards the policy of the Government. There was a case not very long ago of outrageous unfairness in the case of the action of foreign countries with regard to bounties on sugar and the mode in which those bounties and protective duties were utilised—outrageous unfairness to the sugar producers in our Colonies and to the sugar refiners in this country. That was the fact. Reprisals were suggested, not by us, but by other countries, as the means by which that unfairness might be stopped—reprisals in the shape of a prohibitory duty upon all bounty-fed sugar imported into any country signing the convention. I think it is perfectly clear that that policy has not done this country more harm than good. [MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): Great harm.] Well, I wait for proof of that statement. I do not believe that proof can be given, at any rate it was not given last year. But practically all the Opposition voted against the Sugar Convention. I congratulate the right hon. Gentleman on his advance. Of course I can understand that the view of the right hon. Gentleman may be that retaliatory duties if imposed must necessarily remain and become protective. Well, I do not think that is a fact, and I will again refer to sugar to show why. What was the case with regard to the confectionery and jam-making trades in England? They were practically bounty-fed, because, through the operation of foreign bounties on sugar, they were accustomed to get, and they were nourished by getting, their sugar cheaper than the cost of production. It is the same thing as protection.

A couple of years ago the Government of the day, anxious, I think, to promote the true interests of free trade—that is to say, to promote the natural course of trade—agreed to the Sugar Convention. These trades protested. They said they would be ruined. They have not been ruined yet. But the sugar bounties were abolished in face of their protest, and, therefore, I do not believe that any single interest, if temporarily protected by a duty imposed for the purpose of retaliation, would prevent its repeal in the interest of freer trade. Some say that the policy of retaliation is impracticable—that it is doomed to fail, because in certain other tariff wars it has not succeeded. I attach the greatest importance to this fact, which came before my notice most plainly in the negotiations with regard to the Sugar Convention — that all European countries attach enormous importance to admission to our markets. I have not the slightest doubt that, if they entertained any real fear of exclusion from our market, their temper towards us in tariff negotiations would be much more agreeable than it has been under the present conditions; and in those negotiations we should be backed up by what I believe to be an increasing feeling and knowledge on the part of consumers abroad of the enormous mischief that these protective tariffs and bounties do. That was perfectly clear in all that happened with regard to the conference which arrived at the Sugar Convention, because the real motive power in that convention was the disgust of the taxpayers and the consumers in France and Germany at what they had to pay to the sugar refiners and others engaged in the sugar trade. I want this policy to be tried. I believe it is in the interests of free trade that it should be tried, and I am glad that His Majesty's Government have announced their intention of trying it. One thing only I would say—I should like them to try it at once. The principle of it was tried in the Sugar Convention, and I venture to say that it has been assented to in that Convention by this House and by the country. I do not quite see why we should wait for the general election to try it in another instance. I fancy there are negotiations now going on with certain foreign countries with regard to commercial treaties, and if the right hon. Gentlemen on that Bench will only put their foot down in this matter and will deal with those negotiations on such a principle they will have no warmer supporter in this House than myself.

There is one thing I should say, however, that you must dissociate this matter from the question of colonial preference. In my belief the two things, under certain circumstances at any rate, would be found incompatible. What is the principle of retaliation? Surely, that you should treat other countries as they treat you. What is the principle of colonial preference? Surely, that you should treat a colony better than any other country, because it is part of the Empire. How are you to work the two things together? Now let us see. Suppose 2s. a quarter were imposed upon all corn coming from the United States, and Canada was exempted from that duty. Suppose the result was what those who would promote colonial preference desire—that a great deal of our corn supply were to come from Canada instead of from the United States, and suppose that the corn growers in the United States induced their Government to propose to this Government that if they would remit the 2s. duty on United States corn they, the United States, would remit certain of their protective duties which pressed most hardly upon our manufactured goods, and the remission of which would do enormous benefit to the trade and commerce of this country. What must the answer be under colonial preference? Surely this, "Our word is pledged to Canada; we cannot remit the duty." Yet the offer from America might be infinitely more valuable to our trade and industries here than anything that Canada had given in return for preference or could possibly give. Would not that be a dangerous limitation to the freedom of bargaining which His Majesty's Government desire to resume with reference to this matter? Would it not excite bitter feelings in this country on the part of those interested, whether as employers or workmen, in the industries which might be enormously benefited by the remission of these United States duties. Would that tend towards the unity of the Empire? I am afraid it would be found in working that difficulties of this sort would constantly and continually arise. I would say this. It is a very inconvenient thing to bind this country by treaty not to impose duties; but it is something more than an inconvenient thing to bind this country by treaty not to take off duties in circumstances which no man can possibly foresee.

What are the duties which, under the scheme of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham, would have to be imposed? Their object is avowedly to hinder the importation of foreign goods—the foreign goods which we require — into this country, and so far to undo the effect of the millions which we have spent in our ships, our railways, our docks, and our post office and telegraph system in order to promote the freer and cheaper transit of goods. And, Sir, what is to be the result? In the words of my right hon. friend the President of the Board of Trade, the result will be the imposition of taxes on the consumer for the benefit of the producer which he describes as protection. It would be grossly unfair to compare the duties which are proposed by my right hon. friend upon corn and flour and meat and dairy produce with the old protective duties. They could not possibly have the same effect as the old protective duties, which were deliberately intended to keep everything foreign out of this country. But that is not quite the case with regard to the average 10 per cent. on manufactured and partly manufactured goods. I am afraid it would be found that there would be a very real protective effect with regard to manufactured goods as a result of those duties, and that effect would be shown in largely raised prices to the great injury of all consumers, especially in the working classes. The smaller duties are proposed to give a preference in point of money to the home producer or the colonial producer. If they are found to be not enough to give that advantage, why the principle has been accepted, and you will never be able, if you are to act in harmony with the Colonies, if you are to satisfy the clients of my right hon. friend the Member for Sleaford, and they are pretty greedy clients, you will never be able to resist the demand for an increase, and the day will come, as it has come in all other countries that have begun this course, when those duties will be as protective as the duties on manufactured goods. There are curiously contradictory arguments used in this matter. I have been told by my right hon. friend the Member for Sleaford that these duties on corn, meat, and dairy produce will not increase prices.

MR. CHAPLIN (Lincolnshire, Sleaford): The price of bread I said would not be raised.

SIR M. HICKS BEACH: The right hon. Gentleman says so now, but then he goes down and tells his farmers that they will largely benefit by these duties. I want to know how? Sometimeus we are told that a tax on manufactured goods will keep foreign manufactures out of the country and give more employment to our workmen here. At other times we are told that the same duties on goods coming from foreign countries will produce an enormous revenue. Well, they cannot do both. When my right. hon. friend says that these duties on agricultural produce will not raise prices, then I will ask him to explain why he does not press for duties on maize and bacon? Because they would be very useful in the present growth of public expenditure; and why, if they will not raise prices, is it suggested that the working classes should be compensated for them by a reduction of the duties on tea and sugar, the greater part of which, I am afraid, from my own experience in the reduction of duties, would probably go into the pockets of the producers or dealers in those articles rather than into the pockets of the unfortunate consumer. Everybody who has had to deal with taxation knows that it would be much more easy to reach the consumer by imposing a duty than to relieve him by taking it off; but I am quite unable to understand how, if prices are raised here by these duties, practically meaning that all of us, the richest and the poorest, will get less for our money, the result can possibly be to stimulate the productive power of the country and to increase employment.

It would be wrong of me, after the kind way in which the House has listened to my observations, to attempt to deal with statistics, or go into detailed argument; but this I will venture to say, that, though I would not for a moment contend that there are not factors that enter into the comparative position and welfare of the working class population in the various countries of the world besides protection and free trade, yet this, I think, is clear from the Government statistics—that in this country employment is more certain and more regular, wages are better, and hours are shorter than they are in protected countries. But, Sir, I know that the proposals to which I am objecting were not originally introduced, although they have recently been defended by protectionist arguments—they were not originally introduced by my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham on that ground alone. He brought them forward because he believed that only by increasing our trade with our Colonies could we counteract the evil influence of foreign protectionist tariffs on our exported manufactured goods; and, secondly, that by increasing our trade with our Colonies, we should do much to promote the unity of the Empire. If the policy of His Majesty's Government is successful of forcing foreign countries to lower their protectionist tariffs against us, I do not think there will be any reason for artificially stimulating our trade with our Colonies. It is very good, it is rapidly increasing, and I think it will take care of itself. But I admit the strength of the sentiment which underlies the second argument of my right hon. friend. My right hon. friend the other day, asked us to think Imperially. [OPPOSITION laughter.] I should not receive that suggestion with derision. I am quite sure that my right hon. friend did not mean for a moment that he contemplated the idea of a self-sustaining Empire. The thing is an impossibility. It is a Chinese idea. It would be a fatal check to all prosperity, and, politically, and nationally, it would be dangerous. It is of vast national importance to us that foreign countries should be interested in our foreign trade. Why, Sir, cannot we conceive circumstances in which the great interest on the part of that great Power on the other side of the Atlantic to prevent food being declared contraband of war might be of enormous importance in a great national crisis? No, Sir, I am sure my right hon. friend never contemplated the ideal of a self-sustaining Empire. What he did contemplate was a great increase of trade with our Colonies which would conduce to the unity of the Empire. I think the enthusiasm for the Colonies of my right hon. friend has sometimes led him to go further than I should be disposed to follow him in this matter. He said the other day that the future of the country and the British race lies in our Colonies and our possessions. Sir, I think it lies here. We, at any rate, are primarily interested in the United Kingdom. The interests of the United Kingdom are the greatest interests in the whole Empire.

But, Sir, in considering this matter, we are bound to consider, not only the interests of the United Kingdom, but also the interests of the Empire. And what are they? The idea of colonial preference—the principle of it—has been supported by a sentiment to which I attach enormous value. I do not think anybody can exaggerate the important service which my right hon. friend the Member for Birmingham has done to this country and to the Empire both here and in the Colonies. But we cannot deal with these matters by increasing sentiment alone. Suppose the principle accepted. When we come to details we may be quite certain that the Colonies will deal with them in a spirit of hard prosaic business, and expect us to do the same. Very well. Now, I recognise and admire the spirit in which this matter has been dealt with so far by the Colonies. They have said to us plainly, "Don't hurt yourselves in order to benefit us." Their whole tone has been that of a speech, which I read the other day, from one of the Canadian Ministers, who protested against Canada being pictured as a squalling infant clamouring for preference, and saying that if she did not get it she would break up the family feast and leave the Empire. All that the Colonies have ever expressed a desire for in this matter is a fair bargain. Now, what are the proposals before us? My right hon. friend has made these proposals—5 per cent. on corn, a higher duty on flour, a small duty on meat and dairy produce, colonial produce to be admitted free in competition with our own farmers, just as it is now. What has he got on the other side? As yet he has had no definite offer. We hear a good deal about offers by the Colonies. I do not at all deny that the Colonies would desire to enter into bargains with regard to colonial preference; but when we want to know, as we must know before we adopt the principle, what they will give in return, we get no answer. My hon. friend the Member for Sheffield has said that Canada has already given 33 per cent. Does my hon. friend really believe that that 33 per cent., although I admit of great value as showing the kindly feeling of Canada towards us, has done any material good to our country? ["Yes."] Then, how does my hon. friend account for this fact—that since this preference has been given, the whole trade of Canada having greatly increased, the trade of Canada with the United States, with France, and with Germany has increased more in proportion than the trade with Great Britain? To make any fair bargain in this matter what would unquestionably be necessary would be a real measure of free trade to us in colonial markets in the only things which we can export to these markets—namely, manufactured goods. Now, has any colony ever offered that? No, Sir. All of them tell us, and my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham has never been able to produce the slightest evidence to the contrary, that they will protect their manufactures against us. Is it a fair bargain that colonial products should come into this country free, while our products cannot go into the colonies except under protectionist tariffs? Let me carry this matter further. There may be something worse. There is a question which has never yet been answered. You propose the imposition of a duty averaging 10 per cent. on manufactured and partly manufactured goods. Is that duty to be applied to colonial imports or not? I do not hear an answer. If it is to be levied on colonial imports the principle of colonial preference is gone. If it is not to be levied on the colonial imports, in the first place you will lose an enormous proportion of the revenue which might be derived from such a tax by frauds of certificates of origin and by exportation of foreign goods to the Colonies in order that they may be sent by the Colonies here, which would be much easier now than it was before owing to the cheapness of freight. And you will do something more. Our manufacturers here complain bitterly of the unfair competition in our markets of German and United States iron, for example, under their protectionist system. Very well. There is a bounty upon iron in Canada. We all hope and expect that the industries of our Colonies will increase and expand, and rival at some day or other the industries of the mother country. Will Imperial sentiment reconcile our manufacturers here to be ruined by bounty-fed or duty-fed colonial goods any more than they are now reconciled to being ruined by similar goods from foreign countries? These questions will have to be answered before any practical action can be taken, I will venture to say, with regard to a discussion with the Colonies upon colonial preference. And there is something more. We are told that colonial preference, assuming it not to be intended on manufactured and partly manufactured goods, is to be confined to food, to corn, meat, and to dairy produce. Is that so? [A Voice: "No."] I look for an answer to my right hon. friend the Member for Sleaford. But assuming that to be so, is that likely to satisfy the Colonies? Do not we all of us know that that really will only apply to certain interests and to certain Colonies? Do not all of us feel that, for example, the timber interest in Canada will have something to say why it ought to have a preference which would be denied to it when given to the corn growing interest? Do not we feel that South Africa, which has granted us a preference, sends no food at all and sends a mere trifling amount of wine, but does send a great deal of raw material? Do not we know that the great export of Australia to this country is not food or meat, but raw material? If you are to adopt this principle of colonial preference, and if you are to do justice to all the Colonies and all the interests in those Colonies, without which your preference will be a mere beginning of jealousy and friction in the Empire, you must extend it to raw material. And when you once extend it to raw material, what will the woollen industries of Bradford, what will the building trade of this country, have to say to colonial preference?

I feel that this matter is one of such enormous importance that I will not apologise for having trespassed for so long upon the House. I am opposed to the proposals of my right hon. friend the Member for Birmingham on principle. I believe they are wrong. But let us consider them for a moment from another point of view. Put aside their merits altogether. They involve an enormous change, everybody will admit that, in our fiscal system. It is a change which surely, if adopted at all, ought to be adopted with a reasonable assurance of permanance. I think my right hon. friend the Prime Minister dealt with the matter in his speech at Manchester in a spirit of the highest wisdom. I will ask my right hon. friends who desire it to put aside the merits altogether. They will surely agree that unless this change can be permanently made it will be dangerous in the last degree to the interests of the Empire to make it at all. Now, is there anything behind this proposal representing that body of fixed sentiment and conviction which is the only sure basis of any great change? Not yet. Then, Sir, is it not wiser that we should adhere to the policy of the Government, that the attempt which has been made to pledge the whole of the Unionist Party to the policy of my right hon. friend the Member for Birmingham should be abandoned, and that the matter should be considered at leisure in the country, not for the next election, nor for by-elections, not for anything of that kind, but should be considered and discussed until one way or the other a definite and fixed conviction is arrived at? Sir, I plead strongly because I believe in the vast importance of this question. I am not a bigoted free trader. If I had been I should not have been responsible for violating the pure theory of free trade by proposing the corn duty two years ago. This country is prosperous; but I know very well that that prosperity is not universal. There are interests which are not prosperous—the agricultural interest first of all. Other countries have prospered under protection as we have prospered under free trade. But, Sir, the position of this country is unique. For two generations and more, after long deliberation, we have adopted and adhered to our present fiscal policy. The result of that has been greatly to increase our wealth, greatly to increase our population, to make us in this hemisphere at any rate, the greatest commercial, trading, and industrial community; to turn us, as has already been said, from an agricultural into an industrial country. And all this has brought about this thing in which this country is unique—that we depend mainly for our food supply, for our supply of raw materials which are absolutely necessary to our welfare, which we are bound—more bound now than ever—to get in the best and cheapest market, we depend for them upon an over-sea supply. To reverse the policy under which we have come into this position, to return, in principle at least, to something like our old tariff, embracing hundreds of articles, harassing and interfering at every point with the trade and industry of the country, is an experiment to my mind full of the greatest danger to our social and political future. If any such proposal were made to this House I should not hesitate for a moment as to my vote. But, Sir, no such proposal is before the House. The proposal of the right hon. Gentleman does not even ask us, though it might have asked us, for a mere abstract assertion of the benefits and importance of free trade; he has inextricably combined with that the question of confidence in the Government of the day. I should not under any circumstances desire to replace His Majesty's present Government by right hon. Gentlemen on the opposite Bench. But I will never desert the Government of my country at such a crisis as that which may, perhaps, at this moment be beginning in our foreign affairs. I agree with the policy which has been explained to the country by the Prime Minister, and reaffirmed by the President of the Board of Trade to-night. I desire to support the Cabinet against many, I dare say, of their own supporters who are anxious for what I consider wrong and extreme measures. And I believe that what the Prime Minister has said he will adhere to, and in that view I shall vote against the Amendment of the right hon. Gentleman.

MR. HALDANE (Haddingtonshire) said the right hon. Gentleman who had just spoken was not only a great financier, but one of the most fascinating personalities in the House, his fascination consisting in the fact that while no man more clearly knew his mind, no man had in greater degree the art of wrapping that mind in a certain veil of mystery. The speeches of the right hon. Gentleman could never be judged by either their exordium or their peroration; the arguments in between had to be carefully considered. If the right hon. Gentleman dissented from his own side, he had the gift of dealing out his bad arguments to his friends and his good arguments to his foes, and on the present occasion the Opposition had had his good arguments. He began by expressing his dissent from the manner in which this Motion had been brought forward in the absence of the Prime Minister. All deeply regretted that absence and its cause, but it should be remembered that during the whole of last summer Members were very forbearing, and that through the autumn an agitation unparalleled in its intensity had been carried on: was it to be supposed, therefore, that the Opposition could sit silent through the debate on the Address without endeavouring to ascertain the view of the House upon the most important question that had come before it for many a day? The right hon. Gentleman knew the mind of His Majesty's Government, as perhaps no other man, and he had proceeded with the calmness of a surgeon of great experience to go alongside the patient and tender his advice. He had diagnosed the disease, and in most kindly and sympathetic tones had stated wherein the patient was suffering. The right hon. Gentleman had the gift of what theologians called exegesis, and he had explained what the House could not have known before—what the real policy of the Government was—and he had made it clear that the Free Food Party considered that in the struggle for the mind of Ministers, their exertions had not been without avail. The right hon. Gentleman had then proceeded to deal with some of the topics embraced by the debate. He had flirted with retaliation. But it was good to pay attention to a young lady in whom those whom you wished to be your friends were peculiarly interested. Such negotiations with foreign Powers would have no warmer friend than himself. He was, however, judicious as to the way these retaliatory proposals were to be carried out. With regard to Russia and the United States, our principal imports from those countries were food and raw materials, and they were the very things which they would suffer most from, if any attempt was made to place retaliatory duties upon them. The right hon. Gentleman did not pursue that topic further. In the course of his speech he expressed a pessimistic view of British trade. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose admitted that he did not find the trade of this country in a wholly satisfactory condition. He was quite unable to agree with those who found in the prosperity of the country anything which could give them complete assurance for the future. He held strongly that there never was a time at which this nation more required to make an effort if they wished to retain the supremacy which had distinguished them in the past, and which it lay with them as to whether it should remain with this country in the future.

While he was ready to admit that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had done the country a service by stirring up the people on this question, yet he could not help feeling that for one service he had rendered two dis-services, for he had turned attention to the wrong remedy and away from the true remedy. It was all very well to complain of Mr. Cobden because the dream of universal free trade had not been realised. He was not so sure that universal free trade would have been such a good thing for the country. Their free-trade policy had, however, been of great assistance to something else which had enabled them to be supreme, and that was that in the old days they were first in industrial methods. He blamed the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, because it had drawn attention from the only policy which gave them a chance in competing with their foreign rivals, and had led them on a line which seemed to him to be altogether false. He was one of those who thought that there were great social questions to be solved in this country, and they could only be solved by a considerable amount of interference on the part of the Government of the day with people's liberties. He had read a very interesting speech which the Colonial Secretary delivered to his constituents at Leamington the other day, and which had been alluded to by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose. The Colonial Secretary, in criticising this extravagant view of free trade, asked how they could maintain a free-trade doctrine in its entirety when they wished to put restrictions upon labour at every turn. That was a doctrine which it was quite right to put forward, but which it was equally necessary to examine very closely before accepting it. That would be a very valuable argument to those who based the case of free trade upon the doctrine of unrestricted liberty. Probably Mr. Cobden had not the same occasion to consider that doctrine as they had today. He had always refused to believe in that doctrine because he should interfere with anything in which it was proved that the welfare of the people required it. Nobody in his senses would propose to repeal the factory legislation which had had such a beneficial result in the last two generations. They should maintain the power which they had to interfere for the protection of that labour which could not take care of itself, and which, by its very circumstances and for want of organisation and the feebleness of those who created it, was unable to protect itself without interference from the State. But, while that was true, it was equally true that they wanted great mobility on the part of capital and great freedom in dealing with trade.

Experience had shown that whenever they tried to judge things for those who knew better than anybody else, because it was their own business, they always failed. Whilst protecting labour it was well to leave the utmost freedom of judgment to all those who embarked in industry. If they were going to interfere in the conduct of labour and put down, for instance, some forms of sweating, which not only disfigured their great towns, but were bad for the population, at the same time it was equally necessary that they should leave the people free to replace the thing which they could no longer produce with advantage by some other commodity produced under different conditions. He was very much struck the other day by what he saw in Yorkshire in the centre of the woollen spinning industry, where a friend of his told him what had been the history of that industry in Yorkshire. Years ago there used to be a considerable weaving as well as spinning industry in that locality. But the weaving industry had now disappeared almost and there was very little of it. He thought it was a good thing it was disappearing, because it employed men at wages which never exceeded £1 a week, and it employed women who would have been better employed attending to their families at home. In that locality they were now spinning with the finest machinery. The material went first to Germany, where there was a very low duty, and a state of things had now grown up under which it was profitable for the workers in this country and in Germany to carry on business in that way. The result in the locality he referred to was that an inferior industry had been replaced by a superior industry, and instead of the old wage of £1 a week the workers were now receiving between 30s. and 40s. per week in wages. At the technical school in that locality he saw a whole generation of people growing up experts in the making of that spinning machinery, beside which there was nothing to compare in the whole world.

There were two industries which to his mind demonstrated the great peril of endeavouring to interfere with the judgment of people as to how they should employ their own resources. At the present time there was less weaving and flax spinning in Leeds and Bradford, but were they less prosperous now than they used to be? Hon. Members opposite were always lamenting the disappearance of a particular industry, but they had to look at these things in the aggregate. He admitted the hardship caused through the displacement of an industry, but free trade was not the only thing that displaced industry. Had they conceived the real meaning of this free-trade policy which they were asked so lightly to part with? It involved industrial and social questions, and their freedom to grapple with such questions as sweating and housing. There was hardly a social question which free trade did not affect. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, animated by a depth of conviction which he recognised to the fullest, went through the country and produced a very great impression, and yet from the very beginning it had dawned on many people that the right hon. Gentleman had not fully presented the country with all the information upon which it would have to judge the case. Unfortunately it was more complicated than the story which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had told them. In the speech of the President of the Board of Trade they had just heard the result of the judicial summing up which it was the duty of a Minister to bestow on this case, a duty which the right hon. Gentleman had discharged very fully. He had carefully balanced the argument, and he had summed up in a manner which was satisfactory from the point of view of those who at any rate wished to see this policy of free trade carefully and impartially considered before it was abandoned. He was not going to summarise that speech, but it had struck him very much, because it seemed to indicate the direction in which the mind of the President of the Board of Trade had been working after reading those remarkable materials which his own officials had collected for him. His summing up of that evidence had relieved them from the fear that they were likely to be plunged in any sudden fashion in a campaign on the part of the Government in support of the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. In that state of things they were more concerned with arguments which came from other Members on the opposite side of the House which were more worthy of consideration, although he could not agree with them.

There were many hon. Members who did not go very minutely into the merits of this economic controversy and they pointed to the growth of other nations and to the extraordinary position which Great Britain held, with a small population as compared with the population of our Empire, and they asked how this country was going to face the growing power of those other nations unless they did something. He agreed with that sentiment, but where he differed was in regard to the means they suggested to attain it. It was said by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Bristol, and also by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose, that they could not keep the Empire together if they were going to make this country poorer. They could not count the economic loss which would follow the adoption of the policy suggested by the late Colonial Secretary. They could not measure that loss or know where it would leave their trade. Where such a change would land them they could not tell and they could not measure the cost. The speech made at Manchester by the Prime Minister early in January had received a great deal too little attention, but that policy was re-echoed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. In that speech the Prime Minister said that until a few months ago he had believed that a fiscal basis was the only basis upon which they could draw the Empire more closely together. He went on to say that he had seen occasion to change that opinion, and had come to the conclusion that in the development of the policy of councils of the Empire there was an alternative policy to the fiscal basis to attain the end of drawing the Empire more closely together. The right hon. Gentleman illustrated this by the Council of Imperial Defence, which had been in a large measure his own child and of which he was the distinguished parent. He foreshadowed this other policy of developing the councils of the Crown in a fashion which made some of them feel that they had an alternative to the Imperial policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. That was a policy very relevant to the debate, and, having received the seal of responsible Ministers, it answered one of the most cogent arguments which had affected the minds of many men in favour of the policy of the right hon. Member for Birmingham. A good many people thought something ought to be done and they said to themselves "here is a man who has distinguished himself by the successful way he has pushed things through which he has taken in hand. Let us support him, although we may not be wholly convinced in his favour." Now they had an alternative policy which had gained importance, because it had received the seal of the responsible Ministers themselves and because the Prime Minister had embodied it in a concrete case of his own, namely, the Committee of Imperial Defence. That was a very important departure, the effect of which might be felt hereafter when dealing with the Imperial aspect of the subject which formed the topic of this Amendment. It could not be said that free trade was a merely negative policy, for it left open the door for a constructive policy affecting the various parts of the Empire, and it left open this policy of legislation in the direction they had followed by the passing of the Factory Acts, and which they would have to follow more in the future in dealing with the social problems which were crowding upon them. They were awakening to a sense of their responsibilities in all these matters and to a recognition of the duty which Government owed —and which was recognised by both Parties in the State—to the more helpless class of the community which subsisted on a mere margin of subsistence.

He was very glad that the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Montrose Burghs contained a plea for a system of national education. This was not the moment to discuss that question, but it had taken a concrete shape in the course of the debate. Was it not the obvious duty of constructive free traders and those who, on whatever side of the House they sat, believed in the gospel of liberty, coupled with the doctrine of protection, to set themselves to work and try to get off the false track on which we had got, and to get back to the problem dealing with the industrial methods of this country? That was not a thing that ought to be left alone by the State to individuals. The Amendment had raised in a form which might be inconvenient the great topic which was agitating people's minds. It was perfectly true that they would not be able to get a really judicial vote upon this matter. Of course, an Amendment to the Address involved to some extent the question of confidence. He thought questions of confidence had been exaggerated in their importance. They enabled the Government to ride off and say to hon. Members behind them "Will you, our supporters, show want of confidence in us." If the Government were really in earnest about the policy of free trade—and the speech of the President of the Board of Trade gave him good hope that a majority of them were in earnest—he, for one, marvelled why they did not attach rather less importance to the technical form of the debate on the Address and let them have the benefit of a discussion in which they should get the free mind of the House in the matter. It was quite certain that they would not get it, but to-night, and in the two or three days which were ahead, they would at least have got an examination of this whole controversy in a fashion which would give the people what they had been waiting for a long time, the mind of the House of Commons upon the subject.

MR. PIKE PEASE (Darlington) said the right hon. Gentleman who had just sat down stated that exaggerated importance was attached to the question of confidence, but he did not think the right hon. Gentleman would make the appeal he made if in the future he was sitting on the Government Benches. Before coming into this House he had himself taken part in industrial concerns and he had had the opportunity of mixing with and making friends of working men. It was often said that Members of Parliament who were connected with manufactures were selfish in their views. He should like, if the House would allow him, to make a personal explanation with reference to this question. He had a paragraph in his election address when he first came to Parliament in favour of reciprocity, and he sincerely trusted the day might come when the propositions of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham would be viewed wit hfavour by the British people. He believed there were a vast number of persons in this country who believed that it was absolutely necessary that there should be some radical change in our fiscal system, and he sincerely trusted hon. Members would show in the remainder of the debate that moderaton which had been shown up to the present time. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Montrose Burghs moved the Amendment in a speech no one could possibly object to. He sincerely trusted they might put aside the bitterness which they had seen in the country during the past few months. A great flood of figures had been produced in reference to this matter. Some of these were accurate and some were inaccurate. He would not deal with the figures to-night except to say that most inaccurate statements had been made with reference to the iron and steel trade. It was stated by Lord Lytton last week that the total ad valorem value of the iron and steel trade was £140,000,000. No one who had any knowledge of the trade could believe that that was a correct figure. It had been justified by saying that the iron and steel trade included motor-cars, pots and pans, and other things. But that was no justification.

It would be just as reasonable to include a violin in the timber trade. What they had to ask themselves was not so much whether our prosperity had been great in the past, or for what reason, but would our difficulties extend and increase in the future? In his opinion they were not likely to decrease. It had been said that many hon. Members were violent protectionists. He thought that was rather a hard term to use. At the present time we in this country taxed tea, and we allowed motor-cars to come in free of tax. We stood alone among the nations of the world in our policy in that respect.

Were the representatives of the Colonies in earnest when they passed a resolution unanimously in favour of reciprocity with this country? If they were in earnest what answer was this country going to give them? In the speeches to which they had listened they had heard no alternative. He thought that at no distant date the majority of the people of this country would believe it was necessary to bind ourselves to the Colonies by a commercial tie of some kind. He was not at all sure that a majority of the people of this country did not think so at the present moment, although he was not foolish enough to believe that when an election took place in regard to this question, the Party he belonged to would have an enormous majority. [Laughter.] Hon. Gentlemen laughed at that statement, but everybody knew very well that other questions, such as education, would come to the front, and especially representations with regard to a bread tax. [AN HON. MEMBER: Misrepresentations.] He preferred the word representations. He went recently to the Gateshead election and saw two loaves in a shop window—one professing to represent the English and the other the German loaf, the comparison being greatly in favour of the former. He did not know whether that should be called representation or misrepresentation, but no one believed that in this country such a tax could be put on bread as to produce the disparity represented by these two loaves.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight) Not yet.

MR. PIKE PEASE said his hon. friend would agree with him that there would be no great change in connection with that matter except by the will of the British people. It had been said that the prosperity we had seen during the past half-century was due to a great extent to free trade. He, for one, would not deny that free trade had played an important part in the prosperity of this country, but during that period electricity and steam had revolutionised industries. It must be admitted that times were changed. Those who had gone to Gateshead would have had the opportunity of seeing a great many works standing still in the North of England. No doubt if they travelled in tramways they would have the chance of riding along on German rails. He thought the time had come when they should have some alteration in regard to that. It had been said that we were behindhand with regard to technical education, and he believed that was true. He thought it was necessary that we should put a duty of from 10 to 20 per cent. on manufactured articles. That was very little protection, but it was common sense. In advocating such a duty he thought he could hardly be called a violent protectionist. He wished to put this case before the House. Supposing an order had to be placed for steel to the value of £100,000. A bounty-fed manufacturer offered to execute it at £99,000, while an English company, which had furnaces and everything necessary to produce the steel, quoted £100,000. Could it be argued that it would not be in the interests of this country to put a 2 per cent. duty on the bounty-fed stuff? Of course it might be said that the man who bought the steel would lose £1,000, but when they thought that the amount of labour in that large order would be £60,000 it would be seen that greater benefit would result to this country if a 2 per cent. duty were put on, especially if they took into account the fact that rates would be paid by the English order which would not be paid by the foreign order at all. It was said that if people could not find employment in a business which did pay, arrangements should be made for introducing new businesses. Anyone who had been connected with business knew that that argument was absurd, because businesses which had been started in different parts of the country had been started by an immense expenditure of capital, which if it could not be used in the business for which it was intended would be thrown away altogether. Large plants which had cost a great deal of money would have to be sacrificed at scrap price. The owners would be able to get hardly anything at all for it. It was said that the increase in the yield of the income-tax showed how prosperous this country was. It was perfectly true that there had been in Great Britain an increase of about 1 per cent., but in Germany there had been an increase of from 25 to 40 per cent. It should be remembered that a large number of men who had made enormous fortunes in the Colonies came to live in this country. He believed that in the last thirty years the amount of money that had come in from the Colonies had been from a £1,000,000 to £1,500,000,000. He thought that must have had an effect on the income-tax. It was said that this country was the envy of the world. That might be, but our fiscal system was not the envy of the world. At present there was no country willing to adopt our system. When addressing a meeting the other night in the North of England he asked the audience whether they knew of any individual enterprise which was being started in this country at the present time. There was a certain amount of municipal enterprise, and there were a certain number of limited liability companies; but as to individual enterprise, such was never seen as in days gone by. It practically did not exist at the present time. He thought he might say to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight that a good deal of the business done in the country at the present time was due to Government contracts. The day would come when municipalities would not have the great borrowing powers they had at the present moment, and then it would be found that municipal enterprise would, to a great extent, be curtailed. He admitted that there were many arguments on both sides with reference to the fiscal question.

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 9th February, 1904.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificate from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with:—Torquay Tramways. The same was ordered to lie on the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TRADE REPORTS: ANNUAL SERIES.

No. 3120. Finances of Italy for 1903. Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS ACT, 1877.

Order, dated 13th October, 1903, revoking the Orders of the Board of Agriculture under the Act, dated respectively 22nd August, 1901, 31st May, 1902, and 5th June, 1902.

COMMONS ACT, 1876.

Reports by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries upon an application for a Provisional Order for the regulation of Oxshott Heath, in the parish of Cobham, in the county of Surrey; Merrow Downs, in the parish of Merrow, in the county of Surrey.

PRIVATE PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.

Report by the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under Section 2 of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, That, having regard to Section 16 (2) of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, the provisions of the Clyde Valley Electrical Power Order; the Govan Burgh (Electricity) Order; the Lothians Electric Power Order; and of Part V. of the Kirkcaldy Corporation Order; are of such a character that they ought to be dealt with by Private Bills and not by Provisional Orders.

That the provisions of the Clyde Navigation (Shieldhall Dock) Order; the Clyde Navigation (Works) Order; and of the Young and Bell's Patents Order; are of such a character that they ought to be dealt with by Private Bills and not by Provisional Orders.

That, save as aforesaid, the Provisional Orders be allowed to proceed, subject to such recommendations as may be hereafter made with respect to the several orders.

LUNACY COMMISSION.

Return to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made, and the number of patients seen, by the several Commissioners in Lunacy, during the six months ended the 31st December, 1903.

TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT THREE PER CENT. GUARANTEED STOCK.

Treasury Minute, dated 1st November, 1903, guaranteeing the payment of interest and repayment of principal of the Transvaal Government Three per cent. Guaranteed Stock.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

House adjourned at a quarter before Four o'clock, to Thursday next, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 9th February, 1904.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 62 has been complied with, viz.:—Donegal Railway Bill; Norwich Water Bill; Southend Water Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bill, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order No. 63 has been complied with, viz.:—Corbridge Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time.

Acton Improvement Bill; Birkdale Improvement Bill; Carlisle Corporation Bill; Corporation of London (Southwark and other Bridges) Bill; Doncaster Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed.

Hampton-in-Arden Gas Bill. Read a second time, and committed.

Kirkby-in-Ashfield Urban District Gas Bill; Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill; Leyton Urban District Council Bill; Littlestone-on-Sea and District Water Bill; London County Council (General Powers) Bill; Lytham Improvement Bill; Radcliffe Tramways and Improvement Bill; Reading Corporation Bill; Selby Urban District Council Bill; Sheffield, Laughton, and Maltby Railway Bill; Skipton Water and Improvement Bill; Soothill Nether Urban District Tramways Bill; Swindon Corporation Bill; Thames River Steamboat Service Bill; Thurles Urban District Council Water Bill; Tottenham Improvement Bill; Wolverhampton Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed.

Dumbarton Tramways Order Confirmation Bill, To confirm a Provisional Order under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating to Dumbarton Tramways, ordered to be brought in by The Lord Advocate and Mr. Solicitor-General for Scotland.

Dumbarton Tramways Order Confirmation Bill. "To confirm a Provisional Order under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating to Dumbarton Tramways," presented accordingly; and ordered to be considered upon Thursday.

Kilmarnock Corporation Order Confirmation Bill. To confirm a Provisional Order under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating ot Kilmarnock Corporation, ordered to be brought in by The Lord Advocate and Mr. Solicitor-General for Scotland.

Kilmarnock Corporation Order Confirmation Bill. "To confirm a Provisional Order under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, relating to Kilmarnock Corporation," presented accordingly, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 17th February, and to be printed. [Bill 43.]

PETITIONS.

LICENCES (RENEWAL).

Petitions against alteration of Law; from Weston-super-Mare; Perth (two); Ryton on Tyne; Craghead; Chester le Street; Blaydon; Springwell; Swalwell; Bristol (two) Wellingborough; Moeladda; Airdrie; Dewsbury; Uppermill; Lanark; Falkirk; Clifton; Woolwich; Lumley; Pendleton; Penygraig; Beddgelert; Capel Uchaf; Llancelhaian; Brynrhos; Bettws Garn; Carmel; Baladeulyn; Bwlan; Canterbury (two); Hylton Colliery; St Ives; Salford; Eccles (two); Acton; Broad Chalke; Rochdale; Woodfalls; Hull; Gillingham; Chipping Sodbury; Urmston; Waterside; Port Isaac; Delabole; Moorside; Harrow Green; Wanstead; Dalkeith; Penygroes; Chelsea; Sowerby Bridge; Luddenden; Penicuik; Liverpool; Abergorlech; Hill Top; West Calder; Loanhead; Lancaster; Stanford le Hope; Barnstaple; Dyffryn; Ore; Nelson; Padiham; Runcorn; East Holywell; Appledore; Pegswood; Talybont; Winsford; Farnworth; Birkenhead; Leith (two); Tow Law; Crook; New Mills; Bucksburn; Coppenhall; Canonbury; Driffield; Stanford le Hope; Nelson (two); to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY BILL.

Petition from Clitheroe, in favour, to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT THREE PER CENT. GUARANTEED STOCK.

Paper [presented 8th February] to be printed. [No. 39.]

SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACTS.

Copy presented, of Rule, dated 30th December, 1903, made by the Lord Chancellor, under Section 29 of The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, as to the taking of recognisances by the Governor of a Prison [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.

Copy presented, of Report by the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, that they are of opinion that the Clyde Valley Electrical Power Order; the Govan Burgh (Electricity) Order; the Lothians Electric Power Order; Part V. of the Kirkcaldy Corporation Order; the Clyde Navigation (Shieldhall Dock) Order; the Clyde Navigation (Works) Order; and the Young and Bell's Patents Order ought to be dealt with by Private Bill and not by Provisional Order [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 40.]

ARMY (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).

Copy presented, of Statement of the Amounts due by the Public to Depositors on 31st March, 1901, and of the Receipts, Interest, and Disbursements during the year ended 31st March, 1902, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 41.]

COMMONS (INCLOSURE AWARDS).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 23rd April, 1903; Sir John Brunner]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

1. Bank of England. Copy of all applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for advances to Government authorised by Parliament, from 5th January, 1903, to 5th January, 1904 [by Act]; to be printed. [No.42.]

2. Inquiry into Charities (County of Wilts.). Further Return, relative thereto [ordered 9th August, 1901; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen]; to be printed. [No. 43.]

LABOURERS' COTTAGES (IRELAND).

Return ordered, "showing the number of Cottages applied for in every Poor Law Union in Ireland under the latest completed scheme in connection with the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, together with the number of applications for extra half acres to cottages already built under the Acts under said scheme; how many of these applications for Cottages and extra half acres were sanctioned; the amount of expenses connected with such scheme; and in what way applied."—(Mr. O'Shaughnessy.)

THIBET (TRADE STATISTICS).

Address for "Return of Statistics relating to trade with Thibet since the date of the signing of the Convention of 1890, giving particulars regarding the quantity, classification, and value of the annual exports from British India to Thibet of (a) non-Indian merchandise; (b) of Indian merchandise; and (c) of exports from Thibet to British India."—(Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree.)

COAL EXPORTS, ETC.

Return ordered, "giving, for the year 1903, the export of Coal from each port in the United Kingdom to each Country Abroad, together with summary Statements showing the export of Coal in every period of three months from the principal districts of the United Kingdom to the principal groups of Foreign Countries; and also showing the quantity of Coal shipped at each Port in the United Kingdom for ships' use on Foreign voyages during the like periods (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 111, of Session 1903)."—(Mr. D. A. Thomas.)

SUNDERLAND COUNTY BOROUGH (INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES).

Return ordered, "comprising (1) the Reports made to the Charity Commissioners, in the result of an Inquiry held in the county borough of Sunderland into endowments, subject to the provisions of the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1894, and appropriated in whole or in part for the benefit of that county borough, or of any part thereof, together with the Reports on those endowments of the Commissioners for inquiring concerning Charities, 1818 to 1837; (2) a Digest showing whether any, and, if any, what such endowments are recorded in the books of the Charity Commissioners in the county borough; and (3) an Index, alphabetically arranged, of names and places mentioned in the Report."—(Mr. Griffith-Boscawen.)

GATESHEAD COUNTY BOROUGH (INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES).

Return ordered, "comprising (1) the Reports made to the Charity Commissioners, in the result of an Inquiry held in the county borough of Gateshead into endowments, subject to the provisions of the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1894, and appropriated in whole or in part for the benefit of that county borough, or of any part thereof, together with the Reports on those endowments of the Commissioners for inquiring concerning Charities, 1818 to 1837; and (2) a Digest showing whether any, and, if any, what such endowments are recorded in the books of the Charity Commissioners in the county borough; and (3) an Index alphabetically arranged of names and places mentioned in the Report."—(Mr. Griffith-Boscawen.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Factories in London.

Sir THOMAS DEWAR (Tower Hamlets, St. George's): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will grant a Return showing the number of factories in each of the four London districts in the years 1860, 1870, 1880, 1890, and 1900, and indicating for each year the nature of the industries in each district.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) I am afraid the materials for such a Return are not in the possession of the Factory Department of the Home Office. As the hon. Member is aware, the London Inspection Districts include not only London but a very large area outside (at the present time they include Essex, Surrey, Sussex, Middlesex, Hertfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, and Oxfordshire); and as the boundaries of the districts have been much altered from time to time any figures that could be given would be of little value for comparative purposes. I shall be happy to refer the hon. Member, if he desires it, to such information as has been published from time to time in Parliamentary Returns upon the subject.

Lady Factory Inspector for the Potteries.

Sir CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he can inform the House at what date it is his intention to establish in the Potteries one of His Majesty's Inspectors of Factories from the women's department, in pursuance of the strong recommendation made by the umpire at the arbitration last year.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) I have already taken the steps best calculated, in my opinion, to meet the demands of this case. As I informed the right hon. Baronet last year,† I arranged for special attention to be paid to the Potteries by the lady inspectors; and now by my directions one of them has been selected and given instructions to make the Potteries the centre of her duties for some time, and she is at present stationed there.

Unexpended Balances.

Mr. J. F. HOPE (Sheffield, Brightside): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he can state the total amounts in each of the last ten years of the unexpended balances of Votes surrendered into the Exchequer by the various Departments of Government.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) Unexpended Balances of Votes surrendered to the Exchequer on account of the year: 1893–4, £566,374 3s. 0d.; 1894–5, £1,082,179 9s. 1d.; 1895–6, £808,045 3s. 2d.; 1896–7, £764,607 17s. 8d.; 1897–8, £2,120,159 9s. 3d.; 1898–9 £735,473 4s. 10d.; 1899–1900, £1,942,402 14s. 10d.; 1900–1901,

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxvii, 997.

£1,427,905 7s. 11d.; 1901–2, £827,630 4s. 4d.; 1902–3, £1,338,342 5s. 8d.

Operations of Irish Land Act, 1903.

MR. P. A. McHUGH (Leitrim, N.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state, in terms of years purchase, the price agreed upon by the 3,070 occupiers who have arranged to purchase their holdings under the Irish Land Purchase Act of 1903.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Periodical Reports of the proceedings of the Estates Commissioners will be laid before Parliament in pursuance of Section 23 (14) of the Act of 1903. An examination of the 3,070 agreements already lodged with a view to the tabulation of particulars respecting the terms of purchase in each case would entail an immense amount of labour on the staff of the Commissioners at a time when they are burdened with many onerous duties, and I would deprecate the practice of calling for voluminous interim Returns within so short a period of the date at which the Act came into operation.

Division of Grazing Farm at Island, County Mayo.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL (Mayo, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether negotiations have been entered into at any time with a landlord of a large grazing farm at Island, near Ballyhaunis, county Mayo, with a view to having it divided in such a way as to enlarge the holdings of those tenants whose holdings adjoin it; and, if so, whether there is any possibility of having a sale effected in the near future.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Negotiations were contemplated by the Congested Districts Board three years ago for the purchase of the Knox Estate, near Ballyhaunis, but they were not proceeded with. I am informed that an application has been received by the Estates Commissioners from Mr. C. E. Crean in respect to a property in the same neighbourhood. The Commissioners will investigate the circumstances with a view to facilitate, if possible, the enlargement of holdings on the property. I am unable to say, at short notice and without further inquiry, whether this property is identical with that to which the Question has reference.

Right of Way on Grazing Farm at Island, County Mayo.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether in view of the fact that the tenants on a small property known as Island, near Ballyhaunis, county Mayo, have been for many years using a passage across a grazing farm in that townland for the purpose of carrying home fuel, that they have been prevented for the past two years by the grazier who now holds it, who was assisted by the constabulary in preventing the people from using this passage, and that there is a dispute about the pathway in question, he will give instructions to the police not to further interfere until the case is disposed of by a Court of law.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The police were not present on the occasions mentioned for the purpose suggested in the Question, but solely for the prevention of a breach of the public peace. This is a duty which it is incumbent upon them to discharge irrespectively of the existence of a dispute between the parties in respect of an alleged right of way.

Irish Police on Duty at Railway Station

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the regulations issued to the police prohibiting them from attending railway stations in Ireland have been observed by the inspectors in charge of that force; and, if not, whether he will cause an inquiry to be made into their action, with a view to having the men who discharge no other than railway station duty put to some other work.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The regulations prohibit the attendance of the police at railway stations unless they are specially ordered to be present by reason of the importance of the station, or some emergency necessitating their attendance. For these reasons it would not be possible to give the Return of which notice stands in the name of the hon. Member on to-day's Paper. I am inquiring whether the regulations in this respect have been uniformly observed.

The Return referred to is as follows:—

Return showing the names of railway stations in Ireland that are considered of sufficient importance to necessitate the presence of policemen on duty in or near them; the names of stations in Ireland where arrests were made since the 27th April, 1903; and the names of stations where the station-master was forced to call in the aid of the police to prevent breaches of the peace or capture criminals.

Censorship of Private Correspondence in the Transvaal.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether any system of censorship is now being applied in the Transvaal to private letters or telegrams within that district, or as regards the mails and telegraphic service to or from the territory and other parts of South Africa or elsewhere; and, if so, under what authority it is exercised, and who is the official responsible for such censorship.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) No system of censorship exists in the Transvaal. The hon. Member refers possibly to the legislation which formed the subject of a reply by my predecessor to a Question on 29th April last†, and I am making inquiry of the Governor with regard to the proposed amendment of the Ordinance.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

De Beers Mines, Limited.

MR. WHITLEY (Halifax): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, out of the money voted for war compensation, the sum of £30,000 has been paid to De Beers Diamond Mines, Limited.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. BROMLEY DAVENPORT, Cheshire, Macclesfield): The sum in question was paid out of sums voted in Army Estimates for 1902–3, in return for services rendered and actual expenditure incurred, and not as war compensation.

MR. WHITLEY: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that the sum appears in the accounts of the company as received for war compensation.

*MR. BROMLEY DAVENPORT: That would be incorrect. It was for services rendered, and was voted by Parliament.

MR. WHITLEY asked what was the nature of the services.

[No answer was returned.]

Army Contracts in Ireland.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that last year it was so arranged that Dublin tailors had not an opportunity of tendering for the supply of uniforms for officers entering the service; and that certain English firms were named and price lists sent out; and whether this arrangement will be altered so as to allow Irish firms the opportunity of tendering for supplies.

*MR. BROMLEY DAVENPORT: Under existing arrangements Irish firms have precisely the same opportunities as those of England, Scotland, and Wales, in submitting price lists for the supply of outfits to officers joining the service. A considerable number of Irish firms have availed themselves of the opportunity and their lists have been duly circulated. A public intimation was also made that any firm wishing at any time to be added to the list should apply for this permission.

MR. NANNETTI (Dublin, College Green): Is it not the fact that commanding officers in Ireland are recommending certain English firms.

*MR. BROMLEY DAVENPORT: The Department has no power to influence commanding officers in regard to the advice they give to their officers. They can only supply a list of firms, and in that they include Irish firms.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxi., 786.

MR. NANNETTI: But is my statement true. Do the officers commanding the Connaught Rangers and the Engineers recommend English firms?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

Navy Contracts.

Sir JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether he will explain the reason for the discontinuance of the practice of posting the names of successful tenderers to the Department.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): The posting of the names of successful tenderers to the Admiralty led to inconvenience, and is now unnecessary, as all firms who may have tendered are informed whether their offers have been accepted or declined.

H.M.S "Centurion"—Navy Gun Sights.

MR. REGINALD LUCAS (Portsmouth): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether H.M.S. "Centurion" was recently commissioned with some of her guns wrongly sighted; and, if so, what steps have been taken to remedy the defects.

MR. PRETYMAN: All the "Centurion's" guns have correct sights. Some difficulty was experienced in fitting the old pattern mountings of the 10-inch guns with duplicate sights of a new design; it is hoped to rectify this shortly. The original sights are still fitted to the guns and are quite accurate.

MR. REGINALD LUCAS: As this matter is of considerable importance, I should like to ask what prospect there is of the sights being adequately corrected within a short time?

MR. PRETYMAN: I cannot say exactly how long it will take. It is a scientific question, but, if the hon. Gentleman will give me notice, I will answer the Question.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Is the country to understand that this vessel is going to sea with incorrect sights?

MR. PRETYMAN: No, Sir; the original sights are correct, and are still fitted to the guns. A new pattern sight is fitted in duplicate which is not absolutely correct.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Then are we to understand that the sights that are to be used are incorrect, and that the correct sights are not to be used?

No answer was returned.

Indian Railway Contracts for Germany.

SIR THOMAS DEWAR (Tower Hamlets, St. George's): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he will explain why an order for 800 pairs of wheels and axles for the Indian State Railways was recently given to German makers; will he state the value of the order thus secured by Germany, and what number of British firms competed for the contract; is he aware that the last locomotives made in Germany for service on the Indian Railways were not favourably reported on by the inspectors; and, if so, can he say whether any action has been taken for the purpose of excluding the contractors from future tenders.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): The order to which the hon. Member refers was given to a German firm because their tender was considerably lower than that of any English firm, and was, in the opinion of my advisers, very satisfactory in other respects. It would be contrary to the established practice to divulge the price at which the German firm or any other firm tendered. I am not aware that an unfavourable report on the last locomotives made in Germany for Indian Railways has been received; but I may add that the order in question was given by an Indian Railway Company and not by me or by my predecessor in office.

SIR CHARLES McLAREN (Leicestershire, Bosworth): Are the specifications issued to foreign firms the same as those issued to British firms.

MR. BRODRICK: Yes, precisely the same.

SIR THOMAS WRIGHTSON (St. Pancras, E.): Are the workmen paid the same rate of wages?

MR. BRODRICK: That I cannot say.

MR. MACONOCHIE (Aberdeenshire, E.): Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the officials of State railways in Germany are prohibited buying material in England?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

Convict Labour for Johannesburg Mines.

MR. WHITLEY: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he has any official information that on 19th November last it was stated to the Chamber of Mines in Johannesburg that the Transvaal Government had offered a thousand native convicts for the mines; if so, was the offer accepted, and what is the total number of convicts so employed.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): I have received no official information on the subject.

MR. WHITLEY: Will the right hon. Gentleman make inquires in South Africa? I can give him information.

MR. LYTTELTON: Yes, Sir.

Australian Immigration Act.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, seeing that by the Australian Immigration Act of 1901, workmen from the United Kingdom proceeding to Australia under a contract to perform manual labour are liable, on landing, to be imprisoned for six months and afterwards deported, he will state whether any correspondence on the subject took place between the Imperial Government and the Governor General of Australia or the Government of the Commonwealth; and, if so, whether he will lay it upon the Table of the House.

*MR. LYTTELTON: No, Sir. No correspondence has passed with the Commonwealth Government in regard to the provision referred to in the Australian Immigration Act.

Coal Exports.

MR. D. A. THOMAS (Merthyr Tydvil): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for the latest period conveniently available the quantities of coal exported at declared values of 5s. and not exceeding 6s., at 6s. and not exceeding 7s., and at 7s. and not exceeding 8s. per ton respectively; and if he has any official information explaining the smaller quantities shipped at values between 6s. and 7s.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): I shall be glad to give the information which the hon. Member asks for. But I am told it will take some time to prepare the figures, and I therefore hope the hon. Member will allow me to communicate with him again as soon as I am in full possession of the facts.

Board of Trade Journal.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade in what proportions the weekly Board of Trade Journal circulates in the United Kingdom, Germany, and other foreign countries respectively.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): Inquiries have been made, but it is not possible to supply the information asked for.

Vehicular Accidents in London.

SIR THOMAS DEWAR: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of accidents caused by covered vehicles in the streets of the Metropolis during the year 1903 which have resulted in personal injuries; and will he say how many of such accidents have proved fatal.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): There were, during 1903, 1,425 accidents caused by covered vans in the streets of the Metropolis which resulted in personal injury. Of these accidents twenty-nine proved fatal.

Pottery Trade Rules.

SIR CHARLES McLAREN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the rules relating to the use of lead glazing in heavy pottery have been definitely settled by him, or whether opportunity will be given for the expression of the views of the men and masters engaged in the sanitary ware industry, so that he may consider the effect of these regulations on the foreign export trade in these goods.

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: I have some doubt as to the classes of earthenware to which the hon. Baronet is referring. If he means those for which rules were recently submitted to arbitration, the rules are settled by award on the Arbitration after full opportunity for a hearing has been given to the masters and men of all the firms affected by the rules who desire it. As regards other branches of the earthenware trade, any representations which may be made to me shall be carefully considered.

Collections for the Relief of the Working Classes.

MR. D. A. THOMAS: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, having regard to the fact that the letter of the Home Secretary to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated 11th May, 1842, provided that the money collected in the several parishes at the instance of the clergy for the relief of the working classes in England and Scotland should be paid into the hands of, and be accounted for by, the Bank of England, he will make further inquiry to ascertain how the balance of £12,552 10s. 3d. remaining in June, 1844, when the account was closed, came to be reduced to £4,965 7s. 10d. in 1874; and what has become of this latter sum.

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: The hon. Member put a series of Questions to me last year on this subject, and after making all the inquiries I could without obtaining the information necessary for an answer in every detail, I replied to a Question similar to the present one† that I had no power to pursue the matter further. I can only repeat that reply.

Pay of Rural Postmen in Devonshire.

MR. SOARES (Devonshire, Barnstaple): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General, whether he is aware there are established rural postmen in North Devon who have served their time in the Army and are now receiving wages of 16s. per week, whilst the wages paid to police constables of the third class in the same district amounts to 21s. per week; and, if so, whether, in view of the effect upon recruiting for the Army, he will state what steps he proposes to take in the matter.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord STANLEY, Lancashire, Westhoughton): Yes. I am aware that there are established rural postmen who have served their time in the Army and are now receiving wages of 16s. a week. I am naturally averse to doing anything which might be considered either unfair to ex-soldiers—or detrimental to recruiting —but as the wages of the established postmen generally and of certain other classes of Post Office employees are now being examined by a Committee appointed by my predecessor, I must defer the consideration of any question affecting the rate of pay of these classes until I have received the Report of the Committee.

Postmen's Compassionate Gratuities.

MR. SOARES: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether it is proposed to make any provision in this year's Estimates for grants of compassionate gratuities to unestablished postmen who have been discharged through ill-health; and, if so, of what nature.

LORD STANLEY: It is proposed to make provision in the Estimates for 1904–5 for the grant of small compassionate gratuities, at the discretion of the Postmaster-General, to unestablished officers of the Post Office who retire through ill-health or age with not less than fifteen years service who are in need of assistance, and who are not eligible for any award under the Superannuation Acts. If Parliament sanctions the proposed provision, I shall be enabled to meet numerous cases of hardship for which at present no remedy is available. But in order to avoid disappointment, I must add that I fear it will not be possible to apply the grant to cases of retirement before the 31st March next.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxvii., 1158.

Underground Telegraphic Cables.

Sir JOHN LENG: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General if he will state what progress has been made with the underground telegraphic cables to the North of England and Scotland; and when it is expected they will reach Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dundee, and Aberdeen.

Lord STANLEY: The line of pipes for the underground cable now runs continuously from London to Carlisle, and a section of nineteen miles has also been laid over the Beattock incline in Scotland. By the end of the financial year a double line of pipes will also have been laid from Manchester to Leeds; the permanent cable will be ready for use as far as Warrington, and it may have been possible to draw in temporary cables between Manchester and Leeds. I cannot at present state when the underground cables will reach the places named, but I shall endeavour to expedite their construction.

Cork Post Office.

Mr. J. F. X. O'BRIEN (Cork): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he will state what steps, if any, have been taken to improve the heating of the Cork Telegraphic Office since two complaints were made by the staff in the form of petitions to the postmaster.

Lord STANLEY: On receipt of the first petition, steps were at once taken to improve matters, but these unfortunately proved inadequate. A plan has now been suggested to the Board of Public Works for placing radiators in the Instrument Rooms. This, it is hoped, will afford the desired improvement.

Glencar Road Dispute.

Mr. BOLAND (Kerry, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in view of the fact that the Congested Districts Board sanctioned a grant of £50 towards constructing a road at Glencar, county Kerry, on condition that it was to be maintained by the county council, and that the Local Government Board has since declared it to be illegal to maintain this road at the expense of the ratepayers, he will state what steps he proposes to take to prevent this road returning to its original state, and the consequent loss of public money.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Wyndham, Dover): The auditor disallowed payment of this expenditure on the ground that the road was not a public road within the meaning of the statute. The Local Government Board subsequently remitted the surcharge, on appeal. In order to avoid a similar disallowance hereafter the county council should reconstruct the road so as to bring it within the provisions of Section 55 of the 6 & 7 Will. IV. cap. 116.

Irish Drainage Loans.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the conditions under which tenant purchasers labour in the matter of drainage charges on estates now being offered for sale; and whether, in his amending Bill, he can hold out any hope of so lengthening the period of repayment of these drainage loans as to reduce the present drainage tax within more moderate limits.

Mr. WYNDHAM: Loans for drainage works are authorised by special Acts, and the question of an extension of the period within which such loans are repayable could only be considered in connection with legislation designed to amend these Acts.

Irish Drainage Boards.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether any power exists for inquiry into the working and management of drainage boards in Ireland; to what department of State complaints of overcharges and extravagance in expenditure should be directed; and will he indicate to whom such complaints should in the first instance be addressed.

MR. WYNDHAM: In case of neglect to maintain the drainage the Board of Works may intervene either of their own motion or on the complaint of any person aggrieved. Such a complaint should be addressed to the Secretary, Board of Works. If wrongful administration of funds is alleged, an action would lie against the members of the drainage board; or the electors might turn them out at the next election.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: The complaint is against the officials of extravagance in management.

MR. WYNDHAM: Then turn out the board.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: To whom can we apply for redress? I will put down another Question.

King-Harman Estate.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state if the sale of the King-Harman Estate at Kenagh, county Longford, has been approved by the Estate Commissioners; whether he is aware that Mr. Robert Armstrong, of Kenagh, formerly tenant of Creagh on the estate, has claimed the right to purchase his former holding on the estate; and will he direct the Estate Commissioners to take Mr. Armstrong's case into their consideration in connection with the sale of this property.

MR. WYNDHAM: The proceedings in connection with the sale of this estate to the Estates Commissioners have not yet been concluded. The replies to the remainder of the Question are in the affirmative.

Chinese Labour in the Transvaal.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in view of the undertaking given by the Secretary of State for the Colonies that no final sanction shall be given to the proposed importation of Chinese labour into the Transvaal until the matter has been fully discussed in this House, he can state how soon after the conclusion of the debate on the Address opportunities for discussion will be given.

SIR CHARLES McLAREN: At the same time may I ask the First Lord of the Treasury when an opportunity will be given to the House of expressing an opinion on Chinese labour in the Transvaal Colony.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): Before the right hon. Gentleman answers, I wish to inquire whether the telegram which appears in The Times of to-day, dated Pretoria, "In consequence of communications received from the Home Government, the Legislative Council have decided to postpone taking any steps in regard to the importation of native labour," is correct.

*MR. LYTTELTON: No, Sir. So far as I know, that postponement must be due to something I am not acquainted with. My belief is that the Ordinance will pass its Third Reading to-day.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): I have to ask when the evidence taken before the Labour Commission will be in the hands of Members. Is it accessible, for there appears to be only one copy? Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that there is no official copy of the Ordinance to which the House is asked to give approval? The Paper has been printed, but it is not in the hands of Members yet, which indicates the enormous number of alterations made upon it since it was first introduced. The right hon. Gentleman will no doubt give effect to this consideration if he is going to fix a day for the discussion.

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: I think that the Colonial Secretary had better answer the detailed Question of the right hon. Gentleman.

*MR. LYTTELTON: The evidence has been printed, and four copies of it are in the library of the House of Commons and two copies in the House of Lords. The Ordinance as amended was in the Bluebook, but the Amendments were not actually printed in the same document as the original Ordinance, but we have since then done that. The Ordinance, therefore, now stands, and was in the hands of Members yesterday in its final shape.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: In this Paper the last telegram is February 6, from Lord Milner to the right hon. Gentleman, enclosing an innumerable quantity of Amendments which cannot possibly be embodied in any document in the hands of Members.

*MR. LYTTELTON: The right hon. Gentleman says so, but my information is to the contrary.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: This document has only now become available to hon. Members in the Vote Office, and it has not yet been circulated. It contains no fewer than five pages of new Amendments sent by Lord Milner, dated 6th February, and the copy of the Ordinance is not official, for it is headed "reconstructed according to the telegrams." Is the House to understand that this is really a fulfilment of the pledge given by the right hon. Gentleman last week that hon. Members should have a full and official copy of the Ordinance as passed by the Transvaal Legislative Council?

SIR ROBERT REID (Dumfries Burghs): Is the right hon. Gentleman aware of the size and character of the documents in the library, and does he think hon. Members can fairly weigh the evidence contained in them for the purposes of debate in the next two or three days?

*MR. LYTTELTON: The debate is not anticipated until next week. The volume, I admit, is bulky, but the hon. and learned Member has frequently had to deal with more bulky documents in a very much shorter time.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): We are not all lawyers.

*MR. LYTTELTON: I think that the opportunity of dealing with this volume with reasonable brevity will be easy for hon. Members opposite, even if they do not belong to the legal profession. There are two Reports of the Commission, the minority and majority; and practically all the points at issue which are of importance are carefully grouped, and reference is made to the evidence. With the great bulk of the evidence the hon. and learned Gentleman need have no dealings.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: How long will it take hon. Members, four at a time, to have an opportunity of considering this document?

*MR. AKERS DOUGLAS: I can make no promise of any other day for the discussion than the opportunity which may be afforded next week.

MAJOR SEELY: May I ask whether the Government propose to give their final sanction to the Ordinance immediately after the discussion on the Address?

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL: The right hon. Gentleman speaks of the opportunity which may be afforded next week. May we assume that an opportunity will be given on the Address next week to discuss the question?

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: We should very much prefer to have a clean and separate opportunity. That is what we asked for before.

*MR. LYTTELTON: I explained fully to the House three or four days ago that it was in deference to a letter written by the Leader of the Opposition that the unusual course was taken to introduce a suspensory clause in the Ordinance which would have the effect of preventing its coming into operation until the House had an opportunity of discussing the matter. I pointed out the opportunity which would be given to hon. Members to raise whatever Amendments they pleased on the Address; and on behalf of the Government it is not proposed to extend that undertaking any further.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: We never accepted that. The right hon. Gentleman is giving an opportunity which in effect is nothing given by him, because it is something we have in our own hands.

Royal Commission on Trade Disputes.

Mr. HERBERT SAMUEL: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury how many sittings the Royal Commission on the Law affecting Trade Disputes has held since its appointment; and, when the Report of the Commission is likely to be presented.

*Mr. AKERS DOUGLAS: The Commission has, so far, held only private sittings, but it will meet very shortly to take evidence. It is impossible to say when the Report will be presented.

NEW MEMBERS SWORN.

The honourable Alban George Henry Gibbs for City of London.

Joseph Dobbie, esquire, Ayr District of Burghs.

NEW BILLS.

SMALL DWELLINGS (ACQUISITION) BILL.

"To amend the provisions of the Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899," presented by Sir Thomas Wrightson; supported by Mr. Claude Hay, Mr. Graham, Mr. Peel, Sir Alfred Hickman, Captain Jessel, Mr. Moon, Mr. Pike Pease, Mr. Collings, and Mr. Griffith-Boscawen; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 44.]

HIGHWAYS BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Highways," presented by Mr. Henry Hobhouse; supported by Sir John Dorington, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Bill, Mr. Heywood Johnstone, and Mr. Herbert Lewis; to be read a second time upon Monday, 29th February, and to be printed. [Bill 45.]

ROMAN CATHOLIC DISABILITIES REMOVAL BILL.

"To abolish Disabilities still affecting Roman Catholics in the United Kingdom," presented by Mr. M'Kean; supported by Mr. Patrick O'Brien, Mr. Dillon, Captain Donelan, Lord Edmund Talbot, Mr. William Redmond, Mr. Joseph Devlin, Mr. James Hope, and Mr. Clancy; to be read a second time upon Friday, 22nd April, and to be printed. [Bill 46.]

WAGES BOARDS BILL.

"To provide for the establishment of Wages Boards," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, Mr. McKenna, Mr. Tennant, and Mr. Trevelyan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 25th March, and to be printed. [Bill 47.]

WILD BIRDS PROTECTION ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Wild Birds Protection Acts," presented by Mr. Sydney Buxton; supported by Sir John Stirling-Maxwell, Sir Robert Reid, Colonel Lockwood, and Sir Edward Grey; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 48.]

JURY ACTS (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Jury Acts in Ireland," presented by Mr. John Campbell; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. MacNeill, Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 22nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 49.]

CONTEMPT OF COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law of Contempt of Court in Ireland," presented by Mr. Sheehy; supported by Mr. Clancy and Mr. Patrick Aloysius M'Hugh; to be read a second time upon Friday, 29th April, and to be printed. [Bill 50.]

IRISH LIGHTS BOARD BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the Irish Lights Board," presented by Captain Donelan; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. Field, Mr. Flynn, Mr. Doogan, Mr. James O'Connor, and Mr. Nannetti; to be read a second time upon Friday, 6th May, and to be printed. [Bill 51.]

CONSPIRACY (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law of Conspiracy in Ireland," presented by Mr. Doogan; supported by Captain Donelan, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell, Mr. Condon, Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh, Mr. Kilbride, and Mr. J. P. Farrell; to be read a second time upon Friday, 11th March, and to be printed. [Bill 52.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (KING'S SPEECH, MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Ordered, "That the proceedings on the Address in Answer to His Majesty's Speech shall, until concluded, have precedence of all other Orders of the Day and of Notices of Motion at all Sittings for which they are set down."—(Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

[SIXTH DAY.]

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [8th February] to Main Question [2nd February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,—

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Hardy.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But it is our duty, however, humbly to represent to Your Majesty that our effective deliberation on the financial service of the year is impaired by conflicting declarations from Your Majesty's Ministers. We respectfully submit to Your Majesty the judgment of this House that the removal of protective duties has for more than half a century actively conduced to the vast extension of the trade and commerce of the realm and to the welfare of its population; and this House believes that, while the needs of social improvement are still manifold and urgent, any return to protective duties, more particularly when imposed on the food of the people, would be deeply injurious to our national strength, contentment, and well-being."—(Mr. John Morley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*MR. PIKE PEASE (Darlington): Mr. Speaker, as regards the Amendment moved by the right hon. Gentleman opposite, in my humble opinion it is necessary to ask ourselves two questions —whether it will be absolutely necessary in this country to continue a policy absolutely different to every country on earth without exception, and what our answer should be to the colonies. I also ask hon. Members of this House whether they consider it possible that it might be in the interests of this country to put a small duty on manufactured goods if it seemed certain that there would be a transference of a large amount of trade from a foreign country to our own. I should just like to mention a point I referred to last night; it was in reference to a question of a very large steel order, an order for steel approximating £100,000. If a bounty fed country quoted £99,000, and an ironmaster in this country, whose works were not working full time, who owns limestone quarries, ironstone mines, blast-furnaces and steel rolling mills quoted £100,000, does it not seem arguably reasonable that it would be wise for us to put 2 per cent. duty on the foreign material and transfer the order to this country? It is not only a question of the loss of that £1,000 to the individual, but it means labour to the extent of between £60,000 and £70,000 remaining in this country, and also means rates to be paid on that order instead of not being paid at all. We have received during the last two or three months in this country a very great array of figures, and last night I mentioned one or two. They were in reference to the income-tax, and I see in the report on the few remarks that I made in The Times there is a mistake in reference to these figures. I said that the hon. and learned Member opposite had made reference to the fact that we had increased the amount obtained from income-tax enormously during the last few years, and I think that is something which may be considered gratifying. At the same time the population of this country has increased about 1 per cent. per annum, or 10 per cent. for the last ten years. The income-tax returns showed an increase of about the same. At the same time during the last ten years, the income-tax returns of Germany show an increase of 25 per cent. The great question, however, is the future. Do Members of this House believe we have a serious aspect to look to in the future; are not all our difficulties with regard to foreign competition more likely to be increased in the future than decreased? It has been said many times that we are getting over the difficulties by changing our industries. I pointed out last night the very great difficulties there are with regard to changing industries. I have had the opportunity of mixing with a very large number of business men, and, before I came into this House, I had the opportunity of managing for many years blast furnace works of considerable size; and I can assure this House that the money is practically lost if an industry stops. Of course, hon. Gentlemen opposite say and know there is considerable amount of difference of opinion on this side of the House. It would be a pity if we had lazy uniformity of political opinion, but I think the right hon. Gentleman who leads on the opposite side of the House knows they have not that unanimity on that side.

It was said by my right hon. friend, who made a great speech last night, that protection was for the benefit of the producer at the expense of the consumer. In my opinion, there never was a more false statement made. An hon. Gentleman below me says it was the Government's opinion. I said a moment ago that we did not agree entirely on this side of the House, and I think the hon. Gentleman who mentioned this fact does not agree with his friends on a great many other matters. In regard to the question of benefiting the producer, the leading ironmaster in the North of England, Mr. Hugh Bell, who has written many letters to The Times, does not for a moment admit that the benefit will go to the producer. He has often said—I know him personally very well, and respect him—that protection would ruin the iron trade altogether. Therefore, I think the hon. Gentleman below me will agree with me when I say that there is a difference of opinion among many Members who do not agree with me. Lord Rosebery said the other day that protection meant no improvement of methods in this country, but I think his Lordship cannot have taken the trouble to go to the United States or Germany. The right hon. Gentleman opposite who spoke last night, spoke in regard to technical education, and I will admit that Germany is far ahead of us in regard to technique; but, at the same time, I think he will also admit that Germany is far ahead of us in regard to methods; and it is a very simple reason why. The reason is that Germany protects her industries. A great deal has been said during the last few months with regard to dumping. I say dumping has discouraged enterprise in this country. If two men go into partnership, and cannot see a market for the future, they are not likely to spend money in a large way on plant. If they spend a great deal of money over their plant, and put up the best inventions they can find, is it not natural they should wish some security for their market? But if some foreign countries can send goods into their market at a very much lower than cost price, there is not much encouragement for enterprise. I believe the enterprise of individuals—not municipal enterprise—is dying. The hon. Gentleman the Member for Gateshead spoke with regard to the dumping of coal, at Gateshead election, and, asked if he were in favour of it, said yes, because it was in favour of the consumer. I think he would find no other miner in favour of the dumping of coal. Some people do not quite realise the importance of industries of this country to the coal industry. I believe it is true that one small blast furnace uses as much coal as a town of 50,000 inhabitants for household purposes.

Now I should like to say one word with regard to the question of wages. It has been said truly that the average wage of Germany is less than in England, and many men work longer hours, that also is true. But I cannot see that it can be argued that if you give an impetus to industries in this country that wages would fall. It is absolutely certain that they would rise; and it is perfectly certain that some of these industries which are at the present moment receding, would benefit. It is simply a question of supply and demand. It was said two years ago that one-third of the population was on the point of hunger. If that statement is true, anyone who has watched the terrible state of things in many parts of England, and especially in London, will believe me when I say it would not be wonderful at the present time if one-half were on the verge of hunger. We had yesterday a statement with regard to retaliation, and I for one, who am a follower of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, would never be satisfied with a statement such as we had yesterday. It may be there are Members on this side of the House who are satisfied with retaliation as we understand it; but 90 per cent. of the commercial classes of this country are in favour of some fiscal reform of some kind; they are not entirely satisfied with our fiscal system as it is to-day. Among the Conservative and Unionist Party in this country I believe that five out of six are in favour of the proposals of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. I do not mean that they are necessarily agreed with every point. I mean that they are anxious that some arrangement should be come to with our colonies. I do not personally believe that the British star is setting, and I do not believe we are descending into a fifth-rate Power, or that all industries are decaying, knowing as I do the enormous volume of our trade. I believe also it is quite impossible that Australia would leave us. Her monetary obligations are so great that it would be impossible for her to leave us if she wished. And at the present time in Australia there is a firm wish to bind us closer together. These views are held by a very large number of Liberals in this country. Lord Rosebery, in a speech at Leeds, said that, on the grounds of commercial interests alone, the question was worthy of consideration by our great commercial community. I do not think anyone can argue against that. I stated last night that the amount of money which came in from the Colonies during the last thirty years and from the Transvaal was between £1,000,000,000 and £1,500,000,000; and I think there are a great many people who do not realise the great possibilities of the Transvaal. A preference of 50 per cent. might give an enormous impetus to hundreds of trades in this country. It is said "What will you get in return?" and I must admit that is a difficult question; but anyone who knows the feeling of the colonies, in Cape Colony, Natal, and the Transvaal, knows this: they will not demand a "quid pro quo.

I should just like to say a word or two with regard to the corn tax. I was one who was always opposed to the corn tax. I voted for it because it was a war tax, but when the war was over I refused to vote for it. I went to the then Chancellor of the Exchequer and told him how pleased I was he was going to take it off. But at the present moment I think the question has changed altogether; and I think it is for the interests of this country for us to put a duty of 2s. on foreign corn coming into this country. I think I can give this House a remarkable fact with reference to this. The average taxation and rates on land in this country which grow a quarter of wheat is practically 2s.; and, therefore, at the present time we are giving America an advantage of 2s. a quarter on all corn that comes into this country againt the home producer. Now, in reference to that, of course it will be said that we propose giving a great benefit to Canada, and that is, I believe, absolutely true; and I believe it is in the interests of the country we should do so. I have had a conversation with a Canadian of some experience during the last two days, and I believe honestly there is no question this development will not take place in Canada unless some arrangement of this kind is made; and anyone who listened to the speech the Prime Minister made to the deputation on the 16th May last, will realise what an important thing it is for us to develop Canada, if we can. We know the large area of land there is that could grow corn, and I believe hon. Members opposite who are keen on keeping up the Sinking Fund, must agree that no better plan could be arranged for carrying out such process. Canada has taken an interest in this question for a very long time. I remember when I first had the honour of being elected to this House, I put these proposals of Mr. Chamberlain in my election address; and I received a message of more or less congratulation from a Canadian in regard to that matter, showing how keen Canadians were at that time in reference to it. [An HON. MEMBER laughed.] The hon. Member laughs in regard to that, but I think it rather remarkable that such an interest should be taken in the election of an insignificant Member, and that the trouble should be taken in Canada to read his address. Mr. Gladstone said a long time ago that this question of the corn tax and of the price of bread was not so important as the question of having the money to buy the bread. I believe there is the chance of a very great development in Canada, Australia, and in the Transvaal.

There was one question, however, dealt with very ably last night, and that was the question of Canadian iron. It is a very difficult question. I have watched it for years, and I know, by the amount of bounty, that it will become a very much more serious question in the future. I cannot see that these proposals will make the matter any worse, and it is possible some arrangement may be come to. At the present time the amount of bounty paid to the Canadian producer allows him to send iron into this country at a ridiculously low price, and, if transit were simpler, it could be sent at a price no producer in this country could possibly compete with. The other difficulty is the question of partly manufactured goods. This is a question very difficult to get over, but it is got over by every country in the world except ourselves. It is often said we are going back to protection, to large duties on corn; but we can only go back, I believe, by the will of the people; and I should be surprised to see within the next ten years a duty on corn beyond 2s. per quarter. I think people very rarely realise what a small amount ten per cent. is; if it were altogether paid by the consumer an article, instead of costing say 5s., would cost 5s. 6d.; but I do not think that of necessity we should pay the whole tax. The right hon. Gentleman opposite, speaking of the coal tax some months ago, said the incidence of the coal tax fell upon the miner; but I think in reference to this question he has stated many times that the tax entirely falls on the consumer. These two statements do not seem exactly parallel. The right hon. Gentleman, in moving his Amendment, referred to Mr Cobden. Many of us who have studied, to a certain extent, Mr. Cobden, naturally admire him; but whether hon. Members opposite believe that he was altogether right or not, there is not one man in this country follows him in one point and that is the question of getting rid of our colonies. I am sure there is not a man in the House who would like to get rid of our colonies. I may quote the Psalmist who said "Blessed is the man who has his quiver full of them, for in time of trouble they will speak with the enemy in th gate." I believe that practically all th Members on this side of the House realis the necessity for some alteration in our fiscal system. [MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight): No, no.] I can only say the gallant Member cannot have had anything to do with business during the whole course of his career. Whether we shall be successful in regard to the policy I have attempted to advocate to-day I know not. It depends a great deal on the life of one man. I believe the time will come when we shall see some arrangement made with our colonies, and I believe they will be glad when they stretch forth that hand and have it grasped in return. I do not believe that this controversy is trivial, that it is just a little ripple on the sea; I believe it is a great wave washing against the shores of this country which will affect not only our prosperity and the prosperity of our colonies, but the prosperity for generations to come. I thank the House for the kind way in which they have listened to me.

SIR ROBERT REID (Dumfries Burghs) said that the hon. Member who had just spoken referred to many matters in which he would not follow him. He thought, however, that the hon. Member represented the real movement for fiscal reform in this country at the present time. It was the hon. Gentleman and those who thought with him who were the real representatives of the agitation which was going on in the country. He did not think that the Government were the real representatives of the movement. They were pursuing a different course. He did not know whether the question would disunite the Party opposite; but it had caused a great deal of confusion not only in the Party opposite but also in the politics of the country generally, for which he thought the Government were blameworthy. The House of Commons was unable to discuss the matter or express an opinion on it, and therefore it was left for the speeches in the country. Those speeches, especially those of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, began in a lower tone and ended in sheer protection. That was a position which the right hon. Gentleman was entitled to take up. He had severed himself from the Government and had become the advocate of the doctrine so long propounded by the right hon. Member for Sleaford and the hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield. But he thought it was the duty of the Government to be perfectly frank and explicit to the House on this occasion. It would not be fair for any Government to try and ride two horses at the same time, as some of the Ministers appeared to have been doing during the recess.

The remarkable speech delivered by the President of the Board of Trade on the previous day was a perfectly candid speech although some parts of it were somewhat indefinite, but it was to be observed that when the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Bristol gave his interpretation of the contents of the speech there was marked dissent from members of the Treasury Bench to the speech as interpreted by the right hon. Gentleman. The House was, therefore, entitled to ask for information in the course of the debate as to whether or not that speech as interpreted by the right hon. Member for Bristol was the speech of the Government as a Government. That was a very important matter upon which the House ought to know where it stood. They might rely on one thing, and that was that the Government policy excluded any tax on food except for the purposes of revenue [Mr. GERALD BALFOUR assented by nodding his head], and they might rely on this, that the system of free imports was to be continued unless temporary exceptions were made for the purpose of retaliation merely. Were they safe in concluding that the Government as a Government were entirely opposed to protective duties, that was to say, duties the effect of which was to tax the consumer for the benefit of the producer and to keep the home market clear for our own manufacturers. Lastly, could they feel quite confident that, so far as the Government were concerned, they had heard the last of colonial preference. If those questions could be answered in the sense that the right hon. Member for West Bristol thought they were answered by the President of the Board of Trade, the controversy that had raged in the country for the past three or four months might be very much curtailed. It would assume an entirely different complexion, in addition to which a great many interests whose hopes had been raised by expectations expressed by distinguished Gentlemen in the Government would suffer very bitter disappointment. If there was to be no taxation of food the agricultural interest, represented for so long with such consistency by the right hon. Member for Seaford, would lose all interest in the controversy except as British citizens at large. So also would be the case with the manufacturers. Every one knew that there had been a dead set made by many manufacturers in the country to secure protection for themselves, and they had had a foretaste of what would happen if they could obtain a preference for one industry or another. All that would have to be abandoned if the right hon. Member for West Bristol had placed a correct definition on the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade. There was likely to be disappointment in other quarters which were more worthy of respect. Appeals had been made in the country, during the recess, to the patriotism of the people, who were asked to make sacrifices for the British Empire, and if colonial preference was to be given up there ceased to be any interest it that. If the interpretation of the right hon. Member for West Bristol was right, what was left? Nothing but the doctrine of retaliation. Retaliation to be used as a purely defensive measure; not for the purposes of obtaining revenue, retaining the home markets, or for the purpose of encouraging industries we had not or keeping those we had, but simply and purely for the purpose of furthering the policy of free trade.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): And also to protect our industries from outrageous treatment on the part of foreign nations.

SIR ROBERT REID said of course he included that. That was all that remained. The Government were pinned to that alone. As to that policy there were two questions he would like to ask in respect to retaliation. First of all it was to be employed really in cases of outrageous treatment of our industries by foreign countries. What was the meaning of unfair competition or outrageous treatment? What did we mean by it? Bounties? Were the bounties given by foreign countries to their manufactures or their exports unfair competition? They had not been told and they did not know; but if the giving of bounties was outrageous treatment how were we going to deal with the case of Canada? Were the Colonies to be allowed to give bounties? Suppose a foreign nation were to make its workmen work for very long hours or for very low wages, or sent us prison-made goods, was that unfair competition? Or suppose they proposed to employ the inferior races, the Chinese for instance, who worked for very low terms and could live on less than what would supply men of our own race, was that unfair competition which would justify retaliation? Again, suppose a foreign country had protective tariffs which would enable cartels or syndicates to be formed, by means of the influence of which on foreign markets they were able to send goods at a price lower than the cost of manufacture in this country, was that unfair competition? That we knew was the case of the cartels of Germany. Would the existence of protective duties out of which by a natural growth these cartels or combinations arose and became dangerous, be considered as outrageous or unfair treatment, justifying the imposition of retaliatory duties? If so, the country would slide imperceptibly into protection, because it would be sufficient to invoke the fact that a foreign country had cheaper labour or protective duties to demand that we should have protection for our home industries. Retaliation was the back door to protection itself, and if the conditions under which retaliatory duties could be imposed were thought out, it would be seen that that was the case.

What was to be the constitutional machinery by which retaliation should be imposed? Were the Government to come to this House, state their case, and ask the sanction of Parliament to the imposition of duties? The President of the Board of Trade had not answered that point, but it really deserved attention. The right hon. Gentleman had stated that Parliament would be required to give its assent to each retaliatory duty, but he would not pledge himself that its assent would be required to every detail. But if a general Act was to be passed authorising the Executive Government, without consulting Parliament, to impose a duty on a particular article, it would be a subversion of the ancient constitutional privileges of Parliament and of the right of the House of Commons to control the taxation and expenditure of the country. There was no more venerable part of the British Constitution than the unfettered right of this House to determine all questions of the taxation of the subject, and he thought the President of the Board of Trade had not treated the question with the gravity which a matter of such moment deserved. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose had indicated that he and others would be ready, in any particular case, to consider a retaliatory measure provided it were shown that there was outrageous treatment, that the reprisals would be effective, and that the reprisals would not do us more harm than good. Members need not have much fear of assenting to that proposition, because, whatever imaginary cases might be cited, he had not yet heard of a concrete case of the kind. Doubtless there were cases of harsh usage. He thought it very hard that high tariffs should be imposed by foreign countries, but, although we might complain, they were entitled to do as they liked just as we were entitled to do as we liked.

One other point: Was Imperial sentiment to be mingled with this question of fiscal reform? The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had appealed to his audience to support his policy in order to counteract the centrifugal tendencies of the Colonies; and the Prime Minister had stated that hereafter colonial preference might be a step towards federalising the Empire. The actual facts of the situation should be faced. The Colonies would deal with this question as a matter of business, and not at all as a matter of sentiment. It was true that Canada had granted a preference, but at the Colonial Conference a memorandum was submitted in which her representatives expressed the hope and expectation that there would be a return in the form of preferences in this country. He did not in the least blame them for doing that: it was the duty of the Canadian Ministers to look after the commerce and welfare of Canada, and they did so from their protectionist point of view. But the duty of British Ministers, while they also had Imperial duties cast upon them, was to look after the commerce and welfare of the British people from the free trade point of view—if they were free-traders. If, however, they were not free-traders, let them not try to base their action on the footing of sentiment; let them base it on the ground that protection was a good thing if they thought so. What were the centrifugal tendencies for which this country was being asked to made so great a fiscal change? There might be centrifugal tendencies in South Africa, but they were not due to, nor could they be removed by, fiscal considerations. He believed there were no such tendencies in the rest of the self-governing Colonies except those which arose from distance, and the gradual growth of different types of character, the results of which lay in the impenetrable future. He agreed that more commerce with the Colonies would do good in binding the Empire together, but only if that commerce were so brought about as to be free from jealousies and heartburnings. It was not in the power of the Government to bind the Empire more closely by fiscal means: it must be done by the enterprise of persons engaged in commerce acting by themselves. It was a dangerous delusion to believe that it could be done in any other way, or to imagine that it was a wise policy to mingle sentiment, however lofty, with purely business matters. This Amendment was no doubt a vote of censure, but it was deserved because of the doubtful and conflicting attitudes which Ministers had maintained during the last three or four months, the discordant voices they had used upon this vital question, and the false hopes they had raised in many quarters.

*Mr. HUNT (Shropshire, Ludlow) said that, so far as he could understand, the right hon. Gentleman who opened the debate was unable to see how retaliatory tariffs would work, or what good they would do. He therefore desired to cite a case and show the remedy. Honolulu belonged to the Americans; no British ship was allowed to land or to take away from there goods or passengers. Did hon. Members opposite still contend that British trade was free? He believed the Americans thought we were very foolish to render ourselves defenceless in the commercial struggle. If, however, we told them that unless they treated us differently in Honolulu we would mete out to them similar treatment in Fiji and elsewhere, they would thoroughly understand that, and either they would give us freedom to trade with Honolulu or we should get the trade from which the Americans would be excluded in our own islands. He knew a man, a stern and firm free-trader, who went on a long tour through America and the Colonies, and came back a strong believer in the scheme of the ex-Colonial Secretary. Travel was a wonderful thing for widening one's views, as actual contact with the outside world had a way of knocking the bottom out of a good many beautiful theoretical ideas. It was a curious fact that nearly all our working men, who were free-traders at home, became ardent protectionists directly they touched colonial soil. Was it not possible that some hon. Members opposite, if they took a tour through America and the Colonies, would also become firm believers in the policy of the ex-Colonial Secretary? The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bristol, in the very fine speech he made last night, appeared to think that we should get such great advantages by the taking off of 2s. a quarter from American wheat. Did it not seem very unfortunate that it did not occur to him before, when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer, to put a 6s. tax on American wheat. He might then have had the pleasure of taking it off again, and he would have got for Great Britain three times the advantages that taking off 2s. would give. The scheme of the ex-Colonial Secretary appeared to him to be perfectly clear, and to plain people, with only ordinary knowledge of arithmetic, it seemed as if the household expenses of a working man would certainly not be more than they were now, if they were not less. The argument of the right hon. Gentleman that the reduction of the taxes proposed by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham would have little or no effect seemed rather a curious one. Might he not just as well argue, and with more justice, that because 1s. on the colonial as well as the foreign wheat did not increase the price of bread, that 2s. on the foreign wheat and not on the colonial wheat would have no more effect than that. If the right hon. Gentleman argued that a tax on an article put up the price, was it not fair to suppose if a tax was taken off that it would lower the price. Was it fair that even an ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer should have it both ways. He was very thankful that after so many years of fiscal helplessness the right hon. Gentleman should at last think it well to try if they could not protect themselves in however small a degree. The right hon. Gentleman on the other side of the House said that his idea of getting our commerce better was by a better industrial system. They could not, however, get through the foreign tariff walls, and even if they trained their hunters to jump very high, they would find that those tariff walls would go higher still. He did not see how any commercial system could possibly get over those walls.

With regard to the Chinese question in South Africa, it seemed to him to be a very simple one. The black men had always been able to work in the mines, and there were not enough of them. They should remember that it took one white man to look after seven Chinese, so that after all the importation of Chinese labour would do something for the white men in South Africa. He remembered well, nearly twenty years ago, staying in the same house with the late Lord Granville, and somehow they got on to the blessings of free trade, and he remembered venturing to advocate something the same as the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was advocating now. To judge from the expression of his host and his friends, they appeared to think that he must be an escaped lunatic. At that same hospitable board now the majority of the guests, as well as the host, would most probably be believers in the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham; so that even the believers in free imports must allow that this policy of self-preservation had made great strides in late years. It seemed to him that hon. and right hon. Gentlemen on the other side of the House were so afraid of injuring the working classes of this country if they did anything that might help the manufacturing and landowning classes, but they quite forgot that there were foreign manufacturers and foreign landowners, who, with the help of their own working classes, were sucking the life blood, not only out of our landowning and manufacturing classes, but out of our mechanic and labouring classes as well. By their tariff policy they had two markets to our one, and consequently could sell more articles, and therefore make cheaper. In this way they were flooding our only market at home, ruining English manufactures, and taking the wages out of the pockets of British working men. Trades union leaders, too, appeared to be incapable of understanding that their members required protection from foreign manufacturers as well as from those at home. Take the effect of the free importation of broken stones, as stated in the Government Blue-books. In 1902 British labourers lost in wages from the free importation of stones from four countries the sum of £234,000. It was not disputed at the Shropshire Board of Agriculture meeting the other day that land had gone down in value £1,000,000,000, that occupiers' capital had been reduced by £200,000,000, and that about half the working agricultural population had disappeared from the land. Was that good for the country towns, or good for the manhood of the people? As far as farmers were concerned agricultural Members would be quite as safe with the advance guard of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham as they were with the main body under the Prime Minister.

